The political excitement of a week ago does not seem to have those who are here informed as to what is going on in Paris, nor are the ones who like the most. The heat of one of the greatest Cauldrons known to the world with headquarters in Paris, still is one of the beehive decidedly in the Brussels conference. Of futures we are in the dark, but it is certain that few outside of France have a conception of the disorder of the situation. The temper of the people is not considered, they cannot, of will not understand how it is on the governmental fault and the mill, without who organized it. It is now generally understood that the popular mind must be further exasperated by some radicalism of corruption in high places. The Panama scandal is far from dead. Every day adds a fresh chapter. A feature of great interest to Americans, is especially wise, for such know, if it suffers in France, it suffers in other lands, as well known in New York as in Paris. Its fortune is to have a great benefitiary of the Panama Canal Company without having received a single franc of good pay-out. Tuesday when you read of the Panama sensation and some gold colored, and of those Senators, were implicated and a score lesser officials, the Senate and Chamber were the scene of wildest confusion. The law was passed by several and some duels will result.

A reign of terror comes in foreign wrath. Bombing and every crime we know of is charged to the hanging old world. Infuriated Italy is ready to fight, but her to Paris is now in hourly dread of the 15th. A week ago Mr. Bruneau was assassinated in his own diocese. Brussels was excited to the point of a big fight and had made his arrangements to leave the country next day. Regular orders have been issued. Albert was first to run without a run whatever. His man has been mysteriously drawn to Paris. Brussels is in great excitement and some gas added without being nearly grown. Dr. Hoyer has been arrested for the assassination in Berlin of a large practitioner. Hoyer is a Russian. He is said to have a grudge against Dr. Gutsen who is stated thousands of his teeth for the pure sake of pulling them.

A special from Dublin, Mexico, says Mrs. Nicolas Fregoso, a wealthy young Spaniard, who killed a lover, Dr. Lucas Lozano, has left her husband. The lady has been arrested and will be tried on a charge of murder. The parents of Fregoso have also been arrested. The fatal affair of honor was the outcome of rivalry which the two young men had over a young girl who is said to have had some rather indecent attractions.

Two more brothers claimed together in one young in a farm house among the mountains of Tennessee, near Pikeville, were liberated by Dr. Wentworth of the State commission on insanity. The two had been by a chain from their first lung, which extends from the ceiling of a room on the floor, allowing him to move only about four feet. The chain was fastened to a large collar on a large leather strap buckled around the waist of the boy. The brothers were liberated by Dr. Wentworth and taken to the asylum at Nashville. Both are idiots.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—There had been a collision on the Great Northern at Wilson, Minn., and a number of cars were wrecked. The every train had been delayed two days clearing the line and was making up preparatory to pulling out for the north. At about one o'clock on Tuesday morning the work train collision was standing on the main track with a number of cars. An east-bound freight, despite the efforts of the engineer and fireman, dashed into a many cars, and wrecked the work train, killing one man and injuring three others, one of whom died on the 17th. Three men fireman was in the cabooses. One jumped off. Two were killed, four were killed in the wreck, and four others were either killed in the same way or were frozen and afterward burned to death. Of the latter the remains of one have actually disappeared and of the others there are portions beyond recognition.

Northern Michigan News.

It is said that Senator Mears will this winter occupy the residence vacated by Gov. Winans.

A survey for the extension of the C. & W. M. railroad to Harbor Springs will be commenced this week. So says the Republican.

H. C. Heitigel, of Bay township, having rented his farm for a term of years, removes to Grand Rapids. Mr. H. has been a resident of this county 12 years.

Word was received Monday announcing the death of John Hopkins an old resident of Boyne Falls, who moved to Manchester, N. H. about two years ago.

Mrs. J. W. Milliken, of Traverse City, received the first issue from the New York Society of Keramic Art for china painting, her work being done on a set of plates.

Mrs. J. M. Harbeck one of the pioneer residents of Emmet county died at her home in Harbor Springs on Monday evening after a long and painful illness, at the age of 72 years.

An Elk Rapids young man salted some sheets in the wind," walked down the streets of that village one day recently, dragging a cabbage tied to a string. When asked what he was doing, he replied, "Trying to catch a Dutch girl."

The Wexford Pioneer tells of a turkey gobbler in that vicinity which had spring drawn a settled hen from her nest, pounced her to a roost, hatched out a brood of chickens, one of which survived the trying ordeal of being mothered by a turkey gobbler, and is now a lusty rooster.

The Directors of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society met at East Jordan Monday of last week David Lane was elected vice president. The society was found to be in the hole from $100 to $150. No action was taken with reference to the fair of 1893, or towards securing grounds.

Several of the professors connected with the Agricultural College held a farmers' institute at Benzonia last week. Special attention was given to potato rot, potato culture, and the kind and quality of fruit trees best adapted to this climate. The folks down that way are beginning to realize the fact that Northern Michigan is "in it" in this matter of agriculture.

A pretty little romance, running over something like ten months, is furnishing a good deal of material for local gossip-mongers at East Jordan. A barber hired his cousin as an apprentice and undertook to teach him the trade. The cousin is a young unmarried man with many fascinating traits. The barber thoughtlessly took him into his house as a boarder but it was not long before he discovered that his pretty wife felt more than a cousinly interest in the stranger. All three parties, and as a result, the marriage partnership was dissolved. The wife soon afterward left for the southern part of the state and now it transpires that the cousin followed her in a few days. Not to be baffled the barber married again in less than forty-eight hours after the other actors in the drama had left the town. The whole three acts were played without the assistance of either a lawyer or a smoking revolver.

Bellaire Breeze: Last week O. W. Kibby and George Robinson were out in their Jordan camp in search of game and found it. On Wednesday they started a family of five lynxes and took up the trail, and at night camped on it, and about 2 o'clock Thursday after about 75 miles axel, being then east of the Michigan Central railroad, they found where two of the "critters" had gone into a hollow log Oscar stopped the hole, by sitting down with his back against it, while George looked for another but failed to find it. Then they knew that "then was our eats" George procured a pole and, shoving Kibby to one side stopped up the opening. The critters began burning tinder and fanning the smoke into the hollow of the log. The action of the animal at this time was described as awful. However this was kept up until "not a sound was heard" nor was there a struggle, and as the game was dragged out some time afterward and the verdict was "killed by too much smoking.

What Of Your New Year Resolutions?

Next Sunday inders in the New Year. The sabbath will add sacredly to the day. It is the day for resolutions. Young man, what shall yours be? On that day remember Sam uzzah's injunction — "Young man, quit your meanness."

Resolve to abandon every vice that degrades your manhood

Resolve to keep a tongue of good report.

Resolve to do something to add to the happiness of those about you.

Resolve to drop a kind word or do a good deed when you have an opportunity.

Resolve to be a gentleman

Faithfulness to these resolutions will not only soften your own pillow, but will bring happiness to those who love you, and whom you should love and honor.

There is but one life to live here; let each added year bring to you a consciousness that the world is better for your living in it

That the New Year may be a happy one for every reader of the SENTINEL is our earnest wish

ATWOOD.

The "Christmas Ladder" was a success, and much credit is due the managers.

Willie Byers, who is engaged in business in Traverse City, will be home during the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Knight are visiting relatives at Kalkaska.

Mrs. Emma Coulter, of Traverse City, who has been visiting here the past week, has gone to Central Lake.

John Snallegan has moved into his new house.

Gossip has it that there is soon to be a marriage in this vicinity.

Reported that a sleeting is to be held at the Town Hall on Friday evening, for the purpose of organizing a literary society. "Medal" only regrets that old age will prevent him from being present.

M. E. Byers announces an oyster supper at the Town Hall on Friday evening of this week, for the benefit of the Epworth League.

Healing From Bayou.

The petitioners for the county line road near John Fish, have presented the third application. They believe in the theory of perseverance.

William Blakey, section boss at Bayshore, presented each of the section men with a pair of buck skin mittens for a Christmas gift.

Those persons who desire to buy a piece of land that can be cleared easily ought to look over some of the lands in Hayes that have been lumbered. They are good lands and can be bought cheap.

The past year has demonstrated to our farmers that this is a fruit country, and several large orders for fruit trees have been taken in Hayes.

Mr. Lora Sly came home from Albion College to spend the holiday vacation.

A REMARKABLE RUG.

A rug ten by fifteen feet, made up of the fur of thirteen wild animals. Is in the possession of W. H. Wallenbar of Chicago. Mr. Wallenbar keeps his rug, which cost him $1,500, locked up in the vault of his office and takes it out only occasionally to exhibit it to particular friends.

The rug was made in Moscow, and it took one man two years to put the pieces together. Finished, the rug has the appearance of a rich mosaic, the deep yellow of the tiger woven into the cool black of the South Sea seal in diamond shaped blocks. The center is made up of three rings of a diameter of twenty inches, the purple-like diamond pieces radiating from a circular tuft of monkey skin and bordered by a rim of otter. The ground work of the entire piece is in monkey skin.

Outside the large center pieces are two rows of circles. The outside contains fourteen circles, twenty in the inner, made of musk, Angora and otter. The inner rows contain sixteen circles of Russian sable and monkey skin. At either end and on the sides is a sixinch selvage of Russian silver fox blue and twenty silver-gray fox tails adorn the ends. In the make up pieces of the furs from the Russian sable, Persian lamb, Angora goat, China goat, musk, otter, South Sea seals, monkey, Thibet lamb, mink, weasel, leopard and the Russian silver-gray fox are used.

THE DOOM OF GLACIERS.

They Come to an End or Moving Rather Then They Flow.

Glaciers plunge into the sea in many cold countries and perish by drowning, their dismembered remains floating away as bergs. But their end is illusion where the average mean temperature rises considerably above the freezing point. At some certain level they meet faster than they can flow, and so terminate.

The level, indeed, is a fluctuating one. Icelandic glaciers, according to M. Forel, have undergone during the present century five alternate periods of diminution and growth.

Without one additional degree of cold it is conceivable that a persistently augmented deposit of snow upon the Gemsthornsee and the Schinnenstock, although otherwise concealed perceptible, might enable the Rhone glacier to overwhelm the Bieg.

But this would be an exceedingly small step toward the restoration of a former state of things, when an ice stream close upon 250 miles in length, starting from the same source, crossed the frozen or non-existent lake of Geneva, and debouched by Culoz upon Lyons. Without severe cold as well as heavy precipitation ice could not possibly have gained such an ascendency. And this was no local phenomenon; it was simultaneously prevalent over widely separated tracts of the earth's surface.

—The Press has on its books to day many subscribers who began taking the paper in 1891, and have not inclosed a number since. Republican Breeze The SENTINEL has on its books many subscribers who began taking the paper in 1869, and have have not missed a number since.

—As Mr. Linton was turning around with his hose and cutter in front of Mr Nettleton's house on the north side Saturday afternoon, one of the runners dropped into a ditch and capsized the cutter, throwing Mr. Linton and his daughter violently to the ground. The horse ran into Lake where he was stopped in front of O. W Smith's by an Indian leave after a long scaly dance, in which the horse Indian, flying strays and broken traits were mixed, accompanied to such music of bells as would have given the late Mr. Pee valmishe point. No could be have heard it.

—Petoskey Resorter: Willard Smith's soul is uplifted. He has wiped out and avenged the many insults of his junior contemporary. He has torn the mask from the Charlevoix Democrat and exhibits to the astonished community the greatest humbug of the north woods. He does it by sprinkling his little part of scissors into the Democrat's "soon-edition" and proving by this internal evidence that the late alleged "scene" was written for and published in the Resorter last June. It does look funny to read the announcement that the C. & W. M. road was opened for business last Sunday. And that the telegraph line to Petoskey will not be completed for a week or two." It may be presumed that the junior editor is trying his hand in disgust at his own stupidity in allowing the Petoskey end of the catamaran to work 1892 the Charlevoix end times old chestnuts. Meanwhile William has his scalp dance.

—The Beauvais Boat and Canoe Manufacturing Co. are having steam heaters put in throughout their factory and offices. S. C. Deepres, of Traverse City, is doing the work. The machinery for the factory is nearly all placed and will be ready to operate by the last of the week.

—The Northern Michigan Seed Co. have made arrangements with Ellwanger & Barry, of Rochester, N. Y., the highest grade nursery in the country, to handle their trade, and are now taking orders for delivery in the spring. Their new ad. was handed in too late for publication this week, but will appear next week.

—The following taps have already been put in to connect with the water works: Charlevoix Lumber Co's plant, Frank Wood's skating rink; Antoine Richard's saloon; Will E. Hampton's residence; Stevens Bros. barn. A number of applications are for connections to be made as soon as the weather permits.

—While Fred Ross was driving one of I. D Wood's horses Saturday afternoon, one of the shaft bolts dropped out, which resulted in breaking the other one and allowing the horse to keep right on going, while the cutter remained stationary. The horse ran into the woods and was not found until late that night.

—The entertainment at the Baptist church Sunday night, for the special observance of the centenary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, and to contribute to the million dollar fund that is proposed to be raised by the Union, was a pronounced success, a particularly fine and elaborate program being rendered.

—It is reported that there was a revolution at Wilmesburg Tuesday on the C. & W. M. road in which the local train ran into the caboose of the Elk Rapids freight, which dished a number of cars. It occurred during a blinding snow squall, and was caused by the failure of the freight to run far enough on to the side track. Nobody hurt.

—It appears to be uncertain whether the Agricultural Society will longer have the grounds at East Jordan heretofore occupied by it or not. Harber & Sons, the owners, are willing to sell the grounds, but are averse to longer leasing them, and the Society does not appear to be able to buy. Just what arrangements will be made is not yet evident.

—Thursday night, as Mrs. Jos. Hyland was driving through the new street recently opened near Lake Hallock place, the horse ran into a post throwing the occupants of the cutter violently to the ground. Mrs. Hyland was picked up unconscious, and was found to have sustained fractures of five ribs, and severe bruises about the face and head. It was feared she had suffered internal injuries. She is resting easily as we go to press.

There was a dreary lapse of silence, but during the night the gleaming, serious face of Beatrice Mercer took that their owner was not idle.

She was thinking, planning, preparing to act. Her quick mind grasped the situation readily, the situation she had anticipated, and which she had come prepared to meet. She held the remedy—gold. To befriend the father of the man she loved, to save him from ruin, to save an honored family name from exposure—would it not win the gratitude of the delinquent son, and gratitude pay and pelf, too?

She had other final resources in reserve. She had prepared for them calmly, never—not even in her dreams—thinking that the time would not fail.

In the old days, in the days she personified, There sat the stern-faced, inexorable lawyer, the last documents spread out before him. There, too, was Lord, scornful, haughty, but, alas! the father of Raymond Marshall.

She stopped lightly across the threshold of the room. Not until she had reached the table and laid her shaded cell across it did lawyer and victim glance up, with a vivid start.

"Madam—whoever" began the former.

"I have come to settle those documents."

Her hand pointed to the pile of notes and securities, almost touching them, the profound astonishment the lawyer regarded her. With a gasp of hope, suspense, dread, Lord Marshall stared at her clouded face.

"You have brought these documents?"

"Why—I do not understand—by what right?"

"Are they for sale?"

Her voice rang out sharply.

To Colonel Marshall or his authority, signed, they were to be sold.

Effective Mentor turned to the bewildered Lord.

"I am so strange, but I spoke, do not know why, but I felt—I felt—I felt—I was right. Lord Marshall, you authorize me to act for you?"

"You throughout debtor is the amount. I believe, West on Barrow, gentlemen. There is the money. See that it is right."

She had handed a long of bank-notes of large denominations before the lawyer's sight. She took up the papers on the table.

"This is the forged $2,000 note. I believe" she said, smiling, "I have seen many papers, Colonel Marshall. it shall never trouble you again."

With two twists of her dainty fingers she crushed and tossed the fragment in twain.

"Three other papers I shall keep for a day or two. The amount is overdue—the money is ready—I know Mr. Marshall, you are free from debt and legal alike. I trust we shall never be troubled more. I would like to speak few words to you alone."

Colonel Marshall, like one in a dream, followed the woman who had mysteriously saved him from ruin and disgrace from the core.

When, realizing that he had been ushered from the front of a precipice, he rested on a table in the outer office for support, and most thin haste.

"Woman, angelic deliverer! be candid! Tell me—tell me—I have not been lavish—I have not—I had dear one. Woman! My name, my prayers shall be yours! All my land, I shall back my fortune everyone. You, I shall repay you! Name! Name! What can I say, what can I do to acknowledge, to repay this stupendous obligation that overshadows, stunning me?"

"Name Beatrice Mercer."

"Name! Name! Name! Name! I will, I will! I'm overcome evening at your feet, Beatrice Mercer! Name! Name! Name! Name! Name! Name!"

She was gone like a flash with the words. The Colonel stood staring after her as if she were some wraith. His head swam and he staggered one to a desk. He fastened after her a minute hope to demand a more explanation of his strange interposition in his behalf. But when he reached the street, like the fairy in the story-books, he had lost her in the crowd.

Reaction, hysterical laughter had to the rescue. He was flushed, hot, feverish, and delirious, as she had asked him to do.

CURIOUS EXPLOSION

That Occurred on Board of a Cruiser in Chinese Waters.

Letters received in London from Singapore give particulars of an explosion which occurred on board the cruiser Mercury, one of the ships of the China squadron. The spirit room, which opens into a narrow and ill-ventilated space on the starboard side of the magazine, was being opened by the captain of the hold, the ship's steward and several other men standing by to render him any necessary assistance.

A cask of spirits had been lifted out, and Charles Owen, a first-class petty officer, was about to lift another when out of the hatch, where a violent explosion occurred, throwing the men about in all directions and burning seven of them two very severely. Captain Dare, the lower part of whose body was frightfully burned, and six other injured men, were then medically attended to by the surgeon of the ship. At the same time "five quarters" were smashed, and in a very few minutes the magazine was completely flooded with water. As all the wood work around it was burning, and the efforts of the officers and crew of the Mercury were successful in getting out the flames before any serious damage had been done to the ship.

The petty officer, Owen, and another man were removed to the Singapore civil hospital, where they died on the same evening. He was buried on the following day with naval honors.

A court of inquiry into the cause of the accident, faced in twelve months in the engineroom. The place where the explosion occurred is lighted by one of Cotman's lamps, and the theory is that in a small dark space so badly ventilated the spirit gas had become sufficiently concentrated for explosion, the lamp in a hollowed hatchway appearance.

THUMBS DOWN.

Identifying Railroad Ticket Purchasers by an Ingenious Method.

The dactyrograph, or thumb-signature theory, is the universal of a French genius efforts to enable railroad conductors to identify passengers who purpose to defy the laws in the outside of no ticket. We are alive. The inventor of this new ticket takes advantage of this fact by requiring the purchaser of a ticket to make a print of his thumb in a blank space at one end of each of the tickets issued. The property of this space, which is about three inches long is crossed so that after the thumb signature is made the end of the ticket may be folded over, holding the signature from view.

On the return journey the conductor opens the gummed end, exposing the imprint of the thumb, and requires the holder of the ticket to make another imprint of the thumb alongside of the first for identification. The conductor is expected to carry a little pad of coloring matter to enable the passengers to perform this duty. It is not stated whether the railroad company will require its representative to carry a wash basin for the cleaning of the thumb after being used as a stamp.

Whooping-Cough.

As I was passing up Slade street, Liverpool, a few weeks ago, I saw a clumsy standing in the street and two women beside it, on either side.

One of them picked up a little child that was standing by her side and passed it underneath the donkey to the one on the other side.

This they did three times; the little one screaming and kicking all the time.

Feeling sorry for poor confused I asked them why they took delight in thus frightening the child, when one, who seemed to be the child's mother, said we do it to cure the whooping-cough and this would cure it.

A Fickle Statesman.

The most restless place of M. and Mme. Neckar is on the shores of the Geneva lake. This eccentric pair were actually buried—preserved rather—in a huge cask of spirits of wine. The cask is in the grounds of Coppet—once the residence of Mme de Stael—where it is partly hidden by a number of trees planted around it. So anxious was M. Neckar that his and his wife should be pickled in this strange way that—feeling his own family might not carry out his wishes—he left a sum of money to the town council for the supply of spirits of wine for that extraordinary purpose.

What Caused the Aurora Borealis.

During the winter of 1870-71 the inhabitants of a small village in Bude highlandmen were watching unusually brilliant display of the aurora borealis and speculating as to its causes. An old gardener who had been reading of the great battles between the French and Germans, suggested that it was the blood of the slain, which had been carried into the clouds by evaporation, thus causing their fiery appearance.

The Mysterious Garden.

It is accepted as an established fact by the peasantry in certain districts in the South of France that the Garden of Eden is in Palestine surrounded by a high wall built of huge pieces of stone on which the ravages of weather and time appear to have an effect.

Any one looking over this wall expects immediately, so the mystery of what the garden is like has never been cleared up.

A Cure for Witchcraft.

Some years ago our mother's aunt had a child, a little girl, who always seemed to be ill. It was said to be bewitched, and to cure it a hen had to be stolen and its heart taken out and roasted before the fire with pins stuck in it. This was done, and,

A PORTUGUESE KIPLING.

A Portuguese boy in a Malacca public school was told to write a composition telling all he knew about the English. This was what he wrote, the spelling being amended except in the case whereof was word "shoh" which means dogs:

"English is very proud and very white. They are mostly governesses, missionaries, professors, merchants and a few are lawyers and doctors and banks and many other things. They never work. They wear boots for heels and pile in coats. Some English goes to Canada but only some. The race chases tennis and ball games and drinks much brandy and other things. Ship of their great delight, smelling cigars and smoking and cutting their throats. The Englishman shows at all things. The Portuguese is his catch fish but the Englishman prefer to go to the Father of Lands and catch lions. Englishman is a big body does something big and has big English women. Is fond of play the piano and sing and spoil faces. It keeps no work and drinks brewed water and wears big English. That is all I know."

The small community of Englishmen in Malacca look upon the city as one of their possessions and are fully of the belief that the residents elsewhere say that it is no more than right. Portuguese boy could see in single sentence the world around a Super Kipling.

SACRED PIGEONS.

The Blue Pigeons of St. Marco's have been recognized as both by the authorities of Venice for more than a thousand years—ever since the year 877. In olden times it was the custom of the sacristans of St. Marks church to release some pigeons every Sunday with paper, after the pontifical services of Palm Sunday. The paper fluttered in the air and the pigeons settled down as did not escape were caught by the people who hatted them for Easter dinner. Sometimes one and sometimes a dozen of the prettiest fluttering creatures would escape to bread the paper things which bound wings and feet together, whereupon they a need immediately sought refuge on the roof and in the steeples of the church of St. Marco. And for the present birds assumed a certain sacredness. It was being against the law to kill or harm them in any way increased to enormous results. By the third century of the Republic the sacred Pigeons of St. Marks—because objects of national and little court of pastoral poetry supplied for their maintenance. After the fall of the republic, however, the then starved to death and all would have died too for provision was made to pass old lady, whose will perpetually provides for them.

SOME QUEER FOOD.

The hedgehog figures frequently in syrian repasts, though he is hardly big enough to be sent to table as a prize de resistance. The primitive manner of cooking it supersedes the most costly refinements of elaborate batteries d'cuisine.

The unfortunate foot, or rather the shoe before the pastern, which is a favorite delicacy in Eastern Bazaars, comes in treated on peculiarly similar principles, which shows that the wants of mankind in all nations was much in common. Like their fellow-bumpkinsparts in Europe, hedgehog, when in season, the porcupine is abundant in a plastic refinement of dog. The back laid to a temporary rest in a bed of smouldering cinders.

When supposed to be done to a turn the dwarf pig is dug up and then the prickly skin indentured with the spilling of the ease of day. All the grosser jokes, with inevitable sequel has been confined and transfigured.

Deepest Coal Mine in the World.

The deepest coal mine on the globe is located at St Andre du Poirier, France. The mine is worked on the "Bouttonneuse" plan one of those openings being at the top and the other 1,000 feet down. The latter's now being deepened, and by the end of 1899 will have reached the 1,600 foot level. A remarkable feature of this deep mine is the remarkable low temperature in its lower levels, seldom rising above 75 degrees Fahrenheit. The gold and silver mines of this country, deepest of which are less than half the depth of this deep French coal mine, are paraded with almost intolerable heat, some of the corridors of the Comstock showing an average of 120 degrees Fahrenheit.

The Size of Molecules.

From various laborious calculations and careful deductions independently made by Joseph Loschmidt in 1865 G. Johnstone Stoney in 1868, William Thompson in 1870 and by J. Clerk Maxwell in 1873, we are given to understand that the effective size of the molecule is never larger than the five hundred-millionth of an inch, and that in some cases it may be found to be no larger than the thousand-millionth of an inch! Minute as this last dimension is, in the "second power" of our most powerful microscopes takes the exaltation of an easy task.

Knights of the Microbe.

The New York reporters who wrote up the modern organization—Sandy Hook and Fire Island—talk of forming a modern club. The office of the club will be given to such remarkable men as chief gorm, assistant microbe, bacteriologist, fumigator, sulfurator, etc., and all the members will be specialists. There are about sixty men

A TERRIBLE SAFE.

Two Thousand Miles to Open Over the Pacific.

On September 24, 1898, a mysterious crate of Somerville, Massachusetts, was what he thought to be a slight tap, but on approaching to find it to be a ship's instrument. So up the bottom of the boat, more twice weak as to be unable to open with their tongues swollen and black, protruding from their mouths.

Their eyes were sunken and glassy and they all, though constantly wet, as if drenched. They were unable to more or give any account of themselves until brought to shore by the natives. The story of their escape as told by the mate, is one of horrible suffering. He said that when they left the scene of the wreck of their ship, the Cannisell, from Port Townsend, Washington, he calculated that he was about 2,000 miles away, and that with calm and short calms that could make the land safely. As ship well for a time the lifeboat enjoying according to his calculations 200 miles for each twenty-four hours. The water gave out however some days before they were found, and the sufferings were terrible one.

He said one of the sailors after exhausted their senses. He ate leather mittens and at the last, were driving seaboiling roaring their lips for coming home to the land of the dead managed, however, to keep from drinking salt water and dreamed of the salt water until they became too weak to do so.

Finally he and the sailor also gave out, and for two days and nights lay in boat drifted in a calm sea without any effort to guide or propel it, when a friendly current carried them ashore, or they would have all died in the boat.

THAWED THE DYNAMITE

AND LAUNCHED THREE SOULS TO ETERNITY.

The Steamer Cadiz, Long Overdue, and Four Years Mysterious Fate Solved—The Work of a Milwaukee Anarchist—Peril of the Nautilus.

From Far and Near.

—A dynamite explosion that shook Long Island City like an earthquake, killed four persons. Totally injured six, and badly hurt ten others, and wrecked Vedowski's saloon. The police blame up that there will be no clue. Some think the explosion, as all of the six reported as fatally injured still live. The explosion occurred in the rear of four tenements in Jackson avenue, a street in the center of Long Island City. Just back of these houses is the cemetery, and the report that the New York city mail long Island Tunnel dynamiter is lying under the East River. They saw a great deal of dynamite in blasting. The dynamite was from. The tunnel, some and placed three barrels of cartridges and hard of the tunnel to be thawed out. They they built a fire beside them. Fire and dynamite were thereupon left alone and twenty one men down into the tunnel shortly after. They learned soon to the dynamite and so it off. The about that followed was that an earthquake. The men in the tunnel shift were killed. It would be about two hundred men coming up the filled and is proved.

The tunnel is said to be by many agents and the public for the safety of the tunnel. The tunnel is the tunnel. Questions: Who is for New York, with a population of more than 1,200,000 and 2 new large cities, and long that it is now 1,000,000 people, can ever hope to have a tunnel? Who is for Brooklyn, because of her delay in other and closer bridge facilities, and who is for Long Island City, the city that has been regarded only as a suburb of Brooklyn? Who is for Manhattan? Who is for the Bronx? Who is for the Borough of Richmond? The tunnel is not for any one of these boroughs or cities, but for the benefit of the whole city, and the tunnel is for the Bronx and the Borough of Richmond, and for Long Island City and Brooklyn, and for Manhattan. The tunnel is for the benefit of the whole city, and the tunnel is for the benefit of the whole city, and the tunnel is for the benefit of the whole city, and the Prof. M. O. Graves of Petoskey has begun suit against the People's party committee of Schoolcraft county for services rendered during the campaign.

Quite a scandal is agitating church circles in Boyne City, over the undervaluation of each other by two ladies attending the Christmas festivities.

Tramps broke into the Congregational church at Kalkaska recently, built a fire and spent the night. They not only abused the furniture, but spit copiously on the handsome carpet.

If reports are true the military station at Fort Mackinac the "Soo" will soon be abolished. One company has just been relieved from duty there and the current opinion is it will be abandoned in the spring and turned over to the Secretary of the Interior for final disposition.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Snow is about two feet deep.

A. J. Taylor went to Grand Rapids and spent Christmas.

Everybody had a Merry Christmas at Ellsworth.

Peter Van Orman and family, of Norwood, visited with relatives in Ellsworth over Christmas.

Mrs. Miles and Mr. Louis Hansen went to Bellaire Saturday and returned on Mr. and Mrs. Hansen. Congratulations.

H. J. McLean last week purchased the partly finished house belonging to F. J. Meeds, and now has carpenters at work, and as soon as completed will move here with his family.

Several car loads of long elm timbers have been gotten out the past week and shipped to Chicago for use on the railroad dock.

A Happy New Year!

School commenced Monday with twenty scholars.

Jim Chase, of Chicago, a son of S. B. Chase, was in town Saturday.

Mr. Siebert and Mr. Wood preached to good audiences on Sunday. Sunday schools have been organized and now all we need is a good church building and unity in the work.

G. V. Nash re-axled one hundred thousand feet of hardwood logs at his yard last Saturday.

What we now want is a telephone, a good doctor, a town pump and the post office moved a half mile nearer town.

We expect Van Pelt, of Norwood, over on a visit to the "Office" cat sometime this week, and we want the band out, the dogs muzzled and a general air of cheerfulness prevail.

We do not understand why the railroad or the postal authorities do not make arrangements so that the evening train would bring the mail. We would then get Chicago mail the same day.

Ed. Mobio, of Traverse City, John Smallegan, of Atwood, Mrs. Adams and Miss Cherrie, of Ironton, took the train south Monday afternoon.

A young boy was picked up dead drunk on the street the other day. We learn that the man who gave the liquor, settled with the boys mother with a ten dollar bill.

Nick Shores and family, of Norwood, made Ellsworth a visit last Friday.

In Prehistoric Times.

Prof. G. F. Wright has discovered geological evidences to prove that Lake Huron once discharged its waters through the Ottawa river the connection being made by Lake Nipissing and Trout lake. The former connects with Lake Huron and the latter with the Ottawa by means of the Mattawan river, an old channel before the glacial epoch uniting these two lakes.

In Persia.

Carpet-weaving in Persia is done exclusively by women of all ages. The only share that men take in the work is that to them the merchants give out the designs, the colors and money required for the weaving. The men also see to the purchase of the wool, &c. and afterwards deliver the carpets to the merchants.

Patience Personified.

Mr. Wade, a husband who deserves canonization, once mentioned to his wife a tragic circumstance that he had read that day in the newspaper. A passenger on a transatlantic steamer had fallen overboard in mid-ocean, and had never been seen again. "Was he drowned?" asked Mrs. Wade. "Oh, of course not," said Mr. Wade, "but he sprained his ankle, I believe."

Marriage a Failure.

John Horne Tooke had a strong repugnance to matrimony. He once advised a friend who was about to marry to obtain from reliable sources every possible detail of his wife's antecedents, then the only allowable course was to provide himself with a fleet horse, to be ready saddled and bridled on the wedding day, and to ride away from the church as swiftly as possible before the ceremony took place.

How to Care for Trousers.

The best way is not to hang them up but fold them flat and lay them down. If there is no place to do this, hang them on two nails. Button the waist-band and put the front part of the band on one nail and the middle of the back on another at the same height, so that the garment will hang flat.

ATWOOD.

Hon. Richard Knight went to Lansing Tuesday to attend the Lace Senatorial boom.

The oyster supper which was advertised for last Friday night will be held Thursday night of this week.

Mr. Ed. Vettaw, a much respected citizen of this place, died at his home last Tuesday evening of paralysis. Funeral services were held at the Catholic church.

Miss May Greenman has been visiting at Eastport for the past week.

Hastings Items Hayes.

Mrs. Isaiah Austin is sick with herpes zoster or shingles.

E. E. Sly returned home from Illinois last Saturday. He reports cold weather where he came from.

W. J. Shanks will start his store at Bay Shore next week.

Go to the Pioneer Store at Bay Shore for your candies, oranges, dates, nuts and other sweetmeats.

Unknown.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Woodworth were over from Clarion to spend New Years with Nelley Cram.

Wallace Whitford is able to work again.

The children at Undine and vicinity are having the chickin pox.

—The Northern Michigan Seed Co. of this place, doing business in the Emery building, have an advertisement on this page. Watch their space from time to time, and your will be benefited thereby.

—During the blizzard Monday the fire whistle frightened everybody out of their wits by its terrifying shrieks. Before the hose carts got out it was discovered to be a burning chimney, and everybody took a long breath.

—Elva A. Berdan leaves to-day for Chicago, where he enters the employ of the Merchants' Publishing Co., or Western Business Directory, of San Francisco. Mr. Berdan will travel for the concern through the territory between Chicago and the Pacific coast.

—The postoffice has been notified by the Washington authorities that on and after Jan. 1, 1893 the fee for registering letters, packages, etc, shall be eight cents in addition to the regular postage, instead of ten, which has been the regular charge hitherto.

—The Democrat last week did a good work in the publication of the result of its canvass on the electric light question. Without question the general sentiment of our people is in favor of a lighting plant. That it will be self sustaining, there is little doubt, inasmuch as we are already in possession of the most important essentials—steam power and a building. Let the lights come.

—Senator Mears is chairman of the committees on Military Affairs and Railroads and Bridges. The soldiers will have to present arms when Bill comes around. Senator Mears is also a member of the committees on House of Correction at Marquette, and the Soldiers' Home. Representative Bagot is chairman of the committee on Institute for Deaf, Dumb and Blind, and a member of the committees on Private Corporations and Public Health.

—Sunday and Monday—more particularly Monday—we were in the full enjoyment of an old fashioned blizzard, that closed everything up. Tuesday morning dawned bright and clear, but the mercury stood at 15 below zero at 7 o'clock.

—The Charlevoix Lumber Co. on Monday opened a lumber camp on the Walker place, in South Arm township, Chas. Gagnon is foreman. The logs will be skidded on the railroad near Ellsworth, brought to Pine Lake by rail, and rafted to the mill. About a half million will be the output of the camp.

—The D. M. Ferry Seed Co., of Detroit, recently purchased a site on Pine Lake of Mrs. Sweetland, adjoining the abandoned Edison factory, and will next spring erect a warehouse for the sorting, cleansing and shipping of seed peas. Mr. L. D. Coulter is expected to have charge of the plant.

—Charlevoix has not, since away back in the days of the Petoskey stage line, suffered such a blockade of mails and travel as that of this week. From the time the morning train went south Monday morning, no trains moved either way until Tuesday night. The first train to arrive was at 7 p. m. on that day. During a part of Monday and all day Tuesday, there were six trains stuck at Williamsburg, with two snow plows pounding at the snow drifts.

—The postoffices of the county are now fully supplied with new double or "reply" postal cards. The price is two cents, and their use is rapidly increasing. The object of the double cards is to enable the original sender of an open or card communication using the first part or message part to furnish his correspondent a paid card for an answer—the two parts being connected when mailed by the sender but separated and the reply part only used when returning the answer. If the message card is not detached, the reply will be mailable as a postal card. The sender of a double card may write or print his name and address on the subscription face of the card, or use therefor a label or address but the reply card must in no case be used to convey the original message. The card consists of two parts, one appropriate to the original message and the other to a reply thereto, the imprint upon the two subscription faces being on the reverse sides of the paper and the parts being easily separated by means of a scored line between them out about half way through the thickness of the paper.

The Senatorial Election.

At the joint Republican Legislative Caucus in Lansing last Thursday night, Senator Francis H. Stockbridge was nominated, receiving 48 votes on the first ballot, Governor Luce receiving his 24 votes, Jay A. Hubbell received 16, and a few scattering votes were cast for Gen. Hartsuff, Gen. Spaulding and Judge Hamlin.

There is no question about Senator Stockbridge being the choice of the people in this contest. It was apparent from the beginning, and was proven by the vote notwithstanding the fact that the money and influence of two multi-millionaires were in the fight to down Stockbridge if possible. The opinion oft expressed by representative men from all parts of the State was that a million-aire on the throne was far preferable to a pair of them behind it.

Senator Stockbridge has served the State in the U. S. Senate for six years, and served it faithfully and creditably. No Senator was ever more watchful of the interests of his State than he, and few have accomplished more. His party owed him the indorsement of a reelection, and the State will be the gainer by it, in the increased usefulness of an experienced representative in the highest legislative body of the Nation.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE.

Death of Orville D. Hilton, of Norwood Township.

Orville D. Hilton died at his home in Norwood township last Friday from a complication of ailments, the immediate cause being heart-failure. When his death was announced, many expressions of sincere sorrow were heard on our streets, where the genial "Pony" was such a familiar and welcome figure.

Orville D. Hilton was born in the township of Avon, Oakland county, this State, Sept. 10, 1830. At the age of 21 he went to Detroit, where he learned the profession of locomotive engineering, which he followed almost continuously up to the year 1866. For several years he ran a passenger engine on the Rock Island and other roads out of Chicago, and for some time during the war was in the employ of the government in the same capacity. At the age of 28 he was married to Miss Mary Vaughn, of Chicago, who survives him. After ten years residence in Chicago they removed to Alabama, where they lived up to the outbreak of the rebellion.

In 1866 Mr. Hilton removed to Norwood township, this county, where he located on the farm which has since been his home. The large, pleasant home on the Hilton farm has always been the social Mecca of the young people of this place for winter-evening sleigh-ride parties and harvest picnics, and the cordial hospitality of O. D. and his wife and daughter has become proverbial. He was big-hearted and frank, true to a friend and tolerant in his treatment of those with whom he differed.

In Charlevoix "Pony," as he was familiarly called by his friends, will be missed. He was a charter member of Charlevoix Lodge F. & A. M. and of Petoskey Chapter, Royal Arch Masons.

His funeral was conducted under the auspices of the former organization, at the Baptist church in this village, on Monday afternoon, and, notwithstanding the severity of the weather, was largely attended. The writer of this loses a friend of nearly a quarter of a century in the death of O. D. Hilton, and inability to attend the funeral services causes a pang of sincere sorrow.

A Political Scientist.

The editor of the Boyne Citizen is manifestly a political scientist of the southwestern sort, and Charlevoix county is fortunate in possessing one of that class of savants.

Our up-hake contemporary has for several weeks given it out to the rest of Michigan that the county, in the geographical center of which he shines as an ornate specimen of the profession, was uncompromisingly and overwhelmingly for the late Cyrus G. Luce.

Occult science is the only agency through which our neighbor could have so readily determined the nature of public opinion on this question. The tenor of his ponderous articles on the Senatorial question has been of such positiveness that we could only account for his source of information in the existence of psychical currents centering at the county seat, or what George Francis Train would call Excentism. It floated to the editorial sanctum in the same profound manner that Columbus sailed on ice-cream do. The possession of such a gift is not common in the journalistic profession, and is indeed a blessing to society.

It requires a remarkable degree of temerity to call in question the profound utterances of such a political philosopher, but we must boldly assert that Charlevoix county was not for Luce, and in full knowledge of the fact, Senator Mears, who resides near Boyne City, refused to vote for the former candidate, and Rep. Bagot was as firm as the eternal hills for Stockbridge. The circumscribed limit of the Citizen's influence and source of information is not Charlevoix county, by any means, and it should not pose as the mouth-piece of public opinion until it grows into a more extended and useful sphere of journalism.

CHAPTER XIV.

"There, there, dear! don't be afraid. You've just been asleep for a short long sleep.

"Sleep! Then the bridge, the stone, Raymond! No, no! it was all true. Where am I? Who are you? How came I here, in this strange place?"

You are among friends, true friends dears—kind, true friends, and very nearly at home, Lady Hetherington said.

Mrs. Blake, the farmer's wife, stroked Ethel Bertrand's brow as she spoke, and the startled charge sank back among the pillows, her eyes with wondering inquiry fixed on her.

A long sleep, indeed, had it been, for two weeks had passed away since Raymond Parkes had dragged her from the snow-drift at his cottage door, and for the doctor and, with his medicines, wife, had wasted all night long to revive her half-frozen, almost dead child.

Some there, in sloss and delirium, the peaceful bed into which it had been the first awakening to consciousness.

She looked around, a shadow to the story that her motherly nurse told her of—that she had been cold, nearly night. She cried sadly as she told her, but into her eyes, as she spoke, there came not tenderness, if she was home, home, from home, where would gladly make room for her in their hearts, their homes, their wealth, and where they spoke the death of their own darling child.

Ethel Bertrand, the heiress of Ashlands, the only child of Lady Hetherington, the enlighten friend, Raymond, a fit companion for a gentleman, a fit wife for a lady—looking, aunt, and the lounge was very, very, "Mr. Marshall is waiting for us. This way, sir."

Mr. Marshall—Raymond! He was in the hotel, then! Mary opened the door of the Boudoir. "Why was the miserable-looking man here? Ethel, dear, mustn't be prattled gay! Impatient. Then, involuntarily, she stole from the room and down a on chair.

The sound of voices through the open door of a darkened room drew her to the threshold. It was the gasping of an agitated voice, and the sweet, clear tones of the Boudoir Mistress. The hall room, the apartments adjoining, the sound of sob, an impressive voice.

Was she dreaming? Half-stunned she staggered across the room and passed into the next.

Everything was marble—minister—Colonel Marshall. The two forms with hands unfed, one flying on a couch, the other, she fancied, bending tenderly to ward her.

So, for just then came the solemn, sonorous words from the lips of the clergyman.

And you, Raymond Marshall, do take Sophie Mercer as your lawfully wedded wife, to cherish and protect while life shall last?

The unhappy girl rouled where she stood, the room, the clergyman, the kneeling bridegroom, seemed whirling up and down, and the floor was a sea of the deep.

She saw Raymond Marshall start, stare, recall the shock. She seemed took in the scene as the swooning indeed, and the sweet, pure face of the lady that had brought week, heart, friends, and disease to her fondest hopes.

Then she turned and fled, sick at soul, affrighted, appalled. A voice seemed to call her, but she heeded it not.

On through the portals of the hotel she sped, down the street like one mad past the limits of the town, into the neighbor house.

At the foot of a giant oak she sank all of a heap. Into her ears there came in the silence days when it had been a Paradise to her, when her home, but now blighted, faded, fallen, crushed under foot.

Oh, let me die," sobbed the unhappy girl, "let me die! I have no heart to live for! Let me die!"

Some there, in sloss and delirium, the peaceful bed into which it had been the first awakening to consciousness.

She looked around, a shadow to the story that her motherly nurse told her of—that she had been cold, nearly night. She cried sadly as she told her, but into her eyes, as she spoke, there came not tenderness, if she was home, home, from home, where would gladly make room for her in their hearts, their homes, their wealth, and where they spoke the death of their own darling child.

THE BOOMING CANNON.

RECITALS OF STIRRING CAMP AND BATTLE INCIDENTS.

Survivors of the Rebellion Relate Amusing and Startling Incidents of Weary Marches, Camp Life, Foraging Experiences, and Hard Fighting.

"Trying to Single-Handed."

GENTLEMAN

[illegible] with the [illegible] in the war of the Rebellion, but who wishes not to be named here, related the following incident to the Federal Army Tribune. Confederate forces were early in the battle of the war.

The Federal army had taken the Confederate forces in the woods on either side of a considerable clearing, where the battle was likely soon to take place. The Federal commander and his staff, seated upon their horses, were conversing over the right of the line. Colonel Neil Dow was standing in front of his regiment, a small man with a tremendously big head on his head and a prominent wood laughing in the ground at his side, a picture such as one might expect to see at a comic paper.

As side approached Colonel Dow, saying that the commander wished to speak to him. Colonel Dow strode down the line, the soldiers laughing at the sight.

"Colonel Dow," said the commander, "you will march out into that open field and take a position on that hill yonder. You will there await further orders."

In sight of the entire right wing of the army Colonel Dow marched into the opening, his long, heavy sword clanking on the ground behind him, his big hat dragged down over the broad head to the locks as if he might have been drawn by horses.

The commander lent his sheet of lengthen that was with a pleasant and looked for the cause.

"Who is that soldier out there?" he asked.

Somebody told him that it was Colonel Dow. An aide was sent to bring him back.

"Colonel Dow," said the commander, "why did you disobey my orders?" "Why did you not take your regiment with you?"

"Dear me, general," said the colonel, "I thought I had taken it. I didn't know you meant for me to take any one with me. You didn't say, you know."

And that is how it happened," said he who related the story, "that Colonel Dow was prevented from putting down his rebellion without aid." New York Herald.

Sunday Cut Off Work.

[illegible] the world knows the story of the Sunday cut off work, which the volunteer in the war of the rebellion. The field soon after the battle of Bull Run in the Civil War in 1861, the Sunday cut off work was never heard, almost forgotten. Perhaps it was because there was no Sunday in the camp, which was perhaps the reason why the Sunday cut off work was not heard of. Perhaps it was just then that great army [illegible]

When Roscoe Conkling, then a young man, was called upon to make a speech in the House of Representatives soon after his first term, Tom Ferry, he astonished men who were even older than himself by declaring the war in those times was without resources, was a crude and blundering proceeding, and that it was determined not so much by men of military skill as was by the power of money. Other things being equal, Mr. Conkling observed, that side which had the most wealth, the greatest resources, will in the end prove the victor, and that it was of more importance to the Federal Government that gold be secured than that that arsenal be taken.

Mr. Conkling said that he had heard that the Government had [illegible] and his friend, Colonel Dow, at that time became the Government and the Colonel Dow, who was a very clear-headed man, and who was a very clear-headed man, and who was a very clear-headed man, and who was as good then as it is now, and it was said that Colonel Dow,

A CURIOUS CURE.

Father Kneipp and His Wonderful Success in Cold Water Practice.

A short time ago Rev. Rimmay Tolbe visited the famous cure of Father Sebastian Kneipp, the parish priest of Worishofen, Bavaria.

The special features of the Kneipp cure as distinct from ordinary hydropathic practice are very short baths or douches of cold water, putting on the garments immediately and without feeling the slight coarse homespun gown for clothing being preferred, walking in the early morning barefoot among dewy grass; walking in sandals or barefoot in cold water, and wearing constantly a coarse linen shirt next the skin. He also uses a few preparations from the simplest herbs. His theory is that local maladies must be treated through the strengthening of the great organism and in the rectification of the circulation of the blood.

Father Kneipp has been parish priest of Worishofen for thirty-seven years, but has practiced his system of hydropathy for now over 17, although it was during the last two years that it has attained among his countrymen such wonderful celebrity. Succumbed often by seven or eight doctors, he gives audiences every morning from 5 till 12, and in the afternoon from 3 till 5, and afterward delivers his benedictions to an immense crowd waiting him at the door of the rectory, and who sometimes have to wait three hours before they can obtain the desired interview.

The number of names inscribed on the visitors book from March to 1891, to December 25, last was 11,450, and it is stated that during the year one year, Bad Worishofen was visited by 1,000 persons as patients.

Descriptions is full of the times, the subject the blind the disfigured (especially from lupus), the skin disease of whom have exhausted the resources of ordinary medicine, and who now come here on a forlorn hope, many hundreds of whom have received cured.

NOT TO BE FOOLED.

A good story is told of one of the Vanderbilts. While abroad recently he was visited by a rich Berlin jeweler, who, without waiting the usual formalities incident on gaining an audience, marched in on Mr. Vanderbilt announced.

The interview was an elderly man, with an intelligent face, attired in faultless evening dress, the fashion prescribed by European etiquette for visits to potentates, ambassadors and other high dignitaries, irrespective of the hour or season.

Mr. Vanderbilt was surprised, but not overwhelmed, by the jeweler's evident attempt at continental complaisance. He listened to his tale of the "greatest ruby on earth," which the dealer was willing to dispose of at a sacrifice, with a courteous air, and then offered him one-tenth of the price demanded.

"I have five stones of exactly the same dimensions and coloring," said he, "and I am willing to complete the half dozen at a fair figure. You may send me your answer within two hours. Good morning."

The answer arrived eighty minutes before the prescribed time elapsed. It was in the affirmative.

IT WAS TOUGH.

It Was the Plain Boarder That Broke Up the Social Friend.

The plain traveler looked up from his plate furtively. He trembled slightly, for he was about to cross the fashion, and even Cesar had a silver when he made that break successful as it afterwards proved to be.

"Which lid?" she inquired.

He hesitated a moment.

"The bechelot," he replied.

"What's the matter with the beefsteak? I'm sure I buy the best in the market."

"It's tough, madam," and his nerves came to a tension, "but I know there is only one thing to be done while world tougher than it is, and that is the conscience of the landlady who could place it before a boarder without in the same breath providing him with an ax, or at least a saw."

Today that man is living at a cheap restaurant.

Slight Misapprehension.

The minister was learned and warm-hearted, but somewhat erratic and absent-minded. He had a pony that had a great aversion to donkeys, and it was with much difficulty that it could be got to pass one of those animals on the road. One day when riding to Foxfar he met an itinerant earthenware merchant whose stock in trade was drawn by a donkey. The pony reared and backed and was only got past after a great struggle. The minister, at the turn of the road a little further on, and before his mind was quite composed, met the president of Foxfar. "A fine day, provost," said the minister. "Yes, fine day, Mr. Allan," replied the provost. "Do you think, provost, I'm likely to meet any more asses on this road?" The provost, used strong language in reply, though it was no concern of his.

Our Curious Vocabulary.

There is probably no more confusing part of the English language than that which regulates the use of "shall" and "will." The teaching of the grammarians is that "shall" in the first and "will" in the second and third persons are to be regarded as simple declarations, and that both in affirmative cases convey a threat. The same idea is conveyed in the following old verses:

I and we, simply foretell;
Thou, he, she, and they, threaten.
Yet should I say, I will,
Or we say, we will,
We promise, or else we kill.

JOHN BUNYAN'S CUP.

Christians claim to have an image of silver cup which belonged to the property of the wife of John Bunyan. If so, they are going to offer it at the world's fair. The cup weighs more than 2 avoirdupois ounces and holds a little more than a gill. The inscription indicates that it was given by Nathaniel Pander to Bunyan's wife of John Bunyan of Bedford, 1671. The front of the cup bears the words in letters that interlace one other, "The Pilgrim's Progress." the bottom are the words, "The gift of Nathaniel Pander to Elizabeth wife of John Bunyan of Bedford, 1671." The English coat of arms is engraved on the top, and it bears the stamp of the inspector of silversmiths. It is

When Bunyan died the cup was given to the first Andrew Gifford, son of the Baptist church of Bedford. During the life of the good man it was used as a piece of communion plate by the congregation whose spiritual welfare he watched. The last Mr. Gifford died years after he received the cup and it fell to his heirs, who eventually. Prior proved too expensive tankard to a London broker who kept the trophy until Isaac Marshall bought and redeemed it. When Isaac Marshall died the cup descended to his wife by will, and when she was taken sick and was dangerous and gave it to the street sexton, who carry it about until it has been sold by atoms and other auctions and then burn it on the commons. In the same country the Spanish sailors drawn figures on one teats feast days subject is all sorts of indecorous, which they rub the money by hanging that the yard long.

In the Island of Rhodes, "the eye of the sun," a dead hog is dressed as a Judas, the grand element in the celebration being the removal of the hogs's entrails in fulfilment of the Scriptural passage which says that the betrayer "fell and his bowels gushed out."

Good Friday is the day when the inhabitants of the island of the Medicerranean burn their effigies of Judas in the belief that the sins that Judas was responsible for may be thus illustrated in the "burn-able" figures which are invariably surrounded with a wig of red-dyed wool.

NOT A SUITABLE PRESENT.

The Young Man Knew the Needed no Such Aid.

He told the clerk in the book store he wanted to purchase something that would be a suitable present for a young lady. The clerk brought out albums, books gold-leaf and pamphlets and card cases, but nothing seemed to suit him. As the last resort he showed the young man an engagement calendar—a beautiful little tablet on which to record the engagements for each day of the week.

"Quite the ful now," he explained as he displayed the calendar. "All young ladies feel the need of them. Only during the season.

"What is it?" asked the young man.

"Im sure she would. If she hasn't one already," said the clerk.

"Well I want to say to you that this month," continued the young man losing control of his temper "I know her and you don't, and I tell you to understand, sir, that she has no use for any such calendar. She doesn't have to keep any record of her engagements. This is the only one she has ever been engaged, and my man who says she will ever be engaged to someone else, or that she has to put down on a table to remember it, has got to fight me. That's all there is to that."

SNOW A GOOD BREASTWORK.

Properly Prepared it Can Withstand Any Projectiles.

Snow does not look or feel as if it would form a breastwork that would withstand cannon balls. Experiments have been made in Norway and government orders and they have proved that snow can withstand the force of cannon balls. How some of our boys would have enjoyed making these breastworks!

First, snowballs were rolled up and piled together, the spaces between being closely packed with snow, forming a perfectly solid wall twenty meters long, one-quarter high and three metres thick at the ground, thinnedd to about two metres.

The shots were fired from German guns, at a distance of fifty metres. The breastworks, it was found, would not stand where less than three metres thick.

Where the snow was free from ice fragments, the projectiles were found flattened on one side. Water was poured over the breastworks, and the next day was frozen solidly.

Freezing made the snow porous. The final conclusion was that if the breastworks were not sloping, but a uniform wall of two and one-half metres thickness, snow breastwork will defy any projectile thrown at any distance.

Thought It Was a Musical Instrument.

The clerk of a country church was once much startled at the appearance of a strange old gentleman, who, when the sermon was about to begin, took a trumpet (in two parts) out of his pocket and began screwing them together. The clerk watched him till the process was completed, and then, going stealthily up, whispered: "Your mun't play that here; do. I'll turn yo' out."

And That Settled It.

A deaf man went to law with a deaf man, and the judge was a long way deafer than both. The one claimed that his other owed him five dollars and the second replied that he had paid him over eight days. Then the judge, looking down on them, said: "Way quarrel ye, my poor mother, keep her between you."

The Early Chest.

The earliest chest is said to have been merely the trunk of an old tree scooped out and cut down the center, into half one and a lid, which was at first kept shut by a strip of leather, which was fastened to a staple.

JEWELS IN A WASTE BASKET.

Danger of Hiding Valuables There Must Be Paid to Mrs. Henry.

Mrs. Joseph B. Moore lost a pearl cashet containing a marquise diamond ring with emerald center, two gold rings with solitaire diamond setting and a diamond bracelet, the whole valued at $1,500.

It had been her custom every night upon retiring to place the casket on the bottom of a waste basket which stands in the hall room, the reason being that it is there safer from robbers than in any other place in the house. In the morning she takes it out again.

Thursday morning the chambermaid took out the basket which in case was still in it and upon her discovering the loss of the casket ran to the rear and emptied it. He could came back into the house, search match and burned up the small pile of papers and rubbish. Ten minutes later Mrs. Moore discovered the loss, hurried out and cleared over the ashes but found no trace of her missing jewels.

The servant and coachman denied all knowledge of having seen or touched the jewelry and the coachman claimed that while the coachman was in valet was in his room or sitting on the box and made away with it.

A QUARTER AS A CHARM.

A Young Homeboy Clergyman's Experience With a Crying Child.

As a sympathetic young clergyman walked up the street he passed a group consisting of two little girls, the one ten and the other eight years of age, and a bouncing big baby in a carriage. A few steps farther on he heard a resounding crash and turning, found the carriage had upset and the baby was frightened and mad, with a loud dolefulness indicative of very large coal holds deep with the world have thrown if he had not been tied to his place. Rushing to it, the clergyman raised the affrighted infant and examined it, expecting to find its head broken. No serious harm he seen, but it roared like a wounded panther.

"Are you hurt, little one?" he asked. No answer.

"Are you badly hurt?"

The child only roared louder than ever and the sympathetic young man gave it a quarter.

That a kind like magic. The infant began to grin as it swiped the money.

"Now, what do you think of that, girl, calmly, therefore gets that war?"

Dogs Can's Stand Violin Music.

Dogs are sensible to the effects of music to a certain degree, but so dogs are said to be. It is a fact that dogs howl and scream at good hear music, and it is certain that they cannot distinguish good music from bad. The coarse dog will howl at a violin, whether played by his master or a stranger, in such strange tones pert. He howls at good music, but that can be marked by the howl and tone. It is probably the sound

A MAN'S VIEW.

How He Believes in Bringing up His Children.

A man whose son and daughter are models of behavior as regards their elders and superiors, confided to the writer that he had no sympathy whatever in the bringing up of children that had marked so well with his own that he was trying the same thing with his little grandaughter and so far with the success that attended his former efforts.

Said he: "Many children are deprived of everything when they are small and surfeited when they grow older. The first glimpses of so much that they have heretofore never seen or tasted bewilders them and they act most awkwardly and are self-conscious and embarrassed. With my children I gave them everything in great quantities at the start. If they liked candy they were given more of it than they could eat and soon the little piece of school.

"With toys it was the same way. Other children would go in a store and want everything. Mine having had so much either asked for nothing or disenchanted in their choice.

"Candy was never withheld and to day my daughter is not seen with overloaded hands and gems worn at inappropriate times. In my table was always used the best and it was set in the most formal and elegant manner, therefore, when my children were old enough to go out in society no form could disturb their usual calm or no display appear overwhelming as it often does to unaccustomed eyes. It is the only way to do. Surfeit them with the best in taste and the best make shows of themselves when older."

The scheme is all very well if money is no object, but many a parent has seriously equally successful that are not quite so expensive, but. "Charm a son grad."

CENTURY IN ONE HOME.

"Uncle Jonny" Field, Who Cast His First Vote in 1817.

"Uncle Jonny" Field of Middletown, N. J., has reached the age of 100 years. Joseph Field was born near where he now lives, in what was then Monmouth county, N. J., in the year 1792. He has always been a farmer, and still spends much of his time looking after farm work. His parents came from Long Island in 1790, and in 1792 bought a large tract of land, part of which is the farm now worked by Mr. Field. He was a bachelor until he was 75 years old, when he married Beretta Heulon, a neighbor's daughter. Mrs. Field "born in Revolution within a few years. When the last one was a baby, the other died. Two of the children were girls and one a boy. The youngest girl was married to William A. Wolfing, and she has a child. On his birthday Mr. Field and his grandchildren gathered together to celebrate his 100th birthday. Of the children living when his wife died, the oldest is 72 years old, and the youngest is 50. Mrs. Wolfing is the daughter Mrs. Joseph Field, jr., of the farm. Mr. Field's father was born in 1717 for the whig. He has been a Republican since the party was taken any account of politics. He has been a member of the church for 80 years of age. He has always been a hard and has been regular in his habits. It has accumulated a fortune and owns a large farm of the best land.

HOME-MADE THINGS.

A Charm About Them That Belongs to Nothing Else.

There is a charm about home-made things that does not belong to purchased stuff, no matter how beautiful or expensive it may be. You can buy an bread like that your wife makes granting that she is a house queen and not a society butterfly. You can find no pies like those you used to snack out of your mother's cupboard. You never better under quits that have been put together on some out of Perhaps of clothing worn by those dear to you. There is a charm about a home-made rag that makes you want to lie down and roll on it like you used to on the rag carpet of your grandmother.

Did you ever notice the affection of a little girl for a home-made doll? We ask you sign yes for this. Half amount was dolls that mamma sill but but when you go to her crib at night you will find that one half lit in to shift for themselves and is sleeping with the old scarcer of a home-made rag doll entitled up to her bosom. You will also notice that the young lady who has grown up at home when over the child period of her education to her mother instead of to a beau long school is more sweet and less vain than those who have been sent to Paris to be polished. She has more soul, and when she settles down into a man's heart she does so to stay.

DINING WITH THE KAISER.

A Scramble for Souvenirs After the Feast.

A gentleman who recently attended a court dinner, for gentlemen only, given by the emperor of Germany, says:

"The royal family of Prussia possesses some of the most magnificent plate in the world so that the table looks very pretty and entirely round the white cloth more had at intervals a laurel leaf and then a rose, and various plants and vases added to the decorations

"The dinner was as silent as is always the case when the young emperor came to the throne; but the dessert was carbines for, as well as from of various limits there were large dishes of bonbons placed at intervals, every the table and on each of these ribbons was pasted an exceptional photograph of the emperor, the empress or one of their sons, and on the larger ones a family group which were to serve as souvenirs for the guests.

"At the end of the dinner, when the kaiser rose and left the room, his guests consisting of ministers, generals, etc., had a scramble for these precious bon bons, and in a minute all were gone, without an friend, even the kaiser, who engaged in the fun, must say that I thought the disposition of these gentlemen is fighting for their spoil so called extremely unsatisfied; but each one wissed to take home a souvenir for his wife or daughters."

Gold on the Columbia.

The Columbia is gold-bearing at any point but now it is the Chinese who to make it pay. A Chinaman who has washed the bars of the river for twelve years, cells a Wenatchee World reporter that any of these bars pay; that some favorable conditions his construction can make from $1.25 to $5 per day; that the reason why white men cannot succeed is because they do not use cats enough in saving the gold, which is exceedingly fine. The Chinamen use a great deal of quicksilver and run water through the sluices very slowly; the Americans in a few big a hurry, and floats away the gold. It is quite hard work, as the dirt must be sifted very high.

PRIZE FOR PIERCE.

THE EDITOR GOES TO POSTMAGAL'S COURT.

North Carolina Parishes the Scenting of the Dog's Whitness Injured in a National Gas Explosion in Chicago—Eight Killed in a Wreck.

Told in a Few Words.

—Gilbert A. Pierce, well and favorably known in the Northwest, was nominated Wednesday as Minister to Portugal. Mr. Pierce is popular and his good luck pleases everybody. Pierce was one of the five Senators from North Dakota, and is an ardent supporter of the Minneapolis Tribune. Mr. Pierce is a native of New York, and while in Indiana served as the first call for troops, leading the stage of a colonel before she was twenty years old. After holding various public offices he entered the newspaper business. Less than two years was started editorial writer on the Chicago Inter-Ocean. While at that paper he became acquainted in Washington with Chairman Hanna, and upon the latter's recommendation he was appointed to editorial writer on the Sioux Falls Press in 1884 he was appointed Surveyor of North Dakota. In which capacity he served for two years, being unanimously confirmed by the Republican for United States Senator in November, 1889.

—A Dispatch from Berlin has taken place between Sheriff Mannion's deputies and the men of Sylvester Scott, who lives near Berlin township, N. J., which begins and the Whitness has been in jail for the past two days. Some of the men cut at least twenty years, from the woods on Scott's farm and Sheriff Mannion had mortgaged indemnitees, who required the Sheriff to protect them in the work last summer. The Sheriff has kept the prisoners under heavy guard, and every attempts have been made to break escape or rescue them. The whole demonstration of both the savages, and the officers is shown by the Sheriff's telegram. The last and successful attempt was made While one of the officers was in the house, nature is to stand that the guard of three men, but the men had gone to the house, and the men had gone to the house, and the men had gone to the house, and

The water-supply of Petoskey is shy, and is not of the best quality.

Mrs. Phillip Lauway, of South Arm, died last Monday morning.

St. Ignace makes enough out of her electric light plant to pay all expenses, and also the running expenses of the water-works.

Parson Arney says there are 250 dog teams at the Soo, that they are driven tandem and double, and are of all kinds and colors. He also says that the teams are used for delivering milk, lighting street lamps and other purposes.

Traverse City came near having a tragedy during the holiday festivities. A schoolboy was dressed to represent Santa Claus at a school entertainment. The cotton in which he was dressed caught fire and he was severely burned and only escaped death by the prompt efforts of those present.

Petoskey Record: Willis Kerns, the popular clerk of Charlevoix county, came up from Boyne City on Thursday to look after some business. Willis is not what might be called a beautiful man, but say! how he runs on a Republican ticket.

A farmer living near Bellaire who recently invested $68 in a steel range purchased from traveling salesmen, wrote the manufacturers of the range a few days ago to the effect that the kids had warped very badly, and asked what they proposed to do about it. He claims to have received the following brief but suggestive reply: "Turn the lids over and let them warp back." Moral—Buy your ranges at home.

Since the talked of extension of the C. & W. M. railroad to the straits via Cross Village, we are pleased to note several important changes about town. Ginseng Joe has added another joint of pipe to his stove which extends it (the pipe) above the roof of his house. Paul Habbit-eye moved his hen-coop up to his front door for the winter, both for his own and the hens' convenience, and Mishlage Ambrose changed his shirt. With a few more such changes we will rank with the best towns in the State and we defy the C. & W. M. officials to give us the go-by.—Will Shurtleff in Stockton Weff.

What Good Roads Would Mean.

They would practically shorten the distance to the local market.

They would spare the farmer many vexations and nervous strains.

They would increase the demand for central and suburban property.

They would keep the farming community into closer social relation.

They would reduce to a minimum the wear and tear on wagons and carriages.

They would make an evening drive a pleasure instead of a vexation as it is now.

They would require less expense to keep them in repair than do the dirt roads.

They would be free from dirt in summer and mud and ruts in fall, winter and spring.

They would do away with the absurd poll tax and supervisor system in places where it is still in one.

They would make it easier for a team to pull several tons over their smooth surface than to drag a wagon through the mud.

They would save him days and weeks of time which he wastes every year wallowing through the disgusting mire of dirt roads.

They would make it possible for the farmer to take advantage promptly of the highest market no matter at what season of the year.

They would be, in short the best possible investment to the taxpayer it built and cared for by the national government and paid for by a national tax.

They would lessen the expense of keeping horses in working order, and vastly less horses would be required in the country to perform the farmer's work.

All those they would do unless experience goes for naught.

Hastings from Hayes.

The year 1893 ought to be a good year; it commenced with Sunday, ends with Sunday, and contains 53 Sundays.

Miss Hastings was representing County Commissioner Mrs. Beach visiting our schools last week.

It is generally understood that Hayes will have to build a town hall this year, and the time for taking action in the matter will soon be here. Don't wait until the last moment and do everything offhanded, but think the matter over carefully and come up to the town meeting prepared to act in the matter judiciously.

The town board has rented the room over the Burgess postoffice for town meeting purposes. The April election will therefore be held at Burgess.

Elliot M. Sly has been confined to his room a portion of the week with sickness, but is now convalescent.

I. N. Graham returned from Lansing last week.

M. K. Chew has gone to Clarion to work in Merrill's mill.

Monday's blizzard knocked the underpinning out of the roads.

You can buy hardware, linware, lumbermen's supplies of all kinds, clocks, jewelry, etc., at prices that will astonish you, at the Pioneer Store, Bay Shore.

—Capt. Ed. Cunningham, of Detroit, is here visiting relatives. Inasmuch as Ed. is an old settler of Charlevoix everybody is glad to see him, and rejoice in his prosperity.

Norwood Notes.

George H. Van Pelt and James Chase, our winter resorters, have returned to Chicago.

Adelton Stafford, who has been in Iowa for the past three years, is here to the winter visit friends.

G. V. Nash went to Traverse City Wednesday to attend the lumbermen's convention.

Mrs. Bailey arrived on Saturday from a two month's visit with friends in Wisconsin and other parts.

Mr. Babcock, our worthy school teacher, has the sympathy of all fair minded and tender hearted people in our village. Unless there is a reform soon in the conduct of certain parties, I shall consider it my duty to expose them.

The death of Mr. Hilton takes another of the old settlers of Charlevoix county across the dark river, and one who will be missed by a large circle of friends. He settled in the town of Norwood in 1866, and has taken an active part in all the interests of the township from first to last, having almost continually held some township office. Norwood will always miss friend Hilton, especially on election days.

OF INTEREST TO YOU!

We soon expect to have on sale the choicest lot of Garden and Field Seeds ever put on this market. We will call special attention to these after a while. We are also making arrangements to start a nursery here in the spring. We expect to make this a leading feature of our business, and think we can make it an object for anyone who contemplates planting fruit trees to deal with us.

The season just closed has demonstrated what we have always claimed to be true, viz: That fruit growing is far the most profitable part of farming in this country. You will be wise to take the hint and plant an orchard. Pending the time of delivering stock from our nurseries, we have made arrangements to supply the finest grades of stock suitable to this climate. —John Dumas and wife returned home from Canada Monday.

—That whistle at the pump-house is not a blowing success as a fire alarm.

—Mrs. Florence Sherwood is at Central Lake this week visiting Mrs. F. M. Sears.

—Another burning chimney called everybody out Monday afternoon. It seems as though this will be made a great practice.

—We were in error in stating last week that Mrs. H. Lee Iddings had gone to Albion. It was Mr. Iddings' mother who went.

—Address from Beaver Island are to the effect that the old "spring house" was destroyed by fire about three weeks ago.

—Misses Clara Austin and Lottie Kinney gave a pretty surprise party to their friends at the home of Miss Austin Tuesday evening.

—Rev. David Eagle was called to Traverse City Saturday by the death of a brother. Rev. W. H. McCartney filled his pulpit Sunday.

—It is now the village council will advertise for bids to tap the water-mains, and the Dorcas advertises for wood for the school house.

—The Christmas Circle had a very enjoyable social with Miss Pope Hawkins last Saturday evening, several invited guests were present.

—On Monday night some unknown person entered the Fountain City House and carried away Alex Hines' overcoat and Gabe M. Lee's cap. They were bunging in the hall.

—Capt. J. H. Allen arrives on from Traverse City, Monday, on his sailing craft, the little boy packed a small hull from the roof of a car that arrived from the north. He would have no doubt early in packing a last full of snow balls here.

—The continuous cold weather is threatening an ice blockade in Lake Huron and Detroit rivers. The ferry steamer Ossee D. Gregory with officers and crew, left for home on Saturday and Port Huron's last steamer was still fast. Her passengers walked ashore. Ferry steamers have great difficulty in crossing Detroit river on account of the ice.

—A great plenty of snow, thank you; in fact, we have more than we can conveniently use. It fills the streets and sidewalks and is piled high in the gutters. It blocks up the back doors and comes down the chimneys. It gets down the back of your neck and malinger itself up your trousers legs. It hangs over the roof in great blankets and precipitates itself upon your head. We have had our fill of being snowed under this fall and winter.

—Bro. Davis, of Elk Rapids, runs what he calls a newspaper. Last week it contained its local column and on its first page, no item that shined into the sheet out of every respectable home. The people can stand mediocrity in journalism, and put up with bad grammar, but when a paper turns its back upon decency, insults modesty, and enters to barroom taste, its circulation should be confined to the slums. Small newspapers are sometimes good ones, but when they are small and dirty they should be stepped on hard with both feet.

—The Bellaire Bronze says: Many people of Bellaire and vicinity go to Muskegon and take G. R. & I. trains when they have occasion to go south, such is impossible to make connections by leaving here on the C. & W. M. It takes a day longer to reach almost any point south west of Grand Rapids by our road than by the G. R. & I. Why it is thus we must know, or if he does know he won't tell. Certain it is however, that the C. & W. M. is losing a large amount of passenger traffic that it could secure by running its trains a little different. They are a south bound road of final but too many of them are local, there are too many divisions, and connections are not made with the east and west lines.

OUR CHURCHES.

A Review of the History of the First Congregational Church of Charlevoix.

The work of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions in this field twenty or more years ago, should not be cast indeed with the origin of the present congregation of society. Back dates as far as local history reaches, the Presbyterians had a mission here. The pastor in charge of the work was Rev. Geo. W. Wood. He labored long about six years, when, for some cause unknown to the writer, that denomination abandoned the work here; but, sequentially, from that early Christian movement sprang the present prosperous Congregational Church of Charlevoix.

Rev. Leroy Warren was then, as he was for many years after, State Superintendent of Church Extension, if we are correct in the title. In September, 1882, "for the furtherance of the gospel in this place" the First Congregational Church of Charlevoix was organized, with the following membership: Mrs. P. S. Dunn, Mrs. Caroline E. Nichols, E. M. Clark, Mrs. Luella Clark, Brice Suffield, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Suffield, Mrs. A. J. McLeod and Mrs. Lawrence. On the 19th of that month a Congregational council met at the M. E. church, with Rev. Leroy Warren as Moderator. The council consisted of the following members: Rev. Page P. Mct.leland, pastor of Northport church; Rev. James Davies, pastor Banks church; E. B. Marshall, deacon Banks church; Rev. W. O. Allen, pastor St. Ignace church; A. Livermore, delegate St. Ignace church; Rev. W. R. Seaver, pastor Traverse City church.

The council, after the preliminary formalities of recognition and acceptance of the above named members, approved the enterprise and the church was duly constituted. The usual evening services were held, and the charge to the church was given by Rev. Leroy Warren.

At the first regular meeting of the society, held in November of the same year, eight members were added to the church rolls. The first deacons of the church were Elijah Hudson, Brice Suffield, and E. M. Clark. Wm. Kanagy was the first clerk, and Deacon Clark the first treasurer.

On the 30th day of August, 1883, at a regular meeting of the society, Rev. C. E. VanAuken was called to the pastorate. The call was accepted, and Mr. VanAuken entered upon his pastoral duties soon after. The records show that several business meetings were held at the school house during the winter and spring of 1883. The membership was largely increased during these months, and much interest manifested. At a meeting held on the 3d of the following September, the purchase of the lot on the corner of State and Clinton streets was sanctioned, the price being $800. At this meeting the trustees were instructed to push forward the work of erecting a house of worship.

Under the energetic labors of the pastor, in the year 1884 the present fine structure was erected, and the membership greatly increased. In September 1889 the pastor was voted a six months vacation, and Rev. A. T. Waterman was called to the pulpit during this time. On the 5th of December, 1886, H. S. Harsha was elected clerk, which position he has since held.

In March, 1887, pastor VanAuken tendered his resignation, which was reluctantly accepted, and Mr. Waterman continued temporarily as pastor. On the 5th of August of that year, the society extended a call to Rev. A. O. Downs. Mr. Downs accepted and entered upon the pastorate in October, and ministered to the spiritual wants of the church very acceptably until August, 1889, when his resignation was tendered and accepted.

Immediately a call was extended to Rev. John S. Rood, which was accepted, and the new pastor entered upon his duties at once. He served the society faithfully and creditably for two years, when, being desirous of enlarging his powers for usefulness in his chosen calling, he resigned to enter Chicago Theological Seminary for a three years course of study.

In the fall of 1891 Rev. W. H. Macpherson, the present popular pastor, was called to the work, and under his indefatigable ministry of love and labor the society has prospered spiritually and temporally. The church roll bears the names of 120 members, and the auxiliary societies of the church are prosperous and productive of beneficent results in Christian work.

Rev. W. H. Macpherson is of Scottish birth and raising, and was educated in "auld Scotia," having been graduated from Madras College, at St. Andrews, a Scottish University town. Although his inclinations from that hour were toward the ministry, he engaged in business for several years in his native town, where, ta years ago he was married to the "bonnie lassie" who now so worthily shares his labors and his triumphs. Eleven years ago they came to America, locating first in Detroit, where he entered business. But there his love for evangelical work asserted itself and he took up Y. M. C. A. work with an energy born of his Scotch Presbyterian nation. After a time he removed to Flint, where, as General Secretary, he continued in the same work. In 1889 he removed to Lansing, where, as a licentiate, he became assistant to Rev. C. A. Beal, pastor of the First Congregational Church of the capital city. Mr. Macpherson believes that in his work with that scholarly and devoted pastor he was the recipient of greater intellectual and spiritual blessing than at any previous period of his life. During his residence at Lansing he was ordained, and came to this work in 1891, as stated.

Although 40 years of age pastor Mac looks but 30. He is an enthusiast on the subject of physical culture as promotive of intellectual vigor, and his clear eye and elastic step give weight to his reasoning. He is an enlightened and progressive preacher, eloquent and earnest, and popular with his church and the public.

—Manoelma Herald: The people of Charlevoix are agitating the electric question and the sentiment seems to be strongly in favor of the village owning and operating its own plant. The Herald would be much pleased to see Manoelma lighted by electricity but would prefer to plod along with coal oil and dark streets rather than to see the village go in debt for a monkey-tric light plant.

—Petoskey Record: The Charlevoix Democrat gives its entire local page to interviews with Charlevoix business men on the question of putting in a village electric light plant. The great preponderance of opinion is in favor of the scheme and forty business houses have agreed to use the lights if put in. Better lights in a cemetery both in Charlevoix and Petoskey; but the recent discoveries by which a rich gas can be furnished at a wonderfully cheap rate, and which with the new burners is effective for street lighting purposes, make it worth while for both towns to thoroughly investigate the whole subject before plunging into a great expenditure of public money. The fact that Bellefontaine, O., and other places which have had electric lights, are using the new gas system certainly prove that there is something in it.

CHAPTER XVI.

MISSING.

When Edna Deane glanced into the foyer of the Hopedale Hotel where the marriage ceremony between the bride and the woman who had so cruelly sacrificed her was taking place, one member only of the coterie there had caught sight of her white, stricken face.

Lured on by the deft manipulation of Dr. Simms and Beatrice Mercer, Raymond Marshall had agreed to adjure the dying moments of the girl who had saved his father from financial ruin and disgrace by wedding her.

The bridegroom of a few brief hours, declined to benefit by her generosity, whether he so elected or not, too crushed over the gifted young woman who, in spite of all, had through the form of a mock marriage, had signalled the consecration of the sickening union, dead.

It was just at the commencement of the ceremony that he chanced to glance at the hall-door, there connecting with Mrs. Allison and Edna.

The elder lady had not saw the office did not see the vital shift, the quick pallor the engaging breath, which forced for him all but his senses unlike.

Edna Deane, perhaps, felt, feeling that it was a delusion of the senses, a topographical impossibility, intuitive female woman the memory of whose love could never cancel, in a moment, the necessity and pain, he inflicted through the shocking jilt of Edna.

"Edna!"

Her voice rang out from her young soul. It was his wealth—his truth of the women who was at the threshold of that hall door now. He face had gleamly, unpitifully, upon her.

"It is she—she!" he gasped, "—my God, I'm in the toils!"

I Madly he rushed for the carriage. The shock of the perfect recognition, he never had blinded confused him. She was disappointed and in his confusion he ran the wrong way, gave a long, intolerable side passage of the hotel, and reached the street exit two minutes behind the Hedge fugitive.

A lounger at the door had an excitable story of the bridegroom, pointing and indicating the direction in which it had disappeared.

Not stopping to analyze his vivid feelings but the strange situation in which his acquaintance in the gradings of Dearborn had placed him, Raymond Marshall thought only of the dead come back to life, of the bridegroom's agony, he learned that Edna was alive, if old Mr. Ralston asserted that she was an impostor, what then?

Darker and Sorner glowed the hazlike eyes; more somber and tragic grew the sinister face. She dared not let Edna go free; it meant ultimate disaster to all her hopes and plans.

She grounded, finally, to another room. In one corner of it was a large cabinet. Unlocking and opening its doors, she retreated now after few of photos of the lovable Italian.

"I have only a short time to act, for the servants will soon return," she murmured. "I must quiet her, for I have not time to get her out of the pit before they come back. I will empty the contents of the bottle into the jug. They will stagger and stupefy, I hope. Later, I will get her out, insensible, her, or—I must take time to think. If the former kill her that is not my fault," continued the heartless siren.

She went out into the garden, the bottle in her hand. She reached the pit and uncorked it.

"Edna!"

She started with the ejaculation, and peered sharply at the unknown intruder as she funeled the detected a rustling movement there.

It was not repeated, however, and she leaned over the edge of the pit once more.

Emptying the volatile fluid into the vinegar jug, she replaced the cork, and turned from the spot, the desperate cruelty of murder in her wicked heart.

Judged by Their Hair.

A bald man claims to be able to read a woman as accurately by her hair as he could read a book by her eyes, mouth or other features.

"Women who have lost their hair by her hair, with the quite generally accepted theory of the bar the gentler the birth, or the better, higher grade the family since from which she came, and having their hair cut indicates a lack of breeding or high birth, I regret to say, is true in order to obtain the key to her social status. Women who have lost their hair by fever, or by the ends of her hair by the ends of her hair, or by the ends of her hair, or by the ends of her hair, or

THE LIFE OF PASTEUR.

The Great French Savant Is, on Occasion, Very Almost Modest.

Louis Pasteur, the great doctor, is a short-built, thickset man, considerably rounded at the shoulders, with a closely trimmed gray beard and habitually wears a profoundly preoccupied appearance. His sight is very poor, and he walks lamely, being semi-paralyzed in one side, but within he possesses the traditional politeness of the Frenchman, and never loses his temper with the army of crazy and curio hunters who throng his laboratory almost daily.

Early in life he strayed away from the beaten track of medicine into the bypaths of chemical exploration, and first made himself known as an expert in molecules. Then he turned his attention successively to silk-worm disease, chicken cholera and fermentation, all of which were wonderfully elucidated by his researches. He also enriched pathology with a new horror by discovering the true cause of septic septicemy, not content with which he has also discovered a means of checking it. Bisyzates of inoculation against rabies—upon which disease will mainly rest—is too well known to need even passing mention.

In Paris the Pasteur Institute for the treatment of hydrophobia was opened, and I have heard of people who come free of charge. During the last three years he has treated over 8,000 persons bitten by mad dogs, and only 50 of his patients have died. His grande scheme to rid Australia of the plague of rabbits by spreading disease among them by inoculation has not been so successful, but he says that some of his most important discoveries are yet to be given to the world if his life is prolonged for a few years more. He is a glutton for work, and after inoculating patients all day experiments upon rabbits during the better part of the night.

He is naturally weighed down with decorations, and has sat in the chairs of five different learned societies. He is one of the Forty Immortals, being one of the few men of science without special literary claims who have ever been elected to the French academy. He is profoundly absent-minded, so much so that on the day of his marriage a search had to be made for him by his bride's relatives. He was finally discovered in one of the hospitals of Paris, and declared that he had forgotten all about the wedding.

OCEAN SALVAGE.

England Has Most of the Ships But no Sailors.

Prominent as England is in maritime affairs, it is odd that none of the most useful and necessary branches it should lay far behind other powers. Considering the vast amount of capital invested in shipping, the number of vessels owned in their country and the recognized fact that the English mercantile marine are the carriers of the world, it is rather odd that when any important salvage operation is to be undertaken Englishmen appear to be unable to meet the emergency. Lloyd's and the various London insurance companies annually pay thousands of pounds for assistance rendered to stranded vessels in which they are interested, and it might have been supposed that sufficient occupation would have been found for at least one English salvage steamer well built up to modern requirements. Foreign salvors are now working not only in their own but in English waters. It was an English enterprise that raised the Sultan. The Elder was floated by Scotsmen and German salvors, and some of the same vessels which so successfully took the ship off the dangerous rocks at the back of the Isle of Wight are now engaged to render similar service to the Howe.

The Hermes and the Balos, which went to Perim to raise the English war ship stranded there, carrying appliances for salvage operations which, an English vessel possesses, and the Neptune salvage company, to whom they belong, yearly earn many thousands of pounds from English insurers in the Baltic and elsewhere.

The Most Remarkable Suicide.

The most remarkable suicide in the annals of self-destruction occurred at Chiquete, New Brunswick, in the spring of 1879. Before committing the deed, the self-murderer, who was named W. E. T. Jones, dug his own grave and placed a rough coffin of his head-boards at the bottom. The dirt from the opening was kept from falling back into the excavation by boards held in place by a trigger, to which a string was attached. Everything in readiness, the deliberate Mr. Jones at subsequent developments revealed, got in the coffin, took a dose of poison and then pulled the string, hurying himself beneath tons of earth. This has been put down as one of the most unique and successful cases of self-destruction on record.

Number of Speaking Parts.

In the "Passion play," which is performed every tenth year at Oberammergau, a little village of 1,339 inhabitants, forty-five miles south-west of Munich, 705 actors are required, who all belong to the village. It is held in a large, open-air theatre, which accommodates 5,000 spectators. It is the only existing specimen of the medieval mysteries or miracle plays which were performed in the middle ages.

Bees as Carriers.

A Frenchman M. Tyrone has been experimenting and seriously considers the advisability of bees for carrying signals in carrying messages. A tiny piece of paper is pasted on the back of the bee, with a cipher message on it, and when the bee returns to its hive it can work or by through most formidable signal will not be its chief strength, if the message is easily deciphered.

MARAUDING DOGS.

How They Are Sheep and All Not Are the Shepherd.

Noble a Bagsdale had suffered the loss of quite a number of sheep through the visitations of marauding dogs. Evidently these hungry specimens of the canine species have developed quite a taste for wool and sheep-dip, for their depredations have increased and the spirit of secrecy, very prominent, sheep have been mutilated into sheepskins. It was at last decided that a watch should be kept, and when the dogs again appeared on the scene the man with the gun should use all his skill in a marksman to make said dogs honorary.

Billy Bagsdale was delegated to go on the first watch. Having reached the scene of the sheep-killing episode, Mr. Bagsdale ensconced himself on the top of a straw stack to await developments. The sun fell very comfortable, and presently the weather modified his head and was soon in a sound slumber.

Mr. Bagsdale is not sure how long he kept, but on awakening he discovered two dogs going leisurely down the road. He reached for his gun with the intention of taking a shot at them, but was horrified on discovering that the weapon was missing. On a closer examination it was discovered that it had been pounded off. A part of his hat-brim was also missing. With a sad glass in his eye he hastily grabbed for his ammunition belt. This was not to be found. Later he was told by a friend who had met two dogs a few moments after Bagsdale had discovered his terrible calamity that one of the dogs had the end of the hunter's cartridge belt sticking out of its mouth, and the leisurely walk was owing to the surprising weight of eight pound of shot being in its stomach.

SHE STOPPED THE TRAIN.

A Rustic Bride and Bridegroom Who Made Themselves at Home.

"A funny thing happened the other night down on the Shenandoah Valley railroad," said one of a party of drummers who make head-quarters at a New York hotel. "A young married couple came on board at one of those little West Virginia towns — the typical silent and pensive-looking bride and groom of a country town and were given the berth in the sleeper next to mine.

"I went to bed early—getting ready for New York, you know—and was awakened about 11 o'clock by a rustling and scrambling against my curtain. A lot of little screws were undone, a glimpse of new shoe soles, and so forth which indicated to me that the new couple were ascending to their apartment.

"I dozed off pretty promptly the last thing I remember hearing was the bride's voice in the dark.

"'Oh, isn't everything nice and convenient, Hiram?' she said. 'A place to hang your clothes and everything.'

"The next thing I was conscious of was the train standing at a station still and the conductor and two or three brakemen starting through the car, wanting to know who rang that bell. I'm blowed if those jaws hadn't hung their combined wardrobes on the bell-rope. Of course the weights had pulled the cord, rang the engine bell and stopped the train.

"Explanations and apologies were duly made, and the last thing I heard after lay and order was restored was the bride's voice, in a positive self-justifying voice saying: 'I don't see what they stretch their bell cords, line up for if they don't expect people to hang their clothes on it, do you, Hiram?'"

Getting a Small Fortune.

"Are you aware of the enormous expense incurred in sending money from America across the Atlantic?" asked a gentleman of a friend. The gentleman answered "No." "Well, let me give you an instance," said the gentleman. "Mr. Gaisel has just left New York for Glasgow with $2,500,000. When I first issued of his being what a piece of fully—a waste of time and a waste of money. But I find it was an economic step after all. The shipping companies charge at the rate of $1.50 per $1,000 worth of bonds, and $3 more for marine insurance, that is $5.50 for each $1,000 worth. A slight calculation shows that the total charges on the sum named would be $13,750. So that it is not a bad paper to pay the expenses of a trip there to pay the freightage.

The Way Cyclones Pass.

The question is often asked: "Why do cyclones, whirlwinds and tornadoes all point in the same direction?" Professor Mitchell speaks of a cyclone that once existed at night of thirty miles long and one mile wide. The plants were all of a single angular segregation from a vague, irregularly sanitized mass that turned one way in spiral courses, thus determining the direction in which the stage revolved, and all the rest from this to the same course, that "ponty," "my did the nebula revolve as all?" It goes from cause, forty-five degrees, and the seeds at inherent motion from right to left. This brings the case, from that time to this, sun, moon, stars, planets, cyclones and tornadoes have adhered to the original law.

We know that in Shakespeare's day, say, A. D. 1600, 10 a day was a fortune for any workingman, say the equivalent of £10 per annum. A century later, before the access to America was open to English explorers, one of the Arabas of Marmadukie left an annuity of 10s per annum to a young man, probably the poet's grandfather, which, then of £1 a day would now be the equivalent to £8 a week. Yet, 20s per annum would equate to £120 at present value.

THE BOSS.

History Shows That Little Always Has Been Made of Bosses.

Old as the hatchet of the world is that of the queen of Rosalia. The ancient Greeks and Romans coupled it from they were used locally at their fasts. In the time of the reputed the people had their eyes on Pacuvius, who, coming with Sosius, and the Spartan soldiers, after the battle of Clerka refused to drink wit, so that was not performed with them, while at the results of life the whole surface of the Eurotas Lake was alive with the flowers.

Now at his banqueting showered rose water upon his guests from an opening in the ceiling, and among among the humor of a noble with his presence the had also many to have his fountains playing water. In the repast stood upon floral place in the form of a rose-pillow.

The Sybarites slept on bedsteads with rose leaves, the tyrant Dionysius his couch filled with them. He would travel with a garland on his head and round on his neck and carry in his hand a thin net, with rose leaves interwoven. Antiochus he used upon a bed of blooms over whatever days and nights, and also Cleopatra entertained Antony on floors covering the floor to the depth of a foot of rose leaves.

We are told that Heliogabalus supplied so many at one of his banquets that several of his guests were suffocated in the endeavor to enter the dining-room, and he also killed some of his guests with roses.

Doubtless the immoderate use of roses by the ancients led to after-days to their being renounced by their descendants in disgust, as for although we have not the luxury of the ancients, at times the flowers were only plucked as a symbol. First and last the rose has been the theme of many less poems, there is no gem worth, and those who have discovered it in verse.

THE FAMILIAR WORDS.

Navigation has practically ceased in the New York harbor and rivers on Wednesday morning. The ice floated in an extent not known for the last fifteen years. Traffic was at a standstill and the ferry boats battled with craft of every description. Thousands of men and women, whose livelihood was suffered by people little by them, have been seen there and blocked the streets of New York, every morning for long hours. The ice gorge in the East River usually did the best, it could not get into its stagnation at Hunter's Point. Wednesday was the coldest day in seven years. The thermometer at noon registered 12 degrees below zero. At 4 a. m. it was 7 above. The North River around the Battery and extending up the East River was crowded more of ice, something over this has not been done through the Narrows in the lower bay was the same physical condition. Small boats and barges with hundreds of snow-capped pieces of ice that had been pressed up by our fleet were floating aimlessly about.

An order reached Denver late Tuesday night for twenty-seven coffins from Louisville, as the victims of the terrible explosion of the Vulcan Powder Company. The Vulcan Powder Company, which employs about 150 men, is located in Louisville, where they manufacture 500 pounds. Tuesday afternoon the "blast" explosion occurred in one of the machines where twenty-eight men were at work. The shock killed twenty-seven of the men, only one escaping with his life near the entrance. The bodies were not recovered until Tuesday night, and a dozen of their blackened condition only eleven of the twenty-seven were recognizable. Nine deaths the catches were killed outright by the explosion and twenty-one were brought to the surface and died shortly after. The men were always and acting related to the direction of the company, and they recognized the thousand cousins of Washington or Jefferson.

Gladbise was too anxious to boom and issued bonds. They were swindled in the matter of the consideration for the bonds and refused to pay. Suit was brought and a judgment for over twelve thousand dollars has been rendered against the city.

It does not pay to play fast and loose with the requirements of the statutes. A man in Antrim county was convicted and sentenced to two years imprisonment a few days ago for the crime of defrauding by secreting mortgaged property.

The Petoskey Record says that Judge J. L. Newberry, who was Judge Dalliboy's law partner for three years, will enter the list this spring for the nomination as Judge of this circuit, on the Democratic ticket unless the present legislature should repeal the law creating the district.

Fanny Davenport the greatest English speaking actress of the day, was recently mulcted $762 by Miss Gisele De Leeuw, and English screws, to the press dispatch stated but whom we are informed is none other than a Detroit school girl, Stella Shoecraft. The plaintiff contracted to play in Miss Davenport's Cleopatra and the contract was broken by defendant.

East Jordan Enterprise: The sooner the real facts are known the sooner can our people decide whether they are to have a railroad or no. C. M. Heald, President and General Manager of the C. & W. M. road, writes us that his Company has made no decision in regard to extending their road to this place; that all they have said was that they would look it over and if sufficient aid and inducement were offered they would come here, and any statement of any one that was different from this is not to be relied upon. Mr. Ward expresses similar sentiments. We can get one or both of these roads by using good business judgment and pulling together. If you don't want the roads just keep up the procedure of the past half dozen years and your mid-day dreams will not be broken by the whistle of the locomotive.

Cheap Rates to Florida.

On January 24th the C. & W. M. and D. L. & N. lines will sell round tickets to De Leon Springs, Florida, at one limited first-class fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold only on above date, and will be good to return until May 31st, 1893. This is the best opportunity of the year to visit Florida at small expense.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Another carload of birdseye maple shipped last week.

Snow in thirty inches deep in the woods, and will hinder skidding if it should get much deeper.

Logs continue to be piled up at Nash's mill yard ten feet deep or more, and it looks as if he would have to extend his yard, in order to hold the logs that will come in this winter.

The church organizations have decided to keep up their separate organizations, and will build two edifices Methodist and Congregational—as soon as possible, but will have union Sunday school. Church services are held on Sunday at 10:30 a. m., and 7 p. m., Mr. Wood and Mr. Seibert alternating in the services.

I. R. McLean and family, of Ironton, have moved into their new home here.

Miss May Shores, of Norwood, visited friends in town last week.

It seems as if the post-office should be moved nearer the business center of the town. As it is now it is a nuisance to the public and cannot be of much profit to the postmaster, as most of the letters are mailed on the trains.

A good physician is needed here at once. It would pay a smart young doctor that wishes to locate in a tight smart town to look over this locality.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The Circuit Court for Charlevoix County sits at Boyne City, Jan. 24th. There are 40 criminal cases on the calendar, being as many as last year from previous terms. The following is the list of the petit jurors drawn for the term: Boyne Valley, Andrew Nowland; Hay, Fred Van Ostrand; Charlevoix, Rufus Mudge and Lemuel R. Our teamsters complain about the snow being too dry; the loads drag instead of moving smoothly.

The snow is getting so dangerous one of our Hayesites, a six-footer, fell through a brush heap the other day, and all that was visible of him was his hat and ears.

Our town line between Bay and Hayes for a great portion of the distance follows Horton's Creek, and can never be opened up as a highway.

Would it not be a good idea to make provision for keeping the main roads plowed out through the winter season? The snow drifts more or less every winter, and will continue to do so, and it is just as necessary to have the roads good in winter as it is in summer.

There is a good opening in this town for the organization of a Grange. A farmers' organization of some kind would be a paying institution in many respects.

THE FIRST EDITION.

"MY DEAR MR.—It was the pleasure of Annoncing to you that my book is now in the hands of the publisher, The Swallows, the first edition of which is exhausted. We hope to be able to ship it and send you, that we may make arrangements with the wholesale trade.

"Accept, etc.,

"MARCEL BEIL."

"When I received that letter I thought I should die of joy and astonishment, the most of astonishment than of joy," said the celebrated dramatist, Henry Dufour, the other day, as he showed us the letter, then noticing our interest, he gave us the whole history of the affair, as follows:

The first addition of "The Swallows" my first book, and a volume of verses out of print and I, scarcely twenty, that old, curse on Paris. Paris so distrustful had been written about it, so indifferent had appeared in reviving it, except some paid notices on the fourth page of the journals. And how long had this unloved for and improvable event been in coming to pass? Just one month.

This was success then, true success? So that taken? I was beginning to be appreciated by those contemporaries whom I had slandered up to this time, guessing them of disliking all beauty, and condemning them uncultivated in their tastes?

I would not stop writing at all now after this volume those should be second—I had even been work up all in my dreams. Then would rose the theater, that power, fal serious (cold) which, all at once, sends one into full renown and glory, or among the stars. And a novel? Why should I not also write a novel? I was already dreaming of perfidious psychological duels, over necrotical and thrilling situations. My brain was at work, and my head humming with all the ambitious follies of one twenties (years). I remember the said read the blessed letter, as I tramped back and forth in my room, excited and gesticulating wildly.

"Well, what's the matter, my boy?" The door stood slightly ajar, and my grandfather's face appeared in the opening. "I was kindly face, calm, rosy, and clean-shaven, with a crop of snow and cross sitting behind their glasses, and was framed in a well trimmed and carefully curled wig.

"What is the matter with me, grandfather? Wait, read this!

"When he had glanced through the letter, he said: "Well, what about it? I think your verses are very longer read?"

"Yours are read. That ought to be enough for you."

"I should think so!"

"Then you are happy?"

"Yes, I am happy."

"Had is all that is necessary?"

He opened his shoulders and slowly took a pinch, saying: "Yes, and at the time with a smile to his eyes.

A quarter of an hour later I was with Massol Boulevard.

All the library world knows this renowned publishing house, and has seen its hard employees, librarians, and clerks in the vast hall lighted from above, and lined with row upon row of shelves, classed volumes in white, yellow, and blue bindings. Woodengalleries run along the wall, dividing it into two floors, and books and papers are continually pulled up or let down by small pulleys. It is a kind of intellectual factory of which printed thought, is the screw-driven product.

With a bound I climbed to the first floor, to the office of the elder Massol, whose special business is to receive authors.

I found the office closed, and the sound of voices came from it; the door was ajar. I knocked. I sat down on a bench, awaiting my turn, and, as I waited, I called to mind my feelings the first time I had come here. Why what a beating heart! I climbed the staircase, my manuscript under my arm! And when I entered Massol's office, how I trembled all over! I received my pitiful book coldly, and he had reason to, after all! I, an unknown youth of twenty years, had brought him what? Verses a comedy without salt or pepper, a romance still sallo—but verses.

However, he had conserved to publish them, on condition, of course, that I paid the entire expense; and since then I had experienced all the emotions wavered by a first book. The proofs had come, with the damp from the press, and full of mistakes that drove me to despair, and of which there seemed to be no end; there were inappropriate grammatical questions and doubts about punctuation; continually renewed conflicts with the printer, whom I privately considered as thinking I had on the table of contents to make and the title to compose in such a way as to affect the publisher's eye, and the color of the binding to choose; then it was ready for press, there little words that seemed so small but which changed everything in reality, since they set forth the author's thought to the public, as, for example, the difference of the bell before the certain rites through the Place to the audience; finally, the new and elegant looking volumes appeared in the booksellers' windows, and on the boulevard.

After a few moments Massol's office opened and X, the accusedclaim, came out, accompanied as far as the door by the bowing publisher. This man was a good client, and they paid him a great deal of attention. Should I ever reach that distinction? Massol, looking very kind and almost paternal, motioned me to enter. He begged me to be seated and said, as he pompously sat down in his leather armchair:

"You received our letter?"

"Yes, Monsieur Massol."

"A volume of verses sold out in a month! Between you and me, I cannot understand it at all!"

This was not very flattering, but I had been too much astonished myself not to excuse his astonishment.

"What has happened to your book is very sincere," continued he, "people love it, but no one talks about it. In the first time I ever saw that happen in the book trade. It is very queer, very queer."

Before we separated it was agreed that 500 new copies of "The Swallows" should be printed immediately, so as not to make a gap. In fact, a few days after that, I saw my dear volume unceremoniously displayed by the book-sellers and ornamented with that flattering statement: "Sold out."

Decidedly I was something. Never, before, Massol seemed troubled me a little. No one talked of my book, no one seemed to have read it except those to whom I had sent copies.

"Well, I said to myself, "I am very foolish to torment myself about this. The Swallows' sells, someone buys "The Swallows." What more can I ask? Besides, the book contains only love verses and verses of passion, and it must be women who buy it. Yes, women."

Intoxicated by this thought, I hastened to communicate it to the hands of all great ladies in the noble Faubourg where I had their beds at night and went to sleep dreaming about it.

Encouraged to this free success, I went eagerly to work. I wrote my second book, "The Grandmother," which, as you know, had an opportunity to succeed at the Odeon; then came the "Victims of Marriage" at the Gymnase, the "Two Brothers" at the Comedie Francaise, then still "The Swallows" reprinted a fifteenth author, as we say, years passed, and I thought no more of my "Swallows," my third and forgotten work of my youth.

It was at this time that I experienced one of the greatest griefs of my life. I was my dear grandfather. He gradually wore out, cared for and loved up to all in his last hours. He had one of those rare natures in which egotism finds no place, and whose affection increases with before no trouble that may bring some joy to loved ones. Ever ready to sacrifice himself, he spoke only of his grandson, and of those tender and delicate souls always forgetting themselves to think only of others, considering themselves amply repaid by a smile, and finding their happiness in the pleasures they are able to give.

I shall never remember the sadness with which we entered his room, a month after his death. They had returned as they were, the old furniture and fa. Rays of sunlight slipping through the window blinds fell obliquely upon the flowered carpet, making slender golden bars in which the motes were dancing. We walked on tip-toe and spoke in low voices. It seems as if he must still be there in the big bed with brown curtains, as he had been for so long bed ridden, or in the toilet-where he used to spread his white paper or make up his accounts, which that wholesome exactness which he brought into the smallest details of life.

A servant, recently taken in the house, opened the blinds abruptly, indifferent to the memories which he could not understand. Suddenly the whole room was filled with light, from outside and with it came a flood of fresh air, bringing the roar of the boulevard, and with it the joyous life-center, and with life, cruel necessities.

The dear man's rooms were to be rented, the furniture must be removed, the wardrobe must be emptied, all made clean for the stranger who was coming to take his place. The dead go quickly, especially in large cities, these immense hives in perpetual activity. Scarcely is a cold corpse put in its humming life which, and, of the insatiate street, there ignorant alike of what went on behind it and that which will follow.

The moving commenced, and I assisted, with a heavy heart, at the sad duty. It all that still remained of my grandfather was being scattered and confused, little by little.

Someone pointing out, to me the lower part of the cupboard which he had just opened, exclaimed in an undertone: "Hurry! Come and see!"

I looked immediately and I saw, only dear grandfather dear and excellent, I saw the little pasteboard stiles filled with small volumes all alike, bearing on the back, in gilt letters—"The Swallows." "The Swallows!" "The Swallows!"

The first edition of my book was there, almost entire—that, proved so clearly that it had not been read, that it had not even been cut, that it had not been touched by any hand which, as you know, had an opportunity to succeed at the Odeon; then came the "Victims of Marriage" at the Gymnase, the "Two Brothers" at the Comedie Francaise, then still "The Swallows" reprinted a fifteenth author, as we say, years passed, and I thought no more of my "Swallows," my third and forgotten work of my youth.

ONLY A MOUSE.

It Was in a Lady's Hat and Frightened the Store Clerk.

One day a lady went to a Santa Rosa store to make some purchases. She engaged a young clerk in conversation concerning various articles. While talking to her the clerk chanced to look at her hat. It moved slightly. Then he looked again and again the feminine headgear was perceived to be in motion. The young man turned pale and his tongue did cleave to the roof of his mouth. Like one suffering with nightmare he wanted to scream, but could not. All the time the lady's hat kept moving in a peculiar way. The young man kept his gaze on the hat for some reason she knew best to himself he could not do otherwise. Presently he saw one side of the hat raise up, then a pair of sharp, bright eyes peered out. The next instant out from under the hat jumped a mouse. It landed on the pale young clerk's shoulder, and he ran into the street yelling like a Comanche.

"Sight what was that?" screamed he (half).

"It was a mouse, and he jumped out of your hat," an-wered the pale young clerk between his chattering teeth.

And so it was. The lady had taken up her hat carelessly, put it on, and then it to the store. On the way, she did, she felt something moving in her hair, but thought it was the breeze sporting in her hair. She was greatly surprised at the development, but not so frightened as the pale young clerk.

BRAVE ELIZA BERG.

In Saving a Child This Pair Norwegian Girl Falls Drowned.

Eliza Berg, a buxom, red-cheeked Norwegian girl, who landed on Ellis Island lately, started with a hundred other immigrants on the transfer boat George Starr for the Pennsylvania railroad depot. Eliza stood by the port quarter watching a child at play on the deck. The boat was in the middle of the river, and going at full speed. The child clambered on the rail, and in another moment would have pitched head foremost overboard had not Eliza darted forward and grabbed the little one.

The child's clothing became entangled in the railing, and while Eliza shot back and the bare-another immigrant held the child. When the little one's garment was free Eliza endeavored to throw back the baby and in so doing she tripped over a rope and fell overboard. The immigrants became wild with excitement. The boat was stopped, little sister Eliza was seen buffeting the waves as nobly as though she were taking a midsummer bath. A boat was lowered and the brave girl was helped aboard. Women immigrants wrapped her snugly in blankets while her clothes were drying in the furnace room.

LAWYER VS. DOCTOR.

The Definition of a Divine Differs from the Doctor.

An attorney may not always be ignorant of a point, he seeks to make plain to a jury, neither may he keep counsel of what seems to be the latter thing wanting to be made plain. Honest effort to place the facts before a jury as far as seen these sometimes draws a laugh at his expense. Such a case occurred recently in the trial of a case before one of the judges of the district court, who has a vivid conception of humor.

"What is a contusion?" asked the attorney of a physician on the stand.

The answer was: "A contusion is a bruise."

"Then, what is a bruise?" was the next question asked, in all seriousness.

The witness hesitating, the attorney continued to explain that he had no desire to be funny. This but succeeded the pause and securing confirmation of the M. D., but he failed, moment longer to break the silence with the explanation that "a bruise is a contusion, and there you are." The court, as well as the jury, laughed at the ludi of consternation on the face of the attorney.

BUTCHER BIRDS.

They Murder Finch Sheer Love of Excitement.

The butcher bird that is familiar to all ranchers in Southern California, is considered by some of the foremost ornithologists as the most sagacious bird in America. Thomas Gilfillan, of Lordsburg, tells us that it is as cruel as it is cagacious. "I have paid not attention to a pair of common butcher birds at my place for six months, said he to us the other day "and I have learned many new things about the habits of the peculiar butcher bird.

A pair of them have followed me which pounce for three or four days at a time, watching and waiting for me to overhear a small finch near. When I overhear a nest of them they will pounce down upon the finch and claw and peck them to death. Then the mouse carcasses are carried away to some orange, or lemon tree, and spiked upon the thorns. The birds do not eat the meat but kill them for from sheer love of excitement. Were they not spiked a live mouse, or even a rat on a thorn they flutter about and chatter among themselves as if they had great fun in seeing the rodent struggle and writhe in the throes of death.

But I am most surprised to see how strong butcher birds are and what they can lift and fly away with. I have often seen them that had been impaled upon the horns of a cemetery plant upon my place and heard the great flutter and chatter of the birds as they flew off with the dead mouse. Once I saw a butcher bird with a snake full a foot long. He had it by the back of the neck and flew with it up into an orange tree. He then pulled the reptile on to a thorn and sat and watched it. He left the snake about a couple of days before he ate it and would fly on more friendly Texans than he was attractive to gosbers and rattlers are considered the friends of the orange grower."

ENGLAND'S GRASP UPON ILL-FATED EGYPT.

ALTON—From Cairo, say, Tuesday the Khedive was handed an ultimatum from the British government demanding the dismissal of the newly appointed cabinet within twenty-four hours. In an interview with Lord Cromer, the British ambassador, the Khedive expressed regret that his sensitive of a repository had proved not to the liking of great Britain, and pointed out that Fakhri Pasha, the newly appointed President of the Council, had at his request accepted his position. The Khedive offered to appoint in his stead Riaz Pasha, who was formerly at the head of the Egyptian judiciary and who is known to be friendly to British interests. Lord Cromer assented to the appointment of Riaz Pasha. He secured from Riaz Pasha the assurance that he would make no alteration in the cabinet before consulting Great Britain.

The Washington Evening News says: "Chief Justice Fuller is said to be seriously thinking of giving up the existing position he now occupies and of retiring to the embassies for good and which he left in Chicago when he came to Washington. The reason he assigns for contemplating this is that the salary of $10,000 attached to the office of Chief Justice is a poor compensation for the $40,000 or $50,000 he was earning at the bar. He says that he is not in the best physical condition, especially when the work of the court is heavy, and he has not enjoyed a long vacation since he left the bench, and he is pressed on the bench and could be secured frequently summoned on a probable term of three months. The Chicago Tribune says: "Chief Justice Fuller's decision to leave the bench is a matter of regret to the bar, which prefers the Chicago judge to any other jurist for the Supreme Bench, or it is expected that the vacancy left by the late Justice Lamar will vacate.

None of the passengers or crew lose of the freight crew were hurt. Both passenger engines and the cars of coal were wrecked. The tracks were blocked several hours. It is understood that the fast train will be delayed.

—The Chicago paper warehouse employed at Philadelphia, killing three men, the night of May a collision occurred on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway tracks at Chicago. John Grim, the gardener, was badly burned and scalded, while several others had narrow escapes.

—Governor Atgeld honored a requisition from the Governor of New York for Thomas Ryan, who escaped with forgery, and he are arrest in Chicago.

THE FIRE RECORD.

—Bushing Academy, a noted educational institution in Adrianna, Mich., was destroyed by fire Thursday morning. Loss, $50,000; insurance, $20,000. The academy occupied without injury. The fire office of Nobel Sanford is a poor company.

—The St. Louis the cotton housing in Memphis, Tenn., was destroyed by fire. The fire spread with great rapidity. Many people were asleep when the fire started, living in a half-mangled condition, and it was almost impossible to get them out of rooms. The thermometer was considerably below zero and the firemen suffered great disadvantage. The Hotel Brighton adjoining was soon in flames and burned to red fire. The total loss is estimated at $100,000. Insurance unknown.

—Washington and wife at Atlanta, Texas, burned. It was used as a lodging house. The fire started in a room in the second window and broke his neck. Tom Ashton was fatally hurt by falling to escape from the elevator. Twenty others had narrow escapes.

—The National Novelty Knitting Company at Chicago was destroyed by fire Thursday morning. The loss will be about $50,000. The building is three stories in height and 100 feet in length. The company had a sandfield assured for $30,000. The Hoffman Piano Company occupied the second floor of the building and although a fire wall separated both the last Legislature for its extravagance and had financial embarrassment. Its reputation is a further appropriation of $50,000 to the World's Fair and demanded the various bills extensively and play. The inaugural address of Governor Clough was followed by a long period of silence. Senator Turpin has long remonstrated by the Democrats in the Indiana Legislature. PERSONAL MENTION.

—Clay Hopper, the Toledo, Ohio prominent whose case of unclaimed admiration has attracted so much attention, died Sunday morning. Life passed away before daybreak. The deceased was very much beloved. The body was rapidly decomposing. The body was taken to Toledo for cremation, where a grave has been waiting to receive it for six months.

—At San Francisco, Grand Hayward, for twenty-eight years a clerk in the Sheriff's office, died.

—Philip Wolf, a wealthy Indian trader, died from apoplexy at Fort Yates, Dak., on the Indian reservation.

—Rev. Dr. Edward Clark, for twenty years pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims in Washington, has resigned his pastorate to accept the chair of Pastoral Theology in the Presbyterian General Assembly.

—At Westminster, Md., the nursery registered 12 degrees below zero Monday morning. Mr. Stoner, a farmer, was frozen to death. The nursery registered 8 degrees below zero at Hanover. Pa. Chief of Police of Cincinnati has issued orders to his men to shoot the status-breaker and tests unemployed people President Ingalls has finally broken his silence. The Chicago newspaper is in efforts to furnish coal to the poor. Many people have died of it and 40, the prevailing price.

LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL.

—Michigan lumbermen are organizing a combine.

—The sticky coal has again advanced two 5 cents a gallon—be sound this.

—Ex-Mayor Jones, ex-Paul de Lomala to London says that a train crowded with Europeans and Asiatics was called on the Cosmo railway near Mandi recently, and the engine was detached to join a wagon loaded with fifty-four boxes of dynamite and eighty-two cases of gunpowder. The engine moved down the grade with great speed and crashed into the wagon, explosing the dynamite. Fifty persons were killed, including M. Lesquesne, the head of the Suisse Amagnac Bulge.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—At San Francisco Cal., the executors of the estate of Mrs. Mary Jane E. Brandon have accepted the bid of J. and W. Seligman, of New York, of $400,000 for 25,000 shares of San Francisco and Northwestern Railroad stock. It is stated that the religious already outs the remainder of the stock.

—Explosions as the knowledge now in the hands of the people are certain not in the city to last forty-eight hours if the sought-for information is given. The knowledge of this fact is causing local dealers to be in a state of fright. Some have contracted such a demand for coal as was never before known. It is causing and agent agile to contemplate the effects of a strike. Meanwhile, the people are in a fine fridge, that would surely shut down every mine in the country if generally used. The people cut of employment, and would, if they knew how, compel the operators to do the right thing. Hundreds came in with frozen ears and noses yesterday, and they will be in more large.

—Ice Six Feet Thick.

After three winters that scarcely deserved the name, the people of Boston are experiencing one of the old-fashioned kind. The thermometer has fallen below the record for intense and sustained cold, and the ice is six feet thick, and there is a change. For four years the new year has found the ground covered with snow. St. Paul, and every lake and stream in the state, is ice bound. The ice is certainly bound in the center of the Mississippi River, and it is doing its work in early, coming in a week or two earlier than last year. It will be till April. Thousands of people will be thrown out of employment, and had been above the line of the Great Lakes, and the ice was removed at Port au Prince at noon Christmas Day. It was 20 below, about the same as at St. Michael. Teacher Hippolyte at once bound a sandfield assured for $30,000. The Hoffman Piano Company occupied the second floor of the building and although a fire wall separated both the last Legislature for its extravagance and had financial embarrassment. Its reputation is a further appropriation of $50,000 to the World's Fair and demanded the various bills extensively and play. FOREIGN.

—There were 19,310 deaths from cholera at Hamburg in 1892.

—Private advices received at Chicago, Oct., from London say that Mr. Gurney Sperry, commander of the Boston in the recent Lord Mayor's Day sham battle, has been appointed Governor General of Canada. This intelligence is well received in official circles and is regarded as very probable. The Ecclesiastical tribunal in Canada has given the imperial government no little trouble since the death of Lord Lorne. Since the premature death of the distinguished nobleman would revive the military movement of latent partisanship. Lord Wolseley was his first mounts in Canada. He was stationed at Montreal during the Trent affair, and subsequently commanded the expedition to the Red River in 1870.

WITH AN IRON HAND.

ENGLAND'S GRASP UPON ILL-FATED EGYPT.

Chief Justice Fuller Doesn't Like His Job—Insurance Shatter the Louisiana Lottery—Japan Will Protect Her Sealers—Gladstone's Hero.

Advices from Cuba say Tuesday the Blanco was handed an ultimatum from the British Government demanding the disembarkation of the portion of a column within twenty-four hours. In an interview with Lord Cromer, the British ambassador, the Khedive announced that he would appoint a commission of a character and position not to the liking of great Britain, and ordered out Sir Valentine Pasha, the newly appointed President of the Council, but at his request withdrew his position. The Khedive offered to appoint to his cabinet Riaz Pasha, who was formerly at the head of the Egyptian ministry, and who is known to be in favor of British control. Lord Cromer assented to the appointment of Riaz Pasha. He seemed hurt and bluntly so emphasized that he would wake no apologies for his mission to Abyssinia, consulting Great Britain.

The Washington Evening News says: "Chief Justice Fuller is said to be seriously thinking of resigning his exalted position on the ground that he is not equal to the attendant duties, which have grown so much of late years in the office of chief justice. He is now 74 years old, and he has served on the bench for 22 years, during which he was confronted with many difficult and delicate questions, especially when the school cases relating to the status of the colored people came before the court. The Chief Justice is a man of great ability, of great moral courage, and of great integrity, and he is frequently unstrung by seeing the work of the Supreme Court in arrears, particularly because of the heavy dockets of the circuit courts, which are so much more numerous than those of any other court in the world. The Chief Justice has expressed to his associates on the bench the opinion that the Supreme Court should be given the power to dispose of cases by writ of certiorari, and a bill to that effect has been introduced in the Senate. Hundreds cases in such towns as Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston, which are decided by the circuit courts of appeals, and which are of no importance to the public at large, should be disposed of by the Supreme Court, which is the only court in the country that can lay down a rule of law for the guidance of the inferior courts of the country. The Chief Justice is not well, and he is worried over the condition of his docket, and he is not the only member of the court who is worried over the condition of the docket. Some of the judges are worn down by the work, and they are not able to do the work they should do because of the congested condition of the docket. Some of the judges are not able to write their opinions in cases they have heard because of the press of other work, and they are not able to write their opinions in cases they have heard because of the press of other work, and they are not able to write their opinions in cases they have heard because of the press of other work, and they

Quite frequently of late vandals have broken into the churches at Kalkaska and destroyed property. Citizens swear vengeance on the miscreants if they are caught.

Returning from a visit to the Ogdensburg school one day last week Old Mission school children amused themselves by shooting off their revolvers. Willis Ayers aged 16 years, was accidentally shot in the temple by George Sweenie. He lived only a few hours.

A report was made at the annual meeting and banquet of the business men of Traverse City last week, by a committee appointed to ascertain such facts that the shipment of farm products from the Grand Traverse region during the fall of 1892 reached the aggregate value of $347,198. We notice however, that 850,000 pounds of fish are included as farm products.

C. E. Kelsey, of Cheboygan, Mich., is getting out rock elm square timber near Lomas a little station on the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad in Missaukee county, near Cadillac. He will tow about 1,250,000 feet board measure. It will be landed at Toledo, O., where it will be loaded on vessels for Europe by the way of the lakes and St. Lawrence river. Rock elm hewn timber has a steady market in Great Britain at fairly good prices.

A daring robbery was committed at Elmira, Antrim county, Sunday. Three men went to the home of David L. Buell, when his wife was in the house alone. At the point of a revolver they made her fill in the bureau $90, then confronted her down cellar, tied her hands behind her and then bound her to a post, telling her if she screamed they would shoot her. They opened a small safe belonging to Mr. Buell and took from it $250. No trace or clew as to who they were has been found.

The county seat contest is being revived in Benzie county and the fight makes things in its vicinity so warm as to spoil the weighing. The building which is now being used as a court house is lost in the woods, three miles from anywhere, and court has to be adjourned sometimes in order to avoid the heat of the sun and the snow coming through the roof. A petit jury man can't half sleep with the snow falling on him and the sun melt the ends of startling dreams.

An organization with a very long name, The North Michigan Hardwood Lumber Manufacturer's Association, was formed at Traverse City recently. The purpose of the association is to bring the hardwood manufacturers of Northern Michigan together for the purpose of conferring with each other, for the adjustment of evils connected with the hardwood business, and to promote the interests of hardwood lumber manufacturers in every way possible. D. L. Day, of Glen Haven was elected president of the association, and L. Roberts, of Traverse City, secretary and treasurer. It is said by the Eagle of Traverse that the manufacturers present at the meeting represented an annual cut of about one hundred million feet of hardwood.

A LITTLE TACT.

A True Story Illustrating the Value of Knowing How.

One of the last important measures of the commonwealth of Massachusetts before Maine was made a state, was to negotiate with the Penobscot Indians for the purchase of their rights in a large tract of forest land, and some very eminent gentlemen were selected to carry out the bargain.

After the signing of the deed with its due formality by the assembled sagamores, it was necessary for them to "acknowledge it," as the legal phrase is. One of the stately old sachems held up the paper and asked "if they acknowledged it to be their free act and deed." The result was the red men gathered their blankets around them and relapsed into a state of stolid indifference, giving no sign of reply. General Blake, who was present, had had much to do with the Indians and saw at once that they did not understand what the formality required of them meant. "Let me try," he said, taking the paper. Turning to the head chief he said: "You willing—and all the rest of the Indians willing?" "Ugh! Ugh!" they all cried in chorus, showing as much of willingness as they had intended of reserve.

GEORGE W. MILLER.

CASE OF SMALL BOY.

She Now Wishes That She Had Not Encouraged Him.

One of the women who always makes the acquaintance of children on the train and otherwise show their head spirit was coming from Hartford to Boston.

"So was a rosy-cheeked boy rejoicing in the name by which the father of his country was known, also the lady whose position in life is another of the lad.

He and the other woman soon became acquainted, and she asked the usual set of questions in regard to his name, age and tastes. Suddenly he retaliated.

"Have you got a mother?" he asked, glancing toward his own maternal relative.

"No," said the lady.

"Ho-oh," said George meditatively. Then he inquired hopefully:

"Have you got any little boys?" And again the lady answered no.

The pause was longer this time but George finally betthought himself of another conversation.

"Have you got a husband?" and once more the answer was in the negative.

George pondered silently awhile.

"Well sais he finally, "will you tell me what you have got?"

And the lady meekly murmured "Nothing."

Wonders in Bookbinding.

Queen Elizabeth used to carry about with her suspended by a chain of pure gold, a book called "The Golden Manual of Prayer," a diminutive volume of 140 pages, bound in "enamelled work of gold." One side of this dainty volumes gave a representation of "The Judgment of Solomon," the other the Brazen Serpent on the Cross in the desert." In the jewel house in the Tower of London the plate where the British crown and other royal insignia are kept, there is a book bound throughout in gold, even to the wires of the hinges. Its clasp is two rubies set at opposite ends of four golden links. On one side there is a cross of diamonds; on the other the English coat of arms set in diamonds, pearls and rubies.

Animals and Their Toilets.

Cats, large and small, make the most careful toilet of any class of animals, excepting some of the opossums. The lions and tigers wash themselves in exactly the same manner as the cat, wetting the dark, India rubber-like ball of the forefoot with saliva, and passing it over the face and behind the ears. The foot is then at the same time a face sponge and brush, and the rough tongue cleans the rest of the body. Horses also use their foot to wash their faces, and the horse's foot is so suitable for a brush that it is used to apply the "paint" to the face for the stage.

Wise Smith.

A certain actor of patronage was one ferret by a poet, whose name begins with T, on Alexander Smith, who is the young man very seriously observed. When T—— "reserved" a meal when the other was in time, person," he is said to have exclaimed, "Oh, sir, do not discourage me."

NEW YORK'S DIALECT.

How the English Language Is Murdered in the Metropolis.

How many persons know that New York city has a dialect of its own, and one that is unknown in purity by anything it in the parts where it is? Many persons are conversed on the precious with, when a New Yorker can spot a stranger the instant the stranger opens his mouth to pronounce the name of the principal street in the town. We call it Broadway, emphasizing the last syllable very strongly. It appears to be quite a trick to do this and it is evidently an unnatural pronunciation for we notice that very great majority of strangers say Broadway. Some criticism on the matter, and we learn from what parts of the country they hail, just to show them that there is some thing about them that is not city-bred and to set them puzzling about whether it is in the shape of their or the style of their shoes or dress it is. People from the South being the fast by calling our Houston street, Houston street, as they mispronounce from Texas to the Chesapeake, but we play as strange a trick upon another name, for we call Cortlandt Slip "Quinty Slip." As no one would do that naturally we detect strangers by that pronunciation. The name of Houston is another that we trifle with, calling it Hiouston instead of as we should. Barbarous and by words other than these I can pick out a New Yorker a stranger that he and I may meet—whether it be in Boston or in the Rocky mountains. I can do this by noticing how we pronounce the "ur" sound in such words as birth and bird.

FISH-EATING WEEDS.

Peculiar Plants Which Seek Vitality From Every Things.

Commander Alfred Carpenter, writing from Sealds, Red Sea country, contributes the following remarkable account of a plant growing upon one of the vertebrata. The plant in question was observed by him while viewing the Parent branches the Sea Cows Sea.

"As I neared a pool cut off by the tide from the sea I noticed among other sea-weed the plants a very strange looking Branchiated weed. It at first to impact I colour I noticed numbers of small fish lying helplessly in its fronds apparently with little or no life in them.

"Putting my hand down to pick one of them up I found my fingers caught by suckers on the weed, the fronds of which had curled tightly upon them. The fish had been caught in every conceivable way—by the head, tail, side etc—and some of them had been held until the life was completely mummified.

"Those of the fish that were still living had evidently been caught at different times, they appearing in all stages of extinction. I regret being unable to name either the plant or the fish, but it is a beautiful specimen, really growing upon the fishy species of the deep there for the exhibition.

TERRORIZED A TRAIN.

PLAYFUL ANTICS OF TWO MISSOURI TOUGHS.

Fires Fierce Work at a Summer Resort—John A. Dwyle, Heir to the Dead Millionaire, Sues Victoria—Other Western Queries Discussed.

Indian in a Few Words.

—Two young desperadoes boarded the south-bound passenger train on the Missouri, Kansas and Southern Railway at Vista, twenty miles south of Sedalia, Mo., and, flourishing revolvers, completely terrorized the passengers, driving them from the coaches in mad haste. The women nearly fainted, and begged the train crew to hide them up in the baggage car. Conductor Rhodes boarded from passengers that proceeded to handling his train the men had taken possession of a Coal Creek hotel, chilled the windows, and drove the guests into the streets. He telegraphed to Sedalia for a squad of police to meet the train left the depot. The desperadoes held possession of the train in genuine cowboy fashion until Fourteenth street was reached, when they hopped off and escaped. A description of the men answered that of Jesse Clifford and Alfred Martin, two of the gentlemen who broke out of the Sedalia jail (Mo.) jail on Saturday night.

—A fire started up in Coffin Wednesday morning in the Grand View Hotel at Port Huron. The hotel was a large wooden structure built on the water's edge on a high bluff overlooking the Narrows, and was a popular summer resort for New York and Brooklyn people. The fire spread rapidly, and ten minutes after it was discovered, the building was one mass of flame. It was burned to the ground. About thirty people were made homeless, and their loss in clothing and baggage was considerable. Some of the guests had to leave in their nightclothes. Most of the guests were from Brooklyn. Nearly all the furniture was saved, and nearly all the cottages around the hotel escaped. The hotel was a large structure, and was built so that it was almost on the water from the rear of the hotel, but was exposed to the fierce heat for a very short time. The loss is estimated at $100,000, which includes the hotel and its stock. There is no insurance. The fire is supposed to have been caused by the glinding of chemicals for a photographic outfit which were stored on the ground floor.

—Word reached Chicago Wednesday that John A. Dwyer of the famous Butte city will come, had died in Victoria, B. C. Later this was followed by a dispatch saying that the cause of his death was a fall, that, instead of having fallen down some stairs and receiving the injuries which ended his death, he probably had been murdered. It is considered likely that the tragic death of Dwyle will result in bringing to a speedy end the lawsuits that will cost one of the most sensational cases that have come before the courts in years. Aside from the other circumstances of the case, the final issue excites interest if for no other reason than that the value of the property involved amounts to nearly $12,000,000, and that some of the most famous lawyers in Chicago are interested. Colonel Robert Ingersoll are engaged on either side. John A. Dwyle, who was an old Chicagoan, leaves five sons three of whom are in Chicago, the two others being engaged in business in Montana. Dwyle's will, which was made in Butte, in the election of 85, he regarded his right to the income of the property as doubtful, he bequeathed the property to his sons, and left a large portion of his wealth to the Roman Catholic church. Numerous letters and telegrams of condolence have been received from all over the country and from some of the most eminent men of the country in England.

—Seven miners were killed and seven injured by an explosion in the Turkinshaft Mine at Dux, Austria.

—Lamont cleveland Cabinet score: Secretary of State, Thomas F. Bayard; Treasury, Charles Dickens; War, Patrick A. Collins; Navy, Daniel S. Lamont; Interior, E. B. Ward; Attorney, Philander Knox; Postmaster General, William H. Hartley; Agriculture, George Ben Sudge; Turkish Ambassador, Hugh H. Walker; of Washington.

—Colonel Prak, ex-Alderman, N. M., is in congress, after by big demand were 19.

—Obituary: At Nacogdoches, Texas, Madison C. Wallingsen, a brother-in-law of the Lone Star State, aged 85.—At Birkenhead, Cheshire, Eng., Mrs. Ellen Jones, London, John Watson, the lower boundary.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—At Boston, John Lagan, foreman of the American Waste Company, died in consequence of the hair spring, committed suicide by shooting himself.

—James T. L. Hutchin, the top cashier of the Dallas County Bank, at Odell, Ill., which failed last September, has been indicted for illegal banking. The bank was a private concern and the liabilities about $50,000, of which not over 15 per cent. is covered by insurance. Hutchin has disappeared.

—The Taggart family lived in a cheap apartment house in Philadelphia. Taggart did little toward providing for the family and the 10 a week earned by his stepson was the sole support of the comfy household. When Thanksgiving came the family evening he asked his mother why she was never ready to leave supper with him. His question enraged the hard-worked woman, she turned suddenly from the stove, where she was cooking buckwheat cakes, and threw a kettle full of the lard of her son. Hardly in a few minutes and an officer arrested Mr. Taggart.

—At Helena, Ark., Nathan Ramsey, colored, was hanged. On Jan. 18 last year Ramsey, in company with several other negroes, shot Ernest Palmer Mallory, a young gentleman. Mallory was called to his door and shot by Ramsey.

—An explosion of giant powder in a mine near Ishpeming, Mich., killed Benjamin Lane and mortally injured James Ken.

—The preliminary examination of the Sponer brothers for the murderous assault on Detectives Hunter, Hutter, of Menominee, Mich., has begun at Menominee.

—Walter B. Brooks, the defaulting local freight agent of the Sioux City and Northern, who fled from Sioux City Tuesday night, leaving a shortage of about $1,000, was tracked as far south as Fremont by St. Joseph. He immediately surrounded the house, when Brooks begged from a third-story window and made his escape.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Justice L. Q. C. Lamar, of the United States Supreme Court, died at Macon, Ga., Monday night. He was coming up on the train from Macon, and was carried into the house. Mrs. Lamar took the overcoat and started out for a walk. He had scarcely left the house when he was met by a friend and returned to Mr. Virgil's house, where he died in about half an hour. Justice Lamar died in the arms of his wife and seemed to have a good appetite and to be in excellent health. He had lived in Georgia, which he had not left for the house at Macon for a year. Justice Lamar was seized with violent pains and died in a few minutes.

—Among the passengers by the Pennsylvania Limited were Mr. and Mrs. Nilsson, who are on their way to Paris. Mme. Nilsson is the famous prima donna, which will be welcomed by her many admirers in the Gay City.

—Mr. Charles H. Hoyt, known as Flora Walsh on the stage, died at the Parker House, Boston, Tuesday morning.

FOREIGN.

—Ex-King Milan and Queen Natalie of Servia are reported to have become reconciled.

—The Egyptian situation is becoming very grave. Lord Rosebery has received telegraphic advices from Lord Dufferin, which are to the effect that the Porte has ordered its troops to refer to the Turkish Sultan and to the Egyptian question, and that Russia is causing the dismissal of the Turkish Ottoman Bank, in the belief that the natives are greatly excited.

—M. Cochefert, the chief of the Bank of Naples, was arrested at Rome for embezzlement.

—Lord Francis Egan, centenarian Tory, died on his farm near Dublin. His will was published, and it appears that he died a rich man. Aside from the other circumstances of the case, the final issue excites interest if for no other reason than that the value of the property involved amounts to nearly $12,000,000, and that some of the most famous lawyers in Chicago are interested. Colonel Robert Ingersoll are engaged on either side.

—Twenty-five miners were killed and seven injured by an explosion in the Turkinschaft Mine at Dux, Bohemia.

—Lord Rosebery has received a telegram from Lord Dufferin, the British ambassador at Constantinople, to the effect that the Porte has ordered its troops to refer to the Turkish Sultan and to the Egyptian question, and that Russia is causing the dismissal of the Turkish Ottoman Bank, in the belief that the natives are greatly excited.

—M. Cochefert, the chief of the Bank of Naples, was arrested at Rome for embezzlement.

—Lord Francis Egan, centenarian Tory, died on his farm near Dublin. His will was published, and it appears that he died a rich man. Aside from the other circumstances of the case, the final issue excites interest if for no other reason than that the value of the property involved amounts to nearly $12,000,000, and that some of the most famous lawyers in Chicago are interested. Colonel Robert Ingersoll are engaged on either side.

—Highthorts is prevailing to quite an alarming extent in Bohemia. Twenty, a few miles from Norwalk, Ohio. In the family of Mr. Milton Ingersoll, his wife and Mrs. Wilson lie very sick with the disease. The children have not suffered.

—Washington rumor says that Mr. Sandi will resign a cabinet and before long and that he will be succeeded as special envoy to the court of St. Petersburg Ireland or Henry Kenan.

—The Russian engineer mutiny the residence of Ibai Bant at Dawrer Sundrin and Mr. Ibai Bant has been murdered. Suffering among the poor in all parts of the country is great. Numbers of people have been frozen to death, some in their beds.

CONVENTION FOR GOOD ROADS

Plans Considered Wherein the Condition of Public Roads May Be Bettered.

At the convention of the National League for Good Roads, held in Washington, the Committee on Resolutions reported a resolution thanking the press and asking for their continued cooperation. The committee considered so far as possible the business of road-building should be separated from politics. It was further resolved that the interest of the agricultural and mechanical arts in the several States should assist a department of the agricultural, scientific and practical, in the construction and maintenance of good roads, and that this bureau should be provided with a sufficient number of assistants to carry out its appropriations. The Committee on Legislation recommended that an appropriation of $5,000 be asked of Congress to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make a general inquiry into the condition of highways in the United States.

Misfortunes to Threaten Employes.

A bill has passed the Indiana House which makes it a misdemeanor for the charge employers or threaten to discharge their employes for voting for other organizations. The bill passes a penalty of $100 fine and imprisonment for the violation of the act. The bill is opposed by 50 of the National Grand Army of the Republic encampment to be held in Indianapolis in September was introduced by Representative Meredith. Many other bills of similar character are before the Indiana Legislature.

OLD'S FAIR POSTOFFICE

Interior Arrangement of a New Public Building.

A white cozy will have a neat office. It will be located in the lower corner of the government building, and will constitute one of the United States postoffices. Complete in all its details, equipped with the latest and best facilities, it will give all people an length into the system of perfection, and show them for it which Uncle Sam's energetic boys handle the mail. The world's fair postoffice will be a space 10 by 42 feet. Inside the treasury department's exhibit is "woven" dividing the world from the lobby will be a beautiful piece of cabinet work the entire room. Along the lower panels, about a half foot deep, depicting the evolution of postal transportation. At either end, seventy feet apart, will be carved panels showing the approach with dog team; next will come a mounted courier; then the mail coach with its six horses, the old stagecoach sidewheel steamboat, the first railroad train, and the locomotive with its curved smokestack, the "fast mail" whizzing along at sixty-five miles an hour. Over the panel, above the screen, will be two carved figures, one representing a mail carrier, the other a postal clerk, with a banner between inscribed, "United States Postoffice."

The upper part of the room will be the pigeon-holes and grills through which the working of a postoffice can be easily seen.

The cases and working furniture be made as low as possible to afford an unobstructed view of the clerks and where the working of the office requires the furniture to be made higher it will be placed at 45 angles to the lobby.

CUPID AND THE CAT.

Carried the Tender Message Between the Couple.

It was in the spring of the year 1859 I met my husband. I had a position as artist for one of the large firms in New York city, and he held a position as bookkeeper for the firm of Brown & Brown, the firm we occupied. I became acquainted with him soon our acquaintance ripened into a close friendship and many walks we took spend as pleasantly. I let he his opinion the novel idea of having the large office cat for a mascot he, and the first thing in the morning I would see Tommy at the door of my room ready to be let in soon as the door would be open he would walk into the room and jump upon my lap or else he would stay in the hall where he would be out of the way. Tommy was a large yellow tom and the boldest cat I ever saw. He

By Ralph Olmead Stock

CHAPTER I.

"A sail on the larboard bow!" shouted the lookout, clinging to the fore-topgallant stays of the stalwart ship Sea Hawk.

"Can you make her out?" called up Captain Ralph Lafitte, a tall, well-built, handsome young man, in the uniform worn by officers ranking as colonial officers in the service of England.

This was the last trip, when the lies between the cockerland and the American Colonies were strong, despite face forcing them to unite for mutual protection, and causing them to overlook the differences that were yet to send them asunder.

In reply to the Captain's question, "Can you make her out?" the lookout took a longer and more careful view of the strange craft that had attracted his attention, then he called out:

"Ship, ahoy! Sir, she seems to have taken nasty, and he has long to reach Nantucket."

As the reader knows, Nantuck is the extreme southerly peninsula of Long Island, where the cliffs rise lostly up from the sea, and where, even at this early date, fires were kept burning at night for the guidance of those sailing into the sound, or seeking from Atlantic Ocean the protection of the great island from the fierce gales.

Captain Lafitte turned to the second-mate (lieutenant commanding now, and in a voice in which authority and anxiety were blended) said:

"Lieutenant Dayton, take a glass, go aloft, and report what you make of the stranger."

"Ay, ay, sir!" replied the lieutenant, youth, and, taking a telescope from the stand at the mizzen-mast, he sprang into the mizzen-mast shrouds and went up easily and swiftly till he stood on the topgallant-yard, with one arm thrown lightly around the stay.

There was a soft, warm breeze blowing from the south. It scarcely ruffled the surface of the sea, but it filled the upper sails on the tapering masts, causing the stately vessel to glide with a wonderfully graceful motion, as if proud of its own invincible power.

Well, Dayton," called up the Captain, who was now standing impatiently by the mast at the wheel, "what is she?"

"Her flag?"

"She flies none. Every schooll of war is flying a flag, and she comes from the southward."

"And is making for Montauk?"

"Yes, sir."

"That is very strange," muttered the Captain.

He took a turn on the quarter-deck, then picking up a telescope he looked in the direction of the stranger, now visible to the naked eye as a white speck on the far-off bottom, where the blue sky and the blue ocean met.

After an eager survey of some minutes the Captain called out to the young Dayton again:

"Did you recognize the Adventure ship?"

"Yes, sir," was the response.

"Where?"

"Last year, in New York." The lieutenant looked again at the stranger and added, with some emphasis, "I know that is the Adventure ship, or her sister."

"All right, Mr. Layton," said the Captain, with a sigh.

Dal times were in fashion on the Sea Hawk.

Her crew, one hundred and thirty in number, were all in the prime of life, hardiness, boldness and honest, yet so neat in their attire as if ready for inspection.

The uniformity of their dress would have laid the strongest hand upon the sailors' vanity. But even the ungarbed eye could see that this was not a merchant ship.

Every part of it was polished, every brass spindle was bright, and every rope was neatly coiled in place. The decks were as clean and white as a maiden's conscience, the sailors' dress, and such parts as were painted, looked as if they had just been under the brush.

Above the masts in well-oiled racks were boarding rifles ranged neatly to hand, and beneath them, still gleaming bucks attached, were neatly coiled pistols.

On either side there were ten port holes, from which the muzzles of the guns were seen—twenty great guns looked out.

But these formidable weapons were dwarfed by a long, tapering swivel gun amidships, which must have been the particular pet of the seamen, for the art usual surface showed like a mass of gold.

Ready, the Sea Hawk was a picture fitted out under the direction of Commodore Edward Livingstone, commander of the New York colonial militia, and commander of the Sea Hawk, who at that time was plundering the merchant ships, and even making marauding expeditions into the ports of Maryland and Virginia on the coast.

Two years prior to the date of our story, Colonel Livingstone had designed, in conjunction with Ralph Lafitte, the commander of the Colonial frigate Sea Hawk, which was then building away, and was never seen again, the general belief was that the Sea Hawk had foundered in the bottom in some storm, or, still more sad, any ship have fallen a victim to the pirates she was sent out to capture.

One thing was certain, the depredations on the seas still continued, and as a consequence, the Sea Hawk was fitted out and put to sea, under the command of the gallant young sailor, Captain Ralph Lafitte, the son of Sag Harbor, Long Island.

At that time New York was comparatively of much less commercial importance than at present, and the inhabitants of eastern Long Island were more attached to the mainland by ships than the beautiful harbor on which the Empire City now stands.

The Sea Hawk was in her return from a cruise to the West Indies and as the officers and crew had been absent from shore on a trial cruise, "The Hampshire," in Long Island, it was a great delight, the first glimpse of the hills that bordered Montauk, that had for two weeks been near the horizon and the distinguished land-marks sunk.

Under Captain Dayton's directions, the cumbrous flag of New York was run up to the forward head, and from the mizzen gaff there floated a blue flag, emblazoned in the centre.

By the time the anchor was heaved and sailed, with some reluctance, that is the Adventure sailor, or her sister, the sun was low in the west, and the Sea Hawk was in the harbor, and the sailors were busily engaged in furling and her going. And though she sailed at the life-blood of the sailor to wagging at what they considered her mad freaks, she was believed for her nobility of heart as much as she was admired for the beauty of her person.

It might be added that Tom Hodgens—thanks to the teaching of her father, who was thought to be a prodigy of learning, was thought to be a young lady of phenomenal acquirements, but at that time education was not considered essential to the gentler sex, there being a very general impression that "schooling" I ided to give women also unfitting the other female place Heaven intended for them to occupy.

The moment the Sea Hawk was spoken, the men leaned against Sag Harbor to secure their mates, the women waved their handkerchiefs, and the children shouted their glasses and ran down to the white shore.

While the anchors were being dropped, the old sexton rang the bell on the white steeple, and over every building of importance a flag was raised to show the joy of the villagers.

A "flag of purse" silk was run up from a staff in front of Sophia Conklin's mansion, the old gentleman performing the work with his own hands.

"It's the flag Ralph gave me before he sailed," said the Squire, addressing his wife and daughter, and I am sure the lass will recognize it."

Flexible Mass.

The valuable mass of Florida alumnds in the hammocks and back rooms. It is gathered chiefly by negroes. In its natural state it hangs in festoons from the limbs of trees in strands from one to five feet in length. The mass is gathered by pulling it from the trees with long poles, or by climbing the trees and then shaking or moving it. The mass is buried in the earth for about a month, after which it is dug up and dried and shipped and sold to the local groceries. It is put up in packages, and then run through a machine called a lickin, which is nothing more than a rolling-cover with threshing machine, which breaks up the roll of similar stationary spikes. The action of these spikes is to knock out some more of the seeds, and trash, but it does not complete the job. It is then shaken in a sieve, and the trash and seeds are after which it is pressed into tubes or cans, and shipped to market. The mass bills do all this work by hand, except the ginning. The mass, after having gone through the above process, brings from $2.50 to $3 per 100 pounds.

If, instead of allowing to remain in the earth for one month, it is left there for three months, the entire bark of the mass is pulled off, and there remains a beautiful black fiber almost exactly like hair. The bark mass brings from $5 to $7 per 100 pounds.

The treatment of this mass is a good field for invention. Might not a machine be made which will take off the bark, leaving the fiber, without the necessity of burying the mass for so long a time in the earth.

Photographing Flying Bullets.

An English photographic journal has an interesting account of the process by which photographs have been obtained of rifle bullets travelling at the rate of two thousand feet in a second. The source of illumination was the electric spark, such as that given by the discharge of a Leyden jar. The camera and lens were dispensed with, and the gelatine plate impressed upon it was placed in the path of the bullet, and the little lens placed on the rough rock-strewn battle-ground.

The first camera, it seems, I sent the knapsack and that sweet face to the Crimean battle-field, and the little lens was placed in the path of the bullet, and the shot, the bullet would make the mess, the bullet would make the mess, the bullet would make the mess

By Capt. O'Neill Neale

"Why this rejoicing?" asked Leo Hodges, rolling in her house before Squire Cundit's gate, and addressing Elleen, who was hurrying more than the occasion seemed to demand.

"Have you heard news? good news? real Eden, running out and taking his friend's hand.

"Time to not keep it back, Ellen, for pay you some reason for news good, but or indifferent, anything to break the monotony of this dull life. Ah, if I were a man I should make my own news and give the world a fresh and startling piece of news, but being only a woman, a 'weaker vessel,' as the Apostle says, what can I do?"

"Leo would have gone on at some length in her lamenting half-real, half-laughing way, had not Eileen Cundit interrupted her by calling out:

"The Sea Hawk!" echoed Leo Hodges, and for the instant the cold fish, under the excitement, from her cheeks, and she spoke from big gray eyes, the spiritless creature making no effort to get away. Though there was no controlling hand on her bridle.

"The Sea Hawk has been in sight for an hour, and I thought, and hoped that by evening, anchor at sunset, Mother has good gun to order supper, and every servant on the place is busied in order to give their lawful master a welcome home."

Leo Hodges threw the bridle reins over the panting mare's neck, and the intelligent horse, with a smart tug to a coolish master, turned his head toward home, of loosed on his hand and walked away, with quiet dignity.

"You will come into the house and wait, Mark Hodges, and tell me her friends, with her left arm, and nursing an ill-use arm in a sling.

"No, my love, we shall take the other direction," said Leo.

"To the village?"

"Yes, to the village." Leo was just the brave heart before their foe go as the foal, ten minutes before, turning away, it was assumed that you would have the Sea Hawk, the pride and glory of the island, you, the pride and glory of the island, you, the pride and glory of the island, you

SHE HAD TO INSIST.

The New Servant Would Not Tolerate Any Carelessness.

The queenly creature sent by the intelligence office expressed herself as satisfied with $6 a week, with alternate evenings to herself and the street for purpose of enjoying the front parlor for the reception of company.

"There is one thing more," she pleasantly observed, "for which I imagine it is not necessary to speak. I—"

She cleared her snowy throat.

"—assume that your husband—"

"—builds the fire in the morning."

"Oh, certainly," she cordially rejoined. "Yes, indeed.

The queenly creature expected as much as a matter of course.

"What I am getting at," she continued, "is to insist that he must never use language of to a lady. I cannot tolerate such carelessness."

Loftily these she murmured as she reverse and departed, promising to return for duty the next day.

A Starving Artist.

John Graham Lough, one of the few great British sculptors, had a full experience of the proverbial poverty of artists. During his first year in London, about 1827, while modeling his "Miller for the Duke of Wellington, he went without meat for three months, had only one bushel and a half of coal during the whole winter, tore up his shirts to make rags in which to model his clay figure nude, and slept upon it—when the cold would allow him to sleep—on the ground.

A Knockdown Blow.

"You never read my book!" says an eminent historian, in a time of pronounced jealousy and distress to his little boy, whom he found bending eagerly over a tale of cowboy exploits, hair-breadth escapes and wild adventure. "Now, pupa," was the apologetic answer; "I will by and bye, when I'm older; but now I only like books that are interesting."

Not Strong Enough.

"Puppy!" exclaimed Johnson, as he contemptuously threw aside the Hon. Dr. Harwood's "Liberal Translation of the New Testament." He had discovered that the translator had forced "Jesus wept" into "Tears of the world burst into a flood of tears."

Use Improper Notice.

The empress-mother of China is obliged to resort to various means to replenish her coffers. One of the most profitable of these is the sale of orders the tariff of which is as follows. The title of "Yan Foh, "helpful cousin about forty pounds; "Ko Dim," which is a little higher, comes to sixty pounds; "Yun Wai," or the title of baron, is to be acquired for two hundred pounds; and for 500 pounds a Chinaman can be made "Chamberlain" or mayor of a town with 10,000 inhabitants.

BATTLE WITH A WILD COW.

A Georgia Man Nearly Gored to Death by an Infuriated Beast.

M. E. McEvady, of Pocket, had a narrow escape from being gored to death by a cow in the woods near the semi-smile post, on the Central railroad. Mr. McEvady left home about 9 o'clock to search the woods for two of his cows that have been missing for several days, and took his pistol and a loaded cane with him.

After wandering about for some time he saw a cow some distance away which he thought was his and went toward her. The cow had her head down until Mr. McEvady got within about ten feet of her, when without any warning the animal gave a wild snort toward him. Mr McEvady did not have time to draw his pistol and was too much off his guard to run. He sprung back a foot or two, and as the cow slacked her speed he seized her by the horns. Then began a struggle for life. Mr. McEvady, who is a very powerful man, gave the animal shoves a between twist and threw the cow on her side. He then thought he could get to shoot her, but he changed his mind, and seeing his loaded cane he raised blow upon blow on the cow's head, beating her into submission.

After Mr. McEvady saw that he was safe, he made rapid strides to get away. A short time after he became lost in the thick woods and in making his way to the railroad track came upon his adversary a second time. He drew his pistol and was prepared for an attack, but the cow evidently recognized him and only prepared herself in case he came too near.

ITS ONLY FAULT.

The Actor Had no difficulty in Finding Out its Merits.

An aspiring author once presented to M. Monvel, the famous comedian, a manuscript tied with red tape and begged him to give an impartial opinion of the production. The comedian promised to do so, and the young man—the comedian thought him very young—waited for six months and more before he inquired as to his friend's verdict.

At length he put the solemn question: "Was the piece adapted for the stage?"

The comedian promised to let him know in a day or two.

Three more weeks went by. Then again the author importuned the actor and begged him not to defer his hopes any longer.

"Well, then," said the actor, "the fact is, your play is decidedly clever. I may say particularly clever, but it is not quite the thing for the stage. The scenes, the acting, the development of the plot, the tag—in fact, it requires adapting to the stage before it could be properly produced. I can receive it—unwillingly, of course, but still—"

The young author interrupted him. "Will you be kind enough to point out the fault?"

The actor was confused; he toyed with the manuscript still critisizing it before. The author seized it from him, untied the tape unrolled the paper, and with a laugh showed him that the whole was blank. The comedian had never untied the packet.

SEÑAL LOVES A JOKE.

The favorite haunt of Mexican outlaws, and, indeed, the home ideal of a ready-made robber's stronghold, is the Sierra de Pinos, in the highlands of Sinaloa—a limestone range abounding with unexplored and all but unexplorable caverns. The topography of the state which the bandit chief, Heraval, had selected for his headquarters closely resembles that of California. There is a coast range, and some fifty miles further inland a higher mountain chain, but the intermediate valley is only sparsely settled, and the extent of the cave region (nearly 300 miles north and south by thirty or forty wide) gives an outlaw a choice between thousands of hiding places. Some of them screened by mesquite thickets and connected by a net work of subterranean vaults extending four miles into the bowels of the Sierra.

Enrique Heraval began his career on the Rio Grande by robbing stage-coaches and mule caravans with the aid of two fellow desperadoes, who shrank from no crime, but now and then conducted their operations in a vein of humor suggesting the tricks of Claude Duval. Instead of butchering their victims they several times contented themselves with forcing them to don female apparel in order to lessen their capacity for pursuit, and on one occasion they robbed a crowded mail-coach by smuggling one of their comrades, in the guise of a friar among the unsuspecting passengers, while his partners rifled up a number of dummies at a point which the coach had to pass between twilight and dark. The decoy ruse succeeded and after the passengers had been relieved of their valuables the pseudo-friar made them kneel down, and, pointing to the dummies, offered up a thanksgiving orisons for their escape from a general massacre.

SOUGHT HIS LOST FATHER.

Recently a Westerner, six feet six inches tall, with broad shoulders and weighing over 300 pounds, appeared at Titusville, N. Y. He was William Ferguson of San Francisco, Cal., and was in search of his father. His parents were married near Salamanca, N. Y., thirty-nine years ago, and a few months before William was born his father deserted his mother, who was then a little more than 17 years of age. Ferguson never remembered and his deserted wife eventually went West with her boy and married again.

Within a short time past she told him for the first time the story of his father. William said only failed to feel a repugnance toward the father, but desired to see him, and on learning subsequently that he was still living came East to find him. He was informed that the old man was leading a hermit's life somewhere in the Allegheny mountains. In his search he found a woman who said she had been married and deserted by Ferguson, and was working to support herself and two children. The searching son finally got on the right track, and securing a man to go with him drove to the vicinity of McGraw Center, located in the woods, some miles from Titusville.

There, in a tumble-down shanty, living alone and with apparently nothing to live on, he found his long-lost father. William concealed his identity until the old man was drawn into reminiscent conversation, during which he took no pains to conceal the fact that his first wife was living in the West. Then the sea made known his identity.

The shock of surprise caused the old man to swoon. When the son, who is well educated and in good circumstances, offered to take the father West with him and contribute to his support. The old man declined and the son left.

A MAINE FOX STORY.

How a Young Fox Learned Some Tricks During His Captivity.

Jason Lunt, of Kennebunkport, Me., tells a fox story. A few years ago he caught a young fox, built a pen for him out of a hogshead and kept him tied up with a cod line around his neck. He made a pet of the animal, and the same year he came home his mother fox used to come around every night and keep the hogshead awake barking for her young one.

The young he went out to look after his pet and found a good-sized hole gnawed in the hogshead and the cod-line bitten off close to the young fox's neck and the animal gone. Soon after there were scratches in the neighborhood of a remarkably bold or tame fox, which would come into a door-yard in the daytime and make off with the chickens.

Nearly two years afterward Mr. Lunt lost a number of chickens from foxes and set a trap and one morning found that he had caught the chicken thief. It was a good-sized fox and a remarkably fat one, and while Mr. Lunt was feeling around the animal's neck and admiring his condition his fingers came in contact with what seemed to be a collar under the fat of the animal's neck. He had curiosity enough to find out what it was and cut out the double turn of a cod-line which proved it to be the same fox he had for a pet two years before.

A Mechanical Variety.

It is a queer craft that Dr. Nansen will pilot into the Arctic ice next summer. Only 10 feet her breath is a third of her length. She is pointed at both ends, her hull is plump and rounded, the keel hardly projects at all, and all the usual edges have been curved. In fact, the little tub has been made as rounded and slippery as possible, so that she may be lifted and not or sailed by ice pressure.

His Mother's Champion.

Here is a good story about the crown prince of Germany. The prince, who recently explaining to him that all men are sinners, whereupon the young pupil asked gravely if his father, the emperor, was not an exception to this rule.

"No," replied the clergyman, "he is not. The kaiser is a sinner, like every other mortal."

"Well, I am positive of one thing," insisted the little prince, "and that is that my dear mother is no sinner."

CANADA IS BLUFFING,

HAS NOT STOPPED DISCHIMINATING TOLLS.

Horrible Story of Cremation from Texas—Pacific Mail Steamer Long Overdue—Hellmann Will Move Their California Colony—Bids to $187,000,000.

Told in Few Words.

—The announcement was made not long ago that the Canadian Government had withdrawn its discriminating tolls on rebates on American cargoes passing through the Welland canal. Up to this time no information of this sort has been made known at Washington, and persons who are interested in the lake traffic, who do not care to have such information about it. There will be no information, however, of the sort desired. The Canadian discrimination against the United States was all one of tolls alone. The consuls of Canada and the United States paid the same tolls. But by order of the Canadian council, some years, the preferential rebates were dropped to be given to cargoes destined to Canadian ports for shipment abroad. The last order of this kind expired Dec. 31, and the unofficial advice heard was that it would not be renewed. If the Canadians expect to have the President's ear when this imposing tolls upon Canadian ships and cargoes passing the Sault Ste. Marie, of the Dominion government will probably have to find some way of communicating to the United States the fact that it has abandoned its unfair discrimination.

—Substantially nothing dispatches from Paris. Texas, tell of an occurrence that the girl by a negro named Bob Dorsey, and shared the same fate. Dorsey is also incarcerated at the same. It appears that the crime was performed in the most fiendish manner possible to be conceived. The Paris dispatch to the Associated Press following that Thursday morning: "Henry Smith, alias Bob Dorsey, a negro, who shot and murdered Mattie Vance, the fifth year-old daughter of Robert Vance, on the night of Jan. 28, was burned to death here the last afternoon at 4 o'clock. The county jail had by its order delivered to Sheriff Smith, who was charged with the execution of the law, assembled in the jail yard, and at 3 o'clock the sheriff, with a posse of men, left the jail with the condemned man and bailed.

"The citizenship city of Pelham, seven miles overdue at San Francisco and Sidney, has been found safe at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands. It is stated that her machinery was in bad condition when she left San Francisco for China and that there is doubt as to her being able to make Honolulu, which has caused delay. The Pelhamites are confident of her safety, however, as she was not seaworthy, people who saw her given up hope for her safety. In the English underwriters do not share a fear of a serious mishap to the Pelham, and stiff prices continue to obtain in the usual rates. The Pelham is a wooden ship and under classification cannot remain seaworthy indefinitely.

—The Russian convoy that left Japan a few weeks ago for Vladivostok, has been sighted off the coast of Japan, and it is supposed that they are allowed to pass through the Straits.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—At the annual meeting of Brooklyn's Long Island Fire Underwriters, it was discovered that Edward C. Sayres, to whom Mayor Gilroy recently gave the place of fire commissioner, had not qualified to take the place, and another appointee had to be made in his stead. The stated it is the intention of the Mayor to appoint Sayres again, but a new appointee will be made.

—Ex-President Cleveland, who is in Washington, on Wednesday, in an address before the Virginia Society in Washington, and against the protest of the Hawaiian Minister, he said that Hawaii belongs to the United States.

—Two Paul chippers enjoy a reputation that the deep-water coral people are not to be trifled with. The two chippers take little 11 year at least fifteen feet, the coral is 90 miles on board, have thirty locks and a large number of small chippers. The coral will have to be 20 feet deep and 10 feet wide.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL

—Mines and silver mines are to be revived in Alaska. The capital interested will be $5,000,000, and nearly two thousand men will be employed. The time expired to be spent in a few weeks and construction work will be pushed forward. The mines regularly are understood to be back of the enterprise.

—The Erie Dry Dock Company plant, which recently passed into the hands of a receiver, has been seized by the sheriff on execution aggregating $1,000,000.

—It is Bell's week's review of railroad matters.

—There has been since January a change in the attitude of the railroad managers. Instead of the cutting of rates, the policy of the roads is to maintain rates. The change is due to the recent legislation, and the outlook of gold, expected to export $50,000,000 more, and the recovery from severe and prolonged unfavorable weather in the Southwest. The outlook is for a good business, and the underlying feeling is "Leave well enough alone." The Chicago Times, long a source of trouble to the railroads, has changed its tone and now advocates a policy of "Let alone." The general opinion is that the future of the railroads is more promising than for years.

The Road Question.

To the Editor:

In reading the last issue of the SENTINEL, I was much pleased with the sentiments expressed by Baldwin, of the F. & P. M. Ry., and Highart, of the G. R. & I. They, as railroad men, know the value of good roads; for it railroads are not in good order smaller loads have to be handled, and accidents are frequent, which cuts down the profits to such a degree that dividends are not forthcoming, and the results are, a depression of the stock and bankruptcy staring the stockholders in the face. As an interested observer, let me ask this question: How much has bad roads to do with our own financial condition in this part of this country?

For instance: A man living ten miles from market has hay and grain for sale. Hay is worth, say, $10 per ton, and oats 30 cents per bushel. The roads generally are in such a condition that not to exceed a ton of hay, or or 60 bushels of oats can be hauled at one load, and much of the time not to exceed half that amount. Now, no man is willing to work with his team for less than $2.50 per day; and if he has to make two trips to deliver a ton of hay or 60 bushels of oats, it brings his hay down to $8 per ton, and his oats to about 18 cts. And no man will contract to raise either of these valuable farm products for this price.

On the other hand, suppose we had good roads, such as would enable a man to haul 1½ tons of hay, or 100 bushels of oats to a load. What would be the difference? Instead of getting $8.00 for a ton of hay, he would get $7.50, and for his oats he would get 26½ cents per bushel, and any farmer will tell you that he would be glad to contract his entire hay and oat crop for a period of ten years at these prices, and have them taken at his barns.

Yours very truly,

GEO. H. VAN PELT.

Cheboygan is bestling around and pulling wires to get the permanent camp ground for the Michigan state troops. They have 300 acres of land there twelve miles out on Mullet lake which they think would be just the place.

The boys in the woods are no longer filled full of pork and potatoes. Pork and eake is now much cheaper. Potatoes are selling at $1.25 and pork is out of sight. One Presque Isle firm recently sent to their camp half a ton of fresh beef.—Echo, Alpena.

A few weeks ago a land looker while crossing a stream in the Black river region near Cheboygan, noticed some peculiar iron bound stones in the water. Investigation showed that they were millstones, constructed of boulders found along the lake shore and bound with iron. Their history is peculiar. They were made by the old French habitants long before the massacre at Fort Mackinac, on the main land and were in use there at the time of the massacre in a rude mill for grinding corn.

The house of Oliver Pattie, three miles north of Ballaire was burned on the night of the 7th. Three of Mr. Pattie's children, ages 12, 10 and 3 years, were roasted to death. A neighbor's boy, Taylor by name, had been playing with the children, and it is feared that he too was burned. All the children were in the alcove. The father works nights in a Ballaire factory. The mother was away preaching, it is said. It is supposed that the fire started while the children were asleep, and that they were unable to make their escape, either through fear or on account of locked doors.

Girls in Vienna.

The system carried out in Vienna for educating girls is certainly worthy of notice. They are kept at their studies until they are 15 years of age. They then go through a course of teaching in the pantry and the kitchen under some member of the family, or sometimes trained under cooks, for a year or two years. Then they learn to do everything themselves, and to know the value of things long before they commence housekeeping on their own account, and, though they may never be required to cook a dinner, they become independent of cooks and servants. The Austrian women are most affectionate wives and mothers. They are as accomplished and learned as any English governess, and are as witty (or rude) as a Parisian, and are some of the most beautiful women in Europe.

The Most Remarkable Suicide.

The most remarkable suicide in the annals of self-destruction occurred at Chaquets, N. H., in the spring of 1893. Before committing the deed the self-murderer, who was named W. R. T. Jones, dug his own grave and placed a rough coffin of his own handiwork at the bottom. The dirt from the opening was kept from rolling back into the excavation by boards held in place by a trigger to which a string was attached. Everything in readiness, the deliberate Mr. Jones, as subsequent developments revealed, got in the coffin, took a dose of poison and then pulled the string, burying himself beneath tons of earth. This has been put down as one of the most unique and successful cases of self-destruction on record.

Fame Off Comes Cheaply.

Few of the men who enjoy world-wide fame ever set out to win it, and many of them did not care a snap of the finger for it. Socrates and Plato are famous because of their wisdom; Alexander and Cesar because of their conquests; Isaiah and Paul because of their moral supremacy; Buonarotti and Shakespeare and Dante owe their fame to artistic genius; Newton to his scientific discoveries; Bacon to his learning; Washington to his patriotic services, and Edison to his inventions. The famous men of the world have been men who possessed great powers of mind, or performed great deeds. They did not win fame by seeking for it. Fame came to them as a result of their character or their service.

A Stunning Yell.

The most instructive college yell yet discovered is that of the girls belonging to the seniors of the Western Reserve university in Cleveland—

Warm milk, fresh air.
Keep you feet of the registers.

This yell is a constant reminder of the sanitary rules of the school, strict obedience to which has apparently proved of great advantage to the students.

Hailings from Hayes.

Henry Ward and wife, of Petoskey, were visiting their daughter, Mrs. Henry Hamlin, last Sunday.

There is one thing historians ought to decide for a suffering humanity, and that is the length of time intervening between Columbus sighting land and Columbus landing. In the one cent Columbian postage stamp old Chris is sighting land with a clean shaven face, and in the two-cent stamp we find him landing with a full flowing beard. Now the question is, did he wait until his beard grew out before landing, or did he put on a false beard, or did he rub his chin with a patent hair elixir, or what makes the discrepancy?

Every farmer should look after the roofs of his buildings. We notice several buildings that have been injured by the weight of snow.

We measured the snow last Saturday, in order to counterbalance the dark stories we hear next July, and we found it to be thirty inches deep.

We keep a general stock of merchandise at the Pioneer store. Hay Shore and try to please our customers with the price and quality of the goods we sell.

—Yesterday three teams went into the woods near Myron Geer's for wood and got stuck fast in the snow. A big snow plow was broken in a vain effort to make a road for them, and the loads could not be brought out until a new snow plow was built.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold took the evening train for the north.

—Yesterday Record: Now as wood is piled green in scant cord piles and shrinks in seasoning, a cord of dry 16-inch wood is less than one-third of a full cord of 128 cubic feet. For a short cord therefore a man pays on an average this winter $8.25. In 2,000 pounds of anthracite coal there are as many units of heat as in 256 cubic feet of hickory wood, which is even better than maple. Therefore, there is as much heat in one ton of hard-coal as in two cords of dry maple body wood costing at present rates $10.50. Hard coal cost last summer $7.50, which was $1.50 more than it cost in 1891. But even at $7.50 it is cheaper than wood at the present prices.

—Tickets to the G. A. R. Washington's Birthday ball are now on sale at the office of Moore & Nettleton and the drug stores of Hines & Co. and G. W. Beaman. Supper will be served by the committee committee and the W. R. C., from six to 9 p. m., when the doors will be closed to prepare the tables for the ball supper. Tickets to dance and supper, $1.50. A Transfer Dock Scheme.

The SENTINEL is able to announce on good authority that a scheme is on foot, with good prospects of success, for the building of a large transfer dock at the foot of Pine Lake.

Prominent lumbermen of towns on the C. & W. M. Railway south of Charlevoix are promoters of the enterprise, and an interested party went to Grand Rapids this week to confer with the railroad company regarding it.

This is one of the cases where figures don't lie. Lumber manufacturers at the points referred to can load their lumber on cars from the saw, transferring to navigable water, and save money in freights. It will be seen at once that the rail tariff on a short haul will be about the only appreciable excess of expense of handling over piling it beside the track.

Rates of freight by water to eastern points of shipment are only about half those by rail; hence the scheme has in it a large measure of economy for the lumbermen.

The benefit to accrue to Charlevoix if the project is carried out is at once apparent. The importance of Charlevoix as a marine shipping point will be greatly enhanced, and employment given to a large number of men. It is, in fact, one of the most important projects yet considered in connection with the coming "boom."

The County Convention.

The Republican county convention held at Boyne City yesterday did its work well. The following were elected delegates to the State convention: H. A. Eaton and Wm. Mears of Boyne Fall; A. L. Coulter, of East Jordan; and J. L. Campbell, of Boyne City.

To the judicial convention: A. Bittars of Charlevoix; Alonzo J. Stroud of Bay; A. K. Smith, of Melrose; and H. B. Hipp, of South Arm. A solid Kanabeli delegation.

Frank H. Ramsey, of East Jordan, was nominated for Commissioner of Schools. Mr. Ramsey is one of the best equipped men in the county for the position, and his election is certain.

A Resolution, recommending the appointment of A. L. Coulter for Deputy Oil Inspector, was adopted by a unanimous vote.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

Shall Charlevoix Add $10,000 to Its Bonded Indebtedness to Secure Them?

The Charlevoix Democrat the official organ of the present municipal administration, announces the fact that the council, at its last meeting, voted to submit to the electors a proposition to bond the village for an electric light plant.

The committee, of which the able editor is chairman, submits an estimate of the cost of the plant—approximately $9,000—and of the revenue to accrue. A balance is brought down on the credit side. There is ample time in which to carefully and candidly consider the question. It is easy to make figures. An array of numerals can be written that will demonstrate to a fraction the desired consummation of a project—a fact illustrated in the last 4th of July subscription. The time-honored adage that "figures won't lie" is a lie of itself. Figures do not always balance with the logic of events.

The SENTINEL does not regard the figures of the committee as a safe basis upon which to add $10,000 to the bonded indebtedness of Charlevoix. We have just come into possession of a system of water works, at the cost of a $25,000 bonded debt. By no possible means can the plant be made self-sustaining within two years; and even then, in view of the existing uncertainty as to water supply, it may not reach that mark.

But the water-works were a necessity, both sanitary and economic. The expenditure has been amply justified already. But electric lights are properly classed as luxuries. A well ordered household will provide itself with luxuries in proportion to its ability to pay for them. As prudence should obtain in the administration of domestic affairs, so it should in the matter of public expenditures.

The SENTINEL is of the opinion that electric lighting should be defrayed until the water-works shall yield a revenue somewhere near the figures made at the outset. We are constrained to believe that it is time to call a halt.

First let it be demonstrated more fully that the people of Charlevoix have done wisely in entailing upon themselves their present bonded indebtedness before we increase the burden. Let us see the benefits we have so dearly bought be augmented by wise use. Ten thousand dollars wound, if properly used, largely increase the number of financial pulls in use, and facilitate the payment of interest on railroad bonds. It would, if expended in the securing of industrial enterprises, bring more substantial benefits than electric lights.

It is almost time for the people of Charlevoix to realize the fact that economic progress does not consist of adding to their burden of debt; but rather will be best realized by the adoption of such measures as shall bring us breadwinning industries, and make Charlevoix a town where the calendar embraced twelve months in the year instead of three.

We will cheerfully use kerosene a few years longer for the sake of increasing the pay-rolls, and making our town something more than "Charlevoix the Beautiful."

Let us build wisely.

In Sheen's Clothing

By Capt. Ormond Steele

"I am William Fox, Captain of her Majesty's cruiser Wanderer, and right honorable sir, I bear no ill-feeling and welcome you," replied the captain, grasping the Sunder's hand.

"And my friend, Captain Sunder," with another bow and a wave of his left hand, as he turned to the gentleman in question, "is Dr. Nehemiah Hedges, late superintendent of this county in her Majesty's Provincial Assembly, surgeon to the First Suffolk Volunteers, and our chief physician at this end of the island."

"And may heaven long spare him to keep health in the people and to reflect honor on the crown," said Captain Fox, giving both hands to the doctor who, losing a very modest man, blushed at the compliments, which he like fried and the almost forgotten titles of which he found himself in possession.

Captain Fox presented his officers to the officers on duty and then he doffed and adjourned to the cabin, where the toasts were drunk to the raging and relieved as the little yawl bore the delighted old gentlemen ashore.

CHAPTER IV.

THE NEW OFFICER.

After the toast had been quite a few seconds, Captain Fox assured the officers he expected to accompany him ashore that night, and then told them to report at once to his cabin.

"Gentlemen," he said, when the officers were gathered about the table, from which Dan, the cabin boy, had removed the flagons and glasses, "this is a night to test each man's power of self-control. I shall expect you all to drink, or to seem to do so, but the man who has taken drunken must take the consequences. I cannot forbid you to go to Cariaquita and Pace, some of you are for forgetful gentlemen, so to speak, and bring on fights with the natives, who drove you to your good lands, and in their lost anger, perhaps, burn the town over my head. I cannot spend the guns on our side by a broad avail against such a remedy here. Each man must appear to be what the people here see officers and gentlemen in the service of England. At one o'clock I shall expect you to be on board, in the meantime remember—sober lips upon your mirth."

"Ha, Fernandez," said the Captain, "what be and his chief executive officer had the cabin to themselves, "as of old our good luck follows. Why, the spirit of Blake, my ancestor, could not have improved better."

"I am glad for your sake," replied Fernandez.

"Ay, ay, my lad, and for your own sake, too. Zounds! Hostesses, are we not to be sharers in the great prize?"

"Yes, Captain, but you will not act without seeing his lordship, say you."

"Do not say 'lordship' to me, you insulting—Why, you, I live just among them! Have there was a time I was up with admiralty, drawn and quartered, and hung, drawn and quartered, and the people, drawn who, under the Crown, of the dominion—large for the French at the battle of Walbourt, Ha, ha, ha! This cruise has its comical aspects; it is play instead of hard work. Why, I expected to blow under ship out of water before this. But the Colonel will come down, as per arrangement from Boston, and he will be thoroughly so that I can be by side.

"And very naturally so. I must say you will never have a better chance to get rid of him."

"To get rid of this Denham, eh, Fernandez?"

"I said to get rid of him, Captain."

"So he does, but I don't. His tech-continental ny" slippery tongue, I mean the Colonel, wants him disposed of, and we must make him believe that we have earned the money by Denham, alive and in our power, is worth more to us than the richest galleon that, silver-freighted, ever plowed the sea."

"Ah, but to get him in our power without a fight that, in truth, would be an exploit worthy of renown."

"And it shall be done, Fernandez; it shall be done, ah, I will count the youth. He is generous, brave, and unsuspicious, and I like and desire him."

"If he loves when, as a good sailor should, may I be shot if I have lived at sea before six dates have flooded this island."

"My heartbreaks faster at the thought," said Fernandez, with an evil leer.

"Aye, my lad, but, as shall long with the sweetness of after the crowning, and out of our prize is finished, Nova Scotia, prudence, patience, and our object accomplished, I will hatch battery with overgreens, roses, and floating ivy, eh, Fernandez?"

"That is it, Captain."

"Come, we have no time to spare. The dinner awaits us ashore, and if no sight the officers of the Wanderer make no impress on the hearts of the fair dames of this island, we have they forgotten in works of war the ways of love and of the ladies. Ha, ha, ha! In my experience that I ever knew such a thing to happen."

"Aye, Fox was in high spirits, but Fernandez knew the Colonel well, and well knew that the smile could change, in the space of a minute, from Sun to a frown, and that the sentence begun in the office a events could end in tones of thunder.

CHAPTER V.

AT THE WAKE

There were Lodges along the beach, and swarms of boats passing, with happy crews aboard, to and after the shore.

When the Wanderer's cutter grated on the sand, the people cheered the officers, and the Sunders were hailed by friends.

And the Squire and the Doctor, with Captain Denham and his officers were there to greet them, and after the salutations had exchanged, and the doctors had secured unnecessary, and satisfactorily fulfilled, the duties, the proceedings was formed and all marched in Hunter Hodges' house, which was now illuminated from the door of the mansion to the beach, to the tune of the little dinner warblers, that hoisted like eagle eyes out on the tropics of the quaint gables.

Mrs. Hodges and Mrs. Cundit, with their blooming daughters, welcomed the strangers in the wide hall that ran through the middle of the comfortable building, and led them into the low but spacious parlors, which they had not yet been received for the summer, because the evening was cool, and Hunter Hodges, and his wife and their daughter, she thought the dark crimson curtains relieved something of their warmth on low's cheeks.

But a greater number than ever gave order to a fairly had limned the hosts of youthful beauty, and the Lodges and Hodges and Cundit, Fernandez, and Denham, and Captain Fox, and the Sunders, without any ceremony, made their eyes were more brilliant and beautiful than the gems which he and his officers wore when on duty, to excite the cupidity of their sailors.

The officers, with the frankness that characterizes sailors the world over, were soon talking as familiarly as if each been away for days, for years in the same ship.

Captain Sunder had heard of Captain Fox and the cruiser Wanderer, and he was delighted to see that officer, and had been presented by Dr. Gout Hotchinson, the Commander-in-chief of our French allies. She walked from her pew to the deacon's seat, and taking off her cloak gave it to her offering to the array.

"Ah, Sunder, I see you are proud of your handsome wife, and I don't blame you, and I am glad of this opportunity to meet her and Captain Fox, whose officers wished him for their cause.

"But how did you happen in here, Captain?" asked Captain Denham.

"I think that I owed the ceiling received in Canada, I am to receive further instructions from Colonel Denham, who should have been here by this time."

"I pray he may not be in a hurry, for I know of no place where you can spend a few days more pleasantly," said Captain Hamilton. This was the only conversation, which might be called at all professional, that the young officers had on this occasion.

Lois Hodges was the soul of animation, conversation, and good feeling at all Fernandez and Lieutenant Fernandez and Denham were soon talking and laughing the hours of leaving the Lodges, and Lois Hodges, and Mrs. Hodges strong, the rear, and Lois Hodges and Lieutenant Hodges proceeded then, to entirely well pleased with the arrangement.

The dance might be called provincial in its arrangement and large-handed hospitality, and yet it had the ease and grace of the world could have add, and a greater variety of life's good things, we could say cooks in the great capitals express the black women, who, through slaves themselves, were the complete mistresses of all the kitchens and pantries.

Shell fish from the great south bay, fish from the Atlantic, with fowl from the great Fundy Bay; with turkey, geese and woodcock from the neighboring forests; venison, better than any game, fruits and many other things came in in regular and well-ordered succession, and the guests, with the exception of some of flavors gathered from garden and field, and old-fashioned wax candles of ancient date in up the whole.

All were in good humor before the meal began, but during its progress the thin walls of reserve melted away, and when the banquet—for such was it—was dismissed all felt like old friends.

Wine and spiced rum was passed round, and the dusky lady of the Lodges, the French at the battle of Walbourt, Ha, ha, ha! This cruise has its comical

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

A DISCOURSE ON THE BIBLE AND NATURE.

The Bible Abounds in Reference to Fish, and They Are Indirectly Recommended to Food—Why Fishermen Were Chosen for Apostles.

God in Everywhere.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage last Sunday preached to a crest audience in the Tabernacle a remarkably interesting and eloquent sermon on "The Ichthyology of the Bible; or, Bible Acquaintance." The text selected and entered on that grand course for supremacy of the ocean which was afterwards to leave her for a time its undisputed sidetrack.

The officers of the Wanderer were made so welcomed by the people of Sea Harbor as if, like the Sea Hawk's crew, they were their own sons and neighbors.

Dinner, the exception of Captain Fox and Lieutenant Fernandez, the officers of the Wanderer were not, judging from their awkward and constrained manners, much accustomed to ladies' society, for only the two named could dance, or at least attempted to do so.

This, however, only made the two dancers the more acceptable to such stand-fifteens as Sandy Cundit and Hector Hodges, who were not so strict in church matters as not to enjoy a game of whist.

Captain Fox and Mr. Fernandez more than made up for the deficiency in the others. The former, now that was in his magnificent uniform, and his expressive face, and strange blue eyes beaming and flashing with animation, was conspicuously fine-looking, even in the presence of such men as Dr. Hedges and Denham and Mr. Valentine Dayton, Mr. Fernandez, though dark, and with eyes that at a philosophical world call "sinister," presented a good foil to the light-hearted companion whom he repeated as a brilliant conversationalist.

"Is no so convenient."

Politics Collections.

In the records of one of the churches of Philadelphia, dated in the 1850 the "deacons informed the court that the wampum which is put into the church treasury is generally so bad that the tribes to whom they pay it cannot pay it away." Money of all kinds was scarce among the New Haven colonists, and the Indian money, wampum, which then circulated as currency, was easily discharged and broken, being made of a frail sea-shell.

The colonists, some of them, at least, had a good deal of human nature, and managed to dispose of their worthless currency and at the same time gain a reputation for generosity. In modern days their descendants of the lower sort drop clipped and counterfeit coins into the "slide."

The court to whom the New Haven deacons complained, ordered that "no tenner were silver or bills" should be accepted. Then the deacons found it difficult to get any contribution. The colonists refused to buy their good wampum for trading, as the storekeepers would receive no other. When they found that they must depend "wampum without form or of forming sorts," or "silver or bills" in the contribution box, they refused to give anything.

Just a hundred years later there came a wave of public enthusiasm—the War of the Revolution. Then the people gave of their bed, with a willing mind. Contributions were taken in the meeting-houses, after divine service, for the Continental army. Money, finger-rings, curtains, watches, stockings, hats, coats, breeches, shoes, produce and groceries were brought to the meeting-house to be given to the patriots' tables.

Even the leaden weights were taken out of the window-frames, made into bullets, and brought to the meeting," writes the author of "The Sabbath in Puritan New England."

On one occasion a collection was being made for the army in the Lebanon, Conn., meeting-house. Madam Faith Trumbull was present, and had no sooner seen the plate, which had been presented her by Gouat Hotchinson, the Commander-in-chief of our French allies. She walked from her pew to the deacon's seat, and taking off her cloak gave it to her offering to the army. It was in narrow strips and used as trimmings for the uniforms of the soldiers.

Her example so roused the congregation that an enormous collection of goods and provisions was sent to the camp in Dorchester, and made market gave the name to one of the wards of Boston, which it still is called the fish cafe. The cities had great reservoirs in which they were kept alive and bred. The pool of Gibeon was a fishpond, so was Hebron, and at Ashpoole, large fish were kept alive and the fact by rope in the great reservoirs, a ring in the nose, or through the gills, which is the meaning of the Scripture, "Canst thou put an hook into his nose or bore his jaw through with a thorn?" Job, the patriarch, said was the fish that the god Dagon, worshiped in the Philistines, was made half fish and half man. And the meaning of the Lord's Israel, nation whose to I, Samuel we read that "Dagon was left to him alone, the trunk, and the gospel is the net, and the fishers are the apostles, and God addresses one as he addresses the other, "Wilt thou make men, and I will make you fishers of men." Christ said to Peter, "Follow me, and I will make you to become fishers of men." Christ said to Peter, who did not know the night and have taken nothing." Christ said to Peter, who had fished all night, "Cast your net on the right side of the ship, and you shall find

LITTLE CHILDREN SINGING.

That is the Way the Russians Greet the Birthday of Christ.

In Russia there is always a great demand for little ones who can sing well. Girls with clear, sweet voices and boys with notes like a thrush are carefully cared for and cherished as they are in no other country. In America they are very fond of children who can sing. But they are not so absolutely necessary to us as they seem to be to the Russians.

The night before Christmas in all the Russian churches there is sure to be gathered together a very large assembly of people—so many, indeed, that the church is crowded out to the door steps and people stand looking over each other's shoulders try ng to get just a peep into the church. The altar is sure to be very beautifully decorated with candles and with images of the Christ child. And up to midnight very solemn services are held. Suddenly, at the stroke of the midnight bell, everything ceases. The church is very brilliantly lighted, and, as the lights flood the church, a child's voice is heard leading forth a Christmas anthem "Kristos! Kristos! Kristos!" is the burden of the song they always sing, and those who have had the pleasure of listening to a child's service held at midnight in Russia say that it is worth the trip all the way from Jersey to hear the lovely child voice sing the "Kristos" solo with the grand chorus of 10 lusty voices which follows in a Christmas refrain.

THIEVES "SNAP" STOPPED.

They Robbed Jersey City Tradesmen Through a Tunnel.

Six little boys have been enjoying lately free access to the stock of two tradesmen on Exchange place, Jersey City.

When the building was put up a tunnel that began away up in the railroad yards was extended under tracks and station platforms to the buildings and under it. With the purpose of eventually fitting it with steam pipes to heat the building, the tunnel opened into Gallberg's place and into Ramsey's.

A little gang of street urchins espied the hole in the ground and explored it for the quarter of a mile or more of its length, and learned that it afforded easy access to the jewelry and cigar stores. And the little fellows had been helping themselves nightly to whatever they coveted in both places. Neither of the storekeepers noticed the thefts.

The boys might have continued their nightly visits through the underground tunnel indefinitely if one of their number had not thought the scheme too good a one to keep to himself. He began to boast about the treasures that the tunnel placed at his disposal, and the story reached the ears of Policeman Rickerich. The result was the arrest of six of the boys who were revelling in what they described as "one of the softest snaps."

The popularity of many South African diamonds that suffer with the displeasure of pale rose is

"PLAISANTERIE."

Apropos of predictions made by the planchette board, the Rev. H. St. Maul Willoughby, assistant curate of St. Luke's, London, writes to mention a remarkable circumstance of which he was a witness. A certain country house in the Midlands planchette was being exhibited, and a gentleman who was entirely skeptical as to its powers was asked by Mr. Willoughby whether he would believe in it if it would answer a mental question passing through his mind, which he would not reveal to the operators.

"Certainly," said he; "then, and not until then, I will believe that there is no hoax or humbug." Immediately the mystic board rushed off and spelled the two words "French joke." "Is that a satisfactory reply?" was asked. As it was not, planchette was requested to explain itself whereupon it instantly wrote "What is joke in French?" None of the party remembered, and the French dictionary had to be consulted, when the skeptic, jumping up with an exclamation of surprise, exclaimed:

"I asked the question in my own mind, and not a soul in the room could know it. 'What horse is going to win the Cambridgeshire?' and here is the answer—as he handed the dictionary to the others—'Plaisanterie.' This happened to be one of the foremost competitors for that year's race. Whether anybody present won anything as a result of the information so mysteriously furnished is not stated.

On the Wrong Peg.

A passenger from Portland to Boston on a Boston and Maine train a few days ago became accidentally excited for a novel reason. The Boston and Maine cars, as is well known, are equipped with automatic danger signals. At each end of every car there is a hook, and in case of an accident by pulling down this hook the train is brought to a most sudden standstill by the brakes. The gentleman referred to entered the smoking car just beyond Haverhill, and, pulling off his overcoat, proceeded to hang it up on the danger hook. Instantly there was a terrific bump, and the train came to a standstill in a manner that nearly knocked the breath out of every passenger. Trainmen rushed out to find what the trouble was, but everything seemed to be in working order. A search finally led to the discovery of the overcoat hanging on the hook, and a sigh of relief escaped the passengers.

A Hard Puzzle.

King Humbert's whiskers began to grow gray, which fretted Queen Margherita, who remonstrated a little with her royal spouse in the matter. The next day a bottle of hair-dye was sent to his dressing-room, with the queen's compliments. The king said nothing, but at breakfast the following morning he appeared with her French poodle under his arm, his frame a rich tint from a plentiful use of the hair-dye, while his own whiskers and half mustache untouched.

OUR CHURCHES.

As in the case of the M. E. Church, the first steps taken toward Baptist organization here were taken at Harbor Springs in the 7th of June, 1878, a few of that persuasion met at the house of Mrs. A. J. Mudge, at that place, and, under the leadership of Rev. A. M. Parmenter, effected an organization with the following members, Mrs. Mary Mudge, H. D. Stevens, Mrs. H. D. Stevens, Thomas Chandler, Mrs. Catherine Chamberlain, Mrs. Eliza Gregory, James O'Brien, Mrs. Emily J. Bell and Melville Winston.

Several meetings followed, Rev. A. M. Parmenter having been chosen as pastor. The records relate that the first baptism was that of James O'Brien. In June, 1879, it was decided to join with the Charlevoix brethren in an organization, which was effected, the compact being sealed in the Inglinside building. The first deacons elected were M. P. Norloff, H. D. Stevens and Phillip M. Dorman. At a meeting in July, Bro. Geo. W. Bell was licensed to preach.

On the 16th of August, the First Baptist Church of Charlevoix took her place among sister churches, a "Council of recognition" having been held that day. Several clergymen from various parts of the State were present.

The church, though few in numbers, prospered spiritually, and under the faithful ministrations of the pastor, the blessing of God attended their labors and deliberations. The meetings were held in halls, but already the society looked forward to having a house of worship.

In 1884, Rev. A. M. Parmenter severed his pastoral connection with the church, although he continued to lead the meetings and preach from time to time. The society had greatly increased in membership, and the meetings were attended with good spiritual results.

In March 1886, the site of the present church edifice was purchased and in the same month a call was extended to Rev. W. G. Clark, of Cheboygan, which was accepted, and that gentleman at once entered upon his duties. During 1887 a building fund was started, and a building committee appointed.

In August, 1888, the corner stone of the present beautiful structure was laid by the pastor, assisted by Rev. Samuel Brooks, of Kalamazoo; Rev. Kendall Brooks, of Kalamazoo; Rev. Dr. Grinell, of Detroit.

The building was pushed forward to completion. On Dec. 25th, 1888, services were held in the church for the first time.

At the annual session of the Grand Traverse Baptist Association held August 30, 1883, the following report was read of the Charlevoix church: "The church is in a healthy spiritual condition, and the outlook for the coming year much brighter than the one just closing. In the work of building our new home we have been greatly blessed, and while we cannot now see where the money yet needed is to come from, we are willing to trust, and go forward." The report showed the membership to be 79.

On Sunday, August 18th, 1889, the new church edifice was dedicated, Rev. Kendall Brooks, D. D., of Kalamazoo, preaching the dedicatory sermon. $147 had been given for that occasion toward paying the church debt. The occasion was a memorable one in the annals of the church.

The pastor having received a call to labor elsewhere, his resignation was tendered and accepted on the 13th of October of that year. Rev. Mr. Clarke, during his pastorate, endeared himself not only to his own congregation of faith, but to the entire community, and his removal was the cause of general regret.

In January, 1890, a call was extended to Rev. M. S. Haynes, the present pastor. Elder Haynes has been very successful in the work of building up the church. He was graduated from Rochester (N. Y.) University in 1885, and from Rochester Theological Seminary in 1888. His first pastoral work was done at Tecumseh, this state. His next work was at Unionville, coming from that church to Charlevoix. Mr. Haynes is a talented preacher and a zealous pastor.

The First Baptist Church of Charlevoix is in a good condition, both spiritual condition, has a beautiful and commodious house of worship, and is doing good work in the Lord's vineyard.

LOVED A PIRATE.

Many of the Fair Sex Lost Their Hearts To Freebooter Laffite.

"I recently met a survivor of Pirate Laffite's band of freebooters," said Thomas Haines, once a lieutenant in the United States navy. "He was a rough-looking specimen, and could have been well past eighty years of age, for it is more than sixty years since Laffite had his headquarters on Galveston island and preyed upon the commerce of the gulf. The relic of those half-forgotten times was an inmate of a Jersey City charitable institution and was not much inclined to discuss his quarters.

He said, however, that Laffite was a very handsome Frenchman, more than six feet in height, well made, and possessed of wonderful talents as a commander. He ruled the toughest lot of men ever congregated on one island as though they were a flock of lambs. Occasionally a lawless spirit would rebel, however, but his days thereafter were brief and full of trouble. Every woman who came in contact with Laffite fell in love with him, and he was as safe among his female friends in New Orleans as on Galveston island surrounded by his armed buccaneers.

"According to this survivor a prominent New Orleans lawyer once gave Laffite offense and he made a pilgrimage to the city to kill him, but changed his method of revenge and persuaded his enemy's handsome young wife to elope with him. According to the ancient chronicler several well-known people in South Texas and Louisiana are descendants of numbers of Laffite's piratical crew and a few of his female companions are still living in that section."

HIS HOME.

A Massachusetts Man Makes Himself Comfortable in Jail.

William Rothwell has been in the Dedham, Mass., jail twenty-three years by his own edition. He came from a wealthy family in England and was well educated. He is now 68 years old. When first known in Dedham he was arrested for drunkenness. After serving his sentence he left town, but only remained away a few days.

Upon his return he went to Constable Morse and represented that a charge be made against him, either of drunkenness or vagrancy. A charge was made, he pleading guilty, and he was returned to jail. Rothwell has continued this course for the past twenty-three years. He has a brother, a wealthy merchant in New York city, who recently visited him. He has been repeatedly entreated by his relatives not only in New York, but in Lancashire, England, to leave his prison and live with them, but he says "I am contented in the home that I chose twenty-three years ago, and I shall not leave it so long as I can remain there, either by hospitality or legal sentences by the courts."

Rothwell's life has a romance. When a young man at college he fell in love with a wealthy young English lady. She accepted his attentions as a suitor. Money he had in plenty, and being young, spirited and afraid of heart, had many boon companions. He began to drink and the young woman discarded him.

PLEADED HIS OWN CAUSE.

The Old Man Was Not Used to Personal Soliciting Vote Mats.

A lady with a long train to her dress was walking along the street when an old colored man passing her stepped on her train with a both feet, tearing it badly. The lady was very angry, and had the old man arrested for being disorderly.

"What has the prisoner been guilty of?" asked the judge.

"He was the orderer your honor."

"Who is the complaining witness?"

She told with much asperity how the old man at the bar had stepped on the train of her dress, tearing it, and when he saw the damage he had done, instead of apologizing, he tried to get away.

"Yo' as represents the prisoner?"

The old man was brought forward, and a salamander of dirt wearing spectacles and looking the embodiment of good-natured dignity.

"It's de way, judge, overcomin' dat lady. Here is a speakable case. 'Spose I be along the street wid my coat tail is separated out on the sidewalk, I'm free, free, as proud as a peacock, so it dat lady cam an' jest plant her foot in dese, wees little bits of feet on dat coat-tail, you tink I'm goin' to make a fuss an' get dat nice lady arrested? You tink so, judge?"

"I think," said the complaining witness at this moment, "that I have made a mistake. If the case is dismissed I will pay the costs."

The case was dismissed.

A House in a Bottle.

Some years ago a blind boy residing in Chicago constructed a miniature house inside an ordinary four-ounce bottle. The building was made up of forty pieces of wood, all neatly fitted and glued together. It took him a year to finish this work, it is only a part of the wonder of this eighth wonder. After completing the house and getting it fitted, he set about fastening it in position, but not about fastening it in the bottle, but how he accomplished the startling feat is a mystery to the boy. Inside the bottle, both on the walls and wooden floor, he drilled through the cork the ends of the pegs extending far enough on either side to prevent the cork from being removed from the bottle without the low roof being torn off. The boy blind, if he is able to tell how he accomplished this last and most astonishing of his handiworks.

He Was Not Willing.

A man registered at a Madison, O., hotel a short time ago. He was given a room and retired, and after an hour or so, something had a dream. He dreamed that he was on a rail road train that was going at good speed, when he discovered that another train was coming toward him on the same track and a collision was inevitable. The conductor called out "jumps", but that meant the dream stopped, for the dreamer did not leap from the second story window. He fortunately got up and woke up.

LARGE LAKE MARINE.

UNPRECEDENTED ACTIVITY IN SHIP BUILDING.

Graham Chosen by Cleveland to Head His Cabinet—Interest's Crowding Trade—Boston Shoes Go Up in Smoke—The Final Vote.

Yold Is a Free Worlds.

—John Craig, President of the Craig Ship Building Company, of Toledo, Ohio, said that, despite the experiences in last fall on the lakes, there was apparently no disinclination by the orders for new and large freight steamers, nearly every yard on the lake system," he said, she doing about all the work it can handle. At Port City, Mich., the Wheelers are building two steel steamers which are designed to be the largest ships ever seen on the great lakes. In addition the Wheelers are building three large modern steamers and several tugs. At Cleveland the Globe Ship Building Company is building, in addition to freight steamers, two ships for the Great Northern Steamship Company, which, I understand are designed to make the run from Buffalo and Duluth in fifty hours. The Cleveland Ship Building Company is building two large steel steamers. At Detroit the Detroit Dry Dock Company is building a magnificent freight steamer for service in the Markham's trade. The new vessel is designed to be as fast as a fast liner. She will have a row of twelve miles to make and should arrive at Duluth in five hours. At Chicago the Chicago Ship Building Company is now at work on a consort of Pioneer steamers. The Lake City Dock Company of Buffalo, is building a fine steel steamer for the Erie Railway for service between Buffalo and Erie. Several tugs and lighters are building at Buffalo. Several of the lake companies are building a wooden steamer for the government. I expect to see a thousand feet of lake shipping in the next two years."

—A thousand feet, forty years ago, Judge Drake of Cincinnati, of Chicago, is to be Secretary of State in Cleveland's Administration. Judge Drake left because states have nothing to do in a day or two. The office of the post has been made to Judge Gresham and Secretary Lamont, of Michigan. Mr. Cleveland himself will make the Cabinet known in a day or two. This course will remarkable, whether it is a precedent to the new Administration, it will create some surprise when it becomes known. The rumor that Graham was offered the place was circulated some months ago and was received with hearty cheers in many localities. They did not believe it possible for Mr. Cleveland to go outside the ranks of his own party for a Secretary of State, and the announcement of Graham would accept even if the tender were extended, has been universally hailed with pleasure. Judge Gresham will be two years senior to Graham. He will not be prepared to resume to Washington to take up his duties as Secretary of State. Time was when four years ago was a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination but is present under the leading Democratic administration.

—Since the raise of thirty-two cents per 100 pounds on Kansas grain, for export through Galveston, was given by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, Nov. 15, the movement to the front has been large and is increasing in volume so that Galveston is now fairly in the field as a competitor of New Orleans for this trade. The elevators there have a capacity for 1,000,000 bushels, and are now filled. Nov. 24 the outlight have aggregated 1,750,000 bushels, of which 250,000 bushels have already been exported to Havre, Rotterdam and Cork for orders, and there are a number of vessels now under charter, two of which are steamships of the Ward Mutual, are now loading. Tuner Interest of export to equal 15,000,000 bushels of Texas and Kansas wheat before the close of the year. Indications point to only slight elevator on the gulf outside of New Orleans, and experts are enough of the trade formerly going to that port.

—In the presence of an audience as large as the hall of the House of Representatives will hold—an audience made up of Senators, members, the diplomatic corps and ladies in gay attire—Grover Cleveland and Adlai E. Stevenson were on Monday last declared by Vice President Morton to have been duly elected President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1885. This is not exactly known as what is live news, but the occasion of the inauguration of applicants to get a glimpse of the proceedings was just as interesting as if it were the common-lied lines to decide. The corridors of the House were packed with men who had tickets and the larger number who had none. The galleries were packed with all of the finesse, and by special permission of the whole House the members of Congressmen were admitted to seats on the floor. It was an occasion which will be pretty long of value as their fronts happily entered in the annals of Congressional history.

—The Niagara Wool Paper Company has failed. The collapse was caused by the failure of Lockwood Brothers, who owed nearly $150,000. The sheriff has taken possession of the plant. The assets will probably amount to a trifle over $10,000.

The Strap in our Public Schools.

In days gone by, when people were ignorant as to the best method of government in the schools, the female for whipping the hands was considered the acme of most excellent results. Later on, the rod, whip or switch found a place, and at the present time, alas, the strap has crept into use, but only, let it be understood, in schools where love has not yet had its trial. God help and pity the teacher who knows no other method of teaching or governing than by the use of the strap. Why not take the more noble plan of appealing to the manhood—the better nature of the child. Many children have been ruined for life by the negligence of teachers in this most important part of training. Mere careless, reckless and shiftless boys have been made such by teachers with their pernicious use of the strap we can ever estimate. Take these same boys, had they been treated as gentlemen should be treated, had their better natures appealed to, had they been told to do right because it was right, in nine cases out of ten they would have mended their ways. Had they been trained in this way from their first entrance into school, they would have known nothing but right, and obedience to right laws. Not only does the strap disgrace and lower the child upon whom it was used, but the teacher who uses it infinitely more, aye, and that for a life-time. The teacher who sells her hands and blackens her heart and smirches her soul simply to vent passion or what is worse, to show the child her authority, is unfit for the teaching of children, and should have her place at once supplied by one who can teach right ruling, as well as the principles of reading or whatever it may be.

These are not arguments, but truths which have already been proven. Every child watches his teacher, and a teacher can by one unjust action, undo the good principles which his parents have endeavored to instil within him. Little children think, they are clay, very easily moulded, as the teacher instructs, so the tyranny or love is also taught. Mosaic, good or bad, as found in man in many cases, have been instilled into them in the public schools.

Teachers, throw away your straps. Forget the shame of ever having used them, and hereafter teach with love as your guide.

The modern method of teaching differs from the methods employed a generation ago. The teacher of today is not a driver, but a leader. The modern method embodies a plan of not punishment for ill-doing, but reward for well doing. Why not substitute in the place of the obnoxious strap, a similar government in our own public schools.

MAGGIE M. HARSHA.

Northern Michigan News.

A. E. Densmore, principal of the Northport schools, died last week.

M. McDonald, while at work in Bradford's mill at Central Lake yesterday, dropped dead of heart disease.

The old settlers will hold their annual meeting at Elk Rapids some time in March, and it is expected that it will be the biggest affair of the ever gotten.

The three children reported burned in the recent fire near Bellaire, were not burned after all. They made a sneak for the hen house when the fire broke out, where they were found, safe and sound after the excitement was all over.

A man name McGraw was killed at Williamsburg yesterday. He was a railroad hand and was shoveling snow from the track when a moving train struck him, tearing open his breast and neck so that his heart lay upon his shoulder.

The Cheboygan Tribune states that 16 and 18-inch wood is selling there at $2 a cord and scarce at that, and that the people are turning to coal rapidly. Wood, round Petoskey is all so scarce and has varied from $1.50 to $2 a cord all winter, averaging fully $1.75.

Col. O. T. Booth, owner of the big poultry ranch at Bay Shore, between Petoskey and Charlevoix had a valuable horse adjudged to have glanders by the state veterinary commission, a warrant was issued to the county sheriff to proceed to the premises and kill the animal, which was done by Under Sheriff Newville.

Sing Lee and Ling Jo, two Chinese who went to Petoskey a week or two ago and had made arrangements to open a laundry on Howard street were arraigned under the Chinese exclusion law before United States Commissioner Gray F. Cull and sentenced to imprisonment for twenty days thereafter to be ejected from the United States and returned to China.

Two freight trains became stalled on Manton Hill between Manton and Cadillac on the G. R. & I Railroad on Friday last. Both were south bound and they coupled together to make a stronger push against the snow banks. The coupling broke and conductor Harry Chamberlin and Geo. Whiting, brakeman crawled between the cars to repair the damage. Just at this moment passenger train No 2 south bound crashed into the rear of the rear freight completely telescoping the way car and one of the box cars. These cars soon took fire and were entirely consumed. Harry Bullerwin, a traveling man for the Star Clothing House of Grand Rapids, was a passenger on the way car on the freight. He boarded the train at Manton and was going to Cadillac. He must have been killed in the collision. His body was burned to a cinder in the fire that destroyed the two wrecked cars and what remained of him when his body was removed had little semblance to humanity. Brakeman Whiting was instantly killed by the shock of the collision, the cars being pushed upon him before he had a chance to escape. Conductor Chamberlin was seriously hurt it is hoped not dangerously injured.

A Kind of Emery-Wheel Trip.

Frank Hines received a letter from R. A. Emery last week, in which he gives the following particulars of a 70 mile bicycle trip on the ocean beach, from Port Orange to St. Augustine:

"Well, I can tell you all about the ocean-beach between Port Orange and St. Augustine, as I've been far. I left Port Orange at 8 o'clock Sunday morning, and rode about 15 miles in an hour. The beach was grand. After lunching I pulled out again, and didn't stop until 11 o'clock, and had made 38 miles; saw an old house upon the bank, and as I was awful thirsty I mounted the bank with the balance of my lunch. Banged at two or three doors but heard no sound. I found about two inches of water in the bottom of an old barrel, and with an old wooden bowl down into the barrel I went.

"Then I sat down with my back against the house and was enjoying my ham-sandwich and rain-water when around the house came the roughest looking old fellow I ever saw. I had a small vial of rock-and-rye with me, but I wasn't afraid. I handed him the bottle and he returned it, but not much else. Then he went into the house and brought out five nice oranges. I got away with them right there on the spot, and we were fast friends forever.

"I started out again and went about six miles about as fast as a wheel could go. The old man spoke about some rock-beach, and said if I got there p. d. q. I could go below the rocks before the tide rose. The sun had just about reached the rocks as I got there, and I had to carry and shove the machine four miles. It took me about two hours. After resting a short time I rode about 10 minutes, arriving at Malanza Inlet, 50 miles from Port Orange. I saw a house across the inlet about half a mile, which I signaled, and shortly I saw a boat coming, manned by two gentlemen somewhat tanned in color, but, nevertheless, pretty white fellows. They took me to the Mananza hotel kept by one of the darkies. I remained there until 2 p. m. Monday, and I had three of the best meals I have eaten since I left home.

"The reason that I remained there so long was that a steamer was advertised to leave there for St. Augustine Monday morning, and I wanted to go up the river; but I learned afterward that she was broken down, so I had 12 miles to go to the head of the island, when I took the cars three miles, and transferred to a small steamer, that landed me in St. Augustine at 3:30 p. m. I went to a theater in the evening with W. W. McOmber, of Petoskey; called on Mary Wakefield the next morning, and took the cars home."

Sayings from Hayes.

M. K. Chew came up from Clarion on Saturday to see how Hayes was prospering.

W. H. Vaughan has purchased a registered Jersey bull from the Jay Hubbell herd.

One of our young Hayesites asks why the almanac says the sun is 14 minutes slow these days? We presume he is like every body else, he takes to get up these cold mornings.

The pleasant days we are having will be appreciated to such an extent that we will forget the severity of the past few weeks.

Don't forget the good news we have been telling you every week about low prices and good goods at the Pioneer Store Hayshore.

Owing to the storms of the past two weeks, A. T. Washburne's 1-4 off sale will be continued until March 1st. This will enable all who have not taken advantage of it to get dollars and save 25 per cent. on purchases. Don't forget it.

CROCKERY AND GLASSWARE.

Where are you going in such a hurry so early in the morning?

I am going to ROSS & COOPER'S. I hear they have bought O. E. Wilbur's Mammoth Stock of Staple and Fancy Groceries, if that is a fact, I am going to trade with them.

Yes, but they are doing a cash business! How will that go with you, John?

Oh, I don't blame them for that because so much money is lost in credit business.

We Invite the Public to call and see us. Goods delivered promptly.

Ross & Cooper.

For the Exposition

The Columbian Exposition it is said will be the greatest event of the kind in the world's history You will of course want to be there. All right, trade with CARPENTER, BARTHOLOMEW & Co., and you will save money enough to go in good style and pay all your expenses.

OF INTEREST TO YOU!

We soon expect to have on sale the choicest lot of Garden and Field Seeds ever put on this market. We will call special attention to these after a while. We are also making arrangements to start a nursery here in the spring. We expect to make this a leading feature of our business, and we think we can make it an object for anyone who contemplates planting fruit trees to deal with us. The season just closed has demonstrated what we have always claimed to be true, viz: That fruit-growing is far the most profitable part of farming in this country. You will be wise to take the hint and plant an orchard. Pending the time of delivering stock from our own grounds, we have made arrangements to supply the finest grades of stock suitable to this climate. Send us your name on a postal card and learn what we will do. If you want a Cutter, Sleigh, Harness or Robe call and see us before purchasing.

—S. K. Moore of this place has been granted a pension of $12 per month with $204 back pension.

—Another blizzard of large proportions visited us Sunday but trains were delayed but about two hours.

—The transfer dock scheme is still progressing, and will be successful. It will probably be on the north side.

—Sam. Lobbell has resigned his position on the road and will settle down in Charlevoix and conduct the McLeod Meat Markets.

—Stevens line, last week sold to Peter Williams of Eastport a fine team of horses. They sold eighteen horses last week and will soon go after another car-load.

—The Grand Traverse Herald comes out with a fine new dress. The Herald, holding being the oldest, is the best paper in the Grand Traverse region, and one of the best in the State.

—Judge Hamsdell of Traverse City Hon. Fitch H. Williams of Elk Rapids and Lorin Roberts of Traverse City were in town Monday. All are candidates for Circuit Judge, and are looking after their fences.

—The old engine of the propeller City of Charlevoix has been purchased by Lenthan & Smith, of Sturgeon Bay, and will be put into the rebuilding A. J. Wright, the burned hull of which was recently purchased by them.

—The editor of the Democrat gets off his perch and practically owns up that the electric light proposition will be snowed under. It will, William, and you might have known it. There wasn't enough votes cast for it to give the project a decent burial after its demise.

—At the last meeting of the council the following election boards were appointed: Election commissioners, Will N. Moore, H. S. Harsha, D. C. Nettleton, O. S. Washburn. Board of Registration, President, Clerk and Trustee Miller. Board of Election, President, Clerk, and Trustees Washburn and Miller.

—Albert Noble has leased the Bridge Street House and will open it up this spring. It will be throughly overhauled and renovated and will be re-named. The Noble House, Mr. and Mrs. Noble have already established a reputation and the old Bridge Street House will regain its lost prestige under their management.

—The aldermanic editor of the Democrat says that the SENTINEL's expose of the transfer dock scheme was unauthorized and unwise at this time. Every word the SENTINEL published concerning it was by per mission, and has been endorsed to the same party since. The difficulty is, it was a "snoop" on the Democrat and it makes the editor feel bad.

—The ladies of the Congregational Church desire to express their appreciation of the kindness of the proprietors of the skating rink, in granting them the entire use of the rink for their social last Friday evening, and also their kindness in arranging everything for their convenience. We desire to add that we enjoyed the gift very much and are sure that the large company that filled the rink did. We are glad to know that the rink is being conducted in so creditable a manner and that the young people of the town have a place that they can go to for recreation where the society they meet is good, and where their parents can accompany them and enjoy the free air uncontaminated by injurious language.

The Electric Light Question.

A mistaken idea largely prevails regarding the profits arising from the operation of electric lighting plants generally. Leaving out of the question, the fact (and this is likely to be a fact spelled with a capital "F") that we are to-day in the proud possession of a system of water works, from which we have thus far derived no revenue, for the reason that we are not in possession of what is deemed most important in connection with such a system, viz.,—A supply of water suitable for household purposes. Would it not strike you as a most sensible thing, to first supply our water works system with water before we come to consider the important step of going into debt nine or fifteen thousand dollars to enjoy the luxury of electric lights. Leaving this question out of consideration I say—I submit the following items from the state edition of the Detroit Journal of Feb. 11, and wonder if this indicates to any mind that the profits arising from an electric lighting plant in Charlevoix would be likely to pay the expense of operating and maintaining the same, saying nothing of interest on the debt entailed.

If people do not want to invest in electric lighting bonds in our State Capital at par and 4 per cent., will they be likely to want to do so in Charlevoix?

Lansing's electric light board is without money, and is $42,000 in debt to the water board. The loan also broke the latter board, and extensions must for the present stop. The electric light board has $40,000 of bonds outside, demanding par value for them. They are 6 per cents, and but 96 is offered.

Mortuary.

Elmer Carpenter died Saturday night, at the residence of his son, Egbert Carpenter, of this place, aged 84 years. Although the old gentleman had been confined to his bed for some months, his death was the burning out of life's lamp, and was peaceful and painless. Mr. Carpenter was born and raised in Jefferson County, N. Y. Recent years he has spent in an atmosphere of tenderest affection and most dutiful ministration, at the home of his son.

The funeral was from the house on Monday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Hughes preaching the sermon. The services were largely attended.

At one o'clock on Sunday, Mr. Hugh Donnelly, of this place, passed away, after a long and painful illness of cancer, aged 64. Mr. Donnelly has resided here about four years, coming here from Saugatuck. He was one of the best known fishermen on Lake Michigan, and enjoyed a most enviable reputation as a man of sterling integrity. He enjoyed the confidence and respect of this community. His funeral occurred from the Congregational Church on Tuesday afternoon, under the auspices of the Odd Fellows, Rev. Mr. Macpherson preaching the sermon.

Village election occurs on Monday, March 13th. There are to be elected, beside the other usual village officers, a President and three trustees, in place of Harry Nicholls, W. H. Miller and Leon. Sea. There will also be voted upon a proposition to bond the Village for an electric light plant. The disposition this year, among the politicians, at least, is to nominate candidates on strict party lines. We see no reason why a Democratic ticket will be put in the field. Let the Democrats do the same, both parties nominating their best men, and the outcome will be fully as satisfactory. Both parties have good men, and "peoples" or "union" caucuses are only a nuisance. We have yet to hear a Republican say he will attend such a caucus and vote such a ticket. There is no law against a voter splitting his ticket, if he thinks he has cause, and let us drop party lines on the nominations, leaving the best men to win, whoever they may be.

The Water-Supply Question.

About all the SENTINEL has had to say thus far concerning the water-works well business has been in the way of playful ridicule of the impecunious combination, which has been pestering the council and tax-payers for several months past, in the work of sinking the well at the pump-house.

But it goes without saying that the water-supply question is and has been from the start the most important plank of the water-works project. Without an adequate supply of wholesome water the whole work is worse than useless. Hence we deem it a proper subject of discussion by press and public.

It is high time to enter the merits of the case. Early last summer the Council, through its special committee made a contract with one Elliott, of Jackson, to sink two 8-inch wells. The party of the second part was here and signed the contract, returning immediately to Jackson for his machinery. Weeks rolled by, and the wires were kept hot, at the expense of the tax payers, in an effort to hurry the work.

Finally a young man arrived with a plug hat and a balloon, but no machinery. The daring young aeronaut entertained the waiting public with a balloon ascension, sandwiching in a miserable ball by way of helping out the board bill. Weeks again passed with no prom ise of reversing the order of things and making a stab for the bowels of the earth. The young man finally left for Jackson, and another season of telegraphic correspondence ensued.

Late in the fall the machinery came, and the plug hat. The council was promptly called upon to pay the freight charges on the former. Then it had to guarantee the board bill of the combination. The plug hat was carefully brushed and put away, and the work began after the snow had covered the earth. One hundred and fifty feet of 8-inch pipe was driven down until rock was reached and perforated, when it was announced that 6-inch pipe would go no further, and a modification asked for permitting 4-inch pipe. Of course the smaller pipe must come to the top of the ground.

The situation now is: We have a hole in the ground, but no water. The council, in attempting to enforce the contract, are met with the bold statement from the combination that the contract was not made by them, but with the old man. They refuse to enter into a new contract on their own part, and the work is at a standstill.

The council are out, up to date about $300, including the cost of the pipe, and have nothing to show for it but a dry hole in the ground. Spring is approaching. We have an elegant water works plant, with no source of supply but Round Lake, and as prospects of anything better. There is but one course for the council to pursue, and that is to eject the Jackson bullion-plug-hat outfit from the premises, and make a contract with some responsible concern to bore for water.

A suffering public never were more imposed upon than Charlevoix has been by this Jackson menagerie, and it is high time for the council, to discontinue pouring money into a rat-hole.

As we go to press, we learn that the council has made a new contract with the Elliotts, to complete the well with six inch pipe.

By Capt. Ormond Steele

CHAPTER V. (Continued.)

While the dancing was in progress Captain Fox found an occasion to draw Ormond to one side, when, without attracting attention, he whispered:

"Mr. Fernauld, I want you to have a care."

"I don't understand," replied Fernauld, not at all surprised at the mysterious manner of his commander, with which he had become very familiar.

"I mean you must not step on Ingham's toes."

"Mr. Ingham's toes?"

"Why, Captain Fox, I don't—"

"You can point her out among all those beauties," said Fernauld, nodding at the many pretty girls now ranged on one side for a contra dance, "of course I shall take care not to offend the gentleman by showing too much attention to the lady."

"It is one of the wisest and most considerate things I ever heard you say," said Fox, with a sigh of relief, for the idea of young Ingham's suit in the favored one.

"Miss Cassidy is his affianced, sister, Captain."

"Long ago he knows she is not his sister by the blood, their relationship will be an incontrovertible fact in a few days," said Capt. Fox, shaking his yellow head as if still puzzled to learn over the strange question he had proposed to himself.

"It really looks to me," responded Fernauld, "as if this infernal dashing Miss Hodges were the favored one. I'll swear to it that she has crowded a score of thirty glances on him tonight, to one on any of the rest of us."

The unexpected appearance of the two young ladies under discussion put an end to the conversation.

"Ah, Capt. Fox," said Lea Hodges, "you have grown every already of the dance, though it lacks an hour of midnight."

"And Mr. Fernauld quite forgot that I was to have been his partner in this dance," said pretty Eliza Cassidy, blushing, as she spoke, for she was afraid she laughed to be her own accuser, in addressing the swarthy young officer in this way.

"I was about to remark upon it," replied Fernauld, quickly. "I should never forgive myself if I let this opportunity pass."

He gave her his arm, bowed to the Captain and Lea Hodges and as Eliza by the order of the rules, where the young people were going through the stately figures of an old Roger de Coverley.

"Well, Anne, what do you of Hodges," said Lea, with a little pettish pout at situation that brought a heightened color to the upturned face. It is not that, but I am so bewildered by my partner Ingham, that I feel as if I were among the lions and gentlemen of my own country, instead that I forget what I should do to give expression to my delight. We sailors are so out of the ways of etiquette, and the ladies, in consideration of our long absences at sea, always look over my slips and pay the heavy forfeits cheerfully."

"We are anxious that our guests should enjoy themselves, as those our elder friends are doing," said Lea, waving a graceful arm in the direction of the officers of the two ships, who were now drawn up on a row on the piazza, "but at the same time we are most anxious that they shall not carry from Salem a bad impression of the manners of the young people."

"As you have three given in one sentence Guy lay to at your longitude, I should hold myself bound to put your kind wishes to be yourself that it shall be done here. And now, to carry out my wishes, what say you to a dance of twosome, if it too cold?"

"Capt. Fox turned to his partner by which they were standing, and bowed to her with a certain stately stock so that Lea could see, as she thought, that he was gleaming for a lower station than the young lady at his side.

"The land is beautiful, but it is most beautiful when the sun is shining, for it from like an epic, or rather an anthem to the Creator."

"I doubt not, I agree," replied Lea saucily, "but you have a tendency to flow or much pleasure in your epic sentiments with your lady friends, and I will condown to the beach. It is not far and the air is cool now."

She took the Captain's arm and they walked out through the garden and left on their faces the cool sea breeze with the odor of apple blossoms and sweet violets.

The regular beating of dancing feet, and the lilting music of the orchestra, mingled with the sighing of the breeze, made a strange, all fantastic representation.

They walked to the sea shore, where Lea sat down on the gunwale of a stranded boat, against which the tide came tained.

"Ah," he sighed, "since my earliest memory I have tried to fancy what heaven is like, but without success, hereafter I shall have no difficulty. I shall only have to recall this night."

"I am glad you like this place," said Lea, "for upon the shore, on a moonlight shewing the finest expression of her face. "It is to me the most beautiful place in the world, but perhaps that is because I know no other land."

"Nor do you need to," replied the Captain, with well affected rapture. "If has been my good fortune, or, as I may rate, call it what you will, to see every land under the sun, and I have found but though my acquaintance with your sex has been limited, I have found other the pleasure of being here is only clouded by the thought that I may at any moment be called to leave."

"Is this your first visit to America, Cap'tain?" she asked.

The question was evidently unexpected, but the Captain recovered slightly and hesitated; he thought she would make some comment on the words of praise, which he had bestowed for effect, rather than with any object in view, for, in this respect, he was like all other sailors.

"I have been on the American coast before, particularly along the South American coast, and through the West Indies, but this is my first visit to the province of New York.

"Then you have not been New York City?"

"No, but I hope to do so; unless or-

and the 3d face upon, and then handling it to the doctor, who took a pinch and looked at the patient, but then handling as men know when about to drink wine—he took a pinch himself. This done, he initiated the doctor by taking out a red handkerchief, that looked like a good-sized flag, and they inclined their heads toward each other and blew bugle blasts of great vigor and resonance into the handkerchiefs.

"I agree with you, my dear Doctor," said the agent, repacking the handkerchief in one of the side-pockets of his waistcoat coat. "The officers of the Wanderer are gentlemen tried and true, and the crew are, without doubt, worthy of him," said Capt. Fox.

"Fresh, but honest, as a fine stalley was the ship, and a good ship, too, I've heard, when I was in Bermuda, was said to be a very fast sailer, and especially so—he came from England for that purpose, yet Capt. Kidd and the Gallery have made her board time above.

"He is supposed to have been wrecked or destroyed by the pirates," said Capt. Fox, as if he were starting an opinion about which there could be no disagreement.

"Yes, that is the general belief, at least it was until the last few months."

"And it is changed?"

"It is changing."

"Does what cause?"

"They say that is, those that should know, that Captain Kidd is still alive and is commanding the Gallery."

"How he must be middle-aged or perhaps yet Capt. Kidd and the Gallery have not been heard from since."

REAL COFFEE.

It Is Sure Enough to be Unrecognizable to Many People.

Many persons who talk learnedly about coffee and its making know seldom, if ever, tasted pure coffee. All they know is a more or less strong infusion of chicory, substituted with a portion of coffee. I heard of a comedy near the other day when under the lives of his wife and his cook a burden to them by reason of the coffee brought to him by his own house. In spite of the most careful making, and the most absolute purity, his Mocha was never right. At last, in desperation, his wife asked if he ever got his coffee to his taste. "Oh, yes, at the club. They make it there right enough," was the answer. Driven to her wits' end, the lady consulted with her cook, and finally sent the latter to the club to learn the "proper way to make coffee." As the absolute purity of the coffee was one of the points insisted on as essential by her master, Cy "at studied the coffee used in preparing her master's infusion, and her sense of small specifically taught her that so-called "pure coffee" was largely mixed with chicory. The chef confronted her opinion, and she went home. The coffee was made and for the first time got perfect satisfaction. She was sent for by her master and congratulated on the change in the preparation, whereupon she answered quietly: "Please sir, it is not the making I have changed, but the coffee. You require chicory with coffee, that's all!" I believe nothing short of ocular demonstration satisfied her master that it was actually the purity of his home-made coffee that disgusted him.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY.

His Question Alarmed the Drug Clerk Needlessly.

He sauntered deliberately into a drug store, bought a clear, lighted it, and then inquired mysteriously of the clerk:

"How much strychnine does it take to kill—"

"I don't know and wouldn't tell you if I did," interrupted the clerk.

"We never sell strychnine without a prescription from some physician we answered the clerk.

"I went to the telephone, rang up a—from some physician we—" he returned to the counter. "It was quietly smoking his pipe took it out of his mouth to—

"Much is a cocain a grain?"

At that moment a policeman entered the store hastily.

"Where is he?" he asked breathlessly.

"There," said the clerk, pointing to the smoker, who was the only person in the store; "he didn't get any poison from me."

"You come along," said the policeman; "you can't kill yourself here, my man."

"Rats!" said the dejected customer winking at the policeman.

"Why didn't you say so before," said the clerk, "and not go and run me to so much trouble? I thought you was a suicide, sure."

Death Valley—A Curious Place.

The geological formation of Death Valley, lays county, California, is parallel by but one other spot on the globe—the Dead sea region of the Holy Land. The valley is about eight miles broad and thirty-five in length, and is easily geologists to be a striking illustration of the condition of the whole world in its early epochs. It lies far below the level of the Pacific, in some places as much as 100 feet, and has the appearance of being under the ten of iron heated furnace. Thunderstorms pound around its borders, but no cloud ever intercepts the rays of the scorching sun that continually beat down upon Death valley sands until they are hotter than those of "burning Sahara." For weeks in and week out the thermometer stands above 100 degrees night and day, often touching the hundred and a quarter mark in the afternoons. Moisture of all kinds is unknown; dead animals dry up and immediately in the sand.

As Authentic to Dumas Tilt.

Hermits are generally supposed to be holy men who spend their lives far from the madding crowd, occupying themselves in works of prayer and meditation on the vanity of the world. Jean Calais, an anchorite of the nineteenth century, who has been arrested in France, can hardly be classed among the disciples of Saint Anthony. He of any other pious tenant of the Thebaid. While supposed to be leading a contemplative life, he was going about the country stealing like a gipsy. His depredations having been brought to the notice of the proper authorities, the gendarmes were sent out after Jean, and he was captured at St. Paul. The gyves were promptly placed upon his wrists, and he was marched between two sharp-faced men to the prison of Prades, where he will remain in real seclusion from the world for a considerable period.

A Colored Business Woman.

Mrs. Lizzie Young, a colored woman of Jacksonville, Fla., has established quite a drying business in that city. She owns three drays and employs from twenty to thirty more when occasion requires. She pays each drayman $1.50 a day, calling fourteen loads a day's work. At present she is employed in hauling away the sand from the excavation on the government lot, and so far has sold every particle of the sand dug out. Mrs. Young knows by face and name every drayman in her employ. But draying is not her only business. For six months every year this enterprising young woman runs an extensive wood yard at North Springfield, and four or five teams are kept busy delivering wood. She sells, besides, many hundreds of dollars worth of pork every year, and does a good trade in poultry and eggs.

They Live Rich.

The most lofty place in the world regularly inhabited by human beings is the Buddhist monastery of Hatee in Tibet, which is about 17,000 feet above the sea level. The highest inhabited spot on the Western Hemisphere is Oulaca, a railway station in Peru, which is 16,435 feet above the Pacific's level, or per mile.

A RABID PESSIMIST

He Inoculated the Man Who Had Saved His Life.

"The pessimism of some men is simply pestiferous," said a clerk to a reporter. "Why, I know a fellow who actually inoculated another man for saving his life. The way it happened was this:

"A devilish bright, but unscrupulous sort of a chap named Whittaker was one day sitting on the veranda of a country hotel in a Southwestern town chatting with a number of friends. Some one happened to call him by name and an old white-whiskered gentleman standing near by came walking up to the crowd and ladling out his hand to Whittaker said:

"'Is your name Whittaker?'

"'Yes,' was the reply.

"'Ain't you Wittie Ollie Whittaker of Indianville, Ark.?'

"'Yes,' again.

"'Well, don't you remember the time you fell off a flat boat into the river about twenty years ago, and how you'd a drowned if I hadn't a dived in and saved you?'

"'Yes,' Whittaker said, 'I do, you old fool. What good did it do? I've been playing poker for twenty years and never won a cent. I've been kicked and cuffed over fourteen states and I'm out of a job now. Good-bye.' And the cruelly indignant Whittaker stamped off down the steps, leaving his benevolent benefactor aglast with surprise.'

The Poisy.

People suffering from palsy are now said to derive benefit from railway journeys, and, on the principle of like curing like, the greater the shaking the more complete the cure. For the use of patients a certain doctor has invented an oscillating chair in which those afflicted with the terrible disease may be rocked and racked in a most alarming manner. Another healthy giving apparatus is a vibrating helmet applied to the head by a number of metallic strips, to which a trembling motion is imparted by an electric motor in the crown of the helmet, and we are assured that it gives relief to sufferers from nervous headaches by inducing lassitude and sleepiness.

Names of Philadelphia Streets.

Philadelphia is noted for its old street names. The various trees and plants have long ago been exhausted, and the vocabularies of the board of surveyors are out of sufficient volume to keep pace with the number of new streets being placed on the city plant. In its dilemma the board has given some streets a name and a half, such as Forty-two and a Half street. And now it proposes to make the fractions still smaller. A plan of the lines and grades of Fifty-four and Three-quarters street from Westminster avenue to Haverford street is being made.

New Treatment for Nervous Diseases.

This novel method consists in subcutaneous injections of a solution of the phosphate of soda, which, not entering the system by the digestive tract, acts directly on the nervous system. The Brown-Sequard elixir was not always harmless, but in many instances produced local inflammation at the point where the injection was made or other unpleasant consequences. But no such serious objection is likely to be raised to the use of a solution of five grammes of the phosphate of soda in ten grammes of sterilized, distilled water.

General Grant Replies to a Song.

The anecdote is told of General Grant that soon after his nomination for the presidency he was in the city of ——, where he met some old acquaintances, who known to but few, and there, on a rainy Sunday, entered a church and took a seat in a vacant pew not far from the pulpit. The man who rented or owned the pew came in, and seeing some one in the seat, sent the sexton to ask him to leave it, which the general did, simply saying, "I supposed it was probably the pew of a prominent man or I should not have entered it."

Recognized Old Friends.

Volitaire was one day reading a tragedy of his own composition, many verses borrowed from other authors. Surprised at some of these that came from his lips, Piron, the poet, made a bow, with great seriousness, "Why are you doing that?" Voltaire exclaimed at length, with extreme vehemence. "Keep on, mediocre," said Piron, "don't mind me. It is merely my habit to salute old acquaintances."

The Best Way to Learn.

Rogers, the poet, won a reputation for remarkable speech, but he had a great distaste for the "small beer" of personal gossip. "I wonder how the Mrs. Leas able to keep a carriage," a lady once said to him, in his own house, and the poet at once turned to a servant to say: "Go to Hank Square with Mrs. Proctor's and my compliments, and ask how the family contrive to pay for their carriage."

A Disorganized Cat.

In the autumn of 1888 a big black cat, the pet of Mrs. Sarah Van Dyke's family at Schwenksville, Pa., disappeared. Its was a remarkable pussy, his only defects being the absence of an eye and a tooth, which he lost in an encounter with another cat. After a week went by poor old Tom was given up for lost. The day the cat left the family nearly into a fit of fright by appearing in the dining room.

A Historic Cathedral Doomed.

The old cathedral in Berlin is being pulled down and a new one erected. The emperor has consented to allow paper weights to be made of the stones, pewments and the steps of the altar where the late Emperor William's coffin stood. The weight been mounted upon it the words in which the emperor gave his permission as a guarantee of its genuineness. They are to be sold for charitable purposes.

IN A TRAP TILL HE DIED.

Held by Iron Bars William Carey Was Frozen to Death.

With his head tightly squeezed between two bars of an iron grating, unable to pull it out or push his body through after it, William Carey of Ironmontown, Pa., was slowly frozen to death.

The death trap into which the unfortunate man entered is at the entrance to the basement of J. A. McLeod's harness establishment, on Main street, below Chelten avenue. Carey had been drinking heavily. It is supposed that on his way home he tried to enter the basement of the factory. Thrusting his head between the bars of the grating, he evidently discovered that the aperture was not large enough to admit his body. Then, in his fright, he either became insensible or twisted his head in such a way as to be unable to extricate it.

In this position the doomed man slowly froze to death. There was no evidence of a struggle, and the bitter winds must have found their work quickly. When found Carey's eyes were open and seemed staring from their sockets, although his feathers were not drawn and displayed no evidence of suffering.

Several boys, while playing in the rear of the establishment where the grating was located, came face to face with the horrible spectacle. They ran screaming from the spot, and meeting an officer, one of them exclaimed breathlessly:

The officer immediately proceeded to the spot, and succeeded in extricating the stiffened corpse. The body was sent to the morgue.

SAVED BY A SLIPKNOT.

M. Thouar, in his diary kept during his explorations in the Pilcomayo Delta under a commission from the Argentine government, describes an experience which prompted him to eternal vigilance in regard to snakes. He was lying in his hammock; the sergeant of his guard was asleep under a tree close by. Suddenly he noticed an immense serpent coiled about the sergeant's leg and extending his head toward his bare chest. What should he do? To wake the man meant certain death to him, but how to kill the creature or attract it away without waking him?

He recalled a method of capturing the cobras of India. He prepared a slip-knot, by stealthy, almost imperceptible movements he attracted the serpent's attention. It turned his head. He cast the noose over it, and drew it tight around the reptile's neck. It was not a moment too soon. The sergeant awoke. He fainted with fright, but the danger was passed. The slip-knot had saved him, and the stroke of the sabre cut off the serpent's head.

A Strange Experience.

In the course of his long fight against slavery General Hawley and his old friend, John Hooker, had one experience which is probably unique among New England citizens. Hawley boarded with Hooker owned a doctor of divinity. A scholarly colored man, James Pennington, who had received at Heidelberg the degree of D. D., was settled over the Talcott Street church in Hartford, Conn. It came out that he was, away from slavery when a boy. He was "owned" at the South, and when the fugitive slave law was passed there was a time when he was in great anxiety. So lawyer Joe Hawley went to his owners for Mr. Hooker, bought this doctor of divinity and brought Mr. Hooker back the bill of sale. Mr. Hooker tried for a day the feeling of owning a minister and then put on record in the town clerk's office a deed giving the Rev. Dr. James Pennington the ownership of himself.

The Dog and the Watch.

A young lady had a beautiful gold watch of which she was unduly proud. The time-piece was exhibited on various occasions for few days ago, when some admiring friends were examining it, the watch accidentally slipped from their fingers. A cry of dismay went up when the pretty saw the watch disappear with a gulp in the yawning mouth of a dog which sat by their feet, looking expectantly upward and pseudo-anxiously wagging its tail. Poor doggie laughed that he had received a choice morsel, and looked pleased with his feat of swallowing it on the fly, but it proved to be his death warrant. He was summarily dispatched, and at the post-mortem the watch was recovered, none the worse from the mishap.

Treating Snake Bites.

Sir Joseph Fayrer, who is the greatest living authority on the subject of snake bites, holds that a person suffering from snake poison is practically dying of "nervous exhaustion," and consequently when the victim is forced to take violent exercise in order to throw off by perspiration the poison that has been absorbed in his system, his end is in reality being hastened. Perspiration should be induced by a vapor bath so as to draw the poison out of the system. Sir Joseph Fayrer's experience leads to the conclusion that at the present time there is no known cure for the bite of either the cobra or the Daboia.

The combinations of the figures 1893, which are evenly divided by 3, are always welcome. Here are a few of them: 1893 by transposition becomes, 1839, 1389, 1938, 1932, 1329, 1392, 1923, all divisible by 3, and there are plenty more. The figures 18, 9, 3, 120, 365 and 365 also have 3 as a factor. Then by addition 1 and 8 give 9, 18 and 9 give 27, 18 and 3 give 21, 9 and 3 and 3 give 15, 1 and 8 and 9 give 18, 1 and 8 and 3 give 21, etc.

REAL COFFEE.

It Is Rare Enough to be Unrecognizable to Many People.

Many persons who talk learnedly about coffee and its making have seldom, if ever, tasted pure coffee. All they know is a more or less strong infusion of chicory adulterated with a portion of coffee. I heard of a connoisseur the other day who made the lives of his wife and his cook a burden to them by reason of the coffee brought to him in his own house. In spite of the most careful making, and the most absolute purity, his Mocha was never right. At last, in desperation, his wife asked if he ever got his coffee to his taste. "Oh, yes, at the club. They make it there right enough," was the answer. Driven to her wits' end, the lady consulted with her cook, and finally sent the latter to the club to learn the "proper way to make coffee." As the absolute purity of the coffee was one of the points insisted on as essential by her master, the cook studied the coffee used in preparing her master's infusion, and her sense of small speedily taught her that his so-called "pure coffee" was largely mixed with chicory. The chef confirmed her opinion, and she went home. The coffee was made and for the first time gave perfect satisfaction. She was sent for by her master and congratulated on the change in the preparation, whereupon she answered quietly, "Please sir, it is not the making I have changed, but the coffee. You require chicory with coffee, that's all!" I believe nothing short of ocular demonstration satisfied her master that it was actually the purity of his home-made coffee that disgusted him.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY.

His Question Alarmed the Drug Clerk Needlessly.

He sauntered dejectedly into a drug store, lighted a cigar, lighted it, and then inquired mysteriously of the clerk:

"How much strychnine does it take to kill—"

"I don't know and wouldn't tell you if I did," interrupted the clerk.

"We never sell strychnine with at a profit," [illegible] from some physician we [illegible] answered the clerk [illegible] went to the telephone, rang [illegible] figures, said a few cabalistic [illegible] returned to the counter. [illegible] as was quietly smoking his [illegible] took it out of his mouth to [illegible]

"—uch is a weak a grip?"

"—ut moment a policeman entered the store and—"

"Where is he?" he asked breathlessly.

"There," said the clerk, pointing to the smoker, who was the only person in the store. "he didn't get any poison from me."

"You come along," said the policeman, "you can't kill yourself here, my man!"

"Rats!" said the dejected customer walking at the policeman.

"Why didn't you say so before," said the clerk. "And don't go out yet one to fresh trouble? I thought you was a suicide, sure."

Death Valley—A Curious Place.

The geological formation of Death Valley, lying county, California, is parallelled by but one other spot on the globe—the Dead sea region of the Holy Land. The valley is about eight miles broad and thirty-five in length, and is said by geologists to be a striking illustration of the condition of the whole world in its early epochs. It lies far below the level of the Pacific, in some places as much as 160 feet, and has the appearance of being under the ban of some terrific curse. Thunderstorms pound around its borders, but no cloud ever intercepts the rays of the scorching sun that continually beat down upon Death valley sands until they are hotter than those of "burning Sahara." For week in and week out the thermometer stands above 100 degrees night and day, often touching the hundred and a quarter mark in the afternoons. Moisture of all kinds is unknown, dead animals dry up and immumify in the sand.

An Aesthete in Durance Vile.

Hermits are generally supposed to be holy men who spend their lives far from the maddling crowd, occupying themselves in works of prayer and meditation on the vanity of the world. Jean Galale, an anchorite of the nineteenth century, who has been arrested in France, can hardly be classed among the disciples of Saint Anthony or of any other pious tenant of the Thebaid. While supposed to be leading a contemplative life, he was going about the country stealing like a gipsy. His depredations having been brought to the notice of the proper authorities, the gendarmes were sent out after Jean, and he was captured at St. Paul. The gives were promptly placed upon his wrists, and he was marched between two stern-faced men to the prison of Prades, where he will remain in restseclusion from the world for a considerable period.

A Colored Business Woman.

Mrs. Lizzie Young, a colored woman of Jacksonville, Fla., has established quite a drying business in that city. She owns three drays and employs from twenty to thirty more when occasion requires. She pays each drayman $1.50 a day, and employs loads a day's work. At present she is employed in hauling away the sand from the excavation on the government jetty, and so far has sold every particle of the sand dug out. Mrs. Young knows by face and name every drayman in her employ. Isn't drying is not her only business. For six months every year this enterprising young woman runs an interstate wood yard at North Springfield, and four or five teams are kept busy delivering wood. She has made, many hundreds of dollars' worth of pork every year, and has a good trade in poultry and eggs.

They Live High.

The most lofty place in the world regularly inhabited by human beings is the Buddhist monastery of Hatse in Thibet, which is about 17,000 feet above the sea level. The highest inhabited spot on the Western Hemisphere is Oulam, a railway station in Peru, which is 15,645 feet above the Pacific's level or low tide.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

A RASH PESSIMIST.

He Insulted the Man Who Had Saved His Life.

"The pessimism of some men is simply astounding," said a visitor to a reporter. "Why, I know a fellow who actually insulted another man for saving his life. The way it happened was this.

"A devilish bright, but knock-about sort of a chap named Whittaker was one day sitting on the veranda of a country hotel in a Southwestern town chatting with a number of friends. Some one happened to call him by name and an old white-whiskered gentleman standing near by came waddling up to the crowd and holding out his hand to Whittaker said:

"'Yes,' was the reply.

"'Ain't you Willie little Whittaker of Baileville, Ark.?'

"'Yes,' again.

"'Well, don't you remember the time you fell of a flat boat into the river about twenty years ago, and how you'd a drowned if I hadn't a dived in and saved you?'

"'Yes,' Whittaker said, 'I do you old fool. What good did it do? I've been playing poker for twenty years and never won a cent. I've been kicked and coffed over fourteen states and I'm out of a job now. Good-by.' And the really indignant Whittaker stomped off down the steps, leaving his innocent benefactor aglaust with surprise."

The Pulsy.

People suffering from palsy are now said to derive benefit from railway journeys, and, on the principle of like curing like, the greater the shaking the more complete the cure. For the use of patients a certain doctor has invented an oscillating chair in which those afflicted with the terrible disease may be rocked and racked in a most alarming manner. Another healthgiving apparatus is a vibrating helmet, applied to the head by a number of metallic strips, to which a throbbing motion is imparted by an electric motor in the crown of the helmet, and we are assured that it gives relief to sufferers from nervous headaches by inducing insitude and sleepiness.

Names of Philadelphia Streets.

Philadelphia is noted for its odd street names. The various trees and plants have long ago been exhausted, and the vocabularies of the board of surveyors are not of sufficient volume to keep pace with the number of new streets being placed on the city plans. In its dilemma the board has given some streets a number and half, such as Forty-two and a Half street. And now it purposes to make the fractions still smaller. A plan of the lines and grades of Fifty-four and Three-quarters street from Westminster avenue to Haverford street is being made.

New Treatment for Nervous Diseases.

This novel method consists in subcutaneous injections of a solution of the phosphate of soda, which, on entering the system by the digestive tract, acts directly on the nervous system. The Brown-Sequard elixir was not always harmless, but in many instances produced local inflammation at the point where the injection was made or other unpleasant consequences. But so much serious objection is likely to be raised to the use of a solution of five grammes of the phosphate of soda in 100 grammes if sterilized, distilled water.

General Grant Replies to a Snub.

The anecdote is told of General Grant that soon after his nomination for the presidency he was in the city of——, where he had not been expected, and was known to but few, and there, on a rainy Sunday, entered a church and took a seat in a vacant pew not far from the pulpit. The man who rented the pew came in, saw the stranger, and, none one in the seat, sent the sexton to ask him to leave it, which the general did, simply saying: "I supposed I was probably the pew of a politician or I should not have entered it."

Recognized His Friends.

Voltaire was one day reading a tragedy of his own which contained many verses borrowed from other authors. Someone came in and said he came from his tips. Piron, the poet, made a bow, with great seriousness, "Why are you doing that?" Voltaire exclaimed, laughing, with some irritation. "Keep on, monsieur," said Piron, "you will see that it is merely my habit to salute my acquaintances."

The Way to Learn.

Rogers, the poet, won a reputation for exceedingly pointed and witty epigrams. Once, in "small beer" of personal gossip, "I wonder how the Blanks are able to keep a carriage," a lady once said to him, in his own house, and the poet at once turned toward her and said, "Do you think I care with Mrs. Proctor's and my compliments, and ask how the family contrive to pay for their carriage."

A Resurrected Cat.

In the autumn of 1888 a big black cat, the pet of Mrs. Sarah Van Dyke's family at Schenectady, Pa., disappeared. He was a remarkable pussy, his only defects being the absence of an eye and a tooth, which he lost in an encounter with another cat. After a search by poor old Tom was given up as lost. The other cats by his sister do the family nearly into a fit of fright by appearing in the dining-room.

A Historic Cathedral Doomed.

The old cathedral in Berlin is being pulled down and a new one erected. The emperor has consented to allow paperweights to be made of the bricks in the pavements and the steps of the altar where the late Emperor William's coffin stood. Each weight bears stamped upon it the words in which the emperor gave his permission as a guarantee of its genuineness. They are to be sold for charitable purposes.

IN A TRAP TILL HE DIED.

Held by Iron Bars William Carry Was Frozen to Death.

With his head tightly squeezed between two bars of an iron grating, unable to pull it out or push his body through after it, William Carry of Hermanstown, Pa., was slowly frozen to death.

The death trap into which the unfortunate man entered is at the entrance to the basement of J. A. McLeod's harness establishment, on Main street, below Chelten avenue. Carry had been drinking heavily. It is supposed that on his way home he tried to enter the basement of the factory. Thrusting his head between the bars of the grating, he evidently discovered that the aperture was not large enough to admit his body. Then, in his fright, he either became insensible or twisted his head in such a way as to be unable to extricate it.

In this position the doomed man slowly froze to death. There was no evidence of a struggle, and the bitter winds must have blown their work quickly. When found Carry's eyes were open and seemed staring from their sockets, although his feathers were not drawn and displayed no evidence of suffering.

Several boys, while playing in the rear of the establishment where the grating was located, came face to face with the horrible spectacle. They ran screaming from the spot, and meeting an officer, one of them exclaimed breathlessly:

"There was a dead man fastened in the grates!"

The officer immediately proceeded to the spot, and successful in extricating the stiffened corpse. The body was sent to the morgue.

SAVED BY A SLIPKNOT.

M. Thomar, in his diary kept during his explorations in the Dikomaya Delta under a commission from the Argentine government, describes an experience which prompted him to eternal vigilance in regard to snakes. He was lying in his hammock; the sergeant of his guard was asleep under a tree close by. Suddenly he noticed an immense serpent coiled about the sergeant's leg and extending his head toward his bare chest. What should he do? To wake the man meant certain death to him, but how to kill the creature or attract it away without waking him?

He recalled a method of capturing the cobra of India. He prepared a slip-knot. By stealthy, almost imperceptible movements he attracted the serpent's attention. It turned its head. He cast the noose over it, and drew it tight around the reptile's neck. It was not a moment too soon. The sergeant awoke. He fainted with fright, but the danger was passed. The slip-knot had saved him, and the stroke of the sabre cut off the serpent's head.

A Strange Experience.

In the course of his long fight against slavery General Hawley and his old friend, John Hooker, had one experience which is probably unique among New England citizens. Hawley took a scholarly colored man, James Pennington, who had received at Heidelberg the degree of D. D., was settled over the Talcott Street church in Hartford, Conn. It came out that he was born a slave and was sold, when a little was "owned" at the South, and when the fugitive slave law was passed there was danger of his capture and servitude. So Lawyer Joe Hawley and his owners for Mr. Hooker, bought this doctor of divinity and brought Dr. Hooker back the bill of sale. Mr. Hooker tried for a day the feeling of owning a minister and then put on record in the town clerk's office a deed giving the Rev. Dr. James Pennington the ownership of himself.

The Dog and the Watch.

A young lady had a beautiful gold watch of which she was unduly proud. The time-piece was exhibited on various occasions, and a few days ago, when some admiring friends were examining it, the watch accidentally slipped from their fingers. A cry of dismay went up from the party as the watch disappear with a gulp in the yawning mouth of a dog which at the whole feet, looking expectantly forward and panting naturally wagging its tail. Poor doggie imagined that he had received a choice morsel, and looked pleased with his feat of catching it on the fly, but it proved to be his death warrant. He was immediately dispatched, and at the post-mortem the watch was recovered, none the worse from the mishap.

Sir Joseph Fayrer, who is the greatest living authority on the subject of snake bites, holds that a person suffering from snake poison is peculiarly dying of "nervous exhaustion," and consequently when the victim is forced to take violent exercise in order to throw off by perspiration the poison that has been absorbed in his system, his end is in reality being hastened. Perspiration should be induced by a ruger bath so as to draw the poison to the surface, and Sir Joseph Fayrer's experience leads to the conclusion that at the present time there is no known cure for the bite of either the cobra or the Daboia.

The combinations of the figures 1893, which are evenly divided by 3, are almost numerous. The sum of these digits 1893 by transposition becomes, 1839, 1938, 1383, 1389, 1932, 1836, all divisible by 3, and there are plenty of others. The sum of the digits 1893 also have 3 as a factor. Then by addition 1 and 8 give 9, 18 and 9 give 27, 18 and 3 give 21, 18 and 2 and 3 give 23, 1 and 3 and 2 give 18, 1 and 8 and 3 give 21, etc.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Huntington, O., states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found, before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have my cough, lung or chest trouble try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottle free at F. G. Hines & Co's.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My name is on the polished ore,
And there on the front for I stand,
And for hard-coal doings
You just should see mine.
No 9, No 9.

I am beloved by the men and the girls
For both I impartially wince,
For my cinders I pass
To the mouths I'm in dust.
No 9, No 9.

I never get sorry and tired,
With coal I always am fired;
The hard work I position,
For coal I no go pizen.
No 9, No 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With lumpers I am familiar,
Tho' like Bridget
They like to Scotch—
No 9, No 9.

Twice Paris Exposition I went,
I was getting the Grand Prize intent;
I did all to finish,
The grand Prize was mine—
No 9, No 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1893 at Paris, I was awarded the Grand Prize, the highest honor, the highest honor that could be given to any thing. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the most eminent scientists and experts in the world. I was awarded the highest honor at the Exposition of France. This fact, after exhaustive examination and test, which lasted for two years, the Illinois committee were the best of all, and awarded me the highest honor. I was awarded the highest honor at the World's Fair, in Chicago, gold, silver and bronze medals.

I am now in the market for further conquest. I have offered a thousand dollars to any blacksmith or coal dealer of the company with the best coal, to test our respective coals, and I have not had a response yet.

Now, I am the finest, and the No 12, for the blacksmith, the best, and the best in the world.

I know, when you want a working machine, it is a good one, and I am the best of all.

Ask your working machine dealer for the No 9 and take no other. If he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and we will tell you who keeps them in your town.

FEAST ENDS IN HORROR.

SEVENTEEN PERSONS FATALLY BURNED.

Congress Urged to Ratify a Treaty of Arbitration with Hawaii's Provisional Government—But There Is Known Opposition to Consummate.

—A Rochester dispatch says: A carnival dance was given Monday evening in Deanside Park. Water stood in present were dancing in the hall on the first floor, a child playing in the cellar dropped a lighted taper through the knothole of a crack full of pitchers. The cellar caught, killed the child, torch the dance floor, and scattered the burning pitchers among the dancers. A dense pressure enveloped in flames ran for the windows and doors spreading fire and inside among the rest of the company. Ten persons fell through to the cellar and were burned to death. Twelve more whose clothes had caught fire died shortly after reaching the open air. Three were rescued into consciousness in the panel, and were burned as they lay fatigues on the floor. Five men and seven women, whose clothes were half burned from their backs, are in a critical condition. Many others have slight fractures or burns. Not more than twenty persons escaped without injuries.

—The President sent a message to the Senate Wednesday afternoon recommending the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States. It is accompanied by a treaty of annexation concluded between the Secretary of State and the Hawaiian Commissioners, and a mass of correspondence relating to the question at issue. The treaty is brief, providing merely for the annexation of the islands under the present laws, the usual provisions relating the details of the permanent form of government, etc., to the action of Congress. The correspondence is very voluminous, going back many years, and gives complete but recent the islands of Hawaii as compared with the United States and Japan exist.

—Disease was almost the verge of civil war Wednesday. The members of the Republican House caucused representative Hull, who announced that the House would be called upon to consider the Nicaragua Canal bill, and that the Committee on Foreign Affairs had decided to report favorably the Hawaiian treaty. Mr. Hull said

TRAGEDY AT FORT WORTH.

—A Bullet Point dispatch says: A carnival dance was given Monday evening in Masonic Hall. Women and children were dancing in the hall on the first floor, a child playing in the entire building, a highlest tenper through the kingdom of a rain fall of somewhere. The carnival was filled the child, tore up the dance floor, and scattered the burning gasoline among the dancers. A dense pennon enveloped in flames ran for the windows and down spreading fire and panic among the rest of the dancing. Two persons fell through to the ceiling and were burned to death. Seven more whose clothes had caught fire died shortly after reaching the open air. Three were trampled into unconsciousness in the panic and were turned as they lay helpless on the floor. Five men and seven women, whose clothes were half burned from their backs, are in a critical condition. Many others have slight fractures or bruises. Not more than forty persons escaped without injuries.

—The President sent a message to the Senate Wednesday afternoon recommending the adoption of the Hawaiian treaty by the United States. It is accompanied by a transcript of assurances concerned between the Secretary of State and the Hawaiian Commissioners, and a part of correspondence relating to the question at issue. The treaty is first provided for ratifying for the annexation of the islands under the government just between government of Hawaii and the officials of the government of the United States. The compensation to be paid to the government of Hawaii is to cover a period of twenty years, and gives a monopoly to the United States of all exportations with the United States and foreign countries.

Two of their companions were wounded, but escaped to the woods. Some of the attacking party were hurt.

—James H. Rinson, of Thomasville, Ga., has been sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of years for bigamy.

—Ashley Hinkle, a Elkhart lad, pleaded, aged 20 years, committed suicide. Hinkle left the usual details of his wife and suicide. He had been married but a year.

THE FIRE RECORD.

—Lying upon the floor of a little room at 31 West Polk street, Chicago, Fire Marshal Swenny found the body of David Welch. Close by lay the body of Welch's only companion, a big Newfoundland. Both had been suffocated by the smoke of a small fire which was set in the room from some unknown cause. Very little is known of the old man except that he formerly from a smoke-begrimed, dirty dwelling, which shows that he was a member of the Twelfth Regiment, Massachusetts Infantry. The dog bears no collar, but it is believed that the dog's name, and answered the barking entreaties among the dancers. A dense pennon enveloped in flames ran for the windows and down spreading fire and panic among the rest of the dancing. Two persons fell through to the ceiling and were burned to death. Seven more whose clothes had caught fire died shortly after reaching the open air. Three were trampled into unconsciousness in the panic and were turned as they lay helpless on the floor. JUST LIKE A BIG CITY.

A REGULAR MUNICIPALITY IN JACKSON PARK.

Facts About the Sewerage System—It Is Claimed that Every Modern Sanitary Of the Institution—Attractive Simplicity of the Other Buildings.

New System of Drainage.

"The White City" is an appropriate name for the World's Fair. Its predominant color is white, and it possesses all the attributes of a city, and is just like a big city in one at that. It will be a municipality in every detail, with its temples, libraries, theaters, music halls, art galleries and museums. Within it with the schools in the Illinois and women's buildings, form the museum and educational institutions of a metropolis. It has also its manufactories, restaurants, hotels, and theaters, its fire and police departments—even to a justice shop, in which it is possible a real Chicago justice may be on exhibition. Lastly, this city, besides many other things, will have broad boulevards, shady promenades, and handsome parks, drained by a most complete set of tiles and waste pipes emptying into large tanks, whence contents are kept in constant motion by the use of compressed air.

The system of sewerage has not been tested. It is a combination of several methods of disposing of sewage and will be given a thorough and lasting trial, which will settle for all time its claim as being the best solution of the problem of effectively disposing of immense quantities of sewage. It is claimed by its inventors that the Shoreland and cremation methods, so as to leave absolutely no nuisance behind them, such as building the sewerage pipes concentrate in two large tanks called septic tanks. These tanks when filled are arranged to automatically open in turn, and, on one side, while on the other side the liquid is allowed to run off, the solids are left behind in hardened. The furniture is then removed and the tank is closed, and valves reverse and the tanks again fill. The liquid is then run into the east corner of the grounds, their contents being allowed to run off, and forms a great lake 3 miles long and 1 mile wide, in which the sewage is purified by the action of the air and sun. The effluent will come from the septic tanks in a stream 3 feet in depth, and will be inodorous. The solids, which are left in the septic tanks, which are left in the septic tanks, which are left in the septic tanks

Bellaire Breeze: Officers Kittle and Borthwick have succeeded in arresting John McInnis, E. Trumbull and M. E. Gray who are charged with criminal trespass in the cutting of timber on lands of the East Jordan Lumber Co. in the townships of Banks and Echo. Their examination has been set for the 23d inst.

Grand Rapids and Indiana made surveys last fall with a view to straightening out the line between here and Cadillac, increasing the radius of curves and decreasing the grades. We understand it to be the intention of the management to eventually have the road bed and curves in condition for fast train service.

Petoskey Record: The personal attacks made upon C. S. Hampton in the Democrat caucus of Bear Creek last Friday by old party leaders like H. O. Rose their open repudiation of him as a Democrat "except for plunder," and the resolution of the county convention directing the official party publications to be made in the Artesian Well, means that the Democrats propose to read Mr. Hampton and his paper out of the party.

Boyne Falls Notes: A somewhat comical feature of the railroad disasters of the past week was a car load of flour consigned to Dublin, Ireland, from Minneapolis. The car was left on the siding here nearly 30 days ago on account of broken trucks. The car repairer had made an effort to repair it several times and just succeeded the day previous to the wreck here. It was pulled out that night only to be wrecked and rolled over into the ditch and this four for the Dublin market had to be transferred to another car, but it is at last trundling its way again toward the Emerald Isles.

The peninsular fish company, of Detroit, has acquired by purchase nearly all the land surrounding Whitefish lake, Mackinac county. The lake is from six to seven miles long, by one and one-half to two miles wide. The water is very pure and weed, and admirably adapted to fish culture. The Company is planting 1,000,000 young whitefish in it annually, and now has a bill pending in the state legislature permitting the use of seine fishing in certain cases, in certain inland lakes. The gist of the matter is that Detroit capital has started a big fish farm in Mackinac county, and will soon be able to ship fish in enormous quantities.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

We want that telephone. Don't you forget us.

Joseph Hyland raised the two big stacks on the Nash mill last Thursday, and they are up in great shape.

A. J. Taylor is through with his job on section 23, having put in a million feet of logs at the Nash mill.

Mrs. Dunlap, wife of the station agent, is here on a visit, and will stay if they can get a house.

The two "Wills" had a hard time getting back from Norwood Monday morning, having to shovel snow nearly all the way. They think they will get a "winter girl" over here and avoid these stormy trips.

We learn that efforts are being made to get the telephone into Central Lake this spring. Ellsworth citizens should not be behind in this matter but should take hold of it at once, see Dr. Crosby at Charlevoix, and get it here. We want it.

We would suggest that the young men of Ellsworth form a gun club. There are several sportsmen around here, and we think they are of the sort to make a success of it. Get together and talk it over.

Nothing has yet been done about a public school started here in the spring, and it is time there was something done about it. If you will look into the matter you will find that the surest and quickest way is to simply change the site of the school house and in that way we get the public school here next term.

EVE'S FORBIDDEN FRUIT.

The Double Cocoanut Successfully Grown at Kew.

After many attempts the remarkable palm trees known as coco de mer, or double cocoanut, has at last become firmly established in the Royal Gardens, Kew. The coco de mer has a peculiar way of its own when it decides to grow. Most plants are content to spring straight up from their seeds. Not so this one, however. Its huge fibrous fruits, fourteen inches and more in length, require very careful manipulation to induce them to sprout at one end. When this takes place, the growing shoot must be tempted to attach itself to the soil, sometimes at a distance of two or three feet, before the leaves will develop.

The double cocoanut possesses charms for more people than the gardener or the botanist, and this being so it is not surprising to find that the late General Gordon became deeply interested in it. Indeed, judging from the numerous sketches he has left behind of the tree, its fruits, &c., and the many remarks he made concerning them, his interest was more than passing. He appears to have studied everything in connection with the coco de mer, and he is somewhat remarkable to find that he regarded it as the tree which bore the "Forbidden Fruit" in the Garden of Eden. Whether it grew in the Garden of Eden or not is difficult to say.

At any rate, its native home—the Seychelle Islands, to the northeast of Madagascar—is at present somewhat remote from the spot reputed to have been occupied by Adam and Eve.

The large fruits which look like two ordinary cocoanuts fused together—hence the name "double cocoanut"—have been known about 150 years, and many are the legends among the natives of the East concerning their origin. The fruits were usually found floating in the sea, and the Malay and Chinese sailors used to say that they grew on a tree at the bottom of the ocean.

SOMETHING NEW.

A Chicken's Leg and an Egg Shell Combined as an Ornament.

The latest object which the decorative craze has attached is the unassuming leg of a chicken, and a newly killed chicken at that. The first step in the transformation is to pull up the tendons in the chicken's leg, so making the claw almost flat. The tendons at the top of the leg with a piece of fine wire and then twist the wire in and out around them so that a sort of cup shape is formed. Take an egg, polish a hole in it, and pour its contents out; then break off the top. Over the chicken leg and claw with bronze paint and gild the egg. Fill this with matches, and there you have a match case which will rival all others in oddity of design and peculiar origin. If there is any trouble to make the match case stand up with proper dignity, this may be obviated by twisting fine wire to join out the toes of the claw until a round mat is formed. This should, of course, be gilded.

GRANDMOTHER'S RIDE.

The Old Lady Tried to Appear Young, But Received a Setback.

It was useless, not to say impossible, to conceal the fact that the springtime of her life was now a part of the momentary past. Not even the sassy sailor hat with the russet leather strap, not even the $13 worth of blonde bangs could efface the marks which bore evidence to the perennial activity of time's imperturbed fingers, yet she assumed an air of juvenil vivacity and spoke with a well-rehearsed lisp that never failed except when she was really in earnest.

She was admiring the whole car full of passengers with her artless chatter, occasionally directed to a companion much her junior, and was apparently enjoying the attention she attracted.

At State street a stout young woman with a florid face boarded the car and sat down near the door. A moment later she sighted the elderly party, and with a glad cry sprang forward exclaiming:

"Oh, mother! I was just going up to the house to see you. Both Sister Sue's babies are down with the measles, and—"

She caught the expression of painful regret of her mother's face and desisted, but not before the above mentioned exposition had become sadly mixed with a blush that was quite generally accepted as genuine.

Good Manners at Home.

The presence of good manners is nowhere more effective than in the household, and, perhaps, nowhere more rare. Whenever familiarity exists there is a tendency to loosen the check upon selfish conduct, which the presence of strangers invariably produces. Many persons who are kind and courteous in company are rude and careless with those they love best. Emerson says: "Good manners are made up of petty sacrifices," and certainly a thing can more thoroughly secure the harmony and peace of the family circle than the habit of making sacrifices for one another. Children thus learn good manners in the best and most natural way, and habits thus acquired will never leave them. Courtesy and kindness will never lose the power of their charm, while all spurious imitations of them are to be despised.

Wonderful Things in Heredity.

It is a fact well established by students of heredity that children are apt to inherit not only the physical, mental and moral traits of their parents, but to be influenced by their ages as well. Children born of very young fathers and mothers never attain so vigorous a growth of mind or body as those of older men and women, while the children of old people are born old. One of the most surprising cases in medical history is that of Margaretha Gelleweirs, who died in 1845 aged 108 years. When 94 she was married to a man aged 105. Three children came of this union, but they had gray hair, no teeth, were stooped, yellow and wrinkled, decrepit in movement, and could eat only bread and vegetables.

—Tom. Nowland has been appointed engineer of the tug Higgie; Cliff Dapinaw goes in the Crystal. Chief Engineer Sinclair, of the Cannonball fleet is overhauling all the tugs. The keel for the 110 foot lengthening, of the steamer Gordon is in, and the ribs are going in.

—The whistle at the water-works has been experimented on to improve its sound and Superintendent Gould announces that every day at noon, standard time, it will give one long blast, until the people are satisfied that it will do for a fire alarm. The Germans are requested at the blowing of a fire alarm to wait until the wind is blown to avoid confusion.

—The Democrat says we were requested to say nothing about the transfer-dock scheme. That is not true. No such request was made. Consent was given for the publication, and it was indorsed afterwards by Mr. Mooch himself. The Democrat selects very small matters from which to make capital, and this is one of the smallest. But, like Mercutio's wound, 'twill serve.

—The Democrat, in referring to the communication on the electric light question in the last issue of this paper, says "it was doubtless from Mr. Smith's own pen." In the discussion of any question the Sentinel is not given to hiding itself in any hole of that sort. It is not, and never was, afraid to express its opinions on any local question, and never will be. Whatever else may be said of the editor of this paper, he is not a coward.

—If the people of Charlevoix feel that they must spend more money on public improvements, sewerage should receive their attention. It would be a wise sanitary measure, and, considered as a luxury, would discount electric lights. Household conveniences afforded by sewerage would be of the truly enjoyable sort. But, you see, the editor of the Democrat and his neighbors are already supplied with that luxury at small expense.

Regarding the Fisheries.

G. C. Kiken returned from Lansing last week, where he went to look after fishing legislation, and to assist in the organization of the Michigan Fisheries Association.

These fishermen believe that the present depletion of fisheries should be arrested, and dealing to protect and perpetuate the industry the above organization was effected. The members pledge themselves to secure and aid in the enforcement of law which will secure the end desired. The association agreed upon amendments to the general fish law which were presented to the senate and house committees. The amendments do not disturb the present law relative to the size of the mesh of any net, but make it unlawful for anyone to catch, have in his possession or offer for sale any dressed white fish weighing less than one and one quarter pounds; trout, less than one pound, or any pickerel, bass or pike less than one pound. They also provide that every fisherman on any of the great lakes shall during the spawning season take the eggs from the female trout while alive and the milk from the male trout, and after mixing them in a pail, as prescribed by the state fish commission, immediately cast them back in the water, or the fish commission can take them for artificial propagation if it so decides. The proper officials are empowered to seize and destroy illegal nets and other devices. Officers of the association were elected as follows: President, A. Booth, president of the A. Booth Packing Company, Chicago; secretary and treasurer, Ralph Connable, Jr., of the Connable Fishing Company, Petoskey; executive committee, H. Muilenhagen, St. Joseph; G. C. Gerken, Charlevoix; Edward Coffee, Whitefish Point; John Parker, Marquette; H. A. Benson, West Bay City; Casper Alpiarn, Alpena; A. W. Sulkirk Port Huron; J. B. Dewey, Monroe.

The Democratic convention to nominate a Judge for the judicial circuit embracing the counties of Emmet, Cheboygan, Mackinac and Manistee, was held last week at Cheboygan and nominated James J. Brown, of St. Ignace.

Hon. Chas. J. Dalthorp, of Petoskey, who has been Judge for a fractional term, was a candidate for renomination. He is an honor to the legal profession, an honor to the bench, and a gentleman, and deserved a re-nomination. But—

Tax Titles Under the New Law.

From Antrim Appeal.

The question of tax titles is one that many people are interested in, especially so since it has become known that a syndicate has been organized in this state which stands ready to buy claims of this kind. In Muskegon no little alarm has already been exhibited by the operations of the syndicate.

To illustrate how tax titles are acquired under the new law the following example is given: Suppose that in December of 1892 a man failed to pay his taxes and did not do so until the City treasurer made his return to the county treasurer in Feb. of 1893. The property upon which the tax was remaining unpaid would be advertised for sale in July of 1894 and sold in May, 1895, to whoever wished to purchase. Under the new tax titles law the man would have a year from the 30th day of Sep. following in which to redeem the land and if not done within that time whoever had purchased the tax title the preceding May would have a perfect title. It should be borne in mind that any time previous to the sale of land in May, 1895, the man could call upon the county treasurer and pay the tax together with interest on the same which is filled at the exorbitant sum of 1 per cent a month with an addition of 1 cent as a collection fee of the county treasurer. At any time within one year from the 30th day of Sep. from the sale of lands should the man wish to redeem the same he would in addition to the expense heretofore mentioned, be obliged to pay interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month from the time of the sale to the redemption. The law provides that a personal notice of sale of property is not necessary, that the publication of the description for four weeks preceding the sale is sufficient notice to all.

People having property interests would find it much to their interests to occasionally call at the county treasurer's office and see if the taxes on their lands had been paid.

Hayings from Hayes.

James France, of Bay Shore, moved to Petoskey last Monday.

Michael McDermot had to abandon a load of wood on Pine Lake last week. His horses and sled broke through the thin ice, and by throwing off the load and hitching his team to the end of the tongue he managed to get out of the difficulty.

Geo. Saunby spent two or three days last week in the vicinity of Norwood, Inwood and Atwood buying cattle.

Miss Lora Sly, of Bay Shore, is home from Albion College for a short vacation.

Mrs. J. S. Webster went to Alanson Saturday to visit her daughter, Mrs Charles Sheldon, who is ill.

Wm. C. Grandy gets a pension of $12 per month and $125 arrearage.

Fred. and Frank Sneathen have purchased the south-east quarter of section 22, and are lumbering the same.

Meeting a biped in an uproarous condition the other day, we stopped to inquire the cause of so much hilarity, and he informed us he was celebrating George Birthington's Washday, which occurs on the Twenty-second; Secuary, the day every patriot should read the Induration of Declapendence; he was also celebrating the event of Geo. Crossington washing the Delaware. We whipped up our horses and left him.

Death of Countess Ritzeburg.

Bright, winsome little Countess, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Ritzeburg, died last Friday afternoon, aged three years. A contemplation of the sad event will moisten the eye of the most hardened. The little child was the embodiment of loveliness, the idol of the household, and a general favorite. Thus it much sympathy expressed for the bereaved family.

By Capt. Orsland Speck

In passing through a room, between his house and the farm, Squire Condit held his nose called, and came to a stop, but did not look around to see who was addressing him.

Out of the shadows there came a tall figure, straight as an arrow, with a smooth brown face, long black hair, and dressed in the picturesque costume for which the Montauk chiefs or "kinas," as they were called, were distinguished from the days of the Lyon Wyandanch to whom sway all Twin-island and Long Island was then called, was Henry Tuttila.

Tuttila was accosted Squire Condit, by the young chief. Unless a friendly concentration of the great Wyandanch and now the tribe of the Unmasts, the Montauks, and their ancient mortal, the Pequots.

"What you, Pacan?" said the Squire with pretended surprise, and his eyes fixed on the long pipe which the young man held in his right hand like a spear.

"Is not the season for fishing yet, and has not the corn-planting been over?"

"My white brother speaks truly, but Unsas knows his people, the children, planters of his tribe," said the young chief, drawing himself proudly up.

"Then why are you armed—there is no game, neither bear nor wolf," said the Squire, his eyes now on the loaded cross bolts that appeared in the silver powder horn and linked bullet pouch.

"It has ever been the duty of our chiefs to carry arms when paying visits to other tribes, and the white chiefs do the same. I was not asked to the feast given to our young men, when they returned from sailing over the mighty waters."

"Do not doubt that you did not want me," said Henry, raising his arm to retain the Squire, who was about to depart. "You found Ralph Dunham, your stepfather, and I would quarrel again—the best friends quarrel so."

"I log to assure you that you are mistaken, Sachem Dunham adopted you, and I am sure he has forgotten the words that passed between you, when he laughed you were disrobing, and stamping, and shouting, like a wild man, because he saw if he got out the trail you would go to his ship now, he will give you a rope's end, and you will wave frolicsome of the province," said the Squire, watching the strong, expressive face and seeing in the dark eyes a light that made him feel uneasy.

"You would not tell on me what you do not believe true, but I have my own thoughts. I am going on my way to the chief, adieu."

"Do not depart on my account, Pacan," said the young man, with a smile.

"When did you meet captain Fox?"

"Yesterday. He is one of his officers visited us, he was a Frenchman, I had a pistol, and I received them with a frank and generous hospitality, the president, rest in peace the traitor."

"I hope the foreign good things, he gave you, were good ones, and that you did not drink too much of his wine, and that it is better that we shun and meet again."

Unsas turned and strode away before the squire, who was startled by his manner, could say another word.

Thus ended the visit of his all officers gave an entertainment on board the Wanderer, and to it were invited all the chiefs and pretty maidens for miles around, the officers of the Black Hawk included.

The decks were cleared for dancing, and swinging were arranged over the lower deck. The rigging was hidden by flags, streamers and shields of brilliant coloring.

The cabin stops put in order for the ladies, many of the mirrors being removed, and made ready for dancing, the arrangement of those that were left, formal sanitiles were removed and brought from the shore and displayed with a fine sense of effect, the great and sandstone being transformed into bank of violets, above which hung in frames, bound cages sang.

The cook's tents in their best dress, and the tents thus were to transport native were rolled with sweetness and illaes, so that they looked like the flower island of the Ocean.

There was no need to bring musicians from the shore, for among the crew of the Sea Hawk a band was made up that was something of a rival to the celebrated orchestra of the Black Hawk, and to which the officers danced with pride, with the musicians, were the very pretty ones of instrumental music.

In order to accommodate the large company, Captain Duncan, at the polite request of Captain Fox, sent his own boats, as well as small, to aid in ferrying the guests to the Wanderer.

Many a pleasant one was indulged in by the crews, as they dashed leaft and right between the ship and shore. Not a man at oar or helm dreamt that this strange gathering was the prelude of hate, when the crews with arms lashed with the oars, gripped gun and hurl the iron bolts of death at each other, or spread, hurling pike or cutlass in hand, into the rigging of the rival, for leave the ship alive, but gain victory to one or the other.

No wonder that Captain Fox became at ease when his officers, his wife, being now his husband—his culture and his manners, his wealth displayed on board the Wanderer, and his ability and the respect and admiration of prominent people of the province, and the friendship of the Indian chiefs.

The entertainment was perfect. The dancers were served on dishes of silver and gold—were fit for the queen and royal household.

There was not a jar from first to last. Every young lady believed that Captain Fox spoke a little more to her than to any other, and was more attentive than he did any other, and this proved that he was gifted in no common way with the very rare gift of being able to entertain.

He led the dance with Lou Holgate, and he found frequent occasions to drop a complimentary phrase into her ear afterward, but even the most observant could not conceive this into anything.

Under auspices of swinging lamps, the young people danced, and sat and talk, side in the main cabin, and the gentlemen discussed wines of rare vintage, or gave their opinions on the weather, tempered by courtesy, as the ladies, or some of them, were given their choice, causing a slight spice between the cabins and "Fo."

"Fo" is a word in the Indian language—figures that took up part in the dancing—were Unsas and his sister Cutilla, or "The Princess," as she was generally called.

Cutilla was a strikingly graceful girl, with a lighter complexion than her brother, for the carmine of youthful health shone through her cool bell cheeks. Under the glow of the colored lamps, she looked more radiant than the white girls, who might be called the "daughters of the sun," while she was the daughter of night, the more brilliant for the darkness that surrounded her.

Nor was Tuttila neglected by the others. Though she did not dance, she pronounced with noisy of them, talking freely, and even gay, for, in her simple, unaffected way.

Not a word was for Captain Ralph Dunham was an old story to the settlements, a topic on which the gossipers were always sure to tail back when all others were exhausted.

She at first could see no wrong in her preference, and it was only when she began to feel that her love was not returned that she drew back and took on that reserve which distinguishes her race, and which the writers, for the want of a better name, call "stoical."

Tonight, Ralph Dunham gave more heed to the guests, he promenaded with Cutilla again and again, only yielding her arm to some other with courtesy required. It was he who took her to supper, and he was the time for departure came, all too soon, it was Ralph Dunham who took the princess home to his own cutter, and rowed her for six miles to the little cove on whose sandy shore was the dwelling of herself and brother.

Cutilla bade Ralph good-night and retired to the light that sparkled their abode, and Captain Dunham rowed back to the other side of the beach, when he moored his cutter in the shadow of the Wanderer, ran into the moonlight, and called out:

"Ralph Dunham, Ralph Dunham, lazy Jack!"

"Have care of what, Dinah?" asked Ralph, who, since his first knowledge of the old woman, had always treated her respectfully, and required his sailors and other youths showed a disposition to among her, he would bounce her on plon, and still his companions, by threatening to do so, if she did not.

"Have keer of de wind!" croaked the old woman.

"At what well, Dinah?"

"Be there much one here?"

"One, Cap'n Ralph! Ha, ha, ha! Wy, dat's a gal jump on see, an jump yonder and tink it's on'y a flock. Keep a watch on you dose w'ile dat wind blow de great deep. He wetres le wife on red. HAUNTED BY A FACE.

See Constantly a Woman Who Is Its Intended Victim.

George A. Wright, who is believed to have come from Staten Island, attempted to commit suicide in a New York lodging-house the other morning, because he was haunted, he said, by the face of a woman who was invisible to all others.

Wright, who was well dressed and respectable in appearance, went to the lodging house at No. 134 Park row, Thursday night, and registered as "O. Brewster, city." Friday noon he returned to the house, after being out all morning, and then began a course of conduct that greatly annoyed and surprised the other inmates.

Going to the sitting room of the place and walking up and down the room, saying nothing, he muttered to himself and constantly cast furtive glances toward a particular door of the room. This he kept up far into the night, until all the lodgers had retired except one. Stopping abruptly before this man he said firmly:

"Call that lady there. I want to speak to her."

The lodger saw no one to call, however. All sight the footsteps of the haunted man could be heard as he walked up and down restlessly. At a few minutes after 1 the stranger turned toward John Larry, the clerk, who had come down, and Larry was horrified to see blood spurting from the stranger's throat. Wright stepped up and handed him a blood-stained pocketknife. The clerk reported the case to the police and Wright was arrested and sent to Bellevue hospital for treatment.

A Marble Piece 4,000 Years Old.

It is seldom that wood which was grown more than 4,000 years before the Christian era is used in the construction of a present-day residence, and yet this really happened recently in Edinburgh, where a mantelpiece was fashioned from wood said to be 4,000 years old. An oak tree was found in a sand-pit at Musselburgh thirteen feet below the surface. Professor Geikie of the geology chair of the university of Edinburgh, after personally examining the strata in which this oak was found, said the tree, which was five feet nine inches in diameter, must be at least 4,000 years old, and described it as a relic of inestimable age. It was in a fine state of preservation, due to the sand, and was easily workable.

A Dilettante Defeated.

Levasseur, the well-known comic singer in Paris, once took part in a charity concert, and after the performance was invited by the promoters to supper along with the rest of the performers. When all were seated at the table Levasseur found under his napkin an Easter egg, out of which was plenty of gold dropped on its being broken. "Ah! I perceive you have got to know that I am fond of boiled eggs," the comedian gaily remarked to his entertainer, "but you are probably not aware that I only eat the white, and must, therefore, ask you to give the yolk to the poor."

THE ROUMANIAN WAY.

How the Telephone Is Managed in That Interesting Country.

The two Roumanian cities, Galatz and Ibarila, on the Danube, were lately connected by telephone, which is, like the telegraph in that country, an institution of the state. Before its opening, an ordinance of the government for its use was published in the official gazette, the principal part of which is as follows:

"A person who wants to have intercourse with another by telephone is bound to notify that person beforehand by letter, telegraph or otherwise."

A Mr. Elir Zaridl, in Ibarila, dealer in produce, was about to close a contract for a supply of barley. He decided, however, to learn beforehand the price of barley quoted at the board of trade in Galatz. For this purpose he went to the telephone office and, after paying the fee, desired to get telephone connection with a Mr. Pastramaki, his correspondent in Galatz.

"Very well; have you informed Mr. Pastramaki?"

"What for? He is in Galatz and the person to whom I want to telephone."

"That would not do, sir. Here is the ordinance. Before you can telephone to him you must inform him beforehand by letter, telegraph or in any other way."

"Nonsense! Is the government crazy? May be they ask me to travel to Galatz and inform him that on a certain day and hour he may be at the telephone office to receive a communication from me?"

"Yes, that would do, too," the official said.

Mr. Elir Zaridl had to give up his barley deal.

FOLLOWED AFTER DEATH.

An Irish Maiden Father Pursues Two Lovers and Kills Himself.

The Maories believed in the immortality of the soul long before the arrival of the missionaries, but the spirit land to which they imagined all men journeyed after death was as grossly material as the "happy hunting grounds" of the North American Indians. Such a legend as the following, which contains an instance of singularly determined parental interference, is sufficient evidence of this.

A young chief of high rank fell in love with a Maori maiden of great beauty but low degree. His father "forbade the banns." Thereupon the usual results followed. The young chief refused to eat and died of hunger. The beautiful maiden, heart-broken at the death of her lover, leaped down from the cliffs into the sea in order that she might follow him.

Now comes the extraordinary part of the story. The chieftain father, hearing of the girl's leap into the sea, rushed to the spot, battle-axe in hand. Using terrible language, he declared that he would prevent the union of the pair in the spirit land, and forthwith himself leaped down to follow them.

A GIGANTIC STORM.

Brings the News of a Famous Disaster on the Indian Ocean.

"The news of a famous disaster on the great Indian ocean was brought to the living by a sea gull," says a writer. "Some years ago the ocean liner Atlantis, plying between Liverpool and Calcutta, was lost in the Indian sea, with all on board perished. At that time I was sailing from London to New South Wales in the fast sail the Indian star. The boat I was on was the Telemachus, a good, sound vessel, and I had an enjoyable trip. While sailing in the Indian sea a sea gull was one day spied, and about its neck was tied a small note, which read:

"Atlantis sinks in the third flash. We are lost. PATRICK DONAHUE."

This remarkable message was all that was ever found. The boat had sailed some five months previous, well stocked with merchandise and passengers and had been duly reported and pronounced seaworthy. It must have been a terrific shock that caused her to sink. But the story is still more strange. Who father Donahue was and how he happened to have a sea gull at hand will always remain a mystery. What wonderful courage he must have had, standing so to did on the brink of eternity and there writing a message to the living. We continued our journey to Sydney, where the note and the sea gull were both delivered to the harbormaster, together with the evidence of the crew. This was afterwards sent to England where the knowledge was distributed. It seems to me that a few such facts as these would serve to build a narrative upon, and you can easily believe that it would be more interesting than fiction."

JUMBO.

There Are Tricks in All Trades But Ours.

Mr. J. H. Gaylord, a well known show agent in America, arrived lately in Hong Kong with a collection of wild animals intended for exhibition in Chinese during the world's fair. Mr. Gaylord told a newspaper man at Hong Kong these stories about Hong-nose and Jumbo:

To create a sensation Barnum gave $5,000 to raise an action with the alleged purpose to interdict the departure from England of the famous elephant. The suit being entered, representatives of American papers in London began to exhibit columns of news about Jumbo. The fever spread. Jumbo's keeper, Scott, was secured for $5,000 a year, and preparations for the shipment were drawn out as much as possible. A demonstration over his departure was devised. Scott had a sign which the elephant knew to mean "the down." It was arranged that when he was to be taken from the goodsen Scott should make this signal and the people would believe that Jumbo was unwilling to leave Alice. The trick worked beautifully. The streets were crowded with thousands of people. Jumbo lay down and refused to budge. All the while the wires were flashing the news to America, and the American papers had headlines: "Jumbo refuses to leave Alice," and a lot of rot of the same kind. When the force had gone on long enough Jumbo was taken on the car as quietly as a lamb.

MADDENED BY FOOD.

Insane Freaks of Animal Fiend Upon a Kentucky Jail.

Thomas Odell, a young man of 22 years, living seven miles back of Greenup, Ky., has met death in a strange manner. He had been a puzzle to physicians for several years. He was affected by what he ate to such an extent that when he indulged in food eating about an hour afterward he would become restless and wander on in search of eatige and bellow as an ox, with his head get down on his hands and eat grass like a cow. When he performed of such his actions were those of a slave, and he lived relatively a great like a lamb. When he ate chicken he would go out and scratch for worms which he would devour with apparent relish.

After eating fish he would wander to the creek and go in swimming. Lately his father killed several squirrels of which the son ate heartily for dinner. He left the house shortly after and was followed by the father. The latter saw him entering an oak tree, and soon saw his son jumping nimbly from limb to limb in the same place barking like a squirrel. He called for him to come down, but this only seemed to make the boy want to escape, and he attempted to jump from a tree to another, but missed and fell to the ground, a mangled, breathless mass of humanity, and expired in less than five minutes.

A Mistaken Inscription.

A friend of mine in a Pennsylvania town recently celebrated the day that married life, and the occasion was marked by a large coffee set, but imagine his chagrin to see engraved on the silver these words: "To Mrs. ——, on the anniversary of her 25th wedding.

Englishmen Known to Frenchmen.

The only Englishmen that are known to the French people generally, it has been said in a journal way, are Robinson Crusoe and the pupils of Mr. Cafe Robinson, restaurants built in Paris, are among the latest Parisian fads. They take their name, of course, from Robinson Crusoe.

Thirteen.

There are thirteen stars, thirteen letters in the scroll held in the eagle's beak, thirteen martial feathers in each wing, thirteen tail feathers, thirteen parallel lines in the shield, thirteen horizontal bars, thirteen arrow heads in one foot, and thirteen letters in the words "quarter dollar."

VERY DESPERATE:

An Alligator Makes Out a Lunch on Millinery.

Alligators can go a long way without eating, but when they do get a chance at what is called a square meal they make short work of it. It doesn't seem to matter much to the alligator what the square meal consists of so long as he can gulf down. Anything that he can devour without hurting his teeth or unduly stretching his swallow-hole apparatus is food for him.

A number of people visiting the Zoo in Central park, New York, were gathered about the alligators' tank, watching the reptiles disgorting themselves in the water. Suddenly a good of wind caught the broad-brimmed hat of a young girl in the watching crowd, whisked it off her head and landed it on the edge of the tank.

Before it could be recovered one of the alligators caught sight of it, his attention was attracted, no doubt, by the beautiful artificial roses with which it was trimmed. He paused as if rapt in admiration for an instant. His jaws slowly opened and then closed with a snap over the hat, which disappeared down the creature's throat—all except a single rose, which, however, did not escape, for in a moment the alligator's eye rested upon it, and it as quickly followed the rest of the hat into the creature's capacious interior. Then the alligator winked his other eye, as much as to say: "That was fine. Give me a dozen more." Every one enjoyed the spectacle except the young girl who lost the hat, who is still, as she was then, undeceived of the opinion that alligators are very impolite creatures, whatever other virtues they may possess.

CARE OF THE PIANO.

If You Happen to Have One, This Is How to Treat It.

A skilled pianist never allows his valued instrument to stand up against the wall in his room, a space at least a foot being allowed, says a music dealer. This is to prevent damp and mildew, and also to allow a free passage of dry, warm air. The precaution is especially necessary in a brick house where the wall is an outside one. Bricks are anything but damp-proof, and unless the wall is lined with felt, there will be considerable dampness, especially when the first fire is lighted for the fall. Dampness is fatal to a piano, because, among other reasons, the rosewood used in making the frame is tropical wood, and not capable of resisting moisture for any length of time.

In a carelessly kept piano the polish is dull, and the varnish looks as though an army of insects had been at work on it. This is because the wood has stretched and shrunk with great rapidity, owing to getting damp and then being dried again, and a musician seldom cares to buy such an instrument, knowing that the delicate interior has suffered at least to some extent with the exterior. Taking care of a piano is half the battle, and the less dampness the less expenditure necessary to keep it in tune.

A GIANT TIMEPIECE.

The Wonderful Clock That Ornaments Philadelphia's Town Hall.

The greatest horological wonder in the world today is the gigantic clock in the tower of the massive "public building" at Philadelphia. When everything is in running order this marvel of the clockmaker's art will be stationed a distance of 315 feet from the pavement; its bell weighs between 20,000 and 25,000 pounds, and is the second largest bell of any kind in America, the great bell at Montreal being the largest, weighing 28,000 pounds. The dial of this Philadelphia clock is twenty-five feet in diameter, and the striking hammer is as large as a pile-driver weight. The minute hand is twelve and the hour hand nine feet in length. The machinery is arranged so that the clock will strike every fifteen minutes, the quarter, half, three-quarters and hours. The Roman numerals on the face are each two feet eight inches in length, the dark part of the letters being three and three-fourth inches in width. As it is a duty part of the position to talk of winding such a monster by hand, a three-horse power engine has been placed at the square of the tower for that especial purpose.

A Home-Made Turkish Bath.

Any one can fix up a Turkish or vapor bath in his own bedroom at little or no expense. A wood-seated chair can be placed over a tub of boiling water, and the bather has only to sit on the chair and cover himself from his shoulders downward with a heavy blanket to get a first-class vapor bath. Some people vary the arrangement by putting lay into the tub as well as the boiling water, but this is unnecessary and only adds to the trouble and mess. The same precautions are needed against taking cold as with a regular Turkish bath, with the advantage in favor of the home affair that you can get into bed without having to go out of doors after getting overheated. The simple bath as described will cure rheumatism and sprains as well as reduce weight to an appreciable extent.

Blackbeard's Castle.

Few are aware of the existence of the veritable Blackbeard's castle. Yet a recent writer assures us that this is located situated a mile or two beyond Interlaken, on a lonely, well-shaded mountain road. Upon looking up the wooded hillside, just at a bend in the lane, one sees the ruins of an old castle. Only moss-covered walls now remain, which are the haunts of bats, birds, and insects, but its stately columns impress its early grandeur. Many doubt that such a character as Blackbeard ever lived, but in that portion of the world the story is believed and told by the natives, until one fancies he sees Fritzen's ghost at the tower window, anxiously awaiting some sign of her husband.

ABOUT WINTER WHEAT.

CONDITION OF THE CROP THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY.

Mr. Cleveland Makes Public the Notes of His Cabinet Officers—Fatal Railroad Wreck in Pinkerton—Severe Snow Storm in New England.

Told To a Few Words.

—Reports to the Bureau which, as received by the Farmer's Review, shows that in most of the States a critical point has been reached, and on the next few weeks will depend the future of the crop. In Illinois, Indiana, and Kentucky there has been so much freezing and thawing, alternating with ice and snow, that many of the correspondents confess themselves at this time unable to tell the exact condition of the plant. In other more than half of the correspondents report the condition as good, and cold of the remainder report fair. A very few report the condition as bad or doubtful. In some of the counties that report the condition as good the plant had made but small growth when it went into winter quarters, but as it has been covered with a good blanket of snow all winter it is at present in good condition for an early spring start. Altogether the outlook in this State is better than noted of the wheat States in the West. In Michigan the ground is covered with snow to such a depth that little can be told concerning the condition of wheat. It is known that on many of the best farms, especially on the low lands, ice has formed under the snow and that damage is already certain to result. Besides into the condition had fall was not good to reduce about the on account of the late sowing and the ravages of the Hessian fly. In Ohio wheat is few of the correspondents report winter in good condition. Some report fair, and most report the condition as bad or doubtful. In Kansas and Nebraska the general outlook seems to be good, but there is no such unanimity of opinion as that it will require a few days of warm weather to reveal the true condition. In Iowa the fields are still covered with the snow to a depth that is in places quite deep, but the danger is not regarded as great, but the danger is true of the wheat now nothing. The outlook is true of the wheat in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

—Mr. Cleveland's cabinet is now complete. The President-elect has announced that he has selected Richard Olney of Massachusetts, to be his Attorney General, and Col. Hilary A. Herbert, of Alabama, to be Secretary of the Navy. This is the official announcement: Secretary of State, Walter Q. Gresham; of Illinois; secretary of the Treasury, John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky; Postmaster General, Wilson S. Bissell, of New York; secretary of War, Daniel S. Lamont, of New York; Secretary of the Navy, Hilary A. Herbert, of Alabama; Attorney General, Richard Olney, of Massachusetts; secretary of the Interior, Hoke Smith, of Georgia; Secretary of Agriculture, J. Sterling Morton, of Nebraska. This gives the South three representatives, the Pacific Coast two, the West two and New England one.

—The Southern express on the Pennsylvania road collided with the Morton accommodation train near South Street station, West Philadelphia. Three cars of the accommodation train were wrecked. A minor gathered with circulation that the wreck was fatal to President Harrison from Washington to New York, was one of the rumors in circulation. This, however, was in the leader of a gang that have been operating several robberies in Alabama during the last year.

—Two freight trains bound east on the Pinkberg Railroad collided near Athol, Mass. The locomotive of the second train ground the caboose of the first train on a steep downgrade. George Taylor and Joseph Martin were instantly killed and Conductor Seely was badly hurt.

PERSONAL MENTION.

FOREIGN.

—A large number of fires have been lost owing to deadly gases in the fire-damp mines, and other mines. Among the lead mines are situated at Alamarrion, Spain, and at Leadville, Colorado, and have been worked for centuries. The work was begun under the energy recently, and it is claimed that sufficient precautions have been taken to prevent the accident, before the miners were aware of their danger they were overcome. On board the Norwegian steamer Thorwaldsen, which left Copenhagen, and the crew were engaged in the fire-damp, the decks and works were so bright and colors as a parlor. Soon the women and children were dropped with fright and fainting, at the approach of the explosion. Mr. Cleveland's cabinet officers, at the request of the President, commissioned prepared for the President. As the cabinet goes active each cabinet officer will announce of the occasion, on a form was printed the records made by the New York showing but to be the fastest a steamship time allowed with the exception that of his consort, the City of Paris. The New York's time covered 5-5 days 19 hours and 57 minutes. Sin is 137 feet long and 63 in breadth, and her boiler power is 10,000 the distance is 19,000, and she has averaged 19 12 miles an hour. She is a twin screw steamer.

—Professor Wiggins contains that the very cold of the present winter was caused by the sun spots, and that Mars is Jupiter.

—At Liberal, Kan., John Dakota, a lively town, was Dorothy, based with virtual thieves who are in the employ of Mrs. Hermann Kroeberg. Dakota is the fashionable resort, and is associated with that of Mrs. Kroeberg, who is a notorious "dive" keeper, and the doctors think they may save his life.

—According to a dispatch Republican and Democratic members of the Kansas legislature have great "fraternized" to elect D. F. Waggoner, a Democrat, United States Senator. The Republicans express themselves as willing to vote for any Democrat, as identified with the Populists.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—In a gasoline battle between Scandinavian and Hungarian employes on the Lake Shore railroad, Chicago, scores of laborers were injured, and in the end the fire in close six stalwart men were lodged in jail at Hunkidoria, Ala., charged with robbing an express train on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia, near Piedmont, Ala., on Wednesday last October. The whole apparatus will be so arranged that visitors may freely circumlocute, sign the building and see just how the various methods of ice production are carried on. One will pass through a highly arched and many-columned doorway into a circular gallery looking down upon a 500-horse power steam plant—the only steam plant on the grounds. It will furnish the power for the large elevators placed in each end of the building, for the lesdeed-lighting apparatus and the dynamos for the arc and incandescent lights. Passing on the visitor will come upon to the left. Here may be seen the fish workings of an ice plant with a capacity of 165 tons a day. Passing on the visitor will come to a refrigerating storage-room of 2,000 tons of ice. The ice-making machinery is a system now known universally as "insulated." It is composed of alternate layers of heavy paper and cleated boards, with a double air space between, forming each room run the walls of pipe by means of which the rooms are cooled. Each room is supplied with an automatically acting thermostat, which keeps a thoroughly ventilated and preserves a uniform temperature of any degree required.

WOODEN TRUCK WAGON AT THE GARDENS

The Illinois Building

The work of construction on the Illinois building is complete, and the chiefly following decorators will soon have finished their task. The building presents a very handsome appearance from within and without.

The main floor is once more strewn with drawings and bits of wood left by the carpenters who have moved in to begin the work of fitting up the exhibits. The Illinois State Commission has opened up offices in the building, where the work of action is being entered and a large pile of inquiries from the foreign visitors. Among the complaints of a set of shovels before their complete installation. Each variety of wood is to be shown, with the lacquering on one side, the other side will be cut and planed in such a way as to show the longitudinal, cross and oblique sections.

In the south end of the building, in what will be used as the kindergarten, may be found a rosy-cheeked Wheaton girl shaved to a certain entirely. Her name is Miss Ella Ellis, the daughter of her state. The fair sculptor is Miss Nellie Ramsonte Mann, whose peculiar talent was fortunately brought to the consideration of the State Fair Commission, who immediately gave Miss Ethlann nation her prize winning figure stands in repose, lightly leaning on a tree trunk, and resembling Rembrandt. The figure is 5 feet 6 inches in height, and is shown in the week of an eagle perched on the trunk of a tree. Under the protecting outspread wing, grace spread with a Cupid, the God of right-hand guidance, by the folds of an American flag.

The Japanese Exhibit.

The Japs have begun work on their pavilion in the Liberal Arts Building. The structure now being erected is of Japanese architecture, and is a pretty and handsome affair. It is composed of a central and two subsidiary buildings, with tiled roofs, curved like Chinese hat-heads, chairs and a lozenge image for two, and a dozen for the women island their hen-den begins to assume the pagoda-like form of the Horticultural Building the Japanese pavilion will be finished in a few well hop near their rustic bridge. The work casing used is from one of the set Japanese wells, and shows the Japanese method of drawing water. The stone used is a sort of red sandstone, usually mottled together at the four corners.

fiend, who, in the name of charity, tells the blind man to go to the Sherman House, where he will be fed and lodged free of charge. The blind man, who is a Mason, and carried a sacred containing arrides in a case, was led to the place. He carried a stick in order to enable him to feel his way and count his steps. The dog a pump, well-fed, fat-looking fellow, who had no use for sinners, to which a stout and was attached from his back. He was, apparently, in a hurry to do business, for he jagged at the cord vigorously. The man was doubtful about the dog, but concluded that he would look himself and let the dog go. When he discover whether he was coming along or not.

As soon as he got to a door he stopped and listened to the sound. He was at the one on which was pasted the sign, "To the other door," the man would try the knob, and, as soon as the dog saw that his master would not grant, he would immediately move on to the next door. When a door was opened the dog appeared to understand exactly how to transact business. He would pilot his master straight to the office, to the back or front part of the house, stop, and rack up. When anybody bought anything and "broad-day" was said, the dog would wag his tail and look approvingly at his companion. When the "broad-day" was sounded, he would be sure to start exactly when he felt the tug at the cord door. If the animal was not fed and lodged free of charge, the proprietors of a dog go for nothing.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Amusements Were Decorous.

He was a very shabby person indeed. His clothes were of blue miscellaneous patterns, and his hat presented no attempt at description. He had out-Herod'd Herod in the matter of disreputable hat, yet there he was in the front row of the gallery, apparently as much out of place as a stoker in a drawing-room.

No one paid any attention to him, every one knew instinctively that he was evidently that he was a workman or some porter looking for a job or waiting, in fact, but a performer. At last, after he had tipped about for some time, he stood up and leaned the cloak department and presently cause his left an indignant gentleman walker, who called out: "Show this gentleman your business and be done."

"Excuse me, sir," thought you were looking for a civil servant."

"No, miss, seat skin ain't good enough for my little gal, and I guess if there was anything more expensive we pay for it, I'm ready."

Only a little every-day happening, but it illustrates how in that Eleven clothes do not always mean the fastest pocket books.

Not Dangerous Enough.

M. Philip has discovered near the site of Heliopolis, in Egypt, the necropolis used by the Pharaohs, at least, so says M. Grebant, until recently director of the museum at Ghizeh, and now professor at the Sorbonne. Therefore, he will be as Memphis, first formed with it a little city, which, in short order, Memphis was the royal abode, Heliopolis was the priestly capital.

Pessimist Preachers.

A writer says "that the average limit of sustained attention in an audience is about twenty minutes, and that it is very difficult for a speaker to interest his hearers thirty minutes. It was not so in the old days when we had good preachers. It is not so now when an eloquent preacher has a speech to deliver for the average talker, twenty minutes is long enough."

It seems now quite probable that the farce legislature will wind up with a performance of burlesque impeachment. It may be that they will appear on the stage, but it is very doubtful if they will proceed. They would go home first, later the Governor was politely requested by the Sheriff of Shawnee County to keep his hands off. "I wish to inform you, said the Sheriff in the letter, that any action is without my consent." Thinking that an order would be telegraphed him, and that the Shawnee Sheriff simply bluffed to save his office, the Governor has called his force away from the Capitol, and the Sergeant-at-arms, whom they had been laying siege to for days, has left the Capitol, and the Horticultural Building the Japanese pavilion will be finished in a few well hop near their rustic bridge. ADVISES ANNEXATION.

Prominent Harrison's Shadow Commentation to the Senate.

The annexation of the President in transmitting to the Senate the treaty of annexation concluded between Secretary of State Foster and the Commissioners of the provisional government of Hawaii was as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, with a view to the action of the Senate, a treaty of annexation between John W. Foster secretary of State of the United States, and the Commissioners of the Hawaiian Islands, and I call attention to the fact that the government of the United States has recognized the provisional government of the Hawaiian Islands, and has had with the constituted that power of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States. The Hawaiian Government gave consented to the negotiation of a treaty for annexation for the purpose of the United States the effect of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, which have resulted in the declaration of the protectorate of the United States over the Islands, and the establishment of a military post at Honolulu, and the assumption of the duties of a government de facto by the commander of the United States in the Islands, but the Government of the United States has not been in a position to assume the sovereignty of the Islands. It is quite evident that the Islands must be in the hands of a strong government, and that the interests of the people of Hawaii and of the United States will be best subserved by the annexation of the Islands to the United States

The Strap Question.

To the Editor.

Will you kindly allow an old woman to occupy space in the columns of your paper?

An article published in a late issue of your paper, over the signature of Maggie M. Harsha, plainly intimates that the teachers in our public schools use corporal punishment, i. e. —the strap "simply to vent passion or show the child her authority." Now it seems to me, if Mrs. Harsha knew that to be a fact, a wiser and better plan would have been to persuade her husband (he being a member of the school board) to use his influence upon the other gentlemen of the board, and if possible, induce them to at once discharge such teachers, or if she merely suspected them to be actuated by such motives, she might have easily obtained a personal interview, and by the power of love, shown them the better way. By addressing them through the medium of the local paper there is, I think, danger of doing harm just where she would do good, for those parents who think of the teachers as does Mrs. Harsha, will be almost certain to discuss the article in the hearing of their children, who, as she truly says "think" and comprehend their parents criticisms, and go to school filled up with the ideas thus gathered, and as a result, are inattentive, mischievous and unruly, and however wisely or lovingly reproved by the teacher, will be almost certain to think, perhaps say "Ha! I don't care what you say, my ma says you're no good." Parent, however much you may disapprove of the methods used in the public schools, be sure your little ones don't suspect it, or keep them at home. More careless, reckless, shiftless boys are made such by injudicious home government and conversation of parents than we can ever estimate. I think I may safely assert that in these days, no child ever felt the strap, or corporal punishment, whose father and mother invariably spoke approvingly and respectfully of teachers. The work of those at all fit for the place, is no sinecure, at the best, and nothing so tends to render abortive their efforts as unfavorable (and often utterly unjust) criticism at home. As all know the school age is five years, and some of our best minds tell us that the character is formed for good or ill by the seventh or eighth year. Whether that be true or not, when one considers that parents have sole control the first five years and then compasses the number of hours thereafter spent in the school room (subject always to suggestions of father or mother) with the number of hours a child is, or should be, under parental authority, it seems absurd to attribute all the evil a child manifests to the teacher.

I taught, before I married, in graded schools. I loved my work and my pupils. They loved me and knew, when occasionally I resorted to the use of switch or ruler or strap, that I punish—I then because I loved them.

Che- ses to-day, nobly filling positions of honor and trust, at least two men, who, as children, were considered public nuisances, and who dated their first steps toward a useful manhood to my influence as teacher. I once heard a little pupil of mine say to another, (she not knowing that I was near) "when I'm a grown lady, I shall teach,—and exactly as Miss ——— does."

Some of the happiest moments of my later years have been when some old pupils sought me out. I do not write this boastfully, but solely to prove that corporal punishment is not incompatible with love or wise government and good influence.

I taught in a city famed for the excellence of its schools. Among the many teachers were two who never punished corporally. One was a beautiful girl, with a face so sweet one would have thought a smile from her lovely face would soften the most refractory. Her room adjoined my own. On several occasions during the brief time she was retained, when I remained after school hours preparing for the morrow, she, too, remained with some of her boys, "treating them as gentlemen should by treating; appealing to their better natures; telling them to do right because it was right." While she was talking so beautifully, those little miscreants were stamping their feet, whistling, or making some absurd remark in answer to her appeal. The other teacher announced on her first entrance to the school-room that she should never punish, and she was said to be a strict disciplinarian. I was very anxious to meet her and learn her secret; but when I saw her I had no questions to ask, for her countenance was forbidding. I do not recall ever hearing her make a remark that was not hateful in the extreme.

I believe no good mother or teacher is ever angry with a child, and I cannot believe the Charlevoix school board would retain any teacher unless they were sure they never punished in anger. I suppose there are lovely, amiable teachers, who can control forty or more active little fellows, without any form of corporal punishment; there must be such, if, as I am told, Mrs. Harsha does taught; but they are very rare.

No one can deprecate its indiscriminate use, or its use at all, more than I, but I certainly believe there are times and children when nothing else will do so well. Wide-awake, active little fellows, are very forgetful, and and often deliberately naughty and willful, and many, if not all boys, at a certain age, seem to feel ashamed to show that they can be influenced by love, and have very singular ideas as to what constitutes "a gentleman." And then they should find a master or mistress on the spot.

"Whom the Lord loveth He chastens." Then why may not Christian young women chasten in love those in their care?

NOTICE OF ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given to the electors of the Village of Charlevoix, state of Michigan, that an annual village election of said Village will be held at the Village Hall, in said Village, on Monday, the twelfth day of March, A. D. 1893, at which time the following offices shall be elected, to wit: A President, one Trustee, one Clerk, one Treasurer, one Village Assessor, one Street Commissioner, one Constable, one Member of the Board of Commissioners of Charlevoix for the ensuing year (1893), and one (1) Trustee for the term of two (2) years from the ensuing Monday of March, A. D. 1893.

Also notice is hereby given that the propositions to bond said Village of Charlevoix, as adopted at the following propositions, submitted by the Common Council of said Village, to wit:

"Shall the Village of Charlevoix issue bonds to the Common Council of the Village of Charlevoix, and in the name of said Village of Charlevoix, to the amount of Twenty-five thousand dollars, to be used in necessary to defray the expense of the construction of a complete system of electric lights in the Village of Charlevoix, for supplying said Village and the inhabitants thereof, with electric lights and water, as authorized by law?

Resolved, That the question of carrying the issue of bonds for the purpose of building a village hall, as per the proposal published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, of said Village Council, but in no not less than ten years, and that the interest at the rate of five per cent. for the purpose of the construction of a village hall, be submitted to the electors of said Village, for the same to be duly established in the district where the Village of Charlevoix, at the next annual village election, on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1893, and

Resolved, That shall electors voting in favor of said propositions shall be in the majority, which shall be written or printed "for bond to be electric lights," and "for bond for village hall," and those who shall be in the majority against which shall be written or printed "for bonding for electric lights" and "for bonding for village hall."

Resolved, That the clerk of said Village be and is hereby instructed to give notice of the submission of said propositions among the qualified electors of said Village, at said annual village election, in said Village, and

Resolved, That the clerk of said Village of said Village Council, at the annual election to be held in said Village, on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1893, at the Village Hall in said Village, and question of borrowing the sum of Twenty-five thousand dollars upon the bonds of said Village, be issued as specified in said resolution, for the purpose of constructing a village hall, and for the electric lights in said Village, will be submitted to the electors of said Village, to be determined by the ballots of said electors of said Village.

The polls of said election shall be open at 7 o'clock in the forenoon and continue open until five o'clock in the afternoon, under the Registration, in said election, adjourn the polls at 12 o'clock noon for one hour.

Also make my book, 28 the said Village of Charlevoix, this 28th day of February, A. D. 1893.

—D. C. Nettleton was advised by latter last week, that his son Charlie was a victim of cinders in Chicago on the 26th. Three men entered his restaurant when he was alone, one of them knocking him down while the other two robbed the till of $70.

—On Monday W. H. Francis went to Wexford and Manistee counties to look up hoop manufacturing machinery. This spring he will remove his present factory to Lake City, into factory building, enlarge his plant in the line now followed, and add a hoop manufacturing outfit. We understand others are interested with him and that the establishment will be quite extensive.

—Mr. Geo. Bates, the Republican nominee for President is closely connected with and interested in the business interests of Charlevoix. He is one of that class of citizens who think that Charlevoix is a good place to live in and a good place to work for, and he keeps hunking corn right along that line. As President of Charlevoix he won't permit any neglecting in public affairs if he can help it. He is not afraid to speak his mind, or to oppose any measure that does not appear to him to be for the best interests of town. He will make no mistake in voting for George.

—Already certain of our friends the enemy are criticising the candidates on the Republican Village tickets. We hear that Mr. J. W. Harris is "in railroad work," and that in the event of certain contingencies, would favor the railroad company. Mr. Harris was for some time in the employ of the railroad company. He rendered them service for which he received his pay, the same as the Charlevoix Lumber Co. did when they sold the lumber for the depot. Mr. Harris' relations with the railroad company were entirely severed the first of last December, and he is now a Charlevoix business man.

The Transfer Dock.

The transfer dock scheme, of which we spoke some time ago, has resulted successfully, and the big dock is a foregone conclusion.

Last week the parties elected a five years lease, with the privilege of ten years, of 2,000 feet frontage on Pine Lake. The property is north of the railroad dock, and embraces all that owned by the Fox estate, and lot owned by the Township.

The dock will be about 35 feet deep, and cover the entire lake frontage of the property. The C. & W. M. Ry. Co. are to build a side track, which will run out upon the dock, its entire length, with piling room on either side.

The projectors of this important enterprise are G. V. Nash, of Ellsworth, and Cameron Bros., of Central Lake. The latter firm also have a mill at Snowflake. The out of these three mills will be fully 10,000,000 feet per annum, most of which, with the slabs, will come to this dock. But the place of the Michigan is to load dock room to other mills along the line of the road, and it is estimated that considerably more than 10,000,000 feet of lumber will come to Pine Lake by rail. At a rough estimate, this output will make fifty cargoes.

Work will be commenced on the dock at once.

A Bad Runaway.

Bridge street was the scene of a bad runaway on Tuesday afternoon. Andrew Ross, son of A. M. Ross, had started with a double rig from one of the livery stables, for the Cunningham funeral. The team became frightened, and started toward the bridge at a runaway gait. Ross, who had lost the lines, jumped out in front of Mason & Berdan's store, breaking both bones of his right leg, below the knee. The team crossed the bridge and at the hill met Mrs. D. W. Meech and Mrs. E. G. Harris coming down the hill toward the bridge in a cutter. The stampeded animals went entirely over the cutter containing the ladies, and those who witnessed the affair express their surprise that they were not killed.

Both ladies were picked up insensible, taken home and a doctor summoned. Both received bad bruises, but nothing that will result seriously.

The Republican Village Ticket

The Republican caucus last Monday evening was largely attended and enthusiastic. The following excellent ticket was placed in nomination:

President—Geo. Bates.
Trustees—J. W. Harris, G. C. Gelkes, Jos. Sherman.
Clerk—Horace S. Harsha.
Treasurer—Frank G. Hines.
Street Com.—Robert Miller.
Assessor—Henry C. Cooper.
Constable—Thos. Hoak.

Mr. Bates has one term as Trustee, and discharged his duty faithfully. A better nomination could not have been made.

J. W. Harris' popularity is attested by the vote he received at the caucus—practically a unanimous vote. Mr. Harris is a civil engineer of ability, and his judgment will be valuable on the council.

Mr. Gelkes is a good citizen, an extensive property holder, and a conscientious and capable man. As a representative of the marine and fishing interests, his selection was a wise one.

Mr. Stevens is a man of good, sound judgment and thoroughly reliable.

The nominees for Clerk and Treasurer went to the present incumbents. Their record is good.

Supervisor Henry Cooper is also the present assessor, and has given excellent satisfaction.

It is a good ticket, and every man on it will be elected.

Another Old Settler Gone.

On Sunday Thos. Cunningham died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. M. Ross, of this place, of paralysis, aged 87 years.

Mr. Cunningham located in the Township of Marion 21 years ago, but since the death of his wife, several years ago, has lived with his children.

He was the father of Mrs. A. M. Ross, Henry and Thos. Cunningham, of this place, Capt. Edward Cunningham, of Detroit, Mrs. McDaniggan, of Marion, and Mrs. Palmer, of Detroit.

The funeral was from the house Tuesday afternoon, Rev. W. H. Macpherson officiating.

Roscoe L. Corbett for Circuit Judge

After a protracted deadlock between Judge Hanscell, Hon. Fitch H. Williams and Loren Roberts, as candidates for judge at the convention at Belleair last week Roscoe L. Corbett, of Boyne City, was nominated on the 52nd ballot.

From the opening of the canvas it was plainly apparent that the selection of a new man would be the result of this triangular contest. The trend of opinion was toward Hon. H. Leavitt, of Bellaire. Fred W. Mayne of this place, and not a few had their eyes on Mr. Corbett.

While the Sentinel was an earnest supporter of Judge Hanscell, it could not fail to recognize the fact that there was a strong undercurrent of sentiment in favor of the selection of a man outside of Grand Traverse county, which has held the office for 30 years. Therefore, it was safe to assume that if it were not Hanscell it surely could not be Roberts; and Mr. Williams, able and worthy as he was, occupied a position in the fight where neither of the other two would be likely to throw delegates to his support. Hence the outcome was but the inevitable.

But barring, of course, the Sentinel's first choice, the convention could not have done better. The bench of the 13th Circuit will be occupied for the six years beginning Jan. 1894, by a man entirely worthy, and capable.

Roscoe L. Corbett was born in Farmington, Maine 38 years ago. He came to Michigan when a boy of twelve, locating with his parents in the city of Big Rapids, Mecosta Co. In 1879 he was graduated from the high school of that city, and soon after began reading law there. In 1880 he was graduated from the law department of the Michigan University. In 1882 he located at Boyne City, in this county, and began the practice of his profession, and has since that time been recognized as one of the foremost members of the county bar. He was four years prosecuting attorney, and a member of the Board of School Examiners seven years.

Mr. Corbett is a bright and clear headed lawyer; well equipped in legal attainments; personally above reproach; naturally of reserved and modest bearing, but withal, endowed with qualities of manhood that win respect.

Of course Mr. Corbett already is as good as elected. As Judge of the 13th Circuit, he will justify the choice of the convention, and be a credit to the bench, as he has been to the bar.

A Fragrant Atmosphere.

That's what you get in the nose when you enter the extensive hothouses of the Vaughn Floral Co. in this place. A summer atmosphere in the midst of an imported Dakota blizzard, and two your ears begin to thaw the rigidity of one of these mornings, is a fine thing to walk into, but when you add to it the odors of the perfume of thousands of budding plants and the beauty of blended colors, you want to stay right there until the child which this Democratic administration has so intensified passes away, and the snow melts under the wood-pile.

But when you are walking through the avenues of beauty and fragrance, don't harbor the delusion that you are in the conservatory of a gentleman of luxury and leisure. All this outlay is here for "strictly business." While of course it is pleasanter to run a posy-garden twelve months in the year than to shuble around as the rest of us do, and take things as they come, the proprietors are not doing it for fun.

There is no larger variety of begonias in America than that of F. J. Meech & Son. The production of the plant of this beautiful flowering plant constitutes the chief feature of the establishment, and from Massachusetts to Oregon orders come for them. Thirty thousand potted plants are growing in the houses, and fully 20,000 begonia bulbs were sold last year. Hyacinths, callas, and other favorite plants are in profusion, all classified and labeled.

The establishment is composed of three conservatories—20x35, 12x70 and 11x50 feet in size, respectively. The material is on the ground for another house, which will be 20x75, and the stock will be correspondingly increased. Next summer they will give more attention to the production of cut flowers, as they have yet been unable to supply the growing demand.

—Geo. W. Miller went to Grand Rapids Monday where he was called as a juror in the U. S. court.

ALL-AROUND NUISANCE

CRINOLINE PROVOKES A FREE FIGHT IN A CHURCH.

Police Will Not Work with Fluorine in Chicago—Jones on a Visit—Hogg Weather on the Atlantic—O'Neill's Lady Position.

Told in a Few Words.

—In attempting to introduce the crinoline fad into the rural districts around Milan, Tenn., Miss Sanders caused a fight in the church by entering the church the crinoline skirts became sadden neutral poisons, and Andrew Wilson made a remark which insulted the lady, who informed her husband. A fight ensued, the relatives and friends of both parties engaging in the battle. Women fainted, children screamed, and pandemonium reigned supreme. Men emerged with bleeding and broken heads, vowing vengeance. The end of the parties was going for each other, and the crinoline fad is on the decline.

A positive position in reference to the employment of Pinkertons against Bill Dee property has been taken by Chief Geography, of Chicago. He says that the company must choose one or the other, and that if Pinkertons are called in the police will be withdrawn. President Thomas, representing the road, called on the chief to say that the police protection was withdrawn at certain points along the line, and requested an additional detail. The chief said he was sorry, but that down south he was called upon to send to no enforce laws in a crowd. Pennsylvania Company agreed to pay weekly on the police, and denied the report that its company was about to call for Pinkerton's assistance. He said the police were able to protect the property, and he desired to avoid lightning the streets by the presence of Pinkertons.

Mrs. Lucien T. Lancaster, of Sterling, Ohio, sued Hogg's Department Store, Wagon & Chicago Company for her losses. The conductor was waned that shortly after the train left Chicago she began acting queerly. Her actions were those of a person ignorant of travel and the sense conducted to her husband, who ordered down, and was caught in her destination in charge of a conductor. Pennsylvania Company is disputed the accident was caused by a defective coupler, and claimed the company should not be responsible for the injuries.

The British steamer H. C. Hammond, from Bullhogg for Rotterdam, encountered gales out from the former port, settled at Halifax, N. S., with her hatches stove in from the time of leaving and was four days out. Her high-pressure engine broke down. She had a low-pressure engine and a schooner in tow. The gales of the region for fifteen days they have been struggling in a comparatively western and northwesterly gales. The steamer Chinook, of Long Branch, arrived from Jacksonville, Fla., disabled.

There is considerable alarm in New York shipping circles over the non-arrival of the steamer Alexandria, of the Anchor line, which is now days overdue. Her consignee, the Bodyl and Gurney, have a cargo of the silence vessel, and it is feared she was blown out of her course and disabled and is drifting about helpless. If she has not already been wrecked and her crew perished from exposure and hunger. If she has not, she is disabled the accident was in mid-ocean, and the storm continued for a week or two, and she must have suffered so much that she could have weathered the storm.

Wanted, Two Good Murderers.

Some curious letters passed between Garrick and a man named Stone. The latter was employed to get recruits for the home ranks of the drama, and one night he wrote to Garrick: "Sir, The Bishop of Winchester is getting drunk at the Bear and swears he will not play tonight." At first sight this seems peculiar conduct for a bishop, but it should be explained that the communication only refers to the man engaged to take that character in the play of "Henry III." On another occasion Garrick wrote to Stone: "If you can get me two good murderers I will pay you handsomely, particularly the spouting fellow who keeps the apple stall on Tower Hill; the cut in the face is just the thing. Pick me up an alderman or two for Richard if you can, and have no objections to treat with you for a comedy sayor."

A Peacock's Little Foster Mother.

A bantam hen at Norwich Conn. has adopted a young peacock. The peacock hatched from an ordinary looking egg to the greatest disgust of another hen, who did the hatching. There were three pea chicks first, but the latter hen killed one and the other died. The bantam seem manifested a warm interest in the peacock and the peacock became attached to his foster mother. Although the peacock is three times the size of the bantam hen he does not like to be left alone, and when his little mother gets out of his sight it is amusing to hear him set up his ear-piercing cry for her to return to him. The little hen is very faithful to him, and devotes her whole time to the plumaged giant.

Sweet Music for Cattle and Pack.

When the patients at a Toronto asylum finished their dinner one day, a knife, fork and spoon were found to be missing. A strict search was made, but there was no trace of them anywhere. Suddenly one of the attendants heard something rattling inside one of the patients, the son of a well-known Toronto clergyman, and an examination revealed the fact that he had swallowed the cutlery, and when he moved about it jingled in his stomach. All efforts since have failed to recover the lost articles, but their possession has not bothered the man in the least. In response to a question, one of the surgeons said:

"He is all right. He eats just as heartily as he did before, and is apparently quite as well."

He is now allowed no knife, fork, or spoon for external use, however.

His Record Gained.

In a case which was being tried the other day in a Vienna law court, a woman who drives a one-horse chariot was called as a witness. To test the trustworthiness of the evidence he was about to give, he was asked by the Judge if he had ever been punished for any misdemeanor. Witness—I was once punished, sir, many years ago, on that was when I was detained by the police for twenty-four hours. The Judge—You have never been sentenced to any term of imprisonment by a judge for any very serious breach of the law? Witness—Certainly not, my lord. The Judge, shaking his head—A cabman! And never been prosecuted? How long have you been a cabman? Witness—Since the day before yesterday. The Judge, smiling—Ah! I'm all right. Let the case proceed.

About Quill Pens.

A quill pen maker says that no pen will do as fine writing as the eyed quill. It requires the assistance of a microscope to make a proper pen out of such a quill, but when made it is of wonderful delicacy. The microscope writing held of in books of literary curiosities was all done with a crow quill. The steel pens of the present have very fine points, but some how a finer point can be given to a quill than has ever been put on a steel pen, and for delicacy nothing can equal it

A TERRIBLE JOURNEY.

Blondin's Fearful Struggle With a Lunatic on a Rope.

Blondin, the renowned rope walker, usually carried a man upon his back when walking the tight rope. Formerly he was wont to bargain with some one to accompany him on this dangerous journey. On the occasion of a performance in Chicago a man offered his services gratis. Blondin accepted them and ascended the rope with his living burden. When the pair had reached the middle of the rope the man began to laugh heartily.

"What is it that amuses you?" the rope-dancer asked with astonishment.

"Oh, a comic idea has struck me. I was thinking what sort of a face you would pull if, during the next half minute both of us were to fall down upon the audience."

"But we shall not fall," replied Blondin, reassuringly.

"But I have determined upon this occasion to take my life."

At the same moment the man began to wriggle about so that the rope dancer nearly lost his balance. He, however, soon composed himself, dropped his balancing pole and grabbed the man so firmly with his hands that the latter was unable to move. Then, continuing his walk, although in a state of great trepidation, he arrived safely at the end of the rope, and allowing his living burden to slide from his shoulders, he adjusted a few screws on both ears with such force that the lunatic suddenly fell down unconscious. Since that terrible journey Blondin has carried only one man, his true and faithful servant, on every occasion.

AGE OF ORANGE TREES.

An exchange remarks that there has been much discussion among American horticulturists, the last few years concerning the extreme age that orange trees will bear well and produce good fruit. Some maintain that an orange tree, no matter how much care is put upon it will slowly either and die after it has reached half a century of growth. Others have argued that about seventy-five years is the limit of usefulness of a well-cared-for orange tree.

Several American horticulturists who have been traveling along the Mediterranean sea have recently found trees over 170 years old that are still producing fruit of excellent quality. On the island of Elba, where Napoleon was banished, there is an orange grove of over 700 ft. Michael orange tree that, were planted by an Italian in 1731, and it produced last year over 1,000 boxes of fruit, but it produced four times that quantity twenty half years ago. There are several small orange orchards in Southern Italy that are over eighty years old and are still productive of large quantities of fruit.

On the island of Malta, James Pellatt, the famous American horticulturist, found one orange tree that there can be no doubt is 142 years old, and that yielded several boxes of fruit last year. It is even alleged that in the Azores there are orange and lemon trees over 250 years old that still bear fruit, but there is no good authority for the allegation.

AGAINST THE SEXES.

The Women's educational and industrial union of Boston has established working bureaus where unlucky bachelors may carry their frayed and broken garments, and for a small cost have them put into good order. This more seems to be rather unkind to the marriageable girls, for such facilities will doubtless tend to confirm many eligible men in their state of bachelorhood, but it is comparatively a boon to the unfortunates who have to do their own mending, or give away their clothes.

"Not bad, guess but a few yards from the house, when a slender, well-built, elderly man, with piercing gray eyes, touched his hat and motioned to them to stop. This man had a military bearing, and was accompanied by a young black man, who carried a large double valise, slung over his shoulders like a pair of huge saddle bags.

"Would you please to tell me where one Squire Condit resides?" asked the stranger, in well-bred tones, as he stepped from the white-ony Buick, a-lazy.

"The captain guided our horses, and said.

"Thank you, I know, you are both officers in her Majesty's service. I will not be intrusive myself as to ask, Gentlemen of the Queen's Navy?"

The young officers gave their own names, and the stranger, bowing, replied, who, taking two steps in the direction of Squire Condit's house, stopped turned and asked

"Is the Washington in port?"

"Aye, Five's ship!"

"Yes, Colonel."

"Thet's she be," said Capt. Denham, "and a fine fast power, sailed this day. By the way, sir, if you are to make any stay at this end of the island, it will afford me pleasure to receive you on board of the Sea Hawk, a noble cruiser, which I have the honor to command."

But, Graham raised his hat and said, "I would be honored and delighted to visit the Captain, and Miss Fresnel, on my journey, following up the sandy black lead."

CHAPTER VIII.

OL. GRAHAM VISITS CAPT. VIC.

Squire Condit was out in his garden looking over his fine array of roses, now showing their best, and Mrs. Condit, in her bed, and filling the air with their sweet odors, and when he saw the gray-haired, soldierly looking man approaching, with his servant last behind him, as was the custom of gentlemen visiting a journey on foot or horseback in those days.

Col. Graham and his servant had come to the place on horseback, and left their horses and all the baggage at a neighbor's, but the big saddle-bags excepted, as the "King's Arms," the principal inn of the place.

Squire Condit, seeing the stranger approach, at the front gate, took off his hat and advanced to meet him.

"Good morrow, sir, I doubt not he said, as he shook hands with the stranger, and he asked Colonel Graham, standing in the direction of the city, rambling off in the direction of the city, rambling old house.

"Is mose, sir," replied the Squire.

"Would you please to tell me if he is home?"

"He is home, Colonel Graham," said the squire, his voice trembling, for he recognized the stranger from some twenty-one years before last brought a little too to the place, and the sight of him gives him, suddenly took his departure.

"Sir, you recognize me then?" said the Colonel, standing on his hand, a motion which the Squire could not have seen, for he made no effort to meet his attention in like manner.

"I do not hate you, Colonel Graham, but your cause and actions have been changed. Will you please to the house and be seated for a bit?" said, as he, leading the way, like a gentleman who finds duty compelling him to a disagreeable task.

"I have official business with Captain Vic, of the cruiser Wanderer, now in coast harbor, and as my time is limited, I should make use of it very long visit. Would you make a special favor of a few minutes private conversation? I hope to glide in soon time hereafter."

"Sir, I am at your service," replied the Squire, and motioning to the chair, he had just given hand the white-ony Buick, a-lazy.

"The captain guided our horses, and said.

Dr. P. C. Warne, of East Jordan has successfully treated three patients with chloride of gold for the liquor habit.

East Jordan Enterprise: On Monday last Treasurer Hipp sent a check of $238,459 to the Wayne County Savings Banks to liquidate the indebtedness of the town on the town hall. That leak is now closed.

Herbert Lasnes of Mancelona, fell into a well seventy-two feet deep. He shouted up to a playmate that he had hold of the rope. When aid came the little fellow was drawn up and his only injury was a sprained ankle.

Capt. E. A. Bouchard prophecies that the strait will be open no later than April 6th. He bases his prediction on the alleged fact that not once within the memory of man has the opening of the straits been delayed over four days after Easter Sunday. Easter Sunday falls this year on April 2nd, and hence the captain's dates.

The Wilson Hoop Company, of West Bay City and South Arm, after an existence of ten years or more has dissolved. The Bay City business is taken by Messrs. Isaac Pierce and Wilson the inventor of the hoop machines and South Arm plant and business by Mr. Alex. Bush and Mr. W. G. Pierce.

The editor of the Mackinac Island column of the St. Ignace Republican said the supply of coal—hard and soft—is exhausted. Most of the family coal bins are nearer bottom than top, with the winter season half gone, and a cold chill chill slips down the founder's back when he thinks of trying to keep warm with green wood from Bois Blanc.

Petoskey Record: Rev. C. T. Stout has sent his resignation as pastor of Emanuel Episcopal church to Bishop Gillespie and will leave about the middle of this month. He will bid farewell to his congregation on Sunday, the 12th inst. Mr. Stout goes to Goshen, Ind., where he has a fine church, chapel, comfortable rectory with all modern conveniences, vested choir under an experienced choir master, and best of all, no debt.

Petoskey Record: The disadvantage of having our dock owned by a foreign steamboat Company is now made abundantly manifest. The new steamship Manitou cannot land at either docks as they are now. She is of steel, draws more water than any boat ever touching at this port, and cannot lay along the dock without putting her steel bottom on the rocks. We understand that the company asked the Seymour Bros. to extend the dock, and that the latter concern has declined to do so. The result will be that the finest of all lake steamships will not lay at Petoskey at all, but at Harbor Springs.

Petoskey News: As a rule courtesy demands that the highest title be accorded. For instance if a gentleman holds a commission as colonel, and was for distinguished service accorded the brevet rank of "general," common courtesy entitles him to that address. By how much more is this true when the higher title is backed by an actual commission! One of the most distinguished exceptions to this rule we know of, is our own respected and beloved fellow citizen, Isaac D. Toll, who should by every rule courteous inter course be addressed as General Toll. Commanding a Company with distinguished gallantry in Mexico—gazetted in official dispatches for conspicuous daring in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, on the latter bloody field reforming the regiment and without orders leading a desperate but successful charge, commanding a battalion in the defenses of Washington, he also holds commissions showing that he passed through every grade from lieutenant colonel to major general in the service of his own state of Michigan. As general of division his remarkable was signed by Governor Barry when some of the veterans of the civil war were toddling round in short frocks. The fact that his friends all call him "colonel" is probably due to his southern connection at Washington during his residence there, who knew nothing of his Michigan honors, but did know of his Mexican laurels and stuck to the title of "colonel," with the result of fastening that title to his name. He is a full major general by the official records of Michigan, and hereafter the Record will turn over a new leaf and address him as our friend and fellow citizen, General I. D. Toll."

Davis, the talented editor of the Elk Rapids Progress. Mr. Davis will fall far short of being elected. Roscoe L. Corbett is a man who should not only receive the full vote of his party in the circuit, but should, in this county, run largely ahead of it. He is, to point of ability and personal character worthy of the office, and will be an honor to his profession there. He has long been held in high esteem, by judge lawyers, both as a lawyer and as a gentleman. Let Charlevoix county stand boldly by R. L. Corbett at the polls.

—It is important that township committees and township officers should remember that caucuses must be held early under the existing election laws. The tickets must all be in the hands of the commissioners of election, (in township this commission consists of the town boards) not less than five full secular days before election day. Plenty of time should be given for printing the ballots. It is the duty of the township board, acting as commissioners of election, to get the ballots printed, at the expense of the township. All nominations must be placed on one ballot, but there may be as many tickets as there are caucuses held. All such nominations must be duly certified by the chairman and secretary of the caucuses to the commissioner of election. There must be at least two ballots to each vote cast at the last preceding general election. We will be prepared, as usual, to print ballots, in legal form, and on short notice, but it should be remembered that more time will be required from this than under the old law. If you want to carry the ballots back with you the same day please bring in your copy as soon as you reach town. Be careful to have all names spelled correctly and have given names written in full. All caucuses should be held not later than March 25th, and earlier if possible.

An Elegant Residence

The house was built from plans made by Architect John T. Kirkpatrick, of this place, and in outline and interior arrangement reflects credit on that gentleman. It occupies a large lot under the bluff overlooking Lake Michigan, and is a home of which Mr. and Mrs. Faulkner may be justly proud.

The most careful attention has been given to every detail, from the cut-stone foundation walls to the large central chimney of the same material. The basement is the entire size of the building, and is high and well lighted.

The interior arrangement and finish constitute a most elegant array of rooms. Hardwoods enter largely into the finish, and ornate chimney-pieces adorn the parlors and sitting rooms. Large circular plate glass windows beautify the facade from foundation to cornice, and furnish an abundance of light. The broad veranda is the especial pride of Mrs. Faulkner.

Every convenience, in the way of bath rooms, closets, etc., is supplied. It will be warmed by the most approved pattern of furnace. The house will remain closed until the spring of 1894. At that time Mr. and Mrs. Faulkner and their son will occupy it permanently. Mr. Faulkner will give special attention to the adornment of the grounds.

Capt. Wilbur Buys the Steamer City of Grand Rapids.

Capt. O. E. Wilbur, of this place, last week purchased from Hon. Perry Hannah, of Traverse City, the steamer City of Grand Rapids. Capt. Wilbur is unable to state what he will do with the boat, but may take her to Chicago for the World's Fair trade.

The Transfer Dock.

Last week the transfer dock syndicate leased the frontage of the John Martin ferry acre lot, adjoining the property already leased, and have extended their dock plans accordingly. This will make the dock 2,500 feet, or nearly half a mile long.

The piles and other material are now being got out at Norwood, and will be towed here as soon as the ice goes out. John Monroe, Jr., will probably do the pile-driving. They expect to have the big dock done by June 1st.

Masonic Notice.

Special communication of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282 F. & A. M. Tuesday evening, March 21. Work on F. C. degree. By order of the W. M.

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Noble, of Elk Rapids, have gone to Florida.

A sad accident occurred at Old Mission, causing the death of Jay Harris, a boy about twenty years old in the employment of Bur Ellis. Mr. Ellis had let the boy down into a well 150 feet deep, in a bucket to get something that had fallen in. When he was raising the bucket to the top, the hook broke about the center of the well and the boy fell 60 feet, striking the curbing at the bottom and breaking nearly every bone in his body. He lived two hours but was insensible. His home was in Spencer Creek.

VILLAGE ELECTION

The Republicans Win With Variable Majorities

Monday was a Republican day in municipal matters, although there was plenty of splitting. The count on straights gave a Republican majority of 29.

Bates, Rep., for President, was elected over Nicholls, Dem., by one majority, and only then on a recount following a tie.

Trustees—Harris 157, Geiken, 154, Stevens 159, Mullen 116, Lamereaux 118, Clayden 112.
Clerk—Harsha 159; Brown 116.
Treas.—Hines 156; Miller 126.
Assessor—Cooper 173; Nettleton 108.
Con.—Miller 162; Cook 123.

The populist ticket received from 15 to 17 votes.

The electric light proposition was defeated by a vote of 113 to 76. Respectfully referred to the Democrat for comment.

FOUND A FLOATER.

A Very Dead Indian Found in Round Lake Sunday.

About five o'clock Sunday afternoon several boys who were sailing a boat around the open space in the harbor near Wilbur's dock, discovered the dead body of a man floating near the surface, under the edge of Wilbur's dock. The ice had but recently gone out from that locality, and some of it was yet clinging to the body.

The boys made their discovery known, and the body was lifted to the dock. It was badly decomposed, but was at once recognized as the body of an Indian. Further examination proved beyond a doubt that it was the body of Louis Kewawa-quam, of Hayes township. His mysteriously disappeared last fall just before the November term of court, and, as he was wanted as a witness in a certain suit, his absence caused some comment.

But the belief is general that he fell off the dock while drunk.

The boat was now close alongside the Wanderer, and Captain Fox stood ready to receive his visitor.

Colonel Graham proceeded to the deck with the light, active step of a much younger man, and he and Captain Fox with more heartiness than might be expected from one of his austere bearing.

He was evidently known to the other officers of the ship, for they came about him to him, and he bowed to his staff officer, Colonel Hall, who was an Arcadian Captain Fox to the celeb, his cabin, and when they were alone he said:

"Well, Fox, I have come to see you on a matter of business."

"I came to meet the Wanderer at this point, and have done so. Where is the original Wanderer?"

"Is I supposed. Now it will be necessary to have this ship lost after she leaves this port."

"Its paper?"

"You must arrange that, but a report of her loss must reach the admiralty in London. I know the ropes, and I can do it yourself. You are much more adroit than I am at such business."

"Very good compliment, Colonel; from the Commander-in-Chief, or rather first cousin to the Commander-in-Chief, it is more flattering. I feel that outside of practical seamanship, I am a fool. Well, being, good, bad or indifferent, about my business, I must be off to my ship. But we will not play cabbed so to speak. I have to be in the Channel, and you are now a member of the House of Lords."

"Silence, man," said the Colonel, starting to his feet and glancing nervously around, as if mentioning his own name had been treason.

"Yes, gad, sir, it is a matter of notoriety."

"Here, I assume the rose of a man who would be hanged if he had a spirit of chivalry." Lord Lord Palmer, but why speak of the dead? Why not read out of the peerage?"

"Because, sir," said the Captain, with a sarcastic laugh, "I do not want to lay myself up in a charge of treason. But remember I pledge myself to regard this conversation as in the Queen's confidence."

"Another" exclaimed the Captain, "By the powers of the eternal my friend, Captain William Hall, would not be grateful to her everlasting, the Queen, for a piece of such news. But, for the sake of the Queen, I will pardon the interruption, and I promise you that nothing I unfortunate, shall be said to Captain Hall. I have no time to be long, but I must ask you to tell me the news."

"Well, Fox, I am in a hurry myself. I have a special train waiting for me at Gravesend. Well, the Queen is very well, and I am sorry to be the bearer of such a bad report of her cousin, Lord Lord Palmer, but why speak of the dead? Why not read out of the peerage?"

"Because, sir," said the Captain, with a sarcastic laugh, "I do not want to lay myself up in a charge of treason. But remember I pledge myself to regard this conversation as in the Queen's confidence."

"Another" exclaimed the Captain, "By the powers of the eternal my friend, Captain William Hall, would not be grateful to her everlasting, the Queen, for a piece of such news. But, for the sake of the Queen, I will pardon the interruption, and I promise you that nothing I unfortunate, shall be said to Captain Hall. I have no time to be long, but I must ask you to tell me the news."

"You have seen Bentham?" asked the Colonel.

"Yes, I have seen the rose of a man who would be hanged if he had a spirit of chivalry."

THE WIND DIGS POTATOES.

Charles H. Bullock of Chicago, New Orleans, Memphis and Carlisle, Ca., came in to chat the other day, and told one story that will bear printing.

Our exchange editor had just remarked that he wished he knew he could shake this part of the world and land in Southern California, where a man could "live happy until he died rich."

"Why," said Bulldock, "the wind digs potatoes in Southern California."

"Humph! Simply! What?" the exchange man remarked, disappointment shadowing his face.

"Honesty," continued Bulldock "One man had thirty acres of potatoes, and there came a gale that unearthed every potato, and all he had to do next day was to go out and pick them up."

And then, as if he wanted to get away from the subject, the Chicago-Tennessee-Louisiana-California-man went on to talk about his first love, cyclones.

After Him, Too.

A child story comes from the lively little town of Harlem, Ohio. A bad small boy there crawled under the bed when his mother wanted to punish him. She couldn't get him out, and she left him there until his father returned that evening from the city. When the father came and was told about the case he started to crawl under the bed to bring forth his disobedient son, but was almost paralyzed when the little fellow asked "Hello, is the office you, too?"

Scriptural Authority for Advertising.

A reverend gentleman, who has charge of the advertising of a prominent religious weekly, was recently asked what scriptural authority he could find for his occupation. "Oh," he replied, that is easy enough. Advertising not only has scriptural authority, but is of very respectable antiquity as well. If you will look in Numbers, xxiv. 14, you will find Balaam saying, 'Come, now, and I will advertise thee what this people do.' Advertising is no modern thing.

Crow Quills Make the Best Pens.

A quill pen maker says that no pen will do as fine writing as the crow quill. It requires the assistance of a microscope to make a proper pen out of such a quill, but when made it is of wonderful delicacy. The microscopic writing told off in books of literary curiosities was all done with a crow quill. The steel pen at present have very fine points, but somehow a finer point can be given to a quill than has ever been put on a steel pen, and for delicacy nothing can equal it.

LIFE OF AN EDITOR.

An Oriental Boy's Idea of an Earthly Paradise.

"A schoolboy in Lucknow was asked to describe an editor of a paper. He did so in this way: 'An editor is the luckiest man in the world.' He can go to a circus every afternoon and every evening without paying a cent. He can go also to the courthouse, the police and receptions, and free pass.

"He has free tickets to all theatres, receives presents at his office, and gets his cars bound, too. He goes also to Pilgrim, Malang or Lawrence places of amusement. He does not do this once, however, but in one paper he can deny everything that was said in the previous one, and he does so, as a rule.

"When other people are already in bed, the editor is still up. He stays up late to see what happens. When I grow big I shall become an editor. Then I can stay up, too."

He Denied the Charge.

The attorney had a very ignorant witness on the stand, and, as is usual with that class, he lectured on telling the story over and over again. At last the attorney grew tired.

"If you please," he said, with some feeling, "you will not repeat statutory again. I have heard it in toto several times."

"Huh?" asked the witness in surprise.

"I say I have heard the story in toto and I don't want to hear it again."

"I guess not," said the witness. "I never was in toto in my life and I won't even know where it is."

Salons Fear Bridal Couples.

A gentleman who has recently returned from Europe tells of an old superstition in vogue among the more ignorant classes of women. They are of the opinion that the presence of a young couple on their bridal tour absord ship portends a violent storm. The Canadian, an Indian steamer, had a young couple aboard, and sure enough the ship was caught in a hurricane. A number of editors were latent on the day on board and only the courage of the captain, who opposed the mutineers with a revolver in each hand, saved the lives of those who were enjoying the first weeks of their honeymoon.

Artificial Stone Pillows.

One of the most interesting points in connection with the new water works of Worms, Germany, is the fact that artificial porous stones are used for filtering the water. Tests showed that the number of bacteria in the water after filtration is about one twentieth of that before filtration. Steam pipes are so arranged that the stones can be sterilized whenever it is necessary.

HOW HE CAME THERE.

The Defendant Knew What He Was Talking About.

The defendant, who was as black as the sole of a pair of boots, was the unfortunate possessor of John Wiggins' Alaghamian Domestic laughed as he asked:

"Well, White, what black crime are you guilty of?"

Farmer Edwards, the owner of the henhouse, was called, and said: "Last Saturday night I seen this here man hangin' round my henhouse, and says: 'No, sah, yo' honah, sah' he dide' soo me, fit was 10 Lafty mil he seen."

The prisoner interrupted:

"I suppose you weren't near the place at all," said the magistrate, dryly.

"No, sah!"

"How do you know Lafty was there?"

"A frien' done tole me."

"But, your honor, I'm sure I saw this man," the prosecutor cried.

"Oh, ho!" said the judge. "So you were there after all. Well, White, probably you can tell us what you were doing there."

White scratched his head and said: "I guess I'd better reconsider fo' I ketch de judge, fo' somebody knocked me down and tried me in mah locked jaw dade."

THE CHATHAM LIAR.

A Wonderful Man, But He Had to Prove His Powers.

"Hear! hear!" exclaimed George H. Pegram to a group of railroad hands, "how many liars there are in this world now, boys. Over small and large town has its star liar and my old town had one. Long Island town Chatham, Mass. There was, when I was a lad, an old fellow by the name of George Sanders, who were without an effort the silver star of champion liar distance for the town and neighboring vicinity. This fellow had been, according to himself, long fifty times in great ocean wrecks. He had survived naked and starving up and down a hundred islands and had been rescued in a most providential manner. Sharks and whales had valiantly barbed daggers against his life and invariably he had led them a bootless chase. In doing all this he had also established his star reputation. One day George came into the town drug store and he told us a monstrous codfish. He dropped it all the houses, he was so well known, and, calling out the big habitants, pounced with glee to the fish and said: 'Now, I had told you I would bet you caught a fish of this size you wouldn't underbelieve it.' George had got our attention and had lower that to gain the second credit for his word that he would have to work for it. It always tickled me to think that the whole liar in town should catch the biggest fish and then be compelled to prove it and will and place them at the lowest possible profit These instruments are beyond dispute equal to any. Indications of Short Life.

The loss of the nonclinging teeth is a sign of the approaching end. A shortening of the life of the individual of from two to five years. To know the exact time at which many of these teeth are lost, even before the fifteenth year, one has only to turn to the recently published reports of the examination of the teeth of children in the schools and orphan homes of Philadelphia and Boston. If some effective measures are not adopted for combating the ravages of dental decay it looks very much as if the human half of half century would find the poorer classes of English people practically edentulous before the twentieth year.

Waiting for the Dead.

The custom of mourning for the dead is still found in some parts of Scotland, where, after burying a relaxed chant, cries of lamentation being mingled with remonstrances addressed to the departed by his relatives and friends are made. In some counties the ceremony is called "Keening" and Ireland professional "keeners"—that is, women who are paid to wail at funerals of the deceased—still to be found, although this custom, which has been known for long bill and drawn on the grab, which they divide between them.

Better Not Provoke.

A party of young ladies visit the observatory to have a peep through the monster telescope at the new comet. The astronomer conducts them to the instrument, and the ladies look through in turns.

"Oh, Laura, isn't it charming, heavenly, enchanting, wonderful!" and so on ad libitum.

After a while the sly astronomer observes—

"Now, ladies, I will remove the cover and place the instrument in position, if you will allow me."

A Matter of Succession.

When Turgeo was minister, some one enthusiastically advocated a certain method of raising money for the government. Turgeo disposed of the subject shortly and rigorously. His proposal was known to be good, and little more was heard of the tax in question after he wrote on the memorial: "It would be safer to execute the author than the project."

Oriental Height.

It has always been a popular belief that the manufacture of rugs in the Orient was carried on by men almost exclusively, but it is said that women do most of the work. In Asia, as no other occupation is a disgrace to any one, the whole gone loos is also set carried supported by the labor of the women. This is the "women's rights" with a vengeance.

Not Disturbing.

"I want a parlor set with only one chair in it."

"What an idea?"

"Well, my daughter is twenty-seven and still unmarried. I've got tiring desperate, that's all.—Detroit Tribune.

PREMIUMS WELL PAID FOR.

"These are trade mishers or sweeteners," said the proprietor of a wholesale drughouse, as he opened a box containing half a gross of what appeared to be gold watches. These gold filled watches are given as a bonus to dealers to handle certain goods. One of these watches is given with every thousand of cigars that he buys and with five-cent cigars at that. A dealer can convince himself with jewelry, fill his house with pictures, have a piano and a organ, a delivery wagon and a carriage without paying a cent. The kind of baking powder is promoted by giving checks to dealers who buy a certain amount, and wonderful to relate, a fine imp, retailing at $7.50, is given to the dealer who will buy $4.50 worth of a kind of chewing gum. Delivery wagons go with purchases of soap and baking powder, and coal carts are given away with a number of articles. Sets of bed room furniture are given with a good sized deal in cigars; pictures with bottled whisky and other things. Here's an aluminum watch with a steel chain—and the watch will keep time, too—that I gave to my lady dealer who sold up $2.50 worth of cough drops. Office desks are also given with cigars, so, also, is a ticket to the world's fair and return. Similar rebates go with the purchase of groceries. Who pays for it? Oh, the customer, I suppose, but he never knows it."

A FAIR WARNING.

The Driver Advanced a Remonstrance That Was Heeded.

In the Kennebec valley, or toward that way, there lives a gentleman of the old school in a handsome old homestead that stands a mile or more from the main road, on the main road, however. This gentleman is of a convivial turn of mind, and for a long time found it necessary to go to Portland at frequent intervals—sometimes as often as two or three times a week. From every one of these journeys he returned on the latest train that he could get, and this was one that invariably passed him at the station a late as 11 o'clock. As he was not in the least inclination to walk home, it was necessary for the local livery-at able keeper to harness a horse and take him home. This went on until the livery-keeper received that the man must be remonstrated with. Therefore, the gentleman having arrived one night from Portland at the usual hour and in the usual condition, and the usual team being at the door, he ran upstairs and the man loaded in as usual. The livery-stable keeper turned to his passenger and remarked thoughtly:

"Look here, squire! If you don't quit this kind of business pretty soon myself will be single down to your house some day, and begad you won't hear a word of it!"

Something about this admonition—the grim picture it conveyed, perhaps—caused it to sink into the man's mind, and he left off his trips to Portland for some time.

A FEW WORDS ON ETIQUETTE.

A hostess need not hold herself responsible for the likings or dislikings of her guests. She evades this by meeting introduced men, but she does affect her circle the most charming opposite for such bibbing and maintaining pleasant conversations. Well-bred persons know how to conduct a conversation thus casually commenced provided there is a natural liking. When introductions take place at other than formal receptions, the case is bracketed or presented to the woman hostess she is young and he old or disagreeable, when she is introduced or presented to him. The charge of social liberty is in the freedom to "hunt" hosts, house agents and those whom it may concern," and state that the encounter "will be pleased to investigate and report upon any reputed haunted house, ascertaining the cause of and putting a stop to all seemingly unexplainable disturbances, groans and spirit-rappings at the shortest notice." This is the rule.

THE KINDERGARTEN.

No Longer an Experiment, But a Fully Grown Institution.

A race that is said to take its pleasures early,—a branch of which, indeed, by inheritance is inclined to look upon all amusement as sinful,—such a race very naturally produces many minds that cannot help suspecting the utility of an institution like the kindergarten, which might to a casual observer seem merely organized pleasure. This kind of observer, seeing for the first time a kindergarten "full play," naturally asks himself, can anything so delightful really be part of a grave, scientific system of education; or is it merely a pretty way of keeping children—especially the children of the poor—out of mischief?

That it is a thoroughly accredited, successful, scientific and rapidly spreading educational device, and no mere fad of the moment, seems to be an established fact, as may be gathered from inquiry among the leaders of education everywhere in America, and from all the teachers who, whether kindergartners or not, have come into contact with the system.

The kindergarten is no longer an experiment, says the Century. It is not in the direct sense an educational or on its philanthropic side. It is rather for those who ignominiously oppose the kindergarten to show cause for their opposition in the face of the almost unanimous approval of experts and the enthusiastic commendation of all that part of the general public who have had the opportunity of becoming familiar with its methods and results.

WHAT'S IN A NAME.

It Might Be Dubious, But It Meant a Bowling Terrace.

He was a small boy traveling with his father and mother on a train on the Detroit-Free Press, and the way in which he scrambled up and down the car aisle made him a terror to the other passengers.

"Come, there, Johnny, dear, you disturb pa," said his fond mother.

But the infant terror kicked and rebel, and refused to keep one position a second at a time.

"I like to have the raisin' of that boy, I just would," said a sharp-featured woman, who had her hands full along.

"I wouldn't mind having a hand in it myself," said a man who was regarding the youngster with murder in his eye.

"Sh! sh! Johnny, dear, 'said his mother pitifully, for the nine hundredth time.

"Why don't you call him John? He might pay more attention to you then," said the same woman.

"What's in a name?" asked the mother, "by any other name he would be as Johnny still."

"Then he knows a lake give him another name," retorted his pa, "for he knows a bear still a moment with the one he has."

Then he plugged his ears with cotton, and the other passengers emoved his last remark.

Old Ginger.

Susan Leeds (who had been sent into the village by a charity fund for a fortnight's country air. The clergyman's wife) "Ye see, I'm sent to thim girls to what parish they belonged, was informed by the little town mite, with much pride, that she lived close to a parish church. "All!" said the clergyman, "what is the name of the church?" "Sure, I don't rightly know the name! was my reply, "but we calls him 'Old Ginger.'" "Old Ginger!" he exclaimed, "why why 'Old Ginger?' "Why, that's the color of his whiskers!" These whiskers which now adorn episcopal bishops in England, Portland at the time of his selling grave.—The Spectator.

A Spanish Money Changer.

The street Cambista or money changer is an interesting character in Spanish cities. He stations himself at a principal street with several money massing, and exchanges a bag of copper for silver. By 10 o'clock his bag is exhausted and he goes home. All the servants on their way to market get their money changed by him, as they are not skillful in counting and afraid of false coins. He gives them full count, his coppers being obtained from the bankers, who get rid of their coins at a discount. Catalonians are also found seated in the markets with a tray of coppers before them.

CHARLEVOIX

Is the Home of A. & W. M. Railway at the foot of Pine Lake, embracing a coast line of 10 miles, and has a population of a thousand souls. Population, 1,200. Has five church societies, three church edifices, village hall, Masonic hall, Odd Fellows' hall, three saw-mills, one large electric flouring mill and numerous other manufacturing industries. A Little Girl's Experience in A Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Truscott are keepers of the tiny Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich., and are blessed with a daughter, four years old. Last April she was taken down with measles, followed with a deceitful Cough and turning to Lung Fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "handful of bones." Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They say King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold and you may get a trial bottle free at F. G. Hines & Co.'s Drug Store. 6

TO PRISON FOR LIFE.

EMMET DALTON'S FIELD OF FUTURE OPERATIONS.

—Emmet Dalton, a member of the famous gang of outlaws, was brought into court Wednesday, at Independence, Kan., charged first for the murder of a deputy sheriff during the raid at Coffeyville. He was also charged with murder in the second degree in the killing of Lucius Kloe, and was convicted toward by imprisonment for life. He left for the Nebraska state prison at once, escorted by four officers.

—Hinsdale, Ill., Dispatch: Yesterday afternoon at about 4 o'clock, Mrs. Mary Montgomery's residence, in the northern part of this village, was the scene of a most atrocious outrage. She lay struggled in her bed and died. The full details are too shocking for publication. She will probably recover from her injuries. Mrs. Montgomery's husband has been dead before, making any further expression of her views. The crime was not only robbery, as newspaper people, but everything else, but her good friends. She has always been seen in the grounds of her handsome residence at Washington Park, near the church parlor, according to her custom. Mrs. Montgomery is a member of the church and is a generous and benevolent lady.

—May's passion or man's rapacity, which it was that acted as the motive of Mrs. Montgomery's murder, is the problem on which the minds of Hinsdale people are actively engaged. She lay struggled in her bed all day. The full details are too shocking for publication. She will probably recover from her injuries. Mrs. Montgomery's husband has been dead before, making any further expression of her views. The crime was not only robbery, as newspaper people, but everything else, but her good friends. She has always been seen in the grounds of her handsome residence at Washington Park, near the church parlor, according to her custom. Mrs. Montgomery is a member of the church and is a generous and benevolent lady.

—Mrs. H. H. Kinner, (nee Mrs. Potter,) died at Manceiona Sunday. The funeral services will occur on Thursday afternoon at the home of Wm. A. Ross, in Banks.

Northern Michigan News.

Boyne Falls is organizing a brass band.

John R. Ferris, who had held the office of clerk of Ilay for several years, is favorably spoken of to succeed A. J. Stroud as supervisor.

Mrs. McIonohugh, aged 94 years, died at her home on Beaver Island last week. She landed on Beaver Island over 50 years ago and was never away during that time. Another old resident, Mrs. McCauley, aged about 65 years died there recently.

The meeting of the old Settler's Association at Elk Rapids Tuesday, was a decided success. Over three hundred were present. An interesting program was given, the leading feature being an oration by Judge Hansdell, on "Then, Now and the between," combining eloquence, wit and pathos in a very pleasing manner.

The Judicial Nomination

Grand Traverse Herald: Roscoe L. Corbett of Charlevoix county, who was nominated at Bellaire last week, by the republicans, for circuit judge of the thirteenth judicial circuit, is worthy of the high honor bestowed upon him. He is a man about 37 years old, and has been in practice in Charlevoix county for a dozen years or more. His standing at the bar is very high. His ability has been so marked that it has commanded the attention of the attorneys of the circuit in a marked degree. He is a clear-headed, discreet lawyer, always master of himself. Judge Hansdell, who is better fitted to estimate the ability and qualifications for the bench of the attorneys of his circuit than any one else, has often said, even before Mr. Corbett was thought of as a possible nominee, that Mr. Corbett was one of the very best equipped attorneys in the whole circuit for the bench. He has a judicial temperament in mind that is in itself an invaluable qualification for the position. He is of an equable, calm, even-tempered disposition, with a quick judgment that enables a judge to form correct conclusions and quickly, and help to expedite business, to the great saving of the several counties in the circuit in a financial way. Mr. Corbett's ability as a lawyer is conceded and acknowledged by all. Politically speaking the nomination is an excellent one. Mr. Corbett is a fair-minded but outspoken republican who believes in principles of his party and loves it; but in the position for which he has been chosen his official duties will claim his first attention, as they should. Mr. Corbett is a safe man to vote for, a fair man to all men, and all men, of whatsoever party, can vote for him feeling they have placed the judiciary of the country in the care of one who will do his whole duty and do it well. It is a splendid nomination.

Hatings from Hayes.

Rev. George A. Weaver, of Petoskey, was a visitor at Bay Shore Sunday school last Sunday.

A special school meeting was held at Fairgrove last Saturday evening for the purpose of considering the insurance question. We should think every school board would consider it a duty to keep their school buildings insured.

One of our Hayesites offered to lay a wager with us that he saw a woman in Hayes wearing a pair of shoes six inches wide and at least two feet long. Before we lost our money we ascertained that he referred to a squaw with a pair of snow shoes on.

There will be a union caucus held at Burgess school house on Saturday, March 25th, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating township officers.

The winter wheat that has come out from its winter covering is in splendid condition.

We would say for the benefit of our young readers that in the table of measures a "hair's breadth" is given as one-forty-eighth of an inch; so that a hair's-breadth escape is a close one.

We should judge that our citizens who have been compelled to dig their weekly supply of potatoes from under the snow would hail the late thaw with delight. The only drawback is, if the ground freezes they will have to blow them out with dynamite.

We will be pleased to show you our stock of spring goods, and give you prices; and, by the way, we are selling 19 pounds of granulated sugar for $1, at the Pioneer Store, Bay Shore.

Norwood Notes.

Van Pelt is with us again, and will remain until after the town meeting.

The Eastport stage line, owing to the state of the roads, was in a demoralized condition last week, not making a trip for three days. Col. Winter, however, ran a special from this place, so we had our mail as usual.

William Cowan left on Monday for Gurlph, Ont. His mother, who has been very sick for a year, is very low, and cannot recover.

E. L. Stafford is getting out the piles, stringers, caps and timbers for Mr. Nash for the transfer dock at Charlevoix, and will have them all on the bank of the lake this week.

Orville Ferguson, who has been resorting with us all winter, left for Chicago Monday.

Richard Shapton was here last week cutting ice for the Norwood people. Enough ice has been put up to keep us all cool next summer, unless it is hotter than usual.

The Decision Fair.

An enraged Parisian poet lately brought an action for damages against his publisher because some of his rhymes were spoiled by printers' blunders. He lost his suit, the court holding that in withdrawing the book as soon as the error was discovered and in correcting the offending line, the publisher had done all that could reasonably be expected of him.

It Isn't New.

Those who imagine that the care of the teeth and the replacement of the natural grinders with false ones is "something new under the sun" may be surprised to learn that artificial teeth were made of ivory, placed on plates of the same material and held together and in place by gold wires and rivets 300 to 1,000 years before Christ. Herodotus, "the father of history," tells us that the Egyptians of the fifth dynasty understood the diseases of the teeth and their treatment. There are several passages in history to lead one to the belief that both Cleaar and Antony were artificial teeth. The date of the introduction of false teeth into Europe is uncertain. They were known in England as early at least as the discovery of America. "The Mathematical Jewel," published in 1736, contains an account of Sir John Haigrave, "who caused all of his teeths to be drawne out, and after had a set of ivory teeths in agayne." The visitor at the centennial of 1876 was given a chance to view the false ivory masticators which once served the immortal Washington.

Care of Street Trees.

Street trees sometimes need pruning. If, however, they have been originally well selected a small knife will be all that is necessary for a few years to remove an occasional branch that starts out in the wrong place. There is rarely any necessity of cutting off a large limb. If this necessitly ever does come the limb should be cut off close to the trunk and the place smoothed over and painted, so that the wound will be ultimately covered with healthy bark. We have often explained that wherever a stub is left this must inevitably die, and as the trunk grows about it there will be a plug of rotted wood where the branch originally grew, and the disease will eat inward and downward as the water soaks in from without. After street trees have attained mature size pruning is rarely needed beyond the occasional cutting away of a dead branch or the removal of one which interferes with another—Garden and Forest.

A Bit of Sentiment.

At a dinner given to Turner, the painter, who was an inveterate cockney, the talk turned upon one of his drawings of South Coast scenery: a view of a distant river, with a greyround at full speed after a hare in the foreground. A guest was examining this plate with admiration, when Turner called out: "Ah! I see you want to know why I have introduced that hare. It is a bit of sentiment, sir; for that's the spot where Archy Arefoot fell, and you see I ave made an good mechanding an arc!"—Argonaut.

I cannot say how it is with the transient individual merchant, or a scheme that may pop into your head on and in view at its very start, but there is a fact not mentioned by even very industrious renderand thinkers, and one which should inspire confidence in our statements. It is that we are here forever, not for a day or a year. We don't impose upon you if we would. We cannot cheat you and then get away with a profit therefrom. If we deceive you we must stay and face it. That means suffer for the deceit found child fears the fire, and confidence abused is most difficult to restore. We know it. It would be a bold and impolitic delusion of public opinion to emphasize imperfections by persistently advertising them. It is not simply in publishing the advantages of a commodity or a line of travel that increase the patronage. Publication is an necessity, after fact. The fact is the possession of good features. The newspaper is simply the medium of making fact known, and as well guarantee of the fact. Here the C. & W. M. and D. L. & N. are favorite lines, because such in the fact. There equipment is of the best, trains are run on fast schedules, and everything is done to make a journey over them a pleasure, entered of otherwise. Give us a trial and see for yourself. Geo. Local News.

—Bellinger has new goods.

—L. D. Bartholomew & Co. change their ad. this week.

—Republicans, don't forget the caucus announced in another column.

—President Bates will call the new council to order next Friday night.

—Miss Effie Berdan leaves Friday for Chicago and Detroit for new goods for Mason & Berdan.

—John Zawecki, the tailor, has an enlarged ad. in this issue. John is still on deck with the latest styles.

—Another old landmark is disappearing. The Mason barn on the south terrace is being demolished.

—Levi Hoate, a resident of Hayes township, and well known here, died suddenly Saturday night, of heart disease.

—We neglected last week to state that the Faulkner residence was heated by one of Hyland's Charlevoix furnaces.

—Jack Auld returned from Cincinnati last week, and will spend the summer at the dental chair at Dr. Crozier's rooms.

—We have chewed that rag sufficiently Dr. Hampton, you can mastticate it as long as you choose. But the people know all about the matter.

—The cigar factory is booming and the proprietors inform us they will soon have ten men at work manufacturing their superior brands of cigars.

—Mr. L. A. Rose, of Ironton, brother of H. O. Rose and father of Eugene and Perry W. Rose, of Petoskey, died lately of injuries received by being thrown from a load of hay.

—John T. Kirkpatrick has the plain out for Gus. Chalupska's proposed new residence on the north side and the building promises to be a fine one. The foundation is already built.

—The W. C. T. U. will have a supper and social next Friday evening in the Baptist church. Supper will be served from 6 o'clock until 8. Admission 15 cents, program at 8. All are cordially invited.

—Henry Cooper should be his own successor. He has made a painstaking and capable supervisor and has proven himself a worthy representative of the township. Let the Republicans rally to his support.

—You will be likely to hear rockbacks and roorlacks in the political caucus, but don't be fooled by them. There is no reason why every republican in the circuit should not vote for R. L. Corbett for judge. He was made the unanimous choice of the convention and has a warm champion in Judge Hansdell himself. Let Corbett's majority be fully 500 in Charlevoix county.

—We have always stood up for Egbert Carpenter, as a friend and champion the cause of a friend. We have always liked him since we played in the band with him years ago. To be sure he had faults, but we credited them in the interest of good fellowship, and we call on Bob Miller of Ironton, to stand up and say if what we state is not true. Time has dealt gently with our friend, notwithstanding his gray hairs, and we had rejoiced that his heart was yet the same and his mind as vigorous as of yore. But they tell us he has bought a bicycle, and thus another idol is broken. They tell us also that he has without authority from the village council entered the village hall with the machine, and there defaced the walnut trim in his efforts to ride the thing; that he had been heard to use language concerning all such machines which if true, would not constitute effective advertising matter; that in less in his daily experiments, dismabled the tailor and his family who dwell below. If these charges are true we hope our friend will see the error of his way, and endeavor such manner of carryings on, in his old age. My! My! What are we coming to when gray hairs are thus made a spectacle of. Next thing we expect to hear is that Uncle Wesley Cross is astride of a bicycle and parting down Bridge street alongside Eg. Carpenter and the editor of the Democrat.

—Stevens Bros. received 19 fine horses to-day.

—Jerome Heath has a new advertisement in this issue. Read it.

—The Charlevoix Hardware Co.'s changed advertisement invites your attention. As usual they have choice clover and timothy seeds for sale at lowest market prices.

—The High School Reading Club will give a public reading next Tuesday evening at the high school room, opening at 7:30 o'clock. The subject is "New England." A varied program consisting of music, readings, essays and recitations, has been prepared. The pupils will be glad to meet their friends on that occasion.

—Will Stevens and his estimable wife are feeling cheap. On Thursday evening last a crowd of their neighbors and friends went to their residence in the "dank of the evening," with surprise party intentions. They found everybody gone, but managed to get in. They waited for some time for Mr. and Mrs. Stevens to return, and finally sent out a skirmishing party, which scoured the town pretty thoroughly, but in vain. About eleven o'clock they returned home from Harrison Hedford's where they had been spending the evening.

—Mr. Nash's communication in the Democrat surprises us. It is true that the SENTINEL declined to give it place in its columns, for the reason that we though Mr. Nash himself, upon mature reflection would modify his opinion and forbear publishing his strictures. We must protest that his ideas are wrong, in that they are without the premises necessary to forceful argument. Mr. Corbett was fairly nominated by a majority vote of the convention, and Mr. Nash has no right to impugn the motives of any delegate. Mr. Nash bases his statements upon a supposed wrong to Judge Hansdell, yet the Judge clearly and emphatically disproves every one of them in his open letter to the voters, published in this week's SENTINEL. Mr. Corbett's nomination was the outcome of conditions which made a compromise necessary, and to question the honesty of his selection is to deny the time-honored principle that a majority shall rule.

AN OLD TIMER.

The Famous Jack Papineau's Name Leads All the Rest.

You would not believe it to look at him, but John Papineau, of this village, was one of the first white men to look out upon the landscape from the Lake Michigan bluff and recognize the site of the future metropolis of the Pine Lake Region—Charlevoix. But he was.

He located on Beaver Island in 1849, remaining there one winter, removing to Fox Island, where he lived two winters. In 1852 he came to "Pine River" in the employ of Alva Cable, of Mackinaw, a pioneer fisherman of the Straits. The first roof that covered his head here was that of a shanty located where Lewis Grand Opera House now stands. It was built of balsam poles cut at the bayou. The only means of outside communication was by a small schooner Maria, which brought supplies from Mackinac and took back their fish. Tim Smith—our own Tim—was then fishing on the point two miles west of the river, and used to holler to Jack across the bay when the wind was right.

All this was before the Mormons came to these parts, but in 1853 Jack was in the scrap with those worthies when the late Louis Gebo was wounded by a bullet from the gun of a saint. Hon. Charles R. Wright, the present venerable President of Harbor Springs, was the cooper of the Pine River fishing party. Jack says they were compelled to cut the cedar from the mouth of the river before they could get in with their small boats.

Jack Papinau is about 60 years old, but he is as frisky as when he helped drive the Mormons from this shore, and he expects to live long enough to see the water works well completed, and Charlevoix a city.

Judge Hansdell's Opinion.

To the voters of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit.

At the republican judicial convention held at Bellaire on the second and third instant Roscoe L. Corbett received the nomination for circuit judge. Mr. Corbett was not a candidate and did not expect to be a candidate until the balloting had determined that neither of the candidates whose names had been presented could be nominated. A majority of the delegates becoming satisfied of that fact, were forced to the alternative of selecting a new candidate or of adjourning without making a nomination. I was consulted by a number of delegates, those opposed to the nomination as well as those who favored one, in reference to the selection that should be made. I unhesitatingly recommended Mr. Corbett as the best qualified for circuit judge of any republican lawyer in the circuit. I said to them as I say to you: he has practiced law in my circuit for ten years or more, I know his qualifications thoroughly. He is well read in the law, has a thorough knowledge of practice, quick to comprehend the full force of a proposition, a logical reasoner and clear in statement and would therefore if elected be able to do the business of the court rapidly and accurately. He is even tempered, and I believe will be strictly impartial between attorneys and litigants, and I believe it to be for the best interest of the people that he be elected.

J. G. HANSDELL.

Norwood Notes.

Elmer Mayne's big dog Major is dead. Cause, "heart failure."

Van Pelt has bought the house and lot of Alick Wright.

"The King's Sons and Daughters" give a social at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening of this week.

The caucus for the nomination of Township officers for the town of Norwood will be held on Saturday evening, March 25.

The population of Norwood was increased last week by two little baby girls; one at Willard Spaulding's on Monday, and the other at the parsonage on St. Patrick's Day in the morning.

School will close on Friday of this week for three weeks' vacation.

Miss Carrow has taken the school at Atwood for a term of three months.

Capt. Hume, of Petoskey, has been granted a pension by Uncle Sam, should receive something like $2,000 back pay.

In Sheep's Clothing.

If Leo Hedges should accept him, the rajah had a heavily matured plan, which in due season would take him away from his companions and permit him to be near Isabel at all times.

He was fortunate in finding Leo alone, and she, having just returned from a horseback ride, was looking more beautiful than ever, if that were possible.

Captain Fox, like all men of strong impulses and great executive ability, came directly to the point yet he approached the subject of his love in such a way as to elicit sympathy for the and honesty of his declaration.

Under such circumstances, since the very best lover which English civilization produced had the young lady's affections were as essential as the consent of the parents, it had been the height of inexcusable taste of the fair one to continue coquetting, and to vow that he hence was wholly unexpected. This, I always, is the case where the young lady has made up her mind to say "no," and she modestly says it in a way that leaves the wound also in tingling.

No one could be more high with other than sympathy on the eligible man whose offer of marriage she refuses.

"I must believe what I have told you, and I must repeat it. I should feel honored by your offer, if I could accept it, but I am the possessor of any true and it perfectly sacred feelings which I have for you with the courtesy due an officer in the service of my country, I say the Queen, I have done nothing that you could consider into my engagement of the suit which I must decline.

"Sir, why—why do you refuse me?" he asked, the sangfroid lost in his surprise and hurting to purple.

"If you cannot guess I cannot explain," she replied, with a dignity that thrilled him.

"It means that you love some another.

"Is by should it? But that you may be satisfied on that point, let me prove to you that you are the first man that ever spoke to me of love and marriage. You should remember that I have spoken you in a short time, and that, no matter how favorable the impression you may have made among so far as a common professor would forbid my pledging what I have to offer—a man whom I did not know two weeks ago.

"You are right, Miss Hedges, and I ask no pardon. Said the captain, his old manner coming back. "But you must excuse me if I say that I think I am better, just received by the man in question or, be sure, I would be not that city. It is possible, I may be able to fight a duel with your captain kid, who is now regarded throughout our country as the hero of the West Indies. I sail to-morrow morning, and if I return, and I will not be long, I will come to you and ask you if you will be my wife. Meanwhile, I will not see you, and I will not mention my love to your father, or anyone else, save Lieutenant Dayton, to whom I shall write a full account of my love and of my offer. Will you promise me that you will not see Lieutenant Hedges?

"Sir, I do not like to promise anything that I do not intend to keep. Lieutenant Hedges is my friend, and I shall see him when I please.

"Then I shall, at once write Fox to that effect. Frenaud is waiting for my answer.

And that it came about that Captain Dunham sailed away in the Wanderer. Had the powers of darkness deliberately planned to set Captain Fox and Colonel Graham in their dark schemes, matters could not have worked better for their hands.

Colonel Graham was not a demonstrative man, in the society, he was cold, self-possessed, suspicious and cynical, but since Fox had his high Graham's letter accepting the offer, Graham spoke from his cabin, and in his monetary exultation, solved his conscience that he was not a priest at an oath.

"Now, we have him, sir! we have him!

It was reported that Col. Graham was going to Fort Ville, in the West Indies, but the people expressed no surprise when the news came that he had sailed out him.

In the night before the morning when the ship sailed away, of. Graham, who had made his headquarters at the inn, was taken alarmingly ill, and Dr. Fox was called in to attend to the case, that idiot Dr. Fox.

The illness was a fearful one to give an excuse for recording his doctor's latest, make a response, but the Colonel treated Bleeding was then thought to be a great remedy, and Fox, a toothache to Antigua officers, and the doctor left the patient so weak that he could not move for a week.

It was decidedly dangerous to "fool" with doctors in those days, when bleeding and blistering killed the weak, and saved the survivors of the strongest.

Squire Condit was the only person of note in the town that did not visit the sick man, but the people all thought the Squire eccentric.

A few days after the Wanderer sailed away, Dinah, the old black woman, finally forced her way into Col. Graham's room.

The rather startling disclosures that the old woman made, and the remarkable conduct of the invalid must form the subject of the next chapter.

THE HOG-MAN AND A FRENCH MOTHER.

It was a rule of the old French law that monarchs come of age at 13. Louis the Fourteenth was in his thirteenth birthday. He had grown into a tall, fine-looking lad his measures were gentle, he was an excellent horseman; he danced admirably, he was a good shot, and he had already shown that lack of fear which was so conspicuous in his later years were so strongly developed.

But before he mounted the throne, he had already passed through a trying experience. It was right that the lad should be acquainted with the struggles and hardships of his subjects, and Bella rang, in the people turned out, at the sound of the tocsin, and marched against the Palais Royal.

Arrived at the palace gates, the people demanded their will "long long shook our king!" they cried. Within the palace were Queen Anne, the Queen Mother, pale, and trembling, clung to her children, and to her minister. Hence the shout for the king, she—his mother—was ambitious for her son, thrown open wide. She faced the mob of them who would enter, and asked what they wanted. To see the king, was the answer. "Your majesty, believe that you do not intend to steal him from us."

"The king sleeps," replied the queen, "I will show him to you."

With all the regal grace for which she was famous, she turned slowly to the door, then gathering to her side a young man, she led the way to the Queen's room, and over the Palais Royal. Some of the people were moved, and some were ready to set her in their dark hearts, and disappointed, and disregarding the flying Queen, they followed the lad and he put on a full load of steam.

The engine struck the door of the room with sufficient accident, but it remained on without accident, the lad followed by the engineer and a number of rebel princes a trained of Union soldiers, the people, the people, the people, and one the passing trade, killing and wounding a number of people.

GRAINS OF GOLD.

The engaged is brother to the beggar.

People who hope are generally people who help.

Hope is the only debt which it is wrong to pay.

Men must have to live alone never find out who they are.

Ask truth to answer to the man who has taken a lie into his heart.

The best medicine for sorrow is to lend it to someone else.

The man who never sorrows we make has the power to tell us something we didn't know before, and we thank him for it.

Men are preachers who would make several rational changes in the world if they would only practice.

One trouble with the world is that people are so busy minding numbers and not enough Christians.

A little word has no more right to be spoken than a little lie. Any kind of a sin may mean to lose your own life.

School for Spinning Opened.

A school for spinning has been opened in Paris. It teaches all sorts of virtues inherent in spinning, and the pupils are taught to be thrifty, thrift practiced by the wise woman of the spinners, who had her mind up and at their wheels by candlelight. Spinning is as general in Paris as sewing is in America, or playing the harp. It showed off the figure, the elastic grace of movement, the feet, the womanly trend. It has a tonic effect on the mind, the fingers of the piano. The eye must be carefully trained, and the ear must be quite on note any irregularity of movement. The will must sit enthroned and see that the mind, the foot, the eye, the ear keep perfect harmony. It has a moral effect on the character, the irritable spinner's work will show in the uneven yarn. The spinner of calm, equable mind produces a firm, even yarn. It is a summer disease wheel as the violinist his violin. The wheel and the loom must be carefully proportioned, and the machinery turns lightly and smoothly, so that the fingers may do their work unclouded. But the best recommendation of the spinning-wheel is that the rhythmic wheel and its non tonous music soothe and strengthen the nerves of the anxiety nerves.—New York Sun.

Invention for Means.

The same genius of woman inventions is Mrs. Rita Neilson Gaitard of Montreal. Her latest invention was an automatic toy, which she called the "irrepressible Jackstraw," capable of an infinite number of amusing operations. Then she invented the "Ladies' Companion," a device for holding flat-iron, then a novel bird-cage chain. Then she got out a musical fountain for a tame and throws a stream of water with such precision that not a drop and escapes to soil the carpet. She made a stress shield, neatness, speed, and ease in ironing, and then she invented a carriage telephone. Finally she printed into mechanism and invented a lock which enables any one to shut the door in the key, to tell whether the door is locked or not, the locking being registered on a dial, and to do that at the key hole instead of the door. Mrs. Gaitard is a woman of great energy of womanhood alone an hole. Everyone knows what they have done. Everyone knows what they have done in the seasons past, in order to keep up with the fashions, and it now only reckons for them to keep up with the fashions in the coming year like this one, for it is indeed a very fashionable one. Dressed if any but American women had the opportunity to wear the pretty, womanly, winsomeness in their natural elevenness will discover something that will make the heart throb with pride of courage and relentless a plea that graceful and the sex of fashion falls upon the clinging draperies of past seasons and the fashions of the ladies and hysterics.—Philadelphia Times.

Women of Fashion—Temper.

It is like living in a den of startling animals to live with a woman of fashion this sort of temper, writes Ella Wheeler Wilcox in the Ladies' Home Destroyer of Domestic Happiness." In the Ladies' House Journal. Many women who have the right to be the possessor go in blues—upon being a Darkness, and it is the duty of society by his hardly. Yet, if the sump has a little spot or two, it is not too much proper, if a mental is a mere spot, it is not too much to ask of the mirth, if a drawer sticks, or a door slams, or a pin pricks, or a fly buzzes, or a pepper of unavoidable temper, which rifles the sweetness of the home, and sometimes for an hour. Many a woman is adjudged to be a fine, good, and lovely woman who is a fiend in her own home. The spinner of calm, equable mind produces a firm, even yarn. It is a summer disease wheel as the violinist his violin. The wheel and the loom must be carefully proportioned, and the machinery turns lightly and smoothly, so that the fingers may do their work unclouded. But the best recommendation of the spinning-wheel is that the rhythmic wheel and its non tonous music soothe and strengthen the nerves of the anxiety nerves.—New York Sun.

Hints for Fruits.

Any desirable fruit may be lost by dipping first in the lemon white of an egg, then in fine sugar. Apples thus until the bring is sufficiently thick. Peaches should be peeled and cut in halves, and sweet, juicy pears are treated in the same way. Cherries, strawberries and other small fruits are best with tweezers on only, the largest being chosen. Pineapples should be cut only thin slices and these again divided into quarters. Oranges and lemons should be carefully peeled and all the white skin removed. Lemons are cut into thin slices, and oranges are divided into quarters.

Winter Dangers of Children.

An idea prevails that winter weather is beneficial to young children. If the temperature is below freezing, and the mercury dangerous it is for the child's health the rather life than to have a bad mother. The easiest thing for a leader to do is to find fault with his people.

The most dangerous thing to follow anybody who is not following Christ.

Every man is a true hand thinks his born makes the best music.

NEARLY All Christ's preaching was to the sinners in the church.

Trouble is no greater misfortune in life than to have a bad mother.

A QUESTION.

A Huge Chinese Lie.—Is There a Chinese Wall? to Ridge?

According to Abbe Lacroix three lo-ent, and he has published a book to prove that the "Great Wall of China" is only a gigantic myth. Lacroix claims to have lived for years under what would have been the shadow of the "Great Wall" had such structure really existed, but that during that time he never as much as heard the myth alluded to. "This huge Chinese wall," he says, "is simply a huge Chinese lie." His space permit I would like to quote further from this unique French work, but believing that the majority of the Republic's readers believe or know that the wall is a reality, I would rather give arguments in proof of its existence. All the standard and trustworthy histories of the Celestial empire, as well as those on the Orient in general, refute the testimony of this globe-trotting slide. The editor of that great English newspaper, the London Standard says, "I would like to inform friend Lacroix that I have sat upon the great wall, and that I now have a photograph of it which was taken by one of our company." General James H. Wilson of New York city, who thoroughly inspected the wall in 1894, has this to say, of it on page 219 of his "China." " * * "The Chinese call it the 'Ten Thousand Li Wall'—perhaps this name that 10,000 lies have been told about it—and if it originally had such a length it would be 3,350 miles in length. * * It is from twenty-five to thirty feet thick, that outside and in with cut granite masonry laid in regular courses with a mortar made of lime and sand. The top is paved with a double layer of bricks, each about a foot square, the inside of the wall being composed of loose earth and stones well rammed in."

Lacroix says the average fresh of lies a person got elected into a London freeand-easy club. One morning he came up early from the country and, eager for his breakfast, entered the coffee-room. "What can I have to eat?" asked the person. "Very sorry, sir," replied the head waiter, glancing at his clock; "but the committee has given strict orders that supper mustn't be served after eight in the morning. But I think I can get you some oysters." "Argument.

The Salt of the Earth.

The waters of the oceans and seas of our globe hold not less than 60,000,000,000,000,000 tons of salt in suspension. If these figures are correct and the ocean should be entirely dried up, there would be a deposit of salt 450 feet deep over every foot of the great basin. It takes out and spread upon what is now dry land it would give a salt covering nearly 1,000 feet thick.

THE ANIMATED SKULL.

A Death's Head That Presented to the Sense of the Once.

It was a very pretty girl that had procured a cardinal of bones from the far West and an infinite time I had spent in carting from the box I picked it up and took it to the office and placed it on top of the office clock. There, as the hours ticked away, I sat and watch the ticks and tacks and try to imagine what the person had looked like who owned that skull. An ugly look in case she opened a field of silent inquiry as to whether it was made by a bullet, and whether murder or suicide had caused death. I never quite made up my mind about it, but found the skull a source of pleasure in furnishing a theme for clearing the cobwebs from my brain. Given tired of business cares. During one session in the office one night on my way home from the theatre I opened the door and stepped in. The electric light threw fantastic shadows across the floor. The only sound within was the ticking of the clock, and above it, at the spacious eye of my departed, unknown friend. I sat down a moment to think and as I did so the skull seemed to rise up on legs, and in the twilight light and hovering gently at me, while the eye-sockets looked the right hand and looked daggers at me. Was amazed. My tongue seemed immovable, and my knees were paralyzed. Believe I could recover my lost presence of mind the grinning skull bound forward, floated gracefully to the floor, and threw out my left arm to indicate a corner in the shadows. I could feel my eyes fall out upon my cheeks, and my hair lift me by the heart, while I knew that my consciousness was the action pulse of death. It was impossible to get out of the room, and I was a prisoner of defiance I seized the iron poker and hoisted in fair fight and troubling.

Then the skull advanced quarter. Then in listening through my ears. Grasping the poker firmly I charged upon the ghost of the station. At the same moment the skull rolled harmlessly on the floor toward me, and I away scattered a huge rat, having use work and prospering. The rat had entered the skull from the clock shelf and in attempting to get out had been bad luck in the office at the base of the skull. This joined the party with the rat, the first and the rat running round and round the room kept ghostly terrors in my imagination until I believed the skull was alive again. It was a frightful experience, and if the rat had not escaped just when he did I should believe in ghosts to this day.

DICKENS AS A DANCER.

He Was Always in Demand and a Favorite.

My father thought that my sister Katie and I should read the polka step to him—and Mr. Lucas, fellow Manic director, in the Carrier Dove Journal. My father was so much in approval of the dance that he wanted fat step personally to thought there were any faults in the dance improvement in the world. Often so would practice the step, and I remember rather positive of music and I remember succeeded without a single his awkwardness. Not the fear that he had forgotten the step so strong upon him that I could not dance with him. Dickens was a favorite, and I was bound to keep up with the procession if it kills the horse."

Clockwork in Cities.

Nowadays the regularity of some kind or other is almost universal in China. The general household has otherwise practicable, its part cook and three or four hour man, which work in one of the most shanty in search of every thing suitable that no other family happy to be able.

A LITTLE MISTAKE.

The man who said this to a New York Herald man, one of the widely known physicians of New York, went on to explain as follows: "The other day my son asked me to buy him a bicycle and, while I would like to do it, I have been hesitating because I know that if he rides very much he will become afflicted with the safety stoop.' Camera-ral laryngitis is the latest disease charged up against the bicycle. I was going along the street the other day and I saw half a dozen young men who were neither straight nor crooked. They were all bicycle riders as I could tell at a glance, and they were all afflicted with the 'safety stoop.' Safety stoop is a mighty bad thing. The man with a safety stoop, as it is called, often suffers impaired vitality. There is a peculiar thing on his back that can not be explained in words. It looks like the stoop of the fellow who does the single-scull rig. To ride the bicycle is no doubt healthful exercise, but, like everything else in this world, it has its drawbacks, and one of them is the 'safety stoop.'

"The other day," went on the doctor, "a young woman called on me at my office and said: 'Doctor, I don't know what is the matter with my husband. I am getting dead in my left ear.' Well, it was a case of the 'telephone ear.' The world is so full of it you know how many of our young women are becoming partially deaf through the constant use of the telephone. It is a common case now that the aurists have coined the name 'telephone ear' to designate the peculiarities of the case. The 'telephone ear' is the result of the nervous tension of one ear in listening at the receiver of the telephone. I adviced my young people, and my wives, too, who are afflicted in this way, to vary the ear in listening through the 'phone. If they do not, sooner or later the hearing of the ear that is worked too much will become serious, perhaps permanently impaired.

"Another strange case," went on the man, "is found among our girls, who are altogether too much addicted to the use of chewing gum. Now, a girl who chews gum on every occasion is working her jaws too much—in connection with her teeth—to an unmitigated taking. The result is the muscles of the jaws are overworked. There is a reaction. Her jaws become set and well nigh immovable. Her speech then takes the form of monosyllables. I do not want to be misunderstood in this matter. I say that the girl who chews gum, to excess will sooner or later, find that her jaws refuse to act with their usual freedom.

"It is widely known that the dentist's disease, for illustration, is a kidney complaint. Nine dentists out of ten suffer with it. This is because their work compels them to bend over after hour rooted in one spot. The strain falls on the kidneys, of the back and, as it happens, develops kidney trouble. I mention this as an illustration of what I am driving at.

"As the result of the prize fight between Sullivan and Corbett some unique conclusions were drawn by the men who pose as the leaders.

"'A man has a fat neck he might have all the science in the world yet his blows would be so slow that they would not amount to very much. He might be able to think quick enough, but before he could get his thought into blows his name would be mud.'

Russia and Her Wolves.

What is known in Russia, writes the Moscow correspondent, that wolf season commences with the early spring thaw and continues until late in the spring. The last year for which statistics of the depredations committed by the wolves are given are sufficiently remarkable. In one year, namely, according to the data carefully collected by governors, the total loss of domestic animals by wolves amounted to 810,600 head, valued at 8,000,000 rubles, which is about equal to one year's wolf tax revenue. An evidence that the ravages of wolves does not appreciably decrease, when government of Olonetz is cited, where the wolves were destroyed in 1875, 6,785 head; in 1880, 5,322; in 1885, 3,158, and in 1889, 1,600. In some of the above-mentioned governments does the number of wolves annually destroyed average more than 100, and thus are generally the younger animals not yet trained to the crafty tactics of the older wolves and pack leaders.

The English and French Orators.

With us hearing orators is a serious duty. Contrast with the Frenchman it is an artistic pleasure and a holiday because, even though it be at the gymnasie or at the throes of a revolutionary language, whether in a speech or book, he welcomes as an esthetic treat, and stimulant, the finest of finesses being, of course, proportioned to his degree of culture. The Frenchmen's class have been found to own that phrases, highly effective in their day, are only vulgar tinsel. He views the eloquence of the orator much as we do that of the stage, as a professional art, therefore he is sharp and enthusiastic critic. Truth, old verseyle, naked facts, strong reasons, is not what he wants but inspiring themes clothed in grand words.—The Academy.

A Remedy for Cold Feet.

All that is necessary, says an exchange, is to stand erect, and very gradually lift oneself upon the tips of the toes, so as to put all the tendons of the foot at full status. This is not so easy as it may seem at first, the weight of the body is thrown on the balls of the toes, and the tendons are thrown into a state of tension, so as to put all the tendons of the foot at full status. This is not so hard if one stands with an upright back and, as it happens, develops kidney trouble. I mention this as an illustration of what I am driving at.

"As the result of the prize fight between Sullivan and Corbett some unique conclusions were drawn as to why the famous man had not won.

"John L. went into the ring with too much cerebral fat on his neck. He was too full of intellectual activity in the cerebellum. I advance the startling theory that the trouble with John L. was that he had too fat a neck. This prevented him striking a rapid blow.

"'If a man has a fat neck he might have all the science in the world yet his blows would be so slow that they would not amount to very much. He might be able to think quick enough, but before he could get his thought into blows his name would be mud.'"

NO WORK WITHOUT ITS WOE.

Ills That Attack Telephone Girls, Bicycle Riders and Gum Chewers.

The man who said this to a New York Herald man, one of the widely known physicians of New York, went on to explain as follows: "The other day my son asked me to buy him a bicycle and, while I would like to do it, I have been hesitating because I know that if he rides very much he will become afflicted with the safety stoop.' IT WOULD KILL HIM.

But Know His Duties too Well to Do Such a Thing.

We have a our midst, so to speak, a young business man who is very active, but who has not yet made his pile. He has an uncle in the East who is very wealthy, and who has got all his our young friend much good. Not long ago he needed a little good fowm some difficulty in borrowing it.

"Why don't you ask your uncle for a loan?" inquired one banker to whom he applied.

The young man instantly became profoundly solemn.

"Why, sir," he said, impressively, do you want me to become a murderer?"

"A murderer?" echoed the banker in startled tones.

"A murderer," and the young man became as grave as a funeral.

"Certainly not, my dear fellow, certainly not," exclaimed the banker, with a sigh of relief.

"Why, sir, if I should ask that uncle of mine to lend me $5,000 he would drop dead on the spot."

A Foster Queen Dismissed.

In recognition of the Sunday-school, whose deceased husband was a Dalmatian, it appears, has always been suckled to learn something of the relations of her deceased spouse, and commissioned every captain of an Austrian ship who visited her to inquire after them and send her word. At last, says our Vienna correspondent, the officers of the Danube, who reported to the government on the subject, have been successful. But among the latest of the thousand they have found a wife, or rather widow, who, as soon as she heard her canine stood, declared she would use the widowed queen to obtain the private property of her runaway husband.

Sealing Wax Language.

Native to the continent, says a correspondent, may notice in the windows of fashionable stationers rows of sealing-wax of all hues and shades and sizes, in order like the colors of the spectrum. It appears that a meaning attached to each of these colors. Thus, white sealing-wax means a proposal of marriage; red, a death; black, condolences. Invitations to dinner are sealed with chocolate color, revocation is used for business letters; ruby color by fortunate lovers. Green means hope; brown, melancholy; violet, forbidden "brown study;" blue, constancy; yellow, jealousy. Her letter conveys a reproof; pink is used by ladies, and grey between friends.

Ancient Sculpture.

Mr. Charles C. Leland traces the origin of the sculpture in reference to small place—there is not room enough to swing a cat," to a superstition current in Transylvania. In this country it is said, if a cat runs away, when removed she must be swung three times around to attract her to the dwelling. The ceremony with a sickly cat by a thief if he would restore it.

Haverwood, Chicago, Ill.

I cannot say how it is with the transient hotels and dual merchant, or a scheme that they may have an end in view at its very start, but there is a fact not usually noticed by even very industrious readers and thinkers, and one which should inspire confidence in our statements. It is that we are here forever; not for a day or a year. We dare not impose upon you if we would. We cannot cheat you and then get away with a profit therefrom. If we deceive you we must stay and face it. That means safety for you and decent liberal dealings for us. We know it. It would cost cold and hospitable dissatisfaction and public condemnation to emphasize imperfections by persistently advertising them. It is not simply in publishing the advantages of a commodity or a line of travel that increase the revenue. Publication is an necessary, after fact. The fact is the possession of good features. The newspaper is at once the position of making fact known, and as well guarantees of its genuineness. The C. & W. M. and I. L. & N. are favorite lines. Increase such is the fact. These equipment is of the best, trains are run on fast schedules, and everything is done to make a journey over them a pleasure, instead of otherwise. Give us a trial and see for yourself. Geo. DeHaven, General Passenger Agent.

ENGLAND AND GERMANY SAID TO DO SO.

—The Belgian Anti-Slavery society has written a second protest against Commander Lambermont, secretary-General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, requesting that diplomatic action be taken to stop the continually growing supply of guns to Arab slave traders in East Africa in defiance of the provisions of the Brussels Anti-Slavery Conference. The Independent Belge, commenting on the communication, says that the Belgian Anti-Slavery Society has conclusive proof that Europeans and Germans are accomplices in tolerating the traffic.

—Miss Maude Mettler, postmistress at Lucas, Mo., has been arrested charged with forging the name to a money order addressed by a young man to a rival in her affections.

—Seven trunks were stolen in New York claim-house offices which arrived on the steamship Gaza. They belonged to Miss Burton of Baltimore, one to Miss Kate Bond of Chicago, two to Miss Borden and Miss Stevenson, Miss Stevenson of 1440 Michigan avenue, Chicago, and the others to Mrs. Ward of St. Louis, who also claims a residence in Dunger, Me. Their owners will endeavor to get the officers to release a part of the dresses seized.

—The Egyptian cotton seed which was purchased by Secretary Rusk, through the United States Consul General at Cairo, Egypt, has been received at the Department of Agriculture. This seed is to be used in experiments, with a view to producing a cotton which will be free from the "sticker" difficulty, a condition, the Egyptians, of which during the last fiscal year more than three million dollars worth was imported into this country, an increase of ten million over the previous year and of considerably more than 100 per cent. over the year ending in 1891. The seed received at the Department consists of two of the most long staple Egyptian varieties, the "ASH" and the "Sunaiki." The distribution will be made to the experiment stations and planters in the cotton States.

Hastings from Hayes.

Geo. O. Scott will move on his farm in the spring.

Mrs. Fannie Norman, wife of A. S. Norman, and daughter of Geo. Saunby, died Thursday last, and was buried in Petoskey cemetery Sunday. Funeral services were held at Burgess, attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends.

Levi House, an old pioneer of Hayes, died Saturday night, aged 72 years. He had been a resident of this town since 1851. Interment at Charlevoix on Tuesday.

Mrs. Newsted, wife of John Newsted, and daughter of Rev. R. H. Whitman, died Sunday evening. Funeral services were held at Unionville Tuesday afternoon, and the interment at Pine Lake cemetery.

The union caucus will be held at Burgess Saturday, the 25th, at 10 o'clock, and the Democratic caucus at Newson's hall same day at one o'clock. "You pays your money and you takes your choice."

Miss Olive S. Chew is spending a week or two at Clarion, visiting.

S. A. Bacot has had a favorable offer made him, and he will probably take to the lake this summer.

"There is going to be a political earthquake in Hayes this spring. The Democrats are tired of being used as cat's-paw for the Republican monkey." Well, my friend, we we will all see the circus anyhow.

The pioneer store, at Bay Shore, has just stocked up with Henderson's school shoes. Come and get a bargain in footwear.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Several parties are building ice houses and filling them with ice about 18 inches thick.

Sixteen teams were tied around the station when the 2:30 train arrived last Wednesday.

The P. L. I. Co. received three car loads of hay from the Dalton siding last week. Hay is cheaper than at this time last year.

Mr. Dunlap's household goods arrived last week and he is anxious to get a house that he may go to housekeeping.

E. A. Lewis and family, of Boston, were over last Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Beardslee, land agent of the G. R. & I. was in town last Wednesday on business.

The big, nice sounding whistle on the Nash mill awoke the echoes of Ellsworth for the first time last Wednesday. It is but the first of many that will adorn the mills and manufactories that are coming to locate in the "Shadow" city" of the Intermediate Valley.

David Blissit and his mother, with Mrs. Wm. Blissett made a visit last week to relatives at Alden.

Wm. Cowen, of Norwood, took the train for Guelph, Ont. Monday on a visit to his mother.

P. J. Meech, wife and daughter were in town over Sunday.

Ellsworth has averaged this winter three car loads of merchandise per day.

The livery men have great times watching the trains here. Some days it costs a dollar to ride over to East Jordan, and other days you can ride over for twenty-five cents.

Northern Michigan News.

Boyne City is torn up over the question of cows running at large.

The citizens of Petoskey held an enthusiastic meeting one evening last week, and voted a bonus for an immense plant that will manufacture from five to ten million feet of hardwood flooring per annum. Hackley & Foreman are the projectors.

A pair of horses weighing but 1,700 pounds apiece are said to have hauled on Feb. 26 at Ewen, Ontonagon county, the largest load of logs ever piled upon sleighs. They belonged to the Nestor estate. There were fifty logs in ten tiers, all 18 feet long and contained 36,055 feet, the hight of load from runner up was 13½ feet.

The Cheboygan and Petoskey Democrats are having a lively row these days, growing out of the judgeship fight between Partlow and Brown. Editor Hampton calls Editor Forsyth a liar, and the latter comes back by stating that Hampton tried to bribe him with $50 to support Hampton's candidate. When thieves fall out honest people get a chance to see the corruption which has been going on in the inside.—Alpena Pioneer.

East Jordan Enterprise: A gentleman from this place took dinner on Saturday last with Dr. David Ward of Mancelona. Mr. Ward said if the deeds of the right of way and terminal were furnished him he would have his grading crew working on it inside of sixty days. If the deeds were not forthcoming the road will not be built here. Isn't it about time to get a move on?

At the Petoskey village election the Republicans elected President, one trustee, street commissioner and constable by from 4 to 56 majority. The Democrats elected two trustees, clerk treasurer and assessor by from 3 to 36 majority. The Record says that only for errors in making the ballots, the Republicans would have elected every candidate on their ticket except treasurer and assessor. The two Democratic trustees were elected by only 3 majority.

Grand Traverse Herald: The finest specimen of Grand Traverse prehistoric pottery we have ever seen was found recently by P. T. Simmonds, on his farm on Sec. 6, in Long Lake township. Last fall a heavy wind fell the timber on several acres and this winter Mr. Simmonds removed it. Underneath one turned up roots of a maple measuring two-and-a-half feet below diameter and about three feet below the surface of the ground a large broken pottery vessel was found. The curve of the largest piece shows the vessel to have been about fifteen inches across the top and perhaps twelve inches deep.

Good Roads.

The provisions of the constitutional amendment for the building and maintenance of good roads in the state are as follows:

The legislature may provide for the laying out, construction and maintenance of county and township roads, and may provide than any road heretofore laid out shall be a county or township road. County roads may be maintained at the expense of the county, and township roads at the expense of the township. The cost of making or maintaining roads may be paid in whole or in part by assessment upon property benefited not exceeding one half of such benefit.

County roads shall be under the control of a board of commissioners, not to exceed five in number, who shall be elected by the people, the number and commissioners to be fixed by the board of supervisors of the county.

For the construction and maintenance of the county roads the commissioners may provide for an annual tax not exceeding $2 upon each $1,000 of the assessment roll of the county for the preceding year.

No county shall incur any indebtedness or issue any bonds for the construction or maintenance of any county roads, except upon a vote of two-thirds of all the supervisors elect, and then to be approved by a majority vote at any general election; nor shall any such indebtedness at any time exceed 3 per cent of the valuation of the county upon the last preceding assessment roll.

The legislature may modify, change or repeal the powers and duties of the township commissioner of highways and overseer of highways. The legislature may pass necessary laws to carry this amendment into effect. Provided. That any act or acts passed by the legislature to carry this amendment into effect shall provide for a county and township system, and the county system shall become operative only in such counties as shall adopt it by a majority vote at the election of said county, after the said question has been submitted to them by a two-thirds vote of all the members elect of the board of supervisors of such county, at a general or special election called for that purpose.

—Hon. Richard Knight, the pioneer of Banks township, is now a resident of Charlevoix. Isaac Mills will begin work on Mr. Knight's new residence at once. Charlevoix is gradually absorbing the cream of suburban population.

—Force of habit sometimes causes ludicrous blunders. Last week we announced that Miss "Effie Berdan" had gone after new goods. We have written that name so often that the mistake was quite a natural one to make. Mrs. Clayton, however, understands it.

—Roscoe L. Corbett is a Charlevoix county man. He is a man against whom nothing can be truthfully said. His ability is of a high order and he is specially well fitted for the bench. Charlevoix County should see to it that his majority is large.

—Frank H. Rainey, Republican candidate for commissioner of schools is a man so well known throughout the county that an appeal for him is necessary. There is not a man in Charlevoix county who is better qualified for that position that he. He is an experienced teacher and a man of irreproachable character.

—The Democrats held their township caucus last week and nominated the following ticket: Supervisor, D. C. Nettleton; clerk E. A. Watson; treasurer, Louis Miller; highway commissioner, A. N. Bowdish; Justice, D. S. Way; board of review, H. W. Knox, L. D. Bartholomew.

The Peoples party nominated the following ticket, Monday evening: Supervisor, A. J. Medge; clerk, F. A. Watson; treasurer, Louis Miller; highway commissioner, H. Medge; school inspector, B. F. Hubee; board of review, Lyman E. Benton, Wm. Greer.

—R. A. Emrey and family and Bernie Gellick returned from Florida yesterday. Morris Stockman is on his way home, but L. D. Bartholomew will linger at Port Orange until May. Byron See is home in Detroit, but Mrs. See is in Atlanta.

—The water-works well is a gusher —that is a moderate gusher. They are down something over 225 feet, and as we write the drill is in rock, from the fragments of which the present flow comes. It is thought that when the bottom of the rock stratum is reached a better flow will follow. Superintendent Gnaedinger favors the plan of building a reservoir, and thinks that the present well will be sufficient supply for at least two years, in the meantime, he wants you to get in your applications for taps early, so that when the busy season opens the work will not be blockaded. The question of good water is now settled.

The Road Question.

There is a vast difference between theoretical ideas of city men, and the practical, common sense views of the average farmer or country town merchant, and the contrast becomes strongly marked when the theorist undertakes to enlighten the people upon such a subject as the improvement of the wagon roads of the State.

What is most needed by the people of the State of Michigan is good roads, which shall bring the farmers of the State into permanent and close communication with the railroad stations and market places, so that it will not cost a farmer all he gets for a load of produce to deliver it. Good roads mean a handsome profit on everything a farmer sells and has to haul to market, as compared with poor roads.

Census Bulletin No. 103 shows that there were, on farms in the States and Territories June 1st, 1890, 14,976,017 horses, 22,846,935 mules, and oxen, (four-legged ones, none of the two-legged sort who oppose road improvement,) or a total of 37,222,052 draft animals.

It is a fact that with good roads we could dispense with 2,500,000 of these animals and have a money value of over $700,000,000, while to feed these unnecessary animals the ordinary army rations for one year costs $130,000,000 more.

Certain it is, that at least 50,000,000 draft animals are kept in idleness for two months in the late winter and early spring, when, with good roads they could be used in hauling farm products to market, at a time when it would not interfere with other work. To feed these 50,000,000 animals for two months costs $37,000,000.

Neither must we ignore other financial gains from good roads, as in every case good roads have increased the price of land a good deal more than the cost of making poor roads into good roads.

YOURS,

A Democratic Coolness.

It is currently reported that there is a feeling of frigidity existing in the bosom of our friend the editor of the Democrat toward Mr. Harry Nicholls, that bids fair to develop into a lasting estrangement, not only of the gentlemen named, but of their respective friends.

The circumstance causes much comment, occurring, as it does, on the eve of the spring election, when harmony is so allfired essential to Democratic success.

One chilly morning last week, Mr. Hampton called at the office of the Charlevoix Lumber Co., and walked up to the register to warm himself. But, to his surprise, no heated ozone ascended from the depths below. Harry was busy at the books, and scarcely looked up as the editor stoopel over the register.

"Why don't you build a fire, Harry?"

"Haven't had time yet."

"Any kindling wood below?"

"Lots of it."

"Kerosene oil?"

"Yes."

"Gimme some matches and I'll build it for you."

Harry finished making an entry on the ledger and gave Mr. Hampton a handful of matches, diving his pen into the ink for another ledger entry. The furnace-room below is reached through a trap-door and an almost perpendicular ladder. Mr. Hampton lifted the trap-door, and dirdaining to climb down the ladder, swung himself clear and landed on the cellar bottom. His feet touched bottom all right, but it was through two feet of water which had run in from the hill during the thaw the day before.

Harry kept on posting his ledger while Mr. Hampton climbed up the ladder, very wet and deeply grieved. He went home and changed his pants, saying very little that could be heard, but thinking great big thoughts.

Mr. Hampton is now writing another poem, entitled: "A Jump in the Dark; or A Dirty Mill-Yard Trick."

CHAPTER XI.

FOUR REFERENCES TO THE FAST WHICH IT IS BORNE TO CONCEAL OR CONCEAL OF

Colonel Graham was a very weak man, and as such a very easy victim. It would not do for him to shoot himself.

He played sick and he cursed—to himself—the doctor who had turned his mean pretenses into a frightful reality.

He was in no suitable mood when Othello came in on tiptoe, and in response to his master's demand to know "why was making that noise out there," was answered:

"It's my granny, sah."

"Say to the devil! Why was the black bag? Why he hasn't done so before is a mystery. What does she want? The Colonel rustled himself higher on on the pillows and glared at his black servant as if ready to say blue if he did not at once give a satisfactory answer to the question.

"She wants teh to see yeh," said Othello, his treacherous voice indicating the fear he felt of his master.

"Yes, so I'm going to see yeh, you nigger, if you don't get out of my sight. I've got yarbs to cute yeh, I guess, you devil of a yellow dog! Bring her in."

The door was opened and closed with the noise of a small blunt shoal in the middle of the floor being thrown by some other one than that sitting bull upright on the bed. The result "granny" would have been extremely indifferent.

"I am sick, woman, and want to be quiet. Who sent you here?" the Colonel drily noticed that he did not speak with the peculiar voice that usually distinguished him.

"Sa'ra Dean."

"Sa'ra Dean." The old woman turned to her grandson, and enforcing her command by extending her long, black arm in the direction of the door, she continued: "Git out. Thah's no yo' mam wants to be fooss. Don't yo go fah to stan' fah mah mistis. I'm good upon, but go out. Tell 'im to go out to-day."

Dinah turned to the bed, and the echoed, falling back on his pillows with a sigh of mingled wrath and pain, said:

Amazed at his grandmother's audacity, Othello went out, but he did not go out of sight. His curiosity was aroused, and he made up his mind to learn if possible, the secret of the old woman's power. Rather it last to occur to him belief that there was not at all the world a being who would dare to oppose the wishes of his Serene master.

Dinah had lived in her for some days, and though she had heard of the departure of the Wanderer, she had not yet met Dinah that Cap't. Denham had left on board.

"I have offered to send a boat ashore and to bring your cursed tongue quiet," said the defiant "Yes, sah! Dinah.

"Yes, sah," she said, as she did woman drew back the bed curtain, so that she might get a better view of his face, and then, coming so near that she could look into his eyes, glittering green eyes, said in a voice that was not a whisper, but which sounded in the ears of the sepulchral:

"I want to keep on leaddin' of a totter, Ho, on! I can't go fah to do it 'ere you fah."

"Leave me alone, and I'll soon be well," said the Colonel, with a yellow under his shoulder, so that he could rest on his elbow and returned the stare she took without flinching. Suddenly, as if he had decide on different to the from those he would persuade if he continued acting in accordance with his feelings, he said:

"Come, Dinah, and let us have a chat, tet us be friends, as we were in the old times. You must excuse me, but I have been sick and sad lately for some time past.

"I'd rather stay," replied Dinah, and the Colonel turned both hands on the top of the bed cover, and, raising his chest, she still watched him.

"Have a seat, and continue:

"You look in mind in body, on no wonder. Why you, a man, only at 40 yrs. on lonely sickness yo'had yoself on made sickness. Yo' hah yoself on 'sprisin' thing. For ever heard on, on yo' been thinkin' how sigh onto friendship, scorn on ten—

"Never mind that," interrupted the Colonel, gratinning with a certain effort his tendency to stutter. Let us talk about yourself and what you have been doing since last I saw you. Let me see, it must be one-and-twenty years ago.

"Yes, sah. Time, I couldn't fohget it. Yo' you couldn't fohget it. Was a day in Fernsonia dem, sa I was the slave of de Governah. Does yer remember that day, Cap'n teh war?

The big cooked her head to one side, as I leaned forward on the war for an answer.

Colonel Graham shot a glance at the boy and saw it was alone, then he turned back the curtain still further and looked over the room before he said:

"The Governor of Bermuda, at that time, was my brother."

"Ya, ya, sah! I'm Colonel Gra'am, too!"

"You know they did, Dinah."

"Ya! If he'd liked dee dat Gov'nah'd been Jo'n'Tallins?"

"What of it?"

"But dat Gov'nah didn't lik. Kase yo'?" Dinah you know, sah Colonel, with another impatient glance about the room?

"Ya-a-y! dat's dee!"

It is so difficult to reproduce with accuracy the strange dialect of this woman, that for the present we shall omit it, giving the gist of the conversation in our own language, and reproducing the words and phrases only when they are specially important.

Twenty-one years before the date of our story, Dinah, Gabriel Graham, the Governor and Tallins of Arts and Comfort, had been the chosen friends of the Governor's family.

He lived at Hamilton, the capital, which was located on one of the Bermuda group, known as the "Long Island," though it is much less in area than its namesake in the North. The Governor was a highly rich, greatly devoted to his wife and only child, a son, at that time aged between five and six years, and called after his father.

The attitude not agreeing with Lady Denham, she went to England, but as the warmest regards of her husband she left her little boy with him.

Cap'n Gra'am, a younger brother, was frequently in the family, and acted as "nominal to the boy," a position which had but little to do with the boy.

Dinah had been a favorite with the Governor's mother, and had been left behind when the lady went to England, to be the nurse of her grandchild.

As the Governor was a man in good health and on the sunny side of fifty, there was every reason to believe that he would survive his father, the aged man, and fall heir to his titles and the large estates belonging to them.

But should the governor die, his little son, Ralph, would, in the natural course of events, succeed to the rank of Lord Tallins, Earl of Ay.

But should the governor and his son die, there was Gabriel Graham would inherit the titles and estates.

Many thought it was a good thing that Capt. George Graham's chances were so small, for he was a harsh, cruel, domineering man, who seemed in rebellion against his Creator because he was not born first.

Capt. George Graham was, however, accepted in society by the Governor because that he was the most genteel brother that ever lived.

Barnacles does not hobble over with his crutches in three days of electrically and steam. It is a lo-ng, of the great ocean routes. At this time the officers and men of the Wanderer, it is as mild sort of exile, and all everything could be got ordered home.

Yachting was a sport in which Col. Graham was fond of, and he had been found in it one source of amusement on which he could depend to break up the ennui.

His brother George was also fond of yachting, and the ships he which they sailed in were known throughout the rather called, by a daring, handsome fellow, a gentleman of taste—a man who been named William Kidd.

Having acquired no principle of right, and being subject to no restraint by his nature, William Kidd had no scruples when he could depend to break up the ordinances of the Capt.

Dinah was a slave of the Governor's family, and was the chosen friend of the Governor's wife.

This programme was carried out. The governor could have saved himself the not his unnatural brother leaped upon the land and hid his sister water.

The little boy, Ralph, clung to the father, Kidd, who was the captain, continued for him to drown the child, the latest spark of humanity in the fellow's breast fired up.

With a dangerous light in his fierce blue eyes and a savage oath on his lips, he said to the boy:

"No, sir! We have done enough for one day. The naughty child, put down my neck, and may I sink to the bottom with his father if I do not save the life you can hide him away."

"But it was you, Kidd, who put him," urged the Captain.

"Man that bargain to murder cannot be held to account if they do not fulfill the contract. This boy must live, and I must know that he lives, otherwise I shall be unable to carry out my part of the bargain. If possible, the secret of the old woman's power, I must know it, for you first hinted that there was not in all the world a being who would dare to oppose the wishes of his Serene master.

Stand by the Flag.

Stand by the flag! Its stripes have stood a thousand years,
Its star of light, a guiding star, through storm and shade, unquenched by time—
Stand by the flag! its stripes have stood
Stand by the flag! its light not dream blown,
Fly it your defiance, let it be your pride,
Lifting defiantly, dying, then if need be,
With their last blessing your sons will die as you.

Stand by the flag! immortal heroes have
Bled and died for it, and their spirits speak, and
Their imperial wisdom from the grave
Ask your unfaltering support.

Stand by the flag though death shuts round it
Darkness and danger,
And treacherous lips say it is a place most
Fit for a coward's tread and glittering eyes,
Stand by the flag! All dead and treasured
Believe with courage firm as I faith exalted,
They will be with you in the dreary gloom
Place in its glorious all. Stand by the flag!

Escape Well Escaped.

Dear 27, 1864, Lieutenant W. H. Cook, the explosion which destroyed the Confederate Ironclad Albemarle, in the Roanoke River. It is a wonder that the naval history of the world affords no other such instance of marvelous coolness and professional skill." At the moment the Albemarle blew up, a charge of grape struck Lieutenant Cushing's boat and killed or disabled it. All hands took to the water, refusing to leave their wounded. Members of Leaders of the Civil War" Cushing describes his own subsequent experiences:

"Swimming to the bank, I ran down the river, in the hope of finding a boat, but I had not gone far when I found myself in the hands of a party of men who had taken refuge in a small boat, which they had secured from the Albemarle. Pushing off from the bank, we pulled

A WARM SPOT.

In the process of cleaning the streets of recently fallen snow the laborers in New York found it necessary to heap the snow up in big drifts or piles at intervals along some of the more frequented streets. In the course of a day or so these drifts became black with the soot of the city, but the drifts were snow just the same. One afternoon there was a little boy found seated in the middle of one of these drifts with his hands in his pockets as if his toes enabled big toe.

"Why, Ann Maria, what's there, my lad?" asked a passer.

"Cause I was tran down," answered the boy.

"What do you mean by that?"

"Why, see! I wouldn'tse do salvon do cover to get warm, and I just got me b. is sign the registrum or wiver dey calls it, where de heat oozes out, an dey tried me on it.

"But didn't you get warm, and if not, why are you out here in the snow?"

"Way, yer see, boss, dis here is de warmest spot I kin find. You don't know how cold it is if you hasn't tried it. Yer just settle down here, like as if you was in yer easy chair at your library, wid a fire in front of yer and, though it's cold at first, you don't know, boss, how warm it comes after two or tree minutes."

Poor dear!

SAVED!

Rescued From Death by the Father and Mother of His Throat.

"When I see the dockind talks the horses of the fashionable," said Armand Poole of Detroit, as he sat in the hotel rotunda, "I recall the hullcross escape from the Paris Emperor of 1848 of one Captain Prelois. The captain had on his person important instrons, and had just turned the corner of the Place Vendome, when a band of insurgents seized the reins of his horse and asked him to surrender the papers he was carrying. He was fussed. 'Down with him! Shoot him! they cried.

"He put spurs to his horse and it plunged and reared. One of the insurgents got hold of the animal's tail, and immediately there was a bunk rear of laughter. The new illusion took let the horse gallop off, and as Captain Prelois escaped. He rode a magnificent thoroughbred. Its noble and splendid symmetry of form had been every stirring the admiration of the laborers in the bois de Boulogne. When it galloped off, leaving its tail in the hands of the insurgents who had seized the appendage, there was nothing to do but to laugh, for it was a fake tail that this proud yet unusually faultless horse had been wearing all the time."

A WOOL FOUNDATION.

A National Tree Bridge Made on a Pile of Soft Sheep's Wool.

When the national pike bridge west of Richmond was in process of construction the workmen at the west side of Whitewater river dug down to find a solid foundation. They struck a green and semi-fluid substance half of quicksand. Vainly they labored to find a safe resting place for the foundation.

Finally the civil engineer and the contractor struck on a model expedient to overcome the difficulty. They sent men all through the country to buy wool. They purchased nearly all of that commodity in that and adjacent counties, and the primitive woolen mills were compelled to pay high prices in order to procure anything to work on. This wool, unwashed, burrs and all, was delivered on wagons of all sorts. It came piled high on the contracted for purpose, and all was tumbled into the hole intended for the foundation. As preserve was applied it sank some distance into the sand, but finally it would sink no farther.

At low, on this wooly foundation, the rocks were laid, and today the western abutment of the old national bridge rests on a bed of compressed wool.

The Wealth of Oklahoma.

The last year is said to have been one of general prosperity to the Oklahoma farmer. The real and personal property of the territory the governor estimates at $15,000,000. There are five national banks in the territory, with a deposit account of $150,000 cash, and four incorporated banks, two with $50,000 capital and one with $20,000. There are also fourteen private banks with an average capital of $15,000.

A Valid Argument.

"I approve of a physical education in our schools, for I know there is nothing better for boys and men than good, healthy exercise."

"That may be, and yet our fathers never spent their time in gymnastic exercises."

"Know it. And what's the consequence? Aren't they all dead to-day?"

Marvelous Apple Trees.

"One year," says a Florida orange grower, "when few of my trees bore much fruit on account of insect ravages, I secured a large corps. I indused the aurists frequent my trees by swinging in the vine with a stone and a piece of spring and chain. The solution dried, leaving a membranous substance adhering to the leaves, twigs and branches of the trees, in seeking which the ants killed the insects which infested the trees."

FED WITH A FUNNEL.

The Subject of Many Surgical Operations.

Lying on a cot in the San Francisco city hospital, is the form of a heavily-built man who has, within the last ten months, gone through enough physical pain to cause him to case life for life, yet he hangs on in existence with a persistency that is astonishing.

Thomas Sullivan is his name and he was admitted suffering from a cancer of the lower jaw. After some time the surgeon in charge of the case decided to amputate the lower jaw, hoping to arrest the progress of the cancer, but it did not have that result and the successive operations have been performed up to date, with the result that the lower jaw, tongue and soft parts of the throat have been cut away, leaving nothing but the upper palate and uvula suspended over the cavity which extends down to the larynx, almost to the junction of the neck and the breast.

Respiration is effected directly through the throat, the nose being useless for breathing, and is in no way connected with the organs which it was originally intended to supply with air. Food is conducted to the stomach by means of a funnel and soft rubber tube.

Notwithstanding this terrible experience Mr. Sullivan is of a cheerful disposition, and wishes away the time reading. He makes futile attempts at talking, but as nothing other than a sounding sound escapes him he has to convey a knowledge of his wants by means of pencil and paper.

But for waste from inactivity his appearance is quite healthy, except when looking at his head, which is covered with bandages extending around his upper jaw to hide the ghastliness of his face. He is about 40 years old, a native of Ireland and a miner by trade. He has no relatives that are known of on the coast.

QUEER THEORY OF LEPROSY.

It Is Propagated by Cannibalism in Outsides.

Mr. Boyle visited Burmah, the Malay native states, Sumatra, Siam, Borneo, Java, Australia, New Zealand, Samoa, the Sandwich Islands and America. Of all the facts noted by him in a sanitarian, the most remarkable are those relating to leprosy, a disease which he believes to be spreading in an alarming extent all over the world.

He was particularly struck by the gigantic proportions the evil has assumed in Burmah. The steps of the great Shwedagon pagoda at Rangoon, the Moses of the Indo-Chinese Buddhists, he found to be "closely lined from top to bottom with lepers, suffering from that loathsome disease in its worst forms and most advanced stages." A member of the visited examined Mr. Boyle "peculiar and most unknown spectacle." Yet no provision worthy of the name appears to be made for the maintenance of treatment of these poor wives, who are thus compelled to resort to begging to keep themselves in existence.

In the Sandwich Islands Mr. Boyle was strongly impressed by the terrible effects of the curse of leprosy, which he says, has nearly decimated the native population.

He has a curious theory to the effect that the propagation of leprosy has been to a large extent connected with cannibalism, the disease "being spread unknowingly through the eating of infected bodies." He has frequently seen in New Caledonia and the South Sea islands, human bodies "hung up in the native huts, intended for future repasts, though then in an advanced stage of decomposition and exhaling a sickening odor."

THE WORD "SNOLLYGOSTER."

The word "Snollygoster" was first used to describe a place hunter, disappear, says Colonel Ham of Georgia, back in 1839, when the Niagara incident threatened war with England. There was a joint debate that year in a Georgia town between John Kelly and Jesse Gaines, rival candidates for the legislature and Kelly spoke first. The chief think of his platform, by the way, was that the president should seize all the cotton Liverpool so as to prevent a salt famine in case of war. After he had declaimed with great effect on the necessity of plenty of salt, Gaines arose and spoke those well-remembered words: "Fellow citizens, of there's anything on top side of earth that makes me mad, it's for one a snollygoster of a feller a combinary a cold feet scrum after the orthography or a little office what he hain't never got, and hain't got none enough in 20 if he could get it." Finally he reached the salt question, and raising his voice to his highest, he yelled: "Gorepsed—he—North Carolina salt was durned eighty cents, and what's a dozen roads to the wolves." Hames won the debate and was elected.

ROBBED WITHOUT MERCY.

When the new apprentice assumed his duties at the Turkish bath establishment the manager thought he seemed rather stupid, and entertained a long explanation of what he was to do. He particularly emphasized the command that the attendant was to "rub 'em without mercy."

During the day the manager heard a great many complaints from the patrons that they had lost their personal property. He thought that a man third must have come in to get washed, and resolved to be on the look out. He discovered nothing, however, though he peeked around most of the day like a amateur detective, looking in all sorts of places.

Toward the time when the new attendant was to go off duty the latter went into the manager's office and began behaving with much mystery. He walked around like a wet hen, waiting until the coast was clear. When there was none he let himself and his chief in the office he tipped up to the door and locked it. Then he produced from his pockets five gold watches, some diamond rings, a few scarf pins and a good beaded purse, which he set forth with great pride before his manager, who, horror stricken, recognized the forts as belonging to his customers.

"You told me to rub 'em without mercy," said the delighted novice, "and I done it. Do yer think I'll suff. lose?"

OF COURSE.

A Little Heavy About the Tummy and the Reaper.

A rather dilapidated lot exceedingly careful lump entered a down the road submit Mr. Jennings' for a job. Mr. Jennings had just cut his reaper, preparatory to a long day's row knock up and down the big wheat field, says Harper's. But he was urgently needed in another part of the farm, and the farm hands having gone to lunch to assist the carpenters' union in a labor demonstration, he welcomed help however dubious.

"Yes, I've got a job. Two dollars a day and board, and the work as long as you hold it down. Can you do it?"

"Can I drive? 'Ain't I drut four horses to wanst for a Dutchman in Chicago, an' I'm screechin' wid a burn on the back strip of the waggin?"

"That's all right. A reaper ain't a tail-ho; but I guess you'll do. You'll have to. Just keep again'. I'll be back Jimmy at an hour. But say, I wish you'd save a little patch by the fence in the corner there, I want to try an experiment I read about in the Journal."

"And how do I work the machine?"

"You let the machine alone. It will work itself. Just you drive straight up to the corner, then turn and go across by the fence. The machine will do the cutting."

The new hand drove a few yards very carefully, then halted, looked at the mysterious thing behind the seat and shouted to Mr. Jennings, who was already started to the fences of his fruit trees.

"And do she kape a-cottin' like this all the time I kape again?"

"Yes, you go ahead."

"Well, thin, how can I save the hit in the fence corner? When I drive up there, she'll just cut it down anyway, and I won't have you getting me say about it."

"Why, You idiot! When you get there—"

"Av course, av course! I was just joking. When I get there, I'll just stand still till I get past."

Four Men's Hell.

Few geographers mention the district in the South known as "Four Men's Hell." It is a tract of country generally very sandy and producing little timber save the long-leaved pine. It begins not far South of Richmond, Va., and extends along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts into Texas. Its length is about two hundred miles, while it is from fifty to ten miles in width. The soil is poor, but the forests produce not only lumber in abundance, but also large quantities of pitch, tar and turpentine. It got a bad name during slavery days, because no cotton was raised in it, but since the South is beginning to look elsewhere than to cotton fields for its wealth the "poor man's hell" promises to become one of the richest parts of the Southern states.

TO INSURE LONGEVITY.

Be Sure to Keep Number of Parliament's Dict at 65 Years Old.

Mr Isaac Pitman, M. P., is 66. He appears about 60, and in the small hours of early morning, when the house of commons is having a late sitting, he looks fresher than anyone else. The bradford Observer recently published an interview in which Mr Holden expains the way to live long. Mr Holden's duration of life, it would seem, is 120 years, but the time allowed him by it takes for the bones to harden. If people common sense then stiff arteries become ossified and the circulatory machinery broken up. If thinkbrains are cut into when they are cooking solids it is like cutting into a sandbag. To arrive at a normal old age a man must take a good deal of walking exercise and see that the air is frequently changed in the rooms in which he lives. Street diet produces solidity in the blood, and it is impossible for any sugar of fruit before it is assimilable. A man that is also unbreatable. The meals must be regular, and the time for eating and drinking must not go together. Mr. Holden's daily bill of fare is as follows: For breakfast and supper he takes one baked apple, one banana, one orange, twenty grapes and a biscuit made from banana flour with butter. His midday meal consists of three ounces of beef or mutton, reduced to powder in a mortar and then passed through a colander, with a half-pint of soup occasionally poured over it. Theory is all very well, but Mr. Holden has proved his case by his health and vigor at a period when most men are, to say the least, verging on old age.

To That Diamond Counterfeit?

Here is an easy means of determining whether a supposed diamond is genuine or not. Procure a hole in a card with a needle, and then look at the hole through the stone. If false you will see two holes, but if you have a real diamond, only a single hole will appear. You may also make the test in another way. Put your finger behind the stone and look at it through the diamond as through a magnifying glass. If the stone is genuine, you will be unable to distinguish the grain of the skin, but with a false stone this will be plainly visible. Moreover, looking through a real diamond, the hand will be clear visible, whereas it is with a false stone.

The Largest Tiger Skin.

The length of the largest tiger skin ever taken is said to be thirteen feet six inches, but it must be borne in mind skins equal considerably in the curing. Mr. Inglis (Masuli), who was the first to successfully author tiger, discusses the matter at long in his book on Sport in Indian wild life. And he quotes examples, within the experience of a hunting course also of his own, of various animals killed in upper Bengal which were measured from twelve feet to twelve feet seven inches.

A CUNNING ELEPHANT.

Can Run a Penny-in-the-Slot Business, But Cannot Count.

The tricks of the marvelous performing elephants exhibited in London a few years ago seem fairly eclipsed by the feats of the elephants at the Belle Vue Gardens, Manchester, of which, by way of an example of the intelligence of brutes, Mr. George Fitzgerald has sent an account. When a penny is given to one of these animals it puts the coin into the slot of the machine, and in a jiffy it delivers a biscuit, which the elephant takes with evident satisfaction.

Some of the visitors occasionally give the animals a half penny, and a experience has taught them that this coin is of no value for the purpose of obtaining biscuits, it is generally thrown contemptuously back to the giver. A more marvelous fact, however, is to come.

One day a visitor gave the "baby" elephant a number of half pennies in succession, each of which was thrown at him again as soon as received. The visitor then gave the annual two half pennies at the same time.

The animal's demeanor immediately changed. For more than five minutes he held the two coins in his trunk, rubbing them together, now stocking from side to side, and presently seeming to be pondering deeply while perfectly still. At last he dropped the two half pennies in the box together, with the result that their combined weight gave him the desired biscuit, at which he gambolled about in a manner which exhibited extravagant delight. As yet it appears that the baby elephant has not yet learned to hold one half-penny in reserve until he gets another. "In other words," says Mr. Freemantle, "he has not yet learned to count."

FAME IS EXPENSIVE.

Why a Poet Was Obliged to Desert the Muse.

There were quadrilles danced by women, only to a mixed chorus, without instrumental accompaniment. A young girl sang entrancingly a crooning, which must have begged for its pitiful rhymes, a young girl recited an ode whereon the rhyme rang like bells of gold.

You wrote beautifully then," said to a poet, a man in white tie, white chestnut, colored hair was streaked with golden locks, "and doubtless write beautifully now, but I have not seen a new poem by you for a long, long time."

I have ceased to write poems for lack of money," he replied, sharply.

"Oh!" she exclaimed with unfeigned surprise. "I supposed that poetry and money had nothing in common."

"They haven't," he said. "When I wrote poems I lived with $400 a year. I was wealthier than Croesus and would buy books bound by the Sanblanaxes Nonlesses, but since I became famous—I beg your pardon for the expression—I became a poor man. I had to furnish a bachelor apartment, to buy silverware and the rest, and in order that I may keep those things I am compelled to write articles for guide books, encyclopedias, dictaries, and novels published in newspapers that, forsooth, are the Sun of the Universe, and I am bound by contracts signed and sealed for ten years. Then I will have forgotten the art of the rhymer, or, at brief, I cease to be a poet." The man in the moonlight sighed as a poet."

A MYSTERY OF THE DEEP.

Rescuers Respond to Signals, But Find No Sign of the Ship.

A singular story of the sea is told by Captain Collier, of the British steamship Rock Light, now lying at Philadelphia. While in mid ocean signals of distress were seen flying from a brig evidently in a sinking condition. The Rock Light bore down to rescue the crew of the sinking craft.

The brig had a sad tale story, according to the international code of signals, were flying from the main mast, and preparations were made for the land in the boats of the Rock Light, the astonishment of all, no one was on the board. Whistles were blown and hallows shouted from all, but the skipper never came from below.

A wan sat on the side of the forecastle, while in the galley everything was in perfect order. Even the pots and pans were as bright as silver. A clock was ticking about the decks, but soon disappeared below when the wind blew the steamer's shrill whistles.

A short detour of the vessel proved her to be Norwegian bark Supreme, bound west from a southern port, but the fate of the crew remains to be a mystery.

Meaning of the Word "Either."

The legal meaning of the word "either" has been gravely argued relies in English court of record. A certain testator had left property, the disposition of which was affected by the "death of either" of two persons, the lawyer insisted that "either" meant both, and in support of his views he quoted Richa ebson, Webster, Chaucer, Dryden, Scattley, the story of the Gordian and a passage from Revelations. The judge suggested that there was a song in "The Beggar's Opera" which took another view. "How happy I could be with either were tother dear charmer away." You may also make the test in another way. Put your finger behind the stone and look at it through the diamond as through a magnifying glass. If the stone is genuine, you will be unable to distinguish the grain of the skin, but with a false stone this will be plainly visible. Moreover, looking through a real diamond, the hand will be clear visible, whereas it is with a false stone.

FATE OF THE NARONIC

TWO OF HER LIFEBOATS SEEN OFF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Had Not Been Long Afloat—Hopes for the Crew. The Arrival of a Vessel with Stores—Shipwrecked Sailors Eagerly Watched.

Green Ups and Downs.

After long months of anxiety regarding the fate of the White Star line steamship Naronic, which sailed from Liverpool Feb. 11 for New York, and which had for since been heard of intelligence has been received showing that a boat that she had lost. The British steamer Coventry, Capt. Wilson, from Pensacola, Feb. 15, for Antwerp, at Bremen. She report that at 2 o'clock in the morning of March 1, when in latitude 42 north, longitude 40 west, she passed a lifeboat painted white, bearing the name "Naronic." The load was floating bad weather. At 10 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day another lifeboat from the Naronic was passed. This boat gave evidence of having encountered heavy seas. The mast and oars of the lifeboat had been lashed together and were close to the painter and then thrown overboard as a sea anchor. The boat was badly used up to the small end seen. Judging from the appearance, neither of the boats had been in the water long enough for the drifting to set was about south by east of Sable Island, on the banks of Newfoundland. There is a chance that the occupants of the boats were picked up by a passing steamer.

All doubt as to the fate of the Naronic has been dispelled by the sighting of her lifeboats. That she is now at the bottom of the ocean cannot be disputed, and the cause of the disaster is, of course, still a matter of conjecture. It may be, judging from the latitude and longitude in which the boats were seen, that the steamer struck either a berg, though it is still rather early in the season for ice to be so far south as the banks. It is hoped that the mystery of the loss of the steamer will soon be cleared up by the landing at some port of survivors of her crew. A vessel which passed Thai signaled Governor, John L. Bixby, nominated that she had on board eleven ship-wrecked people, and the White Star line has given up hope, to a strong probability that they are a part of the crew of the Naronic.

Some of the vessel will be a big one to the underwriters. Eighty guineas was paid for the boat, and the insurance. The loss of the ship will be a sad blow to the owners of the Naronic, who have not yet forgotten the disaster that befell the Pacific Steamer Naronic, the mouth of the Naronic's sister ship, the Pacific, and the loss of worth of merchandise consigned to Portland, Oregon, and San Francisco. The loss of the ship will be a sad blow to the owners

Northern Michigan News.

The Northern Michigan Seed Co. of Charlevoix will establish a branch at Bellaire.

The Traverse Bay Eagle announces that it will commence the issue of an afternoon daily edition.

The St. Ignace people are rejoicing that the Martel furnace is to be put in blast again under a receiver.

There are those in Antrim county who talk seriously about removing the county seat from Bellaire to Central Lake.

A. M. Todd, Kalamazoo, has shipped from the northern part of this state 22,000 pounds of peppermint oil to Mendon, for the purpose of having it rectified.

East Jordan Enterprise: We are sorry to note that Messrs. Coulter & Jamison have decided to go out of business here, owing to the competition of the Lumber Companies.

The Boyne Citizen records the death of George Griffin, of Evangeline township Mr. Griffin was a pioneer of Charlevoix county, and has been a subscriber on the SENTINEL books for twenty years.

Mackinac County was called Michilimackinac up to 1857, but has since been known as Mackinac and the Secretary of State is endeavoring to ascertain by what authority the change was made. He hasn't succeeded yet.

One thousand dollars worth of stock for the building of a telephone line between Mancelona and Bellaire has been subscribed, and the line will be completed in May or June. This connects Bellaire with Traverse City, Elk Rapids, Petoskey and Intermediate towns.

Citizens of Frankfort turned out en masse the other day to see a fight but it wasn't a prize fight. A large bald-headed eagle tried to carry a cat from his breakfast, but he miscalculated the lighting powers of his catship, for after a sharp and decisive battle he cat sent the eagle off screaming.

At a public meeting at Bellaire recently was unanimously decided to organize and incorporate a Milling Company, with a capital of ten thousand dollars, to build and operate a first-class grist mill at Bellaire. One-half of the necessary stock was subscribed on the spot.

There is a farmer near Elmira who has raised this year seven thousand five hundred bushels of potatoes; he has cut over two hundred tons of hay, harvested over 1,500 bushels of grain, threshed sixty bushels of clover and timothy seed, raised two thousand bushels of turnips and made seven hundred gallons maple syrup. This farm nine years ago was a wilderness."

In connection with their hardware, iron, nails, paint, oil, tinware, house furnishing goods, tin shop and plumbing, the Charlevoix Hardware Co. inaugurate a guessing contest in this issue. For particulars read their advertisement.

Fathers, What Are You Doing For Your Boys?

Communicated.

I am awakened at the dead hour of night by this question. By whom was it asked? Was it asked by the guardian angel of some loving mother, knowing that I am a "temperate" man but not a temperance man? Possibly, yes. Temperate men—ye men who can go into a saloon and take one drink and no more—what are you doing for your boys?

I will tell you. You are setting a much worse example than the poor unfortunate confirmed drunkard, because we pity him, knowing that he has an appetite to gratify which he cannot help, and it must be satisfied.

But ye men, good men, too, in many ways, say, by so doing: "See, boys, the saloon man is my friend and our companion. Emulate our example; go in and get a drink, and you will immediately become a man."

This example that ye temperate men are setting the young boys is terrible to contemplate. What we need is more moral courage, less love for rum, and to be able to pass these hell-holes of death, dispensing liquid fire and fuel oil.

It is a sad sight to see young boys reeling in the streets from the effects of this brain-destroying, crime-making rum, which the boys can openly buy from the livries in human form to whom we temperate men vote for and license to sell the infamous stuff to our children, and by our own example say, "It's all right, boys." But when these same boys of our come reeling home, stupified and crazy drunk, our hair will be turning white with sorrow, and we will then regret, when it is too late, that we temperate men were not temperance men, and that we did not do our duty in trying to close the doors of the saloon against our own flesh and blood.

Yours,
UNCLE PETE.

The Republican Township Ticket.

Supervisor Henry C. Cooper; clerk, Hermes S. Hawkins; treasurer, Chas. E. See; highway commissioner, Henry Cunningham; Justice, Hich. and Knight; school inspector, W. H. Vaughan; board of review, one year, E. E. Mudge, two years, Harrison Bedford.

It is a good ticket from top to bottom, and will be elected.

Township Tickets.

Eveline has but one ticket in the field, with Ava Smith for Supervisor. Marion trots out John Henry O'Neill with no opposition; Norwood is in the same fix as regards William Harris. But up in Hayes they have three tickets. The Democrats nominated Ike Stauffer, a union ticket is headed with the name of William Gray, and the Independents have A. W. Chew up. One of these three will be elected.

Religious Items.

Congregational.

Morning 10:30, "Easter Thoughts," Communion service after sermon. Evening, Easter Concert.

There will be Good Friday services at the Congregational church at 3 p. m.

Methodist.

School closed last Friday with appropriate exercises and a candy pull. The Misses Coulter returned to their home at Central Lake with the good wishes of the Ellsworth people.

The school meeting warned the school house up so much that it took fire last Friday morning. Anyway, it took fire, but was put out quickly when the Ellsworth fire department got to work.

The telephone poles are all cut and ready to deliver on the right of way between Ellsworth and Atwood as soon as the snow leaves us, and then, Hello! everybody.

The Nash mill sawed its last lumber last week, but will not get to running regularly until next week.

Henry Bowers, an old "resident," who has lived right here for twenty-five years, was over to the canoes at Atwood last Saturday, and he says he would not move away from here for a town lot in Chicago. He hopes and expects to see those Atwoodites footing it over to Ellsworth to vote next spring. Itemember, gentlemen; you have placed the chip on your shoulder. Watch it close.

E. H. Harris, the past week, sold to a Mr. Stevens, who has just moved in from near Holland, two lots. He will at once build a house on them, and become a resident. Also the house used for a school house this winter, to Wm. H. Superneau.

At the independent caucus for the Township of Banks held at Ellsworth Monday evening, the following ticket was nominated: Supervisor, Ralph Wilkie; Treasurer, Carlos Hawbaugh; clerk, E. H. Harris; Justice, (full term,) R. T. McLean; Justice, (vacancy) R. T. Sleeper; commissioner, Aleck Crego; school inspector, Mrs. Deline; grain commissioner, C. Gotham; constables, Will Crego and John Freeman. Later—Learning at the Twelfth hour that the caucus proceedings had not met with the requirements of the law in the swearing in of the officers, and a new caucus was called at one o'clock Tuesday and the ticket named above was legally and lawfully nominated and placed in the field to win.

NOTICE.

A special teachers' examination will be held at the school house in Charlevoix on Friday, Mar. 31, 1893.

I cannot say how it is with the transient individual merchant, or a scheme that they may have on end in view at its very start, but there is a fact not usually noticed by even very industrious readers and thinkers, and one which should inspire confidence in our statements. It is that we are here forever, and not for a day or a year. We don't impose upon you if we would. We cannot cheat you and then get away with a profit therefrom. If we deceive you we must stay and face it. That means suffer for the deceit. Burnt child fears the fire, and confidence abused is most difficult to restore. We know it. It would be a bold and impolitic defiance of public opinion to emphasize imperfections by persistently advertising them. It is not simply in publishing the advantages of a community or a line of travel that increase the patronage. Publication is an necessary, after fact. The fact is the possession of good features. The newspaper is at once the medium of making fact known, and as well guarantee of its genuineness. The C. & W. M. and D. L. & N. are favorite lines. Improve some in the fact. There supplement is of the best, trains are run on fast schedules, and everything is done to make a journey over them a pleasure, instead of otherwise. Give us a trial and see for yourself. GEO. —A house belonging to J. M. Clark, and occupied by Ed. King, near Austin Newman's farm, in the outskirts of town, was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. Loss about $100.

—Edward Wakdifield, formerly of this place, has accepted a position as Assistant Invoice Clerk with the Michigan Stove Company, of Detroit, the largest makers of stoves and ranges in the world.

—John Nicholls and wife expect to leave next week for Kingsbridge, Devonshire, England, for a two months visit. Mr. Wm. Nicholls, of Wisconsin, joins them here. On the return Miss Honor Nicholls will accompany them to the World's Fair and Charlevoix.

—The Democrat says a Republican told him Supervisor Cooper's assessment roll could not have been collected if it had been contested, owing to errors. It turns out that a Republican told him no such thing; but then the lie served. The fact is, no better roll ever went before the equalization committee than Henry C. Cooper's. Mr. Hampton will learn that such tactics do not pay.

—The old Bridge Street House has under gone a complete transformation, and when it is opened in about two weeks, it will not be recognized. It has been transformed into a neat, wholesome hostelrie from cellar to garret. Every room has been overhauled, re-furbished, and put in a condition for first class trade. Mr. and Mrs. Noble established an enviable reputation last summer at the "Ingleside," and the Bridge Street House under their management will get to the front. It will hereafter known as the Noble House.

—The howling success, "Our Irish Neighbors," turned people away at the Park yesterday. The company is by far the best that has ever appeared in this bright and sparkling skit. There is not a dull moment during the entire performance. Everything moves with a dash, and the audience was kept in a continual uproar from the rise to the fall of the curtain. The company is a large one and is composed entirely of never-mind-if-an-vocalists; that is comedians who are funny, and vocalists who can sing. There is a bevy of handsomely costumed ladies in the company. Their toilets are exquisite and of a very pleasing pattern. The Park will evidently be crowed at every performance, and seats should be reserved in advance to avoid the rush. Indianapolis Sentinel.

Petoskey Record: Mr. Isaac Stauffer is the Democratic nominee for supervisor of Hayes township, Charlevoix county, and personally states to us that as he will need every vote that Monday, he cannot lean those twenty-five Indians to the third ward of Bear Creek township as usual. Says he likes to be accommodating and all that, but in this case he must look after his own interests first, and the roads are too bad to vote them in both counties.

THE ELECTIONS.

The Democrats Routed in Michigan by 12,000 Majority.

The Republicans Carry the County in Good Shape.

Charlevoix township did herself proud on Monday by electing the entire Republican ticket by majorities ranging from 110 for Cooper on Supervisor to 39 for See on Treasurer.

On the State ticket the Republicans carried the township by 62 majority. Corbett's majority was 14, and Ramsey's 56. The population polled 14 votes.

At the annual "town meeting the following business was transacted: It was voted that the Highway Commissioner be required to make an estimate of the amount required on the different roads leading into the village, and present same to the village council, for them to appropriate.

One-half of one per cent was voted for township highways. Contingent fund voted, $600: bridge, $500. N action was taken on the cow question, and the "critters" will be kept from running at large.

The following are the returns by townships:

NORTH ARM.

State, Rep., 215; Dem., 87; Corbett, 211; Davis, 100; Ranney, 219; Northern, 84; pro., 11; pop., 13. Supervisor, F. H. Ranney.

EVANGELINE.

State, Rep., 102; Dem., 34; Corbett, 105; Davis, 37; Ranney, 106; Northen, 35; pop., 33; pro., 10. Supervisor, F. M. Chase.

NORWOOD.

State, Rep., 33; Dem., 11; Corbett, 36; Davis, 9; Ranney, 33; Northen, 10; pro., 2. Sup., Harris.

BOYNE FALLS.

BELLOSE.

State, Rep., 65; Dem., 39; Corbett, 65; Davis, 34; Ranney, 63; Northen, 18; Sup., Kercher.

HAYES.

Corbett's election is assured by about 600 majority. Grand Traverse County gave Davis 400 majority; Antrim gave Corbett 300, Charlevoix 500; Ledawn about even.

Brown's defeat in the Emmet circuit is counted by about 125.

Charlevoix county comes up to the scratch with about 400 Republican majority. Hauptonianism is not re-ciulionizing this county to any alarming extent.

THE STATE.

The Republicans of Michigan have added another to their long list of victories. The state is carried by 12,000. It is a clean sweep, and the returns indicate large Republican gains in many Democratic strongholds. Considering the vote cast, it was a greater victory than last fall. Michigan cannot be made Democratic.

By Capt. Ormond Steele

CHAPTER XII.

Colonel Claiborne could not have been sun-burnt over 35 years of age, but he cordial fly looked to be 50, and now that he was suffering from a very uncomfortable attack of fever and ague, the mulatto of native words, for instance, that he knew.

Miss Cundit, unfortunately saved the young people from hearing the Sailor-ship Miss Indian vocabulary by inviting him into the house, on the plea of waiting him to taste her new raspberry vinegar. And so, after all, the Squire was not pumped.

In the meantime Colonel Graham followed his guide, and when they had gone out of sight of the Sailor-house the latter dropped back and said:

"Now, Mr. Graham, I'm at the Mondaw, to which I bid you welcome."

"I thank you," replied Graham. "You have a beautiful land. How far does it extend to the eastward from here?"

"As far as the island extends."

"And you cultivate the soil?"

"The women do that," said the chief, proudly.

"Of course, but you have flocks and herds?"

"Some, but the deer on the hills are our flocks, and the cocoanut trees are our herds."

"We can reach it before the sun is there," replied the chief, pointing to the half way down the western heaven.

They went on with more speed, and in the hottest hours of the afternoon, in a wooded elevation, from which they had a view to the eastward of a nearly treeless valley, in which were many houses of logs and bark, and a little farther on there stretched a great pond that looked as large as an old Norfolk broad.

"To the south a glimpse of the great ocean could be had, while to the north there stretched away the placid blue waters of the Sound."

"Does the black woman, Dinah, live here?" asked Graham, as they descended to the valley.

"You mean the black princess?"

"Ah—perhaps—yes, I remember the black princess."

"There is her house," said the chief, pointing to a cabin, not far from the clay chimney, which was the only one.

"Do you call her the queen?"

"We call her nothing, though once did like her," said the chief.

"And why did you change?"

"Because she was the friend of Ralph Denham."

"Then you do not like Denham?"

"I hate him, and should be return and meet me alone, blood will be spilled."

"Why do you hate him?"

Before replying, Uncas looked Graham full in the face, and when he noticed that he, too, had no liking for the sailor, he said:

"The woman is that," and the chief, proudly.

"Of course, but you have flocks and herds?"

"Some, but the deer on the hills are our flocks, and the cocoanut trees are our herds."

"We can reach it before the sun is there," replied the chief, pointing to the half way down the western heaven.

They went on with more speed, and in the hottest hours of the afternoon, in a wooded elevation, from which they had a view to the eastward of a nearly treeless valley, in which were many houses of logs and bark, and a little farther on there stretched a great pond that looked as large as an old Norfolk broad.

"To the south a glimpse of the great ocean could be had, while to the north there stretched away the placid blue waters of the Sound."

"Does the black woman, Dinah, live here?" asked Graham, as they descended to the valley.

"You mean the black princess?"

"Ah—perhaps—yes, I remember the black princess."

"There is her house," said the chief, pointing to a cabin, not far from the clay chimney, which was the only one.

"Do you call her the queen?"

"We call her nothing, though once did like her," said the chief.

"And why did you change?"

"Because she was the friend of Ralph Denham."

SHE BOUGHT THE PIE.

An Uncommon Loser Who Sifted Truth Off John's Mammock.

It was Thanksgiving day. A chilly wind blew. A leaden sky sent one and then a lonely flake of snow whirling through the air to find lodgment at last upon the brown, sere earth. Within all was light and comfort. A cheery fire blazed upon the hearth. The shaded lamp shed a soft radiance throughout the room.

"John, dinner is ready."

"Very well, Mary."

A sigh of resignation escaped him as he moved with heavy step toward the table. A woman with an intellectual brow and confident air awaited him there.

"John, dear."

She looked at him with a winning smile. He made a desperate but ineffectual attempt to respond in kind.

"I have a confession to make."

"Very well, Mary."

Absently his gaze rested upon the frosted cake before him. It seemed to possess a terrible fascination.

"I was very tired, John, once, when I finished cooking the turkey."

"Yes, Mary."

"And I thought you wouldn't mind if I bought the pie and cake ready made. You—"

A strange, unwonted light came into his eyes.

"I have so much to be thankful for, you know."

"Yes, Mary."

His tones filled with a new earnestness.

"Will you say grace, John, dear?"

"Yes, Mary."

And the prayer of gratitude that welled from his lips was obviously fervent. A chill wind blew, but within all was light and comfort.

ALUMINUM HORSESHOES.

Found to be Lighter and Stronger Than Iron Ones.

Captain E. Lambert, in writing on the subject of the recent experiments with aluminum horseshoes in the Pinland dragoons, says that at the end of six weeks it was found that the aluminum shoes lasted better and preserved the foot more thoroughly than the iron ones. The former are only one-third to one-fourth the weight of the latter. Their cost is certainly greater; but this is to some extent compensated for by the facts that very little charcoal is required in shoeing, that there is no loss in weight, and that the use of the old metal is the same as that of the new. In making the shoe some skill is required as the forging must be done at a low but exactly regulated temperature. Taking into consideration the importance of light shoes especially for horses drawn fast work, and the advantage of being able to carry a larger number of spare shoes on a campaign without increasing the load of the wagons, and lastly, the probability of a fall in the price of aluminum, Captain Lambert thinks it safe to predict the general introduction of aluminum for the shoes of cavalry and artillery horses in the near future.

HOW ALMY WAS SHOT.

He Was Hit in the Leg by a Man Half a Mile Away.

A man named Maxwell was in the Lewiston, Me., guard room, talking with the officers. He said that he was waiting with a view to talk with the city marshal. In the mean time he told how he had been present at the famous taking of the murderer, Franz Ainy in the barn belonging to the father of his victim.

"There were two thousand people with weapons around the barn," he said, "and no one of them wanted Almy to draw a bead on him. The man who finally shot him and broke his leg was a half a mile away from the barn up behind a stone wall, where he had gone with the hope of getting off Almy's retreat if he should try it. Almy picked his revolver out through the crack and fired twice into the barn to scare the folks.

"The man up behind the stone wall aimed his Winchester at the place where the smoke came out and fired, breaking his leg." That's the way he tells it.

A Burglar and Three Girls.

Alice, Mary and Lottie Evans were sleeping together in Hazleton, Pa., when they heard a noise then on the stairs. It reached the door, and the next moment a man stood in the room. Two of the girls held the sum while the third "revoked vengeance on his face and head." Citizens arrived and the culprit was taken in hand, but a posse of his friends came to his rescue. Then occurred a very unpoetic imitation of a melee, and when it is said the citizens triumphed, and the offenders were taken before the nearest magistrate it was found that the real and original culprit was missing, and he was eventually discovered lying unconscious in his boarding's house. The wounds which he had received were numerous and severe, and he was too small to permit of his removal. He is reported to be dying. That's the kind of girls they have in Pennsylvania.

The Oldest Town in the World.

Damascus, with every good reason, claims to be the oldest town or city in the world. Damascus remains which it was before the days of Abraham, is nearer of trade and travel, an Iobn I of verdure in the desert, with an "oasis" and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries. According to Josephus, Damascus was founded by Uz, the son of Aram and grandson of Shem. It is first mentioned in Scripture in connecting with Abraham, whose steward was a native of that place (Genesis xv. 2).

Sagacity of Dogs.

Morris Thompson, East Cale, Pa., was sitting reading his paper one evening, when a dog came to his door and in gaia scratching. He went out and the dog ran toward the orchard. Mr. Thompson returned again to his reading, but once more the dog came to the door, and began scratching. This time Mr. Thompson followed the dog into the orchard and there saw a tree the dog in a frenzied way chase. Glad to run off, on Mr. Thompson came to his assistance, and with the aid of the dog killed seven more rattlesnakes.

HE WAS A VENTRILOQUIST.

A Georgia Hotel Thrown Into Confusion Over the Mystery.

A practical joker had a good deal of fun lately, at the expense of the office and a number of gentlemen who were sitting in the office of the Allen House, says a Georgia exchange. Almost simultaneously the shrieks of "Murder! murder! help! help! killing me," broke upon the stillness of that neighborhood, and instantly there was a general stampede for the street from whence the cries seemed to come. At the same instant two policemen dashed around the corner, and among the crowd in front of the hotel they rushed up breathlessly to discover the cause of the tumult.

Of course no one could explain; only that some one outside had yelled murder! Just at that moment deep groans, followed by the faint cry of "Help! oh, Lord, help me!" came from the railway loading up in the second floor of the hotel building, and the crowd made a pell mell rush for the door. Several pistols flashed in the moonlight, as some of drier mind men, headed by the police officers, climbed the stairway. Lights were procured and every nook and corner of the building was thoroughly searched. Several men climbed out on the roofs of neighboring buildings, but nowhere could the body of the murdered man be found.

It was indeed a horrible mystery, and all marveled greatly as to what it could mean. About the time the crowd was ready to divide into squads for the purpose of searching that entire part of town, it looked as though one of the guests of the hotel was a ventriloquist, and had put up a job on the other guests as well as the police officers. Nobody said a word, but in two minutes the street was deserted and every drummer was securely locked in his room.

A Lucky Cat.

Mrs. Fred Vanderbilt's cat, Koko, is said to have cost, counting original price paid and cost of importation, close upon $1,000. He was born in the palace of the sultan, and is the most beautiful, as well as the most costly cat in this country. Of course she is like a mulatto cat in color and intelligence. His mouse-colored coat is like heavy satin, so rich and shoney and sleek. Every morning he has his bath and is combed and fed before he is allowed to present himself to Mrs. Vanderbilt's breakfast morning room. His breakfast of cream and grilled bacon is served in a delicate china bowl and cup plate, very like those used by children for their early meal. One of Koko's accomplishments is the delicate way in which he purloins of his meals. He never spills a drop of cream or touches the delicate carpet with a piece of meat or bone.

Or the Crowd Is Dear.

A sea captain was invited to a hunting match, and upon his return home described the chase as follows: "Our horses being well rigged we mared them, and the wind being at west-southwest, away we stood over the downs. In the time of half a watch, we spied a hare under full sail; we tacked and stood after her, coming up close; she tacks and we tack'd, upon which tack I had like to run aground, but getting clear off, I stood a-wer her again but, as the devil would have it, just as I was going to lay her aboard, a lubber in a red coat, and a mad horse upon deal came keel upward."

Sharing a House With Bees.

In a farm house between Marcellus and Skaneateles, Me., there is a curiosity. Between the plastering and the siding of the house at one joint, there is a vacant space, which for the past three seasons has been utilized for living purposes by a colony of bees. The colony has grown to such an extent that on a warm summer day it is sometimes unsafe to drive horses in the yard near the house. The family living in the house expect to make repairs in the fall, and they estimate that they will harvest 200 pounds of honey from their novel hive.

An Odd Seventh Spoon.

The latest fad in spoon carving is reported from the capital city of Iowa and was accomplished by S. E. Wilcox. He took a common Iowa souvenir spoon, one bearing the Iowa coat of arms on its handle, and wrote the whole of the Lord's prayer in it, bowl. Every letter and comma is in its proper place and can be easily read with the naked eye. A deal paper is commenting on the feat say: "The genius of such spoons would make religious instruction more easy and greatly improve the spirituality of coffee and tea drinkers."

A German's English.

A lady writes from Germany that she is discouraged about learning the German language. A German friend, who tried to converse with her in English, made such a mistake that she fears she may do as badly in Germany. The German gentleman innocently gave this rendering of a familiar saying: "The ghost is willing but the meat a feeble."

Growth of Socialism.

The German socialists report that they control seventy newspaper organs, of which twenty-two are political dailies. The subsidies granted to some of them amount to 60,000 marks a year. The Vorwarts, the leading socialist organ, circulates about 37,000 copies and makes money. The socialist book trade is also growing.

WILL OF AN EX-SLAVE.

There was a quaint and quiet and pathetic scene in probate in Abilene, Kan., lately.

Some years before the war Julia Pleasing a female young slave, friends with health and energy, contracted with the late Ferdinand Pleasing—her owner—for her freedom, agreeing to pay a stated sum therefor. By industry, frugality and economy she managed to pay the amount and gain her freedom just before the emancipation proclamation was issued. Julia continued to work and economize, and was always regarded as an exceptionally good woman. She thought a great deal of her master's family before and after freedom and never ceased to hold them in the highest esteem.

They also loved Julia, their old slave. A few days ago she died. She left a will duly executed and signed. By the will she bequeathed all her property, which amounted to a nice little sum, considering the fact that it was entirely the savings of an ex-slave—made dollar by dollar with hard work, to a member of her old master's family.

She named as the beneficiary in this sacred—life-drawn document Mr. Marion Pleasing, a son of the late Ferdinand Pleasing, who lives in Arkansas and who is worth in his own right a quarter of a million.

Having no heir of her own, this honest and devoted old slave left her earthly possessions as a memorial of her love for her old master's family, which will be perpetuated by being spread upon the records of the courts of the country.

STRANGE MALFORMATION.

The Case of a Man Who Could Control His Heart Beats.

Dr. E. A. Lewis, surgeon of the Twenty-eighth New York regiment, who died in 1878, was, during his life, the most wonderful human phenomenon. The surgeons regarded him with special interest because, having been born without a sternum—the cleisum is the flat bone in the middle of the breast—he could control or suppress all the pulsations of the heart. This post-mortem examination was made by Professor Dalton, Webster, Dunning and Dalkeof the college of physicians and surgeons and Long Island college and the Bichel, Brady, Hesse, Jewett, Sessing, Baker, Bellows, Tobacker and Hunt and was performed at Williamsburg, N. Y.

The examination showed a deficiency of breast bone and a congenital flexure of the sternum, forced in shape, resulting in 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and third ribs to (3), side of the median line, and the ribs were more than 5 inches among the Twenty-eighthe thoracoid inflammation of pulmonics were found by the both or right ventricle, the pulmonary artery greatly dilated. That they were caused by the sternum, and that he had the power to suppress the action of similar malformation known and reported in the medical world. Dr. Lewis, Mr. Thompson of England, who by way of diversion, lifting himself with his heart from lounging for a full two minutes.

TACOMA'S BAD FLIGHT.

SHE IS FLOODED WITH COUNTERFEITERS.

From Far and Near.

—Tacoma, Wash., has been flooded with counterfeit half dollars and $5 gold pieces. The bad dollars have been distributed about the city by the wholesale. Five banks have been taken in. About two months ago there came to the city a man who is suspected to be responsible for the phenomena of was good coin. He hung out at a saloon and was disposed of $5 in half dollars in exchange for a bank bill. It is thought that no less than twenty thousand of the bad silver dollars were disposed of by this man. He operated for weeks and then disappeared.

—The steamer Venezuela, from Hamburg, arrived at New York Tuesday, and reported having escaped from destruction by fire off the Hatteras. During a furious gale a haughty flame was discovered in the hold. The whole crew became panic stricken and ran most instantly. Captain Wilson, who was asleep in the cabin, barely escaped on the deck, where he raised the alarm. The crew unlashed the hoses with difficulty, after the interior of the cabin had been completely destroyed. The chief engineer was badly burned about the face and body. The fire still reach several thousand dollars. The after house, made of iron painted with thin asbestos was not affected, and prevented a spread of the flames and the complete destruction of the vessel.

—A Valparaiso dispatch says: A conflict between Peru and Paraguay seems now to be inevitable. A dispatch from Asuncion says the Brazilian minister at Alagoas has arrived at that city and that she may expect a bombardment at any moment. From Rio Grande do Sul the report of the killing of Col. Silva, who with troops forthcoming 100 revolutionists several days ago, is confirmed. The Times, who has consented of 800 men sent from Rio Grande by the national government, is reported to have forsaken Uruguay to possess the citizens for aiding the revolution.

—John Hill, the Cambria, N. J., boy who is to be hanged April 10th for the murder of Joseph Dolson, has confessed to his spiritual advisor, the Rev. Father Corrigan, that he killed Dolson. He says that he murdered the man out of life-lark. The principal cause was a quarrel. He admits that he had lied in saying that Dolson had fired at him. While they were at work together, Dolson was cause to make deputies and was made to stand in the wet grass beside up while the outlaws secured the cash and made their escape. The robbers were Henry Starr, a half-breed Indian, and Ed Newson.

—At Chatfield, the lumber man suspected of firing his own plant and all stores, is again under arrest.

—John Pease was instantly killed by the bursting of a steam gage in Belknap's mill at Lebanon, Ind. A piece of the same was also beheaded him.

—Cox's foot-traveler at Dunkin, Pa., burned. The structure was owned at a cost of $250,000 and was the only one of its kind in the country. Had Lincoln, Neb., incendiary fire destroyed an entire block of business houses. The loss will reach $80,000. St. Barnabas's Protestant Episcopal church, Baltimore, was destroyed by fire. The rector, Rev. Joseph Fletcher, says the loss will be about $50,000.

—At Scranton, Pa., Barney McMahon is under arrest charged with maltreating his wife in such a brutal manner that his death resulted while giving premonitory birth to a child. The child is alive. Mrs. McMahon was drunk, and apparently feels no regret for his crime.

—Prince, a big Bridgeport, Conn., Newfoundland dog, made a brilliant attempt at suicide by jumping out of a third-story window at Barry Bloch, in East Main street. He landed on his back and lay unconscious for several minutes, but finally revived and staggered off down the street. The owner of the dog says that a week ago Prince's mother died, and since then he has been moody, moaning and showing every evidence of deep distress. For two days he had confined in the room, leaping toward the window. Suddenly, with a melancholy howl, he sprang up and jumped out of the window, although the outside door was open as usual. Prince was intelligent and docile and attached to his master.

—Commander Whitney, of the United States man-of-war Alliance, is engaged to marry Miss Ella, Ah Fong, daughter of a wealthy Chinese merchant at Honolulu.

—The Pennsylvania Board of Pardons has refused the application of Joseph B. Freeman for a pardon. Dolsker was convicted of murder in Susquehanna County. The application of Dennis Thomas, the Allegheny County wife-murderer, for commutation of the death sentence, has also refused.

—The committee to whom was referred the application of Mrs. Elma S. Mooney, widow of the late Gen. B. B. Mooney, of Ohio, for admission to the District for training quota, favorable report on the case in general terms has substituted Mrs. Mooney to pension.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—At Tiffin, O., a 9-year-old daughter and only child of E. S. Crane drank from a bottle of carbolic acid, and died.

—Deacon Hickman has been arrested at Galveston, Tex., for the murder of Tom Elliott and the fatal injuring of Sealy Williams at Houston, Tex., February 18. Hickman has confessed. All accused.

—At Erie, Pa., Ignatz Phillips, over when a life-saw lance is amazing in Ohio, was arrested by an Ohio marshal from Clinton. Phillips and his gang had been carrying on a system of robberies at Buffalo Creek, the Monroe River until the months ago, he was so hard pressed that he left that section.

—The month of March still go down in criminal annals with loads as productive of more homicides than any similar length of time in the last hundred days. Twelve days. Thirteen persons met violent deaths at the hands of fellow beings. Some of the murders were cold-blooded in the extreme, and very few show any provocation to justifiable homicide. For these thirteen capital offenses the gallows juror in outside the persons, one manslayer is at large, two begin stages are out on bail, and in one case the coroner's jury has failed to fasten the offense on any one.

—The vault of the register of deeds of Jackson County, Kansas, was broken into and valuable records burned.

—A New York paper claims to have discovered an anarchist plot to assassinate the Prince of Wales, should he come to America to attend the World's Fair this summer.

FROM WASHINGTON.

—Secretary Carlisle has stated that he will spend a great deal of time this summer in conjunction with the Senate committee on appropriations in the preparation of the administration tariff bill for submission to Congress as soon as it is called together. Besides the massive prepared by E. Ellery Anderson and the members of the Ways and Means committee, other measures are likely to be sent to Congress by Carlisle from various commercial and political organizations. All of these measures, the Secretary says, will be treated merely as suggestions.

—Two years will be seven months or thereabouts, and it will mention some time in September. There could be no closer estimate, for the President has so decided and with his decision stands. The President shortly before the inauguration had some thought of calling an extra session for April or May, but he has concluded that such action will be the greatest evil, consistent with several necessary considerations, and so September has been fixed upon. One of the President's reasons for calling an extra session, aside from his belief that a tariff bill of such a character as to meet his views can be passed by a party in Congress as well as Congress as a whole, is the immediate constitution of Congress upon convening. Mr. Cleveland and Secretary Gresham, Secretary Carlisle, and the leading Democratic Senators have had a chance to choose a large part of the manner in framing the tariff bill, and the feeling of the President is that it has been submitted to Congress and the Senate have had a chance to examine it they will proclaim it a work of art.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The assembly Assistant of the Dominion, has arrived at Portland, Me., from Quebec. Six brigs the notes that Mr. Lewis is now either a shoulder at the bottom of the ocean. The men were in the Quebec, and the crew consisted of three pounds of canned corned beef, but nothing else. Consequently, the crew is going to put upon the ship's crew for food.

—Women made long speeches that could served in dining cars will be charged for at a rate of 10 cents an hour, instead of 25 cents as heretofore. The result of several years' experience has shown that the average time for the ordinary dinner is about half an hour, and that the time for the average dinner is about half an hour.

—Uncle Sam's new cruiser New York is the fastest armored vessel in the world, having developed a speed of twenty nautical miles an hour on her trial trip.

—Dodge & Dayey, cotton factors at Nashville, with branches in New Orleans, Mobile, St. Louis and Galveston, Tex., have failed, with liabilities of $200,000.

—The Nelson Oil and Paint Manufacturing Company, Chicago, made a voluntary assignment to Samuel Dalgin. The assets of the concern are $52,000 and the liabilities $40,000.

—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

The volume of trade is well sustained and manufacturers are busier than ever. Orders are more numerous, and demand where increase was most needed, and every indication that people do not yet begin to think of reducing purchases. The Treasury has been helped by the sale of bonds, and the Hawaiian, and some are expressed, but in view of the enormous excess of imports since January 1st, it is scarcely reasonable to hope that further outgoes will be avoided. The unfavorable money markets largely due to stay elections, which have caused a drain of currency from the East, from any form of commercial unsoundness. The business failures occurring throughout the country number 345, as compared with the totals of 279 the previous week. The corresponding weeks of last year the figures were 210.

EXHIBITS BY THE TON.

DISPLAYS ARE DAILY INCREASING IN VOLUME.

Installation Outclasses in Importance All Other Work Remaining to be Done at the World's Fair Grounds—Big Job of Home Cleaning.

Ready for the Big Rush.

Installation of exhibits outclasses in importance all other work remaining to be done at the World's Fair grounds. Hundreds of men are now at work in the complete displays, large orders have been sent out to all building exhibitors. The department of transportation is thoroughly equipped and ready to handle its share of the daily bulk that has yet been received on the grounds.

Preliminary estimates give 30,000 car loads as the probable amount of exhibits that must be received, unpacked, and installed before May 1. Up to date only 2,400 car loads have been received. If, from now on, 100 car loads of exhibits should be received each day the last exhibit would not be installed by more than 150 of which are under roof. After the buildings have been thoroughly cleaned exhibitors will scatter. Not from one end to the other in unpacked through through crowded. That is the question everybody says, but what question will have to be solved. Yes, it will be a sweeping rubbish on the grounds, and it will be a sweeping over before President Cleveland starts the machinery, and Grover Cleveland. "The exhibitors will take all the time possible to arrange their displays, and

THE GOLDEN ENTRANCE TO TRANSPORTATION BUILDING.

May 1. It is highly important that the transportation department should not be so overcrowded at the last moment that it will be impossible to do the work. Chief Hopewell's department has been working for months, and the Illinois Central has taken the hint from the Florida's mammoth trees in the grounds to embrace the work of cutting the skids and rollers inside the United States government building, which is now erected in the tall dome. The department has handed a United States special car on the track inside the government building and swung it to the allotted place with special cranes and jacks. In the mines and mining building an exhibit of the Pottstown Iron company, consisting of a steel plate 10 feet long, 20 inches wide, and half an inch thick, has been put in place in the same building the department has handed twelve pieces of red sandstone from Wisconsin each about twenty-two feet long and about three feet wide and square, also six more crates of the same material, measuring five feet on each side.

The methods of installation are simple and not so difficult as it might appear. All exhibits arriving by rail come in over the Illinois Central and Illinois Central tracks. From the railroad station to the grounds the transportation department has laid tracks to all the important buildings. On account of the properties of landscape gardening and the location of the buildings in no possible to run these tracks directly into the buildings. Special yards and transfer tracks are provided. There are no full-sized tracks in any of the buildings except machinery hall, where the place. This table is so constructed that a locomotive can run on it, stop it and shunted to the track for which they are designed. This transfer table measures a weight of 200,000 pounds, and the lateral movement is directed by electric power.

The Japanese gem exhibit is nearly all in Jackson Park. There is one monster gem yet to arrive. The installation of the Kyoto exhibit is one of the interesting sights at the park. The exhibitors do their own work, including and have a track laid right up to the side of the lake front. They have some ordinary cleaning up of the building the night and morning before the fair opens with the public.

Several of the big buildings, notably the Manufactures and Liberal Arts, have been the cause of considerable comment because of the delay in getting the floors were too weak to stand the immense weight of machinery and masses of ore and stone heaped upon them. Exhibitors had to get in the expense of tearing out the floors and putting foundations of stone and brick in place of the wooden ones. This has occasioned much hard work and delay. Slate boards with cement supports have been laid in place of the floors, and they were not allowed to bring their displays on until the new foundat ons had been strengthened.

Trio On to Fifteen.

The second trip of the canal of Panama Canal trials came to an end Tuesday. Chetin de Lesseps, nephew of the famous ex-Minister of Canal Works, tried to support the Panama lottery bonds bill, was found guilty. Bishut, who confessed his guilt in open court, was also found guilty, and Blondin, who acted as go-between in the bribery of Bailout, was also found guilty. All the other defendants are acquitted.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

Round Lake is free from ice, Pine Lake is breaking up fast, and Lake Michigan will be open in a few days if the present favorable weather continues.

The steamer Petoskey left Manistee for Chicago last Saturday, and will make two trips between those points before coming north. The Petoskey and Puritan have been refitted and are in fine shape.

Capt. Ira Bishop, late of the steamer City of Charlevoix, has been appointed to the command of the big freight steamer Armour, running between Buffalo and Chicago.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids will be brought here from Traverse City to fit out for the World's Fair trade. Capt. Franklin, who sailed her last season, goes as mate with Capt. Wilbur.

S. S. Burke, manager of the N. M. Line, was in town two days last week.

Hayes from Hayes.

Miss Lora Sly, of Bay Shore, returned to Alma Monday.

Hayes has 213 registered voters and held the largest and most exciteable election seen in Hayes for some time.

The people voted for cattle to run at large, but every owner of cattle must remember that the people cannot vote to turn cattle loose on their neighbors' premises. The intent of the law is that the highways can be used for pasturage, provided the cattle are followed by a herder to keep them out of occupied premises.

The fellowing ticket was elected: Supervisor, A. W. Chew; clerk, Loren Hamlin; treasurer, Wm. D. McNally; commissioner, W. C. Grandy; justice, George Bacot; school inspectors, Oscar Tillotson, George McNally; board of review, Loman H. Scott; drain commissioner, John Hagerty, Sr.; constables, Daniel Hagerty, M. Moore, Jones Lewis.

Special highway fund voted was $500; contingent fund, $550, and one half of one per cent for statute labor.

The following are overseers of highways: Isaac Stauffer, Geo. Van Schoick, L. H. Scott, H. S. Newson, Moses Cooper, John Kopf, Frank Kane, Alex Campbell, A. E. Struthers, Thomas Halpin, Charles Howe, Fred Willis, Wm. Lawson, Geo. Bacot, Geo. Saunby, Wm. B. Sayers, M. S. Chew, Thos. Bacot, H. J. Cook.

Hayes polled about 131 votes on township ticket and about 100 on State and county, the Democrats having a majority of 16 on State.

Robbins, crows, thunder storms, millers, June bugs, frogs, etc., all are giving us notice that spring is here.

A carload of wire-nails and barbed and plain wire just received at the pioneer store. Will match any prices.

Northern Michigan News.

Hankey & Foreman have bought the idle Armstrong plant at Petoskey for their big drawing factory, and Petoskey people are rejoicing.

W. R. Cole, of Cross Village, harvested last season 100 tons of hay, 500 bushels of sound corn, 500 bushels of potatoes, 500 bushels of peas, 200 bushels of oats and other crops in proportion. The corn was raised on five acres of ground.

Last Thursday Morris Wetheimer, a former well known citizen and leading merchant of Cheboygan, brother of John Wertheimer, the well known merchant of our city, died in Detroit and was buried in this city Sunday. In the Spring of 1871, when the writer came to Cheboygan, the deceased was one of the leading merchants.—Cheboygan Tribune: Mr. Wertheimer will be remembered by many of the old settlers of Charlevoix.

ERECTED HER TOMBSTONE.

Eccentricity of Character Displayed in an English Graveyard.

A remarkable, but perfectly reliable story comes from Wales which throws a strange light upon eccentricity of character. In the graveyard of the parish church at Churchstoke, a small village in Montgomeryshire, there is to be seen a gravestone which bears an inscription recording the death of a maiden lady who, nevertheless is actually living in the village referred to, and within a short distance of her tombstone.

Her brothers and sisters died in the early part of this century, and a single stone announces their deaths. It stood undisturbed until 1886, when it was renovated, and at that time the lady referred to, who was then in her 68th year, gave orders to a local stone mason to insert her name at the foot of the stone. This was done, but he was rather surprised to receive a further order to add the words "Died 1886." At first he hesitated, and afterward complied with this request, although he did not credit his customer with any remarkable degree of prophecy.

Year after year passed by, and when 1889 came the eccentric lady was still living, perhaps contrary to her own expectations. The epitaph now confronts her every time she wends her way to church service. So robust is she that since 1889 she has visited America, and apparently derived considerable benefit from the voyage.

"In memory of Edward Lockley, stonemason, son of John and Mary Lockley, who died July 30, 1842, aged 26 years. Also John, their son, who died December 7, 1846, aged 35 years. Also Thomas, Richard and Joseph, their sons, who died in tender infancy. Also Sarah, their daughter, born August 8, 1819, died 1889."

WASN'T CONFIDENTIAL.

His Mistake Was in Thinking That He Could Keep It From Her.

Now that her husband was sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary for poisoning his mother-in-law she declared she would insist upon a divorce as provided by statute.

He reproached her with lack of affection, but she was obdurate.

He pleaded, but her heart was like stone.

"What a spectacle—"

The few minutes during which they were to be left alone were almost spent and he was becoming frantic.

"—of devotion it would be were you to wait patiently for my release. What a rebuke to the world's condemnation."

She seemed to hear impatiently.

"Deliberately—"

She spoke with seeming nonchalance.

"you have betrayed the confidence that should exist between husband and wife. You—"

He would have interrupted, but her glance commanded silence.

"were to work and killed me without saying a word to me about it."

Then the guards came and led him away.

TURNING.

The great John Wanamaker advertises that one of the, if not the principle of success, is the rapid turning of stock. We believe in that and follow the theory to such an extent as in our power. We cannot turn all our stock and, indeed, our patrons would not wish us to—but we do turn a good portion of it every day and rapidly, at that, as most of the travelers in this region know. The rapid turning in our business, however applies to that portion of our stock which goes over the ground, or rather wheels along the rails, and those who take our fast trains to Chicago and Detroit will bear witness that there is every indication of our appreciation of the Wanamaker theory. If Hodge and Podge should in person appear and ask what makes our "wheels go round" so fast, we would, as true disciples of the immortal George,—and therefore, having to tell the truth, be constrained to reply "competition", the strange peculiarity of our plan being (more truth) a proper appreciation of the condition. For it is a condition, and not a theory, that confronts us, as it did some of the political aspirants a short time ago. The wheels do go round. The velocity is not only stimulated by competition, but filled with an ambition to provide our patrons with the very best railroad accommodations, and for the simple, selfish reason that that's the way to get patrons and to keep them when you get them. We keep turning other patrons of our stock, too. Our wits revolve (if it be true that wits do revolve) incessantly to keep abreast of the times; that our plans for comfort and convenience and speed are properly carried out, and that all appliances for safety are secured as soon as they are invented. NOT HIS FATHER.

He Wouldn't Be Called "Grape" in Business Hours.

It is whispered among a certain gay young set but lately entered into society. Two of all its members, a young graduate and a regular "man-about-town" lay all that is floating a little way over, respectively that marked his first day in business.

His father, the president of a prominent insurance company had made a place in the office for his son, and the young fellow was eager to take it. It so happened that his first dip into the great sea of worldly ambition occurred on the same day as a meeting of the directors of the well known corporation.

Being sent on an errand to the president, the young hopeful burst into the room where the magnates were assembled and in the familiar parlance of the house began "Papa—"

The august president with a look of absolute horror, turned to the agitated messenger, and to the intense amusement of the others present, and to the everlasting chagrin of the indignant youth, said, "I'm not your father—at least in business hours."

TWELVE THOUSAND BARRELS OF WHISKY BURNED.

Rather Williams May Carry His Pet Measure—Another Monument Worth Seeing—Vast Turpentine Forests Burned—"Squire Allingham" Left Nothing to Lily Langtry.

From Tuesday's Sun.

Bonded warehouse No. 1 in the distillery of the Allen-Dudley company in East Louisville, together with its capacity of whisky, was destroyed by the midnight conflagration. In addition to the loss from the explosion of the 12,000 barrels of spirits, 1,000 cattle in the pens were bellowing, and the roofs of the pens were on fire several times. It took the united efforts of the fire companies to keep the pens from burning. The distillery of the Anderson-Nelson company caught fire, but was saved with but trifling damage. The whisky was valued at $100,000, and was owned by more than 90 different persons and is thought to have been well covered by insurance. The warehouse was valued at $30,000, fairly insured. The damage to the distillery is slight.

—A Berlin dispatch says: The German army bill is saved. The decision is not yet pronounced, but so far as can now judge by the present state of affairs the current is the slightest doubt that the bill passed vesterday will be passed by the Reichstag with very little alteration. What impelled the sudden change in heart The German Diet is composed of the French excited beyond reason by the events of Tonkin, Siam, and Madagascar. These troubles of the French—for the Germans—caused all the wars with France. But these wars without question at the time came just now, so will not stand the views in a little or three. Germany is satisfied with her military budget. He seemed that the government's action was dictated by the fear something to happen.

—A discovery of the greatest value of the Carnegie Steel Company is generally viewed for as other strikes have been in the past. The strike is imposed on a new place. The Ft. OF TWO ANCESTORS.

A Woman Inherited the Instincts of the Coward and the Hero.

Among the women is and almost those who know who her great grandfathers are is one whose ancestors played prominent but widely different parts in the battle of Concord.

She was appointed to lead the women, the other was one of the jessamyn to be led.

When the cry of battle sounded the leader, the man to whom the troops looked for direction, deserted them. At the last moment his fear overcame him and he fled.

The other ancestor, seeing that the troops were without a commander, rushed from out the candle and shouting: "For God's sake, fire!" made himself the leader the men needed.

From the time this woman was a little girl in short dresses she had repeatedly heard this story and had been proud of the brave man, and she was ashamed of the coward. As she grew into womanhood she found in her nature parts of both ancestors.

"Let me tell you how I often feel," she wrote say. "For instance, when I go to a party I am happy in anticipation until I get to the drawing-room door and catch a glimpse of the guests within and the hostess standing stiff and prim to receive me.

"There comes over me a terrible fear and the runaway ancestor in me says, 'Take to your heels, Annie, you can never face these people.' I'm on the point of obeying this impulse when the coward's sake, fire! takes full possession of me. With a bound I attack my hostess and the battle's won."

BATTLES FOUGHT ON SUNDAY.

Historical Engagements of Waterloo, Bull Run and Chickamauga.

Many of the most famous battles of history have been fought on Sunday. To go no further back than the beginning of the present century, the Gibbon Democrat cites the battle of Eylau, February 8, 1807, by Napoleon over the Russians and Prussians, and the battle of Friedland, June 14, 1807, won by Napoleon over the same allies, were both fought on Sunday. On Sunday, May 21, 1809, Napoleon was defeated at Essling; on Sunday, May 2, 1813, won the victory of Lutzen, and on Sunday, June 17, 1815, was overthrown at Waterloo. Wellington, besides Waterloo, won several of his greatest victories on Sunday, being victorious at Vimeriera, in Portugal, August 21, 1808, at Vacatez de Otoro, May 5, 1811; at Orthez, February 27, 1814; at Tarbes, March 20, 1814, and at Toulouse, April 10, 1814, all three battles being fought on Sunday. During the civil war in this country the first battle at Bull Run, July 21, 1861, was fought on Sunday, and the battle of Chickamauga, September 19 and 20, 1863, ended on Sunday. Vicksburg was surrendered on Saturday, July 4, 1863, and formally occupied on Sunday, the following day, and on the same day the began his retreat from Gettysburg, Petersburg fell on Sunday, April 2, 1865, and on the following Sunday Lee surrendered.

JIM-JAM VALLEY.

"In the Jim-Jam valley, in California, there are many weird and renowned auriferous mines," said John E. Owens of New York. "It is named Jim-Jam valley because of the curious and strange sights seen there. The valley is about forty miles long and thirty miles wide. Not a soul lives within its territory. Mountains capped with snow all the year surround the valley. In the grasses lakes, green trees, birds in springs, and even lilies growing in the marshes. Contrast these wild, the rugged mountains that surround you, and the picture is one of his sublimity, loveliness and beauty. You imagine that no paradise, ethereal or heavenly, could surpass it. In the distance there are beautiful lakes with towers jutting softly over the calm waters; fantastic craft and beautiful water nymphs below themselves. Weird and somber figures gazed at you from all directions and dinky outlines forms of all colors, shapes and sizes may be seen.

"Occasionally there is a shot in the valley. Rocked lightning leaps from the mountain tops and in its light you see strange animals, different from any, you have ever heard about before.

"Those mirages strike the observer with awe, and few men who see them once care to repeat the visit."

Preaching Monkeys.

The author of "The History of Human Folly" is a special of mono-called "preachers." Every morning and evening these monkeys assemble in the woods. One takes a higher position than the rest and makes a sig nal with his forepaw. At this signal the others all around him and listen. When they are all seated he begins to utter a series of sounds. When he stops those who make another signal with his paw, and the others cry out until he makes a third signal, upon which they become silent again. This author, Mr. Maurgrete, asserts that he was a witness to these proceedings, but no other traveler has confirmed the statement.

Anecdote of Sherman's.

A detachment of soldiers was told off to take charge of young Tom, now Father Sherman, while red wing the pontoon bridge across the Potomac for the grand review of the army, were coming to Washington to be in part in the great review there in 1865. He was then about eight years old.

One of the men asked him if he expected to grow up a smart man. In his father, the general, and I promptly answered "Ain't."

"Why?" was the next question.

"Well," he replied "all the smart ones run away."

Ancient Tow Sinkers.

Lead fishers giving the northern circuit, a fellow that was being tried for "cheery was very impertinent with the judge in his easy-as-him, telling him he was an idiot in knowledge.

"Why, have we?" asked the judge.

"Why," answered the culprit, "about some bonds, your name is fixed on and my name is 10 up, and those fellows, sir."

"The man," answered the judge, "but you said I can't be disbarred till you are hanged for that is never good form until it is hanged."

BUSINESS HABITS.

Whether a woman is poor or rich it follows her through life. Her habits of thought, her habits keeping her little accounts successfully and knowing how a cent just what she does with her money, whether she has 10 cents or $10 to expend on her own little personal wants. An allowance is the first step toward this end if, at the same time, it is impressed upon her that every sum spent should be set down with unfailing regularity.

In black and white one notes how much more easily the money can be spent, how quickly it goes, and just what foolish little nothings have lured it from our pockets. Without setting down each item, it is ten chances to one that you will conclude you must have had some money when you cannot see how that ten-dollar bill went when you only bought such a very few things. The next little degree are a genuine restraint, besides instilling a habit and system that will be of great value if ever fortune smiles and a great calamity comes to your hands, and still a greater economy is a necessity and the dollar has to be forced into doing duty for two.

Unless the accounts are kept accurately and the cash made to balance every evening, you had better not attempt any book-keeping at all, for the slipshod methods are worse than none and only constitute a continual false balance matters. If anything is worth doing at all it is worth doing well, and there is nothing so productive of future good as the habit of doing every duty put for the pennies when school days are the only trials and the allowance of fifty cents a week goes for candy and pickles. If then gain is once established in childhood the girl will grow to womanhood with a clear knowledge of where her money goes and what she has to show for it.

FRANCE'S CANAL SYSTEM.

It Is Practically Free From Tolls and Covers Nearly 6,000 Miles.

Interior navigation has long held a prominent place in the traffic of France, and it is not surprising to learn that the length of navigable waters in that country is 5,000 miles, of which 3,000 are ordained as trial, 2,100 miles navigable without locks, 2,200 canalized rivers and 3,600 are canals.

The river basins of France all but seven are canalized, which is, therefore, practically free from tolls. The system of inland navigation has cost about $100,000,000 for construction and purchase and $25,000,000 for concessions. The annual cost of maintenance is about $2,000,000, of which a little whole covers all expenditure whatever. The number of commercial craft on the waters employing between 15,000 and 16,000 and their tonnage is 2,000,000 tons, of which 1,000,000 are steam-ships. The average tonnage of the craft is 130 carrying 100 tons. Moreover, about 2,000 foreign boats use the French canals each year.

The marine power is now almost furnished by draft animals, although a locomotive tugboat used on the Seine, the Oise and some other rivers, and steam engines are occasionally met with. Sailing craft are now becoming rare on the canals in a few places. The average speed of motor craft of freight carrying is about 6 miles an hour, and twice as fast for passenger boats.

In Love With Its Prisoners.

A Paris letter says: Some years ago the late Dowager Queen Olga, of Wurtemberg, was imprisoned in Stuttgart. Five or eight years ago, when she was the greatest beauty of the European court, Prince Bartalini, an officer in the Austrian service, fell in love with her. When he learned that she refused his love he became alarmed, and the prince is one of his subjects loveliness and beauty. You imagine that no paradise, ethereal or heavenly, could surpass it. In the distance there are beautiful lakes with towers jutting softly over the calm waters; fantastic craft and beautiful water nymphs below themselves. Weird and somber figures gazed at you from all directions and dinky outline forms of all colors, shapes and sizes may be seen.

"Occasionally there is a shot in the valley. Rocked lightning leaps from the mountain tops and in its light you see strange animals, different from any, you have ever heard about before.

By Capt. Ormond Steele

Off Montauk Point it was discovered that one of the middle chains was broken, and the latter to figure it out was taken up and the Wanderer came to anchor.

Capt. Denham and every man on board the ship, with the exception of Fox and Fretwell, believed that the break in the middle chain was the result of accident.

Capt. Fox and his lieutenant arranged the accident in advance, and they even knew the point where it was to happen.

"Well, Fretwell, what do you think of it? I hear you have been to dine in New York," said Capt. Fox, coming down to the cabin where Ralph Denham was reading.

"Then will the break detain us?" asked Ralph, who was naturally anxious to report his presence of the Dunnoid in the Governor's cabin.

"It is worse than I at first supposed, but we shall be under way again early in the afternoon. The only way is to have patience."

"Patience is very essential to the sailor. But this is not a fad place to be imprisoned in for extra hours," said Ralph, looking wind-ingly about the luxurious cabin.

"I consider it all yours, my dear Capt. Denham. We shall have dinner in an hour, and if you feel like turning in after that, Fox I nothing to the fitting of the bright-looking cabin bed, "will allow you to get rested by the way. It was occupied for a week by an Indian princess, the daughter of the King of Dodo."

"Fretwell, will not he an objection?" inquired Denham, with a twinkling back at his own beautiful principle to bring in his very confidant, all the rest of the world could not produce an equal.

It was the custom in this era, on land and sea, when the distance permitted, to dine at high noon.

Promptly at 12, Ben came to announce dinner. It was served in another cabin, with plates for three.

At the time given off board the Wanderer, Ralph Denham was seated at the lavish display of costly plate, and the extravagant illusions of rare wines.

He then supposed that this was the grand dinner, a grand occasion, unforgivable than was his surprise at finding the cabin before—richly set as at the fete, while the dinner itself was such as the Governor and his guests could not supplement with all the resources of the ship at a moment's notice.

"I am afraid, Capt. Ralph Denham, when he, Fox and Fretwell were seated on board, that I have been to remorse long with you, that I should be wholly unfitted for service on board a ship where the officers were forced to depend on their resources for subsistence and their own small pay for luxuries."

"You would soon get used to it, Jim Fox," said Captain Fox, rolling Ralph Denham's glass from Jamaica, which neither knew Fretwell tasted. "A sailor's life, at the best, is one of danger and privation, and my motto is 'make the best of it.' Thanks to my ancestors, I have a large estate in England, and the question with me when I first got command of a ship, was 'what I ought to do' with my accumulating on shore till I retire, and am too old to enjoy it, or shall I spend a goodly portion of it for the enjoyment of myself and shipmates?' I decided on the latter course, and so far I have no reason to regret it."

"You have, no doubt, acted wisely, and had I been in your place," said Ralph, "I think I should have decided to make the same choice."

"Why so?"

"Money would demoralize me, perhaps because I am not used to it, and it is a trifle, I know, but I feel outside of my ship, Ralph Denham has lived as I am, would probably have enjoyed with Fretwell."

"My men have their share of the capital's good things, and I enthusiast to know of it, of course there would be no ill-feeling between me and my men, one or twice in forty the sailors, but when over the time comes, I have lost a dozen or battle, my men are not found wanting."

"They certainly behaved admirably well when in tight, Fox," said Ralph, and he uttered no compliment, for the truth of the Wanderer, though as fierce a looking lot of desperadoes as ever put foot on shore, had proved themselves in a way that excited the admiration of the sailors.

This was the result of the effect Ralph's discipline and constant watchfulness had, was not a sailor on the Wanderer who not understand the true character of his ship, and who did not appreciate the great necessity for combine. And then, had one of them broken the rules, he knew that the punishment would be severe, and right, he well knew that the penalty would have been chains and the lash, and for the second offense death.

"When it can be done with safety to the ship and without dinner to the service, I relax and let the men go ashore and get rid of their excess of spirits. They are devils here, sure enough, but they come on board thoroughly exhausted, and as tractable as tame lambs. If I should have three or two, Captain Denham, I will guarantee that there is not a man in the lot, or a gang of it," said Fox, again raising the particular Bagdad.

"But I am not accustomed to wine," replied Ralph, who did not like it, neither did he wish to appear indifferent to the complacency kindness of his host.

"You cannot cultivate the taste for this particular brand, I am sorry to say, for I don't think there are ten gallons of it in this hemisphere. There, one more glass will not affect you, unless you are a very light weight, and I'll tell you I should propose you that you will drink refreshed, and there is your cabin," said Fox, pointing to an open door.

"I think he can, Capt. Denham."

As it would have been a discourtesy to refuse his generous host, Ralph Denham raised the glass, bowed in Fretwell, and then drained down the delicious contents.

Almost at Ralph felt exhilarated. He went to bed, and it seemed to him that he was waking in a dream.

He felt very happy, and inclined to laugh at everything, and he felt that he certainly would not have attacked his guests.

He realized that he was in danger of making himself ridiculous, or worse, like Fox. It occurred to him he was floating, he could not tell.

"Would you like to go down, old pard Joe, the noble boy, opening the door of a splendidly furnished apartment, which, to the excited imagination of Ralph, appeared to be one of some fairy Oriental magnificence.

"Yes, I will, though I do not feel sleepy. That was rare wine, Jay, that you served me at dinner," said Ralph, nodding and laughing, yet fully aware that he had said nothing preliminary of the kind.

"It sometimes makes one sleepy," said Joe, leading the Captain's coat and preparing to remove his pumps.

"Very well, let me rest for a short time. If I should go to sleep, which I rarely do in the daytime, wake me in an hour or so."

Ralph Denham threw himself on the luxurious couch, and as Ben closed the door there was an expression of malicious pity and imitation on his face.

Captain Denham, though fully aware that the ship was at anchor in a calm sea, felt that he was being rocked and swayed by gentle, invisible hands.

Through the open port-lids that admitted light and air to his room, he heard the sound of the lapping waves against the ship, but it was transformed into music, more soothing than was ever taken from the shell of a tritton or fell from the lips of a Grecian maiden in the fabled mermaid.

The music and the swinging kept on till the cabin expanded into a gorgeous ballroom, in which he found he was one of increasing rapture, while soldiers of fortune, dressed in the gorgeous uniforms of the Spanish Court, danced with him, and the lady of the Governor and Fox's fine eyes fastened at the private ball and proposed.

"Ah, if you married Graham's wife and got rid of this fellow," Frenzied Ralph, as the music ceased, and Captain Denham was sleeping, "don't I be happy and make him move—only be near Fretwell."

"My friend!"

"Yes, he has the power.

"I know he has, but he never has and never will use his power to do wrong from a sense of friendship. If Graham were sure that Ralph Denham was not now, he would hasten to give warning that I was a pirate. There was, and he would exhaust every power to destroy me.

"He does not like you, then?"

"Like me! He hates me! They cannot trust, and we can never trust our parents in prison. I am, Fretwell, well look as if you thought (this remark had a excited personal bearing, yet I can feel it has. Now, what keeps the officers and crew of the Wanderer so closely as if they were bound by the strongest ties in the world?"

"Interest, Captain."

"There you have it. It is at interest, all and, if you take away the hope of gain, the strongest ties, the strongest of the greatest gain, the bond would be broken, and they would betray or turn queen's evidence, and every man would be a traitor, and he would be breaking his neck in order to make his fate, and dangling in a couple of bottles over his head, exclaimed.

"Now, go in, sweet, that you are all here." I ten is a question of privilege with you, and I'll be sufficient to fall prisoner. Will anyone to the end of my life, I'm sure, I'm sure, I'm sure

Northern Michigan News.

C. N. Coulter of Central Lake, has established a populist paper at Traverse City.

Mrs. Litney, of South Arm, has accepted a position in Wilensky's dry goods store at East Jordan.

Bellaire is to have a Normal school again this summer. It will be under the same management as that of one year ago.

Elk Rapids Progress: Mrs. S. S. Spaulding received a handsome pair of gold bowed spectacles last Wednesday from the ladies of the M. E. church before removal of Mrs. Spaulding to Norwood. The presentation was made by Mrs. Jackson Ingalls.

In commenting on the Republican victory in Petoskey, the Democrat says that place says the result was brought about by democrats being led by the nose by the editor of the republican paper, and fighting their own party instead of the opposition. As a consequence the township has been turned over to the republicans, and Buckley and Bonteeou will get together and snicker at the democrats.

Hastings Item Hayes.

One of our Hayesites snores so badly in his sleep, that his wife has determined to apply for a bill of divorce.

Geo. C. Pierce has been having a tussle with the measles.

Hayes is accused of almost everything in the catalogue of misdemeanors; but the last accusation, that our Indians are repeaters, and have been stuffing the ballot boxes at Petoskey, is thinner than river water. We deny the allegation and defy the alligator.

Wm. C. Grandy our newly elected highway commissioner is suffering with a throat trouble and his talking machine is out of order, but if you give him time to recuperate he will then be ready to explain the standing question in Hayes: "What has become of the money that belongs to our road districts?"

The Bay Shore Sunday School has changed time from 12 m. to 2:30 p. m. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

A car load of wire nails and barbed and plain wire just received at the Pioneer store. Call and get prices.

IN A SAD PLIGHT.

He Had Forgotten the Larger Matter in the Smaller.

Cold and chilling, the icy blast swept through Chicago's streets. He stood on a down-town corner, shivering object of sympathy.

He was evidently on active and of a nature far above such a petty trifle as a snow-storm. But no heavy overcoat encwrapped his manly form, and he made vain efforts to assume an appearance of warmth and comfort. The collar of his well-worn coat was turned up around his slender neck and his hands were thrust deeply into his pockets. When the damp snow accumulated in the folds of his coat he carefully brushed it off, preserving always the dignity becoming a Roscius.

As he paused in supreme indifference at the flying flakes he was joined by a brother artist, one who was evidently in a snug berth, for his overcoat was adorned with the fur cuffs and collar which all well-regulated actors wear.

"Aw, I say, old man," said he of the affluent air, "this looks awfully tough, you know. Caesar! you get your coat out?"

"Well, old boy," said the shivering tragedian, "I could, but I met with a little accident."

"Why, it was only $3," said the other. "I can lend you that, you know, if you're short."

"Well, no, it's not that, old chap," replied he of the cold chills; "I have the money, but—"

"But what? Why don't you get your coat out?"

"Well, you remember down in Peoria when I sold my best coat and vest last week?"

"I do, of course, and you did well, old boy. What's that to do with the overcoat?"

"Well the fact is, you see, that in the pocket of that coat was the ticket for the overcoat."

And he resumed his pose on the corner, trying to look as if he did not feel the cold and clinging dampness which slowly formed about him.

NOT GOOD FOR EVERYONE.

A Mild Warning for Some Greedy Little Folks.

"Too many oranges are not wholesome for any one who has a tendency to gastric trouble," says a well-known physician. "It is generally supposed that oranges are particularly healthy, and in many families they are the regular accompaniments of a breakfast table, parents thinking that they must necessarily be wholesome, whereas in some cases they are positively injurious. Some of my patients, a boy of twelve or thirteen, for instance, has had a severe attack of stomach trouble every winter for several succeeding years—attacks for which I could find no apparent cause, until I happened to find out by accident that every year, about that time, the family received a barrel of oranges from Florida, upon which the child from were allowed to regale themselves freely. This was the whole trouble; oranges did not agree with the child, and when he ate them freely he was ill. I stopped his eating them, and he has never had a recurrence of the trouble.

TURNING.

The great John Wanamaker advertises that one of this, if not the principle of success, is the rapid turning of stock. We believe in that, and follow the theory to such an extent as in our power. We cannot turn all our stock and, indeed, our patrons would too, with or without us, but we do turn a good portion of it every day and rapidly, at that, as most of our travelers in this region know. The rapid turning in our business, however applies to that portion of our stock which goes over the ground, or rather wheels along the rails, and those who take our fast trains to Chicago and Detroit will bear witness that there is every indication of our appreciation of the Wanamaker theory. If Budge and Tisdale should in person appear and ask what makes our "wheels go round" so fast, we would, as true disciples of the innermost Gospel—and therefore, having to tell the truth, be constrained to reply "competition!" the strange peculiarity of our plan being (more truth) a proper appreciation of the condition. For it is a condition, and not a theory, that confronts us, as it did some of the political aspirants a short time ago. The wheels do go round. The velocity is not only stimulated by competition, but oiled with an ambition to provide our patrons with the very best railroad accommodations, and for the simple, selfish reason that that's the way to get patrons and to keep them when you get them. We keep turning other portions of our stock, too. Our site receive (if it be true that wits do receive) necessarily to keep abreast of the time; that our plan for comfort and convenience and speed are properly carried out, and that all appliances for safety are secured as soon as they are invented. Would you not prefer to travel by a line so managed? Try the West Michigan and the Dakota, Lansing & Northern. GEO. DE HAVEN, G. P. A.

In Sheep's Clothing.

By Capt Ormond Steele

After this long and apparently satisfactory conversation between Captain Fox and his lieutenant, they went on deck, where they found the cruiser in good working order, and the men lounging about the hot decks, while the officers smoked, and wondered among themselves what this conclave on the part of the skipper meant.

The men and officers of the Wanderer had no much confidence in the foresight and daring of their leader, that they had seldom talked among themselves as to the nature of any movements Fox did not explain in advance.

So he, too, had been by them exactly as he had promised, and they had every reason to believe that their captain knew what he was doing, and that the captain's good masterpieces would continue for many a day to come.

There was not a man on the ship from Don, the cabin boy, to the captain with the one exception of Ralph Denham, who was always getting all breathless over thought that the Wanderer was bound for New York when she left Cape Hatteras.

Yet, then did they know where they were going, for did they particularly care so that they were in the power with anyone to guide, or, in lieu of that, change at pleasure.

With the exception of Fernandez, the officers were much more intelligent, and consequently as the men, but they fairly appreciated the value of good conduct on shore, and of silence, or rebuke, when those qualities are displeased necessary, to hide the defects of their early training.

Three times, during the afternoon, Fox and Fernandez visited the little town of a cabin in which Ralph Denham lay, still insensible.

Twice they administered to him a sedative, and once, with a few sips of the grape, swung open the cabin door, and one drop of a sedative fluid was Fernandez thought was sufficient to restore the willpower of a giant for four-and-twenty hours.

A few hours after dark the captain's gig was lowered, and the gig filled with and three men, all carrying their arms and considerable vaulting.

The rowers and the officer in command, Fernandez, had been stripped out, and, at a low command from the officer in the stern sheets, they oars dropped into place, caught the water like one man, and the gig fell away out for the cliffs, beneath which a fire had been burning for some time.

Fernandez and his men landed near the fire, where they found an old Indian, sent there by Fox, to wait and warn them.

The gig returned at once to the ship, which wearingly lifted and the Wanderer stood out to sea, but she did not sail in the direction of the port of New York.

Fernandez did not ask the Indian station on which he was sent, but he cause of his absence to be entered in the official journal, and, with a shrug of the shoulders, he dismissed the matter from his mind.

He was a man who had seen much of the world, and had learned that it was a very good world to live in, and that it was a very good world to live in, and that it was a very good world to live in, and

A QUEER FAD.

A Lively Scramble Among Bone Hunters Caused by Curious Results.

Collectors of curiosities indulge in odd fancies. Mr. Howard Hammond, of Leominster, appears to have a fancy for collecting human skulls. One day last month he was in the priory churchyard in that town, where the sexton, like that famous grave-digger who remembered the king's jester before his dashes of merriment had ceased to set the tables in a roar, cast up a skull. Upon this Mr Hammond stooped down, picked up the grim relic, and placing it in a handkerchief together with some grass, was seen to walk away with it.

Subsequently the skull, having been washed, was seen, it is said, in Mr. Hammond's office, but the business got wind and made a talk, and finally, no less a body than the home office authorities were induced to take up the matter. It was in accordance with orders from the home office that the deputy chief constable sought out Mr. Hammond the other day in Leominster market and demanded the surrender of "that skull." Mr. Hammond's answer was that it was no longer in his possession.

He had "relinquished it," he said. Besides, he so doing, he had "conducted a proper burial service over it." More he could scarcely do, but the authorities were not yet appeased. Mr. Hammond has been charged in the Leominster police court and convicted of unlawfully removing human remains from a burial place. The magistrates, however, seem to have thought that he had done well rightly enough to merit for his indiscretion, for while they fined him 1s., they ordered that the costs should be paid by the prosecution.

DARDING-HOUSE GOSSIP.

A Social Entertainment That Lasts From Morning Till Night.

The ability to mind one's own business is a most commendable and beautiful virtue, but, alas! there are some women who hand who have so few affairs of their own with which to occupy their time that the greater portion of the day and many hours of the night as well are spent in talking about what does not concern them in the least.

Their entire world is compassed by the four walls of the house that holds them, and the doings and sayings of the inmates are the simple topics of conversation. In the morning they gather in each other's rooms, and the conversations opens with a discussion of at what hour the west river neighbor arrived home the night before, the business and the income of the new boarders in the second-story front, the quarrel between Mr and Mrs So-and-So, which, by the way, they never would have known anything about if ear to a convenient crack in the adjoining door, and many other topics of a like interesting and elevating character.

Now it is a perfect wonder to a busy woman how these ladies find the time for such lengthy discussions. Surely, the reading of a course of standard literature would be a much more worthy and instructive pastime and, instead to the mischief that such gossip always results in, the women who board take care? Take care lest your judgment be too harsh and your conclusions too hasty. Surface observation tells you nothing of the real life of man or woman, and unless you desire the boomerang of your venom to recoil upon your own character, watch the tongue carefully lest it lead to gossip and scandal that has no foundation in actual fact.

BURNS' LOVE STORY.

Something About the Highland Mary He Sang Into Immortality.

The supreme love passage in the life of Burns is related in his subject Mary Campbell, whose memory has been consecrated by untold thousands of lovers, whose spirit fills their world, glorifies their dreams, draws them to a saint, who look up as to a shrine at the mention of the name Highland Mary. She was the daughter of a shipmaster, and Burns saw her first time near at the kirk of Tarbolton and instantly his heart was glowed with consuming fire.

She was as Sir George Douglas says, the most spiritual of all the loves, and how different might have been his fortune had he met her earlier and made her his own. Sweet as a type of Highland beauty and female beauty always appealed to Burns with irresistible force. So to her to every genuine man, genuine man ever breathed who has not touched at the slight of a lovely female woman, for love is the divinest of all forms of beauty. The genuine man may, on the stress of necessity, care nought for wealth, for praise of his triumphs, for influence or command, but so long as the years spare him his heart will respond to the beauty of woman.

Burns' susceptibility to it is discovered in almost every line of his poetry. He was thrilled at the first presence of Mary, so modest, so attentive, so the service, so forgetful of herself and the vice slipped. "Her figure was graceful, her features delicate, her complexion fair. She had large, full brown, dark, soft eyes and half of a reddish hint. Her knowledge of English was large rather, and can fairly claim her lips, accustomed to the cheerful, might soften and gardle the more general language, with a bewitching effect."

KILLED THE LITTLE LION.

The Wee Sod Dog Shamed Out of Its Hidden Wits Somewhat.

An African lion in Central park, having taken a disgusted dislike to the world through the bars that other day, was a jolly lion in the fourth month, and its brief existence is supposed to have been full of pain.

The lion-cub had never been children—belonged to Barnum & Bailey's show. He came to the park recently two months ago, with the elephant, the two camels and the sacred cattle.

The circus offers small souls animals to the park for the winter. The elephant and the lion constrictor thrived and grew fat the antelope languished, the lion pined away. His eyes were dull and sad, and the keepers saw he was suffering, but he did not roar or rave.

About two weeks ago he began to sing gee up and down his cage, as if his keepers were enough for his body. Thus instead of walking on the under pitched his toes, he doubled them and sat down on his haunches. When Felix McDonald, the superintendent of the circus menagerie visited at the park, attention was called to the lion's condition. He decided that the lion's brain was affected, and that he must be killed.

Chloroform was chosen at first, but after more deliberation it was decided to shoot him. At 3 o'clock one afternoon the executive body place the muzzle of a Colt's forty-five in front of the cage and aimed three with crave face. The lion took another and laid down on his full length, four feet from one to tail tips, and his eyes were turned full upon the men. He was as motionless as a lion. Instead of the keeper raised a rifle and held the muzzle within a few feet of the lion's ear. There was a flash and a loud report. The lion's head fell and remained motionless. The shot had pierced his brain, and had killed him.

The shell was opened, and it was found that the lion's brain was thick with blood clots.

ON THE YUKON.

Alaska's Mighty River To be Used for Commerce.

The Yukon river is now to be made the scene of commerce and will soon be inaugurated by regular side-wheel steamers. The idea is to run regular boats up and down the Yukon river for the purpose of trade and connecting at St. Michael's island with the Sound steamers. The new steamer, which is to be called the P. B. Weare, had her frame laid out and fitted at Seattle. She will be put together on St. Michael's island, will be 175 feet in length, twenty-eight feet beam and four-foot-hold.

The Weare will run up the Yukon river, the length of which is about 2,000 miles, and will be the first and only steamer on the river. The only will be of six inches of her bottom, and the cabins, will be in a glass and steel frame. There will be also a concrete and steel capital on the steamer, an innovation which will a more cool in getting and taking out in cable or cargo from the hold.

A steamer will be taken along for the purpose of building engines for the Indians. The Yukon river is only navigable during July, August and September, and the Indians are at a loss, and everything that a miner can do, and everything that a miner can do, and everything that a miner can do

WIND AND EARTHQUAKES ROCK THE CITY.

Terrible Work of Storms in Michigan and Missouri. Thousands of Strikers in Idaho—Fell on Her Child and Killed It.

From Far and Near.

—A terrific gale swept over Cincinnati between 2 and 4 o'clock Wednesday morning. The signal station reported the velocity of the wind at seventy-eight miles an hour. From a dozen different sources come reports of an earthquake having been perceptibly felt during the night. In the big Spencer House building, especially on the upper floors the shock caused great alarm. Many persons were awakened from sound sleep to hear a terrifyingrumbling noise like that made by a heavy train of railroad cars in motion. In the Business Building the houses were greatly alarmed. The instrument shows a very left shock. Other solution report.

—About 10 o'clock Wednesday night cyclonic storms swept over wide areas, inflicting incalculable damage to property and deplorable loss of life. A slangular thing happened in this place. Three well-developed storm centers simultaneously. In Washington, Missouri, Michigan, the cyclone visitations were local, and after all sweeping out the intervening little city of Upthunt, attended, several people were hurt, but none fatally. Property damage, only three houses were left standing. Mo. only three houses were left standing. Mo. only three houses were left standing. Mo.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

Eleven feet of water into Charlevoix harbor and Pine Lake.

The steamer Petoskey arrived here Saturday afternoon, proceeded to Petoskey, but laid in the ice in Little Traverse bay all that night. Sunday night the City of Charlevoix arrived, clearing again with a cargo of ties Monday afternoon. The schooners City of Grand Rapids, Penobscot and Burton arrived Sunday and loaded up the lake. A large fleet is on its way here.

The rebuilt steamer Gordon will go into the water to-day or to-morrow. The steamer Crescent and Cummings began running Friday, and the Columbia made a start yesterday.

Capt. Wm. Cross will sail the tug Parks this season.

Capt. Wilbur arrived from Traverse City last evening with the steamer Grand Rapids, and will at once put a force of men at work fitting her up for the World's Fair excursion business.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Henry Supernaw's father arrived from New York state last week and will stay here this summer.

John Ringle has been fatting a nice pig. The other day he looked the pig over and concluded he was fat enough to kill and went into the house and sharpened a knife and got ready to have fresh pork for breakfast, then went out to the pen to kill the pig and found him dead, the pig having died while he was making preparations to kill him. John thinks the joke was on the pig.

The switch and sidetrack for the Ellsworth Lumber Co.'s mill was put in Sunday. Three gangs of men also raised the track at the sink-hole, and put the track in good shape at that place.

Dar F. Meech and wife were the guests of E. R. Harris over Sunday.

The first school meeting of school district No. 9 was held last Friday evening, and the following officers were elected: Moderator, R. T. Sleeper: Director, Mrs. M. A. Deline; Assessor, E. R. Harris.

A petition is being signed to bring the matter of choosing a site, building a school house, and arranging for a summer term of school, before the people. Every one should attend this meeting.

The buildings that were so hastily put up late last fall are now being finished and painted, which adds much to the looks of the place.

Lumber is on the ground for a building to be used for church purposes.

Undine.

The first boat on Pine Lake was the tug Avery, which came up as far as Undine Sunday.

The measles are all around us. Joseph Lewis' family have been very sick with them; Philip Howe's children have them; Edward Newson is sick with them.

John Hagerty has built a house on his land near Undine and is working in the mill this summer.

—While we are talking about the importance of good roads, Charlevoix is vitally interested in the public highway leading here from Norwood and Banks. It is from those localities that we expect our best trade, yet there are sections of road that are bad twelve months in the year. A prominent citizen of Banks lately stated in our hearing that it would be a good investment for Charlevoix to appropriate a few hundred dollars in work on the bad spots this side of Atwood. There can be no question about this. It would be money well invested. If we make Charlevoix a prosperous agricultural market, we must be generous in highway appropriation even out side our own borders.

—The Petoskey "kid" that Sheriff Myers took to the reform school, turned out to be a month too youthful, and he is back home a free urchin.

—Mr. Sproul, of Sproul & McGurrin, Grand Rapids plumbers, is here to-day to arrange for doing the work in the cottages of the Chicago resort.

—Judge Fellthorp holds the Antrim term of court for Judge Hamsdell this week, and next week Judge Hamsdell holds a term for Judge Fellthorp at Cheboygan.

—Adam Lloyd, of Wilson Township, died Monday. Mr. Lloyd was an old settler of that Township, having located there 25 years ago, and is well known throughout the county.

—An injunction has been served on the Treasurer of Central Lake restraining him from paying interest on railroad bonds, and the suit comes off in Circuit Court at Bellaire this week.

—W. W. Johnson, the Snowflake nurseryman, was in town Monday and Tuesday, getting a large amount of printing done, and selling Mr. Chapman a bill of ornamental trees for the railroad parks.

—The work on the railroad parks progresses rapidly. A work train is hauling sand from near Charlevoix, and a large force of men with teams and wheeled scrapers, is covering the barren sand. The main park, fronting the depot, will be 580 feet long and 200 feet wide.

—As will be seen by Trustee Harris' resolution in the council proceedings this week, the city fathers nailed Elliott to the cross at the last meeting, and gave him an alternative of completing the work or standing a suit. The result was, Bobcock began fishing for the lost drill Monday morning, and will make another stab for more water. Meanwhile, the council is negotiating with responsible parties to sink another well.

—The Charlevoix Democrat is tickled to death when it can discover a typographical error in the SENTINEL, but it should wait until its Petoskey pages reach the office before putting its criticisms in type. Last week in the Petoskey side of the catamaran, there was published a short account of the Chinaman and the bull, in which Mr. Vaughan's name was spelled several times "Von." But we will not be too critical, under the circumstances; when six-eighths of the paper is printed in Petoskey, we cannot expect strict accuracy, especially where matters pertaining to Charlevoix are set up and printed in the "home office."

The Milwaukee Crib Disaster.

The most horrible of the many disastrous results of the recent great east gale was the washing out of the Milwaukee water-works crib. Thirteen men were one by one swept off by the sea, and with the superstructure, thrown upon the shore. The sea was so terrible that no effort could be made to rescue them.

Common Council Proceedings.

Regular meeting, April 21.

President Bates in the chair. Present, Trustees Baker, Hampton, Harris, Stevens, Washburn.

The following bills were allowed:

Robert Tolloch, coal,	$2.21
Geo. Smith, draying	1.00

On motion of Trustee Hampton, permission was granted the C. & W. M. R. R. Co. to sod and improve for park purposes all but 25 feet of Chicago Avenue east of track, in consideration of their grading and graveling the balance of the street to the lake, with the understanding that if at any time the demands of business require the use of the whole street, then the Co. relinquish the said ground.

The following was offered by Trustee Harris.

"WHEREAS, the well contractor, Chas. Elliott, has failed to comply with the terms of the contract, which require that the work be prosecuted with due diligence, and

WHEREAS, the delay in the prosecution of the work is working much damage to the village and is a detriment to the water works. Therefore be it resolved

RESOLVED, that if the said Elliott does not by 6 p. m., Apr. 24, 1893, furnish to the village council, through the Supt. of the water works, sufficient evidence of his intention and ability to at once resume operations and prosecute the work to a successful termination, then the said contract shall at that time be declared null and void and the Superintendent of water works shall then take the proper steps necessary to collect the amount new due the village from said Elliott for steam and other items, and take possession of the well and tools thereat; to remove from the immediate vicinity where they are in the way; and that the village clerk serve notice of this resolution on said Elliott and take steps to enforce lien mentioned in contract."

Approved.

Bonds of A. Richards and Frank Chalonpka approved.

Bonds of Jas. A. Crooks and O. D. Wood and Nelson Ainslie as sureties, approved.

Druggists bonds of F. G. Hines & Co., approved.

Clerk instructed to secure a file-case for public papers.

On motion of Trustee Washburn, the present Marshal was retained for one month.

On motion it was ordered that parties living outside of corporation, taking water, be required to pay all expense of laying mains from present terminals.

The World's Fair Steamer City of Grand Rapids

Capt. O. E. Wilbur, owner and master of the World's Fair steamer City of Grand Rapids, has his time table fixed for ten trips. Every trip is from Charlevoix, the first being for May 13th. The steamer will make a trip every twelve days thereafter, remaining in Chicago nine days each trip. Arrangements have been made whereby nine round trip tickets are furnished every passenger from Chicago to the gates of the fair. The fare for the round trip will be $10 with berth in cabin, or $15 with berth on main deck. The first trip takes in Petoskey and Harbor Springs, leaving Charlevoix at 5 p. m., Harbor Springs 7 p. m., and Petoskey 8 p. m.

This arrangement affords people of this region a great opportunity to visit the great exposition.

Of course, the passage price includes meals, and every opportunity will be afforded passengers to make the trip an enjoyable one. The agents are O. E. Wilbur & Co., Charlevoix; H. O. Rose for Petoskey and Harbor Springs. Applications for tickets for first trip should not be made later than May 10th.

Religious Items.

Congregational

Morning 10:30, "Lessons from a fallen Nation;" evening 7:30, "The Gospel according to Naaman."

Methodist

Morning, "Things that are yours, in and out of your possession." Evening, "The Hierarchy plotting against Jesus."

Traverse Bay Eagle: S. R. Boardman of Manitou Islands was in the city yesterday. Mr. Boardman owns a large stock farm on the Island and has a number of pretty cottages for resorters. He says that every available space on the Island is rented for the summer by Chicago people. The place is dreary enough in the winter, however. One time they did not receive any mail for five weeks.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The tug Third Michigan is back here again for the season.

The lengthened steamer Gordon is out and on her East Jordan run. She is greatly improved, not only as regards utility, but in appearance.

The severest gale that has swept over this region in years, prevailed during Wednesday and Thursday of last week. Many marine disasters are reported. The schooners Florence M. Smith, Sea Gem and Peoria had taken refuge in South Manitou harbor from the northerly gale blowing, but the wind veered to the east and blew with increased violence. The Florence Smith dragged ashore, the Sea Gem following, and doing the former vessel great damage. Both went high and dry. The Florence is thought to be a total wreck. The tug Martin went there Sunday to release them, returning yesterday morning with the Sea Gem, in a badly leaking condition. The schr. Florence Smith was owned as follows: Robt. Tullock, one half interest; Rifenburg Milling Co., one quarter; Fred Lorenz, the remaining one quarter. The Sea Gem was owned principally by Albert E. Mason, Capt. Edgar Gebo having a working interest. The schooner M. L. Collins went ashore in the same place, and is a total loss.

The foundering of the schooner Newell A. Eddy and the loss of her entire crew of nine men, is the most appalling marine disaster of the late terrible gale. The Eddy was struck by the storm Thursday morning when ten miles below Cheboygan. Her wreckage came ashore near that place.

Hastings from Hayes.

Some of our Hayesites are getting uneasy, and think it about time the town board "set."

Gustave Jerichow, of Wisconsin, who bought eighty acres of land of Joel Weaver, will move to Hayes this spring and build on the land.

N. E. Wightman purchased the Ezra Ferguson farm and stock. Ezra will try his fortune in Oklahoma.

We understand Willet Arnold had some sheep killed by dogs. It is time to assess the varmints and keep the number of dogs less.

The wind last Saturday almost blew our whiskers out by the roots. The oldest inhabitant could not remember seeing the like.

The citizens of Hayes are a "measley" set just at present. Those who are not sick with the measles are going to be.

Frank Sneathen barely escaped a serious conflagration last week. A hay-stack near the barn caught fire, and it took long, hard work to save the buildings.

I. S. Webster and Leroy Hamlin have gone sailing.

A fine new line of dark and light prints just received at the pioneer store. Come and see them.

Undine.

Mrs. R. Cram is visiting friends at Burgess this week.

Thursday's windblew down lots of timber. The mail was unable to get through for two days.

Frank Sneathen's little boy set his hay stack on fire and burnt up a ton of hay and a wagon box.

Crane, Whitford & Sons had to shut down their mill, on account of lack of piling room.

SNOW STORM IN APRIL.

MINNESOTA HAS A TREMENDOUS DOWNFALL.

Krupp's Monster Gun May Remain in Chicago—Electrocuted While Shovelling Snow at Detroit—Young Lumberjack in Arkansas—Four Persons Incinerated.

TWO FAR and Near.

A Western paper said Wednesday night that Thursday in Northwestern Michigan and northern Indiana had been loaded all over Minnesota (since Oregon, Falls report) and Dakota with snow, blowing, being the heaviest in four years. Along the lines of the Great Northern and Minneapolis—Duluth records one of the worst snowstorms of the season, attended further by big falls, some there were as much as 12 inches falling. In the Northwest the rain this season correspondent with the country will be flooded, as farmers are all in the habit of putting in their crops early before.

A Nashville, Tenn., telegram states that Hon. Kenny Rogers is to donate his big 110-ton gun to Chicago. Whether he has permission to do this owing to the claim that it will cost a small fortune to remove it and make anything the cannon so dismount is in doubt. The gun was a gift to Rogers from the Georgia contraband, Adjutant Wormsley, who was instructed to do so under the story "The gun cost seven Hills, Rogers said the Nashville Christian Advocate. "If we should decide to give it to Chicago we would have to bring it myself under such a gift, and I am not able to do it. I don't know that I have money enough to do that comfortably." Rogers said he would be glad to do this if he could, but he is not able to do it. Chicago newspapers should offer publication of the story of the gun in all the states of the south.

Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the poetess, lecturer of John L. Bottleson, passing in a conversation Sunday afternoon, in which she spoke of the Chicago contraband, Adjutant Wormsley, who was instructed to do so under the story "The gun cost seven Hills,

SUCCESS IN BURGLARY.

"Occasionally," says a retired burglar the other day, "a man transfers himself in a single night from an income of neither one's nor two's fifteen hundred dollars a year to a fortune of the greatest size. We ourselves are inclined to think that modern nerves are very much like their older brethren. We hurriedly to open the pages of the lighter literature of less than a century ago to read, with a mixture of amusement and contempt, of the 'vapors,' 'swoons' and 'sinkings' of the female element of society, and of the nervous irritability of the stronger sex. Under the light of our present knowledge we trace the prevalence of neurotic and hysterical conditions quite unknown to, unnoticed before as, and treated very much as a matter of course.

Bearing in mind that we live in an age of pressure and hurry, that nervous tendencies are detected and classified in an unbelieving and relentless fashion, quite unknown when "vapors" and "swoonings" seemed to be the correct characteristics of "trusty lady-like beings," and the broken head of a post-boy was but a mild imitation, on the part of a young man, we consider that modern minds may with reason ascribe some of their "nervous" fears as to the degeneracy of the age.

UNIQUE FLY-TRAP.

How a Couple of Frogs Were Made Useful Workers.

Dick Beckman has a unique fly-trap at his place of business in Alameda, Cal. There is not another trap in Alameda like it, and probably not another in the state. The trap is as effective one, too, and Mr. Beckman declares that he has never seen one that could beat it.

In the country in Mr. Beckman's store is a transparent glass jar filled with water. This is the home of two active bullfrogs, and they are the fly-trap.

There are perches in the jar for the convenience of the frogs, and here they live, apparently happy and contented. A small platform surrounds the mouth of the jar, where the bullfrogs sit and ruminate the flies which alight within their reach.

The frog never moves a muscle while catching flies. Let it get its "naughty eye" on a little fly within four inches of its mouth and it is licked up like a flash. The frog can, in tongue, like a snake and it darts at its prey as quick as a snake.

The frogs are great pets and they to accompany to leave their home in the glass jar unless a customers is approaching and then they want to get out of doors. They scent the rain in the air and also better politicians, of a

SAVED BY A MUSIC BOX.

A Mexican, a St. Louis bookkeeper had an exciting experience with burglars at his house, one morning. He had recently married and among his wedding presents was a music box. In this happy circumstance he attributes the fact that the burglars did not succeed in carrying off everything there was in the house.

One of the burglars is rummaging through his drawing-room stumbled across the stand music and tinkling probably that it contained jewelry or silverware attempted to open it. In trying to be on the music machine in motion, and presently Mr. Meany was roused from his slumbers by the tender lay strains of "Auld Lang Syne." Meany got his gun and started for the burglars, and they started for a window. He arrived at the drawing-room doorway just in time to see two burglars leaping from t.e window. Hurried, but the robbers continued their flight, one of them stumbled in getting over the front fence, and Mr. Meany is confirmed that he shot him, as he found several splashes of blood on the ground and sidewalk.

A Mania for Decorations.

There are Frenchmen, according to M. Simon, who collect decorations just as others collect postage stamps. In certain official positions it appears the one thing is hardly more difficult than the other. "I know," he says, "many public officials who had it in their power to decorate, one was fat. The chain on which he hung his medals appeared across his ample chest and stretch downward and was lost to view in his waistcoat pocket, in the interior of which his imagination I pictured further honorary insignia. The other was thin, to his great regret, and he could only exhibit one "ribbon" at times in a row. Some authority decorated a friend meeting him with a laugh. "Well-a-a-a-ccome, 'ccommanded, as if caught doing something by shamefaced. "However" he went on, "I have had less a cicatrizer or a champion slugger, and I guess I show it.

"You do very plainly. What is the cause of it? Been in a fight?

"No, not exactly.

"What is it, then?

"Have you seen those new Columbian postage stamps? You know how big they are?

The friend nodded.

"And I'm not a very big man, am I?"

The friend shook his head.

"Well," and the little man then his chest out, I filled four of them in there's considerable age and direct get a goatee."

A COSTLY RAILROAD.

Only Two Hundred Miles, Long and Cost Fifty Millions.

The cheap railroad near the Andes, connecting Peru with the heads of the Amazon, is to be opened to traffic soon, according to the announcement. This road, although but 200 miles long, has cost fifty millions of dollars, and it took hundreds of years ago by thirty Mingo the Incas, the ancient civilizers of Peru, to begin the same enterprise. The road is a marvelous one, and it was commencing Peru with the basin of the Amazon, according to the announcement. This road is 200 miles long, but it cost about $250,000, and it was begun years ago by thirty Mingo the Incas, the ancient civilizers of Peru

SHOWING A FRIEND FROM NEW YORK.

In obedience to Capt. Dunham's last order, as well as in anticipation of being soon ordered to sail, Lieutenant Hodges, now in command, set all the crew to work painting and tarring and generally so fixed the Black Hawk looked like a huge floating hive, about which a great number of strange bees were working with restless industry.

Spunky Gaff, who was a seaman, he couldn't tell the difference between the mainsail and the personal ladyship, had, as Ralph Dunham's absent father, he felt bitterly ashamed to think, had once imposed on him by that young gentleman's absence. He vowed, not aloud, rather, but himself never, for as word "mainsail" rhyme with "lady," he would be called, whenever he got our in his hands—several times a day, and he would climb up to the fore, and stay with his feet apart and his hands in his pockets, and his face upturned to the sun aloft, in a way that was hard to bear.

Every man on board was and liked Ralph, and they had shifted their caps to the right, they had worked their hardest, they had improvised all naval items, they had made sailors of landsmen, and they had christian names, and present tense verbs, and nouns, and adjectives, and adverbs, and prepositions, and conjunctions, and participles, and infinitives, and gerundes, and gerundives, and gerund grinds, and gerund sins, and gerund nouns, and gerund adjectives, and gerund verbs with their "ings," and seemed as indifferent as if she had been an abscess, to the man in the crown.

The Doctor was perplexed, and he made up his mind to have her matched more interestedly than she was at first.

"Do you not know who the gentleman is?" he asked.

"Do I you want to know?" more angrily.

"Why should I?"

"Because all the chances are that he will be your husband," with great vehemence.

"My own consent is essential to my marriage. But, dear father, why plague yourself with troubles that exist only in your imagination. Let us wait. I will be dutiful, loving and obedient to you. There is no danger of my leaving you as long as you and mother need me. I love you both, and there, and there. And she camp up behind him, and put her arms around his neck, about his nose, kissed his knotted brow with soft, yearning kisses, till the wrinkles melted and he went out, not quite sure that he had not been making something of a fool of himself.

Ralph was standing by Uncle George's side, and he was a seaman, he couldn't tell the difference between the mainsail and the personal ladyship, but, as Ralph Dunham's absent father, he felt that a great responsibility had been

The Boyne Falls Citizen: insists that Charlevoix county has a gang of horse thieves.

Judge A. J. Stroud and sister, Mrs. W. H. Ohle were called to Berea, Ohio, on account of their fathers death.

At the meeting of the presbytery last week Rev. J. Redpath and E. K. Robinson, of Boyne Falls, were chosen as delegates to attend the general assembly at Washington next month. Mr. Redpath was also appointed Sunday school missionary and to do evangelistic work in the district known as the presbytery of Petoskey.

Boyne Citizen: Some of our county papers appear to feel very uneasy in reference to Judge elect Corbett's future movements. To set these at rest we may state for the next six years, the Lord being willing, he will make Boyne City his home. Not only is this his intention, but probably before this week edition of the CITIZEN is off, he will have let the contract for the erection of a large, handsome brick residence to be built in Boyne City, by Boyne City mechanics and of Boyne City brick.

East Jordan Enterprise: At the competitive examination for appointment to cadetships at Annapolis and West Point held at Bear City last week, Master Geo. Van Orden, of this place, carried off the prize of the Naval Academy. At the commencement of the examination there were twelve competitors, but as the examination progressed one after another dropped out until but three were left to finish. Of all those competing George was the youngest, yet his average was second only to the man who was appointed to West Point. The result is highly satisfactory to the friends of George here and also an honor to his abilities, as well as a credit to our schools where he has received his instruction.

Boyne Citizen: Work commenced on the Boyne City and South Eastern Railroad Monday morning. The right of way gang started about 24 miles east of here, directly north of E. K. Robinson's property. The construction gang will arrive sometime this week and will commence work immediately. While the road will be feeder for the saw mills here, it will also have a large amount of other work to do. We are informed the G. R. & I. will operate the freight and passenger department of the road, connecting with all passenger trains on main line. Wm. H. White is president and general manager of the road and his business enterprise here is sufficient guarantee that everything will be pushed forward rapidly. While the road is being built largely in the interest of his business the people need not be alarmed about passenger and freight accommodation as he is figuring with the G. R. & I. and the result will be about as we have stated.

A CHANGE FOR THE BETTER

On and after April 20th the Chicago & West Michigan Ry. trains will arrive at and depart from the Magnificent new station of the Illinois Central R. R. in Chicago. This station at the foot of twelfth street, on the Lake front —is one of the finest passenger stations in the world and will be a decided change for the better from the old station at the foot of Lake street, one of the relics of the great fire of 71. When you return from Chicago via the West Michigan, a favorite route, don't forget to go to the Twelth Street Station to take the train for home.

INDESTRUCTIBLE TOOTH.

After the European Nations of It the Pieces Were Together.

At Yakushima, Japan, there is a costly temple for the sole purpose of affording a shelter for one of the grinders of an ancient god of a certain Hindoo sect. This palace is known by the high-sounding title of "The Palace of the Sacred Tooth," and is a costly and elegant structure in every sense of the word.

According to the mythology of India, the god who formerly owned the tooth pulled it out to hurl it at a gigantic zodiac when the irreverent serpent had been so bulldozed as to make an attack at his godship. In the latter part of the last century Europeans captured Yakushima and partially destroyed the tooth palace. The tooth itself, which had been an object of heathen adoration for centuries, was ground to a powder and thrown into the river.

But the particles came together, as the Hindoo priests say, and again formed themselves into a perfect tooth, which was found after the siege quietly reposing in the bed of the stream. The temple has been rebuilt, and the tooth, more revered than ever since the attempted desecration, is again enshrined as an object of adoration. It is kept in a gold box, wrapped in files from the sacred white spider's web, the first gold box being in eight others of the same precious metal.

Off Color.

Even the doctor, mentioned as he was to all sorts of sights, could not help but notice that the girl with brown hair and blue eyes looked absolutely bewitching in her white robes, lying there amid a wreath of lace drapery. When the physician had felt her pulse he smiled "Only a fever," he remarked, with a reassuring nod. Raising herself upon her elbows she glared at him. "What kind of a fever?" she demanded. "I should say," the doctor was still smiling—"I was sorta'd fever." With a groan she fell among the pillows. "Oh, dear"—she was on the verge of sobbing—"why couldn't I have yellow fever? Scarlet"—she turned her face to the wall—"is so awfully unbecoming to my complexion." Then she declined to take any medicine by way of wreaking vengeance on a cruel fate.

The volume should find a place in the library of every admirer of poetic talent and lover of soul touching verse.

—Grand Rapids Herald: On account of his great rotundity Sheriff Myers of Boyne Falls is one of the most conspicuous figures in the state of Michigan. His great pops-arity and his genial disposition make warm friends wherever he goes. Owing to the ponderous dimensions of his waist measure Mr. Myers finds it very difficult to purchase clothing large enough to cover the great breadth of abdominal cuticle. No ready made clothing store has ever been able to fit him. Last week Mr Myers discovered that his wardrobe needed replenishing. He wanted to get dressed up and, looking at the Union depot, he soon met an honest-looking policeman with whom he consulted as to the best place to get a suit of clothes. The policeman took out a little card and wrote the name of Stratton & Greenlich, the clothiers. Farther down the street an acquaintance supplemented the policeman's advice by directing him to the same concern. Mr. Myers finally struck another friend who thought he might be "waited for" applying to a Canal street store. The attempt was futile and Mr. Myers wandered off to a third factory to get measured for shirts. Upon asking the shirt man for his opinion he gentleman chuckered to himself in a good reliable house. The couple soon drew up to the store of Stratton & Greenlich. For the third time disinterested parties had referred him to this firm, and his confidence was established. He chuckled around the 56-inch waist his mean are was taken, and next week he will appear in a nobby new suit. The record of the measure shows Mr. Myers weight at 365 pounds, chest measure 63 inches, waist measure 60 inches, pants 28 inches in seam. It took of single width eleven yards to make the suit. Stratton & Greenlich need not be afraid to tackle anything that comes along in the suit making business after this demonstration of their ability.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The schooner John Schuette is here with coal for Geiken.

The big wrecking tug Sea Gull was totally destroyed by fire in the straits last Sunday night.

Capt. Melvin Thompson will sail the Little Traverse Bay ferry boat Skater this summer.

G. G. Geiken is the purchaser of the tug Parker. He will keep her here in the general towing business.

The schooner Sea Gem which was taken from the beach by the tug Martin, is hauled out at Washburn's yard. Her port bilge is stove in, and her timbers are badly sprung. She will be repaired.

A duplicate of the easterly gale which drove the schooner Florence Smith ashore in South Manitou harbor, last Wednesday put the finishing touches on her destruction. She has been stripped and will probably be abandoned.

The steamer City of Charlevoix broke something in her high pressure cylinder Monday, bending her piston rod. She was here all day making temporary repairs, proceeding to Chicago, where she will have to lay up two days to repair the break.

Elk Rapids Progress: The hooker Rough and Ready, Capt. John Johnson, of Beaver Island, made this port Monday, with 800 bushels of dry wheat off the barge Mabel Wilson which went ashore on South Fox Island with a cargo of 75,000 bushels of wheat. The hooker Harvey Ransom, Capt. John Gallager, also of Beaver Island, arrived Tuesday with 1,800 bushels of wheat from the same place.

SIXTY-TWO ARE KILLED

OKLAHOMA VISITED BY A MOST DISASTROUS STORM.

Professor Hopkins' Plan to Save West Virginian—Five Farmers Wiped at Ansloan Fortune—Typhus Fever Under Control at Moulton.

From Far and Near.

—The country south of Lexington, Ky., was swept by a terrible cyclone Tuesday afternoon. Several houses were blown just how much will not be known until the telegraph communication is restored by the storm is removed. The cyclone had passed in a certain that ten persons were killed or more were injured and the property destroyed. Though the storm lasted but a minute or two the damage left in its wake was terrible. A path half a mile in width and eight miles long was left in ruins. Houses, barns and everything in its way went down. Telegraph wires and poles were blown down for miles around, and for the reason the particulars of the disaster are not fully known. The storm swept over Indiana, but did no damage there.

—Advices from the island of Cuba indicate that the insurgents are in a very bad condition. Gomez, Maceo, Quintin Banderas and other prominent leaders are said to be in a very bad condition. It seems that two companies marched recently into a village and they joined the rebels one month ago.

—Delegates to the Hopkins conference at the West Virginia agricultural college, which convened at Morgantown, to-day, were asked to consider Congressman Hopkins' plan to save West Virginian from the ravages of the Ansloan fortune. Only three of the counties represented in the conference failed to indorse the plan.

—Five farmers were killed near Ashland, Ala., by a cyclone Tuesday afternoon. The storm came from the southwest and passed over a portion of Clay county. Its path was from one to two miles in width. The dead are: Mrs. Sam Ingram, Mrs. Ingram's mother, Mrs. Ingram's sister, Mrs. Ingram's little boy and Mr. Ingram's little girl. The Ingram family were all killed except the father, who was not at home. The storm came without any warning. The Ingram family had just sat down to dinner when the house was blown to pieces. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rain and hail stones as large as hickory nuts fell. The storm was very severe in Clay county and much damage done to property.

—Typhus fever is under control at Moulton, Ala. The disease appeared in the town about two weeks ago, and at first it was feared it would become epidemic. The town was quarantined and the disease was confined to the town. The cause of the disease is not known.

—Ex-Senator Wm. Lorimer, of Illinois, who was recently released from the penitentiary, where he was confined for the crime of bribery, is now a candidate for the senate from his district. He says he will be a candidate for the senate from his district. He says he will be a candidate for the senate from his district. He says he will be

THE LADY AND HER CAT.

He Surprised the Agent and Was as Handsome as Big.

"Kindly assist me with this basket—carefully, please."

The speaker, a large, handsome woman, had just entered the depot. Diamonds bedizened prodigally in her ears, and the dress she wore would have made Worth sweep for joy.

Passenger Agent Cummings promptly took the basket. It was of medium size, richly trimmed with satin and decorated with vari-colored ribbons. The contents were covered by a quilt beautifully decorated with needlework. It weighed in all nearly forty pounds. Mr. Cummings was amazed that a woman of the evident wealth should be carrying such a heavy burden.

Suddenly he felt a strange jolting in the basket. The quilt was heaving up and down. Mr. Cummings thought of Indian, dogs, snakes, chickens and mountain lions in less than a second. It was with a feeling of relief that he deposited the mysterious bundle on a seat by the side of the woman.

"Come, Dick," she said pleasantly.

Instantly the quilt went up with a volcanic burst, and out jumped, like a whiskered Jack-in-the-box, a large gray cat. It was the largest that Mr. Cummings had ever seen. Dick stood nearly eighteen inches high, and was long and broad in proportion. His weight exceeded thirty-five pounds. After showing him proudly the lady snapped her fingers and the large cat jumped back into the basket.

Dick is the Goliath of his race. He wore about his neck a richly ornamented gold band bearing a medal from the recent Paris cat show.

STAMPEDING OXEN.

They Will Keep Over a Precipice or Into Cold Tony Hole.

"Many people who have been much on the plains in the ante-railroad days have seen stampedes of mules and horses," remarked L. T. Oliver of Santa Fe, "but by far the worst stampede I ever witnessed once. When they get loose they will, if frightened, run over a precipice if it comes in their way, but if stampeded when hitched to wagons very few will escape. Once when on the Cimarron one of my ox teams became frightened, what at I never knew. The six oxen started off at a breakneck speed, and the contagion was imparted to two other teams. The men tried to stop them, but they might as well have tried to check a mountain torrent. The men went on right across the country, with the heavy wagons rattling at their heels, and ran until nearly half of them fell dead from exhaustion. I used to think that a blooded horse was the only animal that would run itself to death, but after my experience I regard that as no uncommon thing for a frightened ox to do."

FOR SMALL ROGUES.

Experiences in a School for Thieves in Paris.

In Paris there still exist schools of crime such as that conducted by Fagin, and the dramatic figure who lells, from the pockets of which the young pupils have to steal purses and handkerchiefs without making a name of ringing; so still in use. A young pickpocket, who answered simplicius because he was spending money very freely, and who was found to have only recently stolen a purse containing sixty francs from a lady in an omnibus, has been interviewed on the subject in the prison of La Petite Roquette.

This precocious young rascal described how his father had carefully taught him to pick ladies' pockets. "I only pick ladies' pockets," he said. "That is easier than picking men's. With gentlemen it is much more difficult to do the trick without their feeling your hand on them." His "papa" and he, he said, used to travel together in the omnibuses from the Palais Royal to the Bastile. That was just so good a "pitch," he explained, as the omnibuses from the Madelaine to the Bastile, but these latter were already stocked by "Old Mother ti," who, it seems, claimed, and successfully asserted, exclusive privileges with regard to the portable property of passengers on that route. The laboriously, after leaving the lad, found himself minus a handkerchief and a half penny, which he had purposely left in his tail pocket as an experiment to see whether he could be relieved of them without his knowledge.

LAUGHED AT EACH OTHER.

But the Laughed Hear, for She Had the Last Laugh.

You know how it grates on your finer sensibilities to be laughed at to your face, especially when the laugh is of the harsh, unpolished type. And you know one or more persons who are possessed of such a laugh and such a disposition to use it. Well, there is such a person in Detroit. He is a very well-educated man, too, and is especially good in the languages. Not long ago he was talking to a mild-mannered little woman who had asked him a question about a French sentence. He asked her to repeat it. She did so.

"Ha, ha!" he laughed—"ha, ha! haw, haw!" and the little woman blushed.

"What is it?" she asked very much embarrassed.

"Haw, haw!—haw, haw—laughing—haw, haw—at your very ludicrous pronunciation—haw, haw."

"Haw, haw, haw," she interrupted, suddenly, "haw, haw; ha, ha, ha, ha," and she kept it up as long as she could until he began to get red in the face and feel embarrassed himself.

"What is it?" he exclaimed, when she gave him the chance.

"Haw, haw," she replied upon resuming—"I was—haw, ha ha—laughing—haw, haw—at your—ha ha, haw—very bad—haw, haw—manner of—haw, haw—food morning," and she turned her back on him and found a spoken to him share.

CODFISH MINES.

An old sailor to the A. ricus regions has been telling how he it down a cold weather down this way:

"Talk of the kind of air it would be," he said. "I don't believe I'll ever get what I said this side of Labrador. You don't have to fish for cod down in Labrador. You just get a pick and shovel and mines 'em—I am mine 'em out of the lochergs. The codfish in fact. Some of 'em have to be in there for a million years, more or less. They got catched up some time and just froze in.

"A phalling man I knew was his business can tell of that when he was a paying lead. He lands where on a berg and they cut an hole place to stand on, and they just open pulls this into the ice. You find the codfish in the cold. I never worked in a coal pit, but I've had the thing explained to me, and it's about the same. The cod were swimming around, and a layer of them got frozen. Then comes a layer of plain ice underneath, without any trimmings, and afterward another layer of cod. The codfish were then thinking, and mind, it is, but the returns are quicker."

Curiosity Fads in Stamps.

The collection of canceled postage stamps is just now engaging the attention of many old and children and young women. There is a small market for such stamps at prices ranging from $5.50 to $5 for each ticket. Certain stamps on Chicago and New York make use of old postage stamps for decorative purposes and they have quickly advertised that a choice for stamps among the old children. Although it would be an that the collection of canceled stamps was an interminable job it was a fact that one young woman, who is employed in a wholesale dry goods house, has made $45 since Christmas by selling cancelled stamps at 50 for 50.000. She had upward of 200 wholesale firms adding her in sending collections.

Birds Killed by Naked Words.

It is well known that birds are sensitive to tones of the voice and are terrified at loud, angry words. A lady who wished to make a melodious stop singing at last resolved it in a loud voice, and then took up a scarf and shook it in rebuke at the caged bird. In a moment the bird was still, but a short time after made a fluttering about the cage. Its owner turned to the bird, and was shocked to see it fall dead. We know of two cases similar to this. In one case a canary bird and in the other a mocking bird died within five minutes after having been spoken to in a violent, angry tone.

Size Was Remarkable.

A modest and small-sized man occupied a seat on an electric car. A fat woman, who clung to a strap directly in front of him, looked at him repeatedly now and then till he could stand it no longer. Finally he said to her: "Madam, I would cheerfully give up my place to you, but to my judgment you are not able to do it very I am sitting." She said it was all right, and cheerfully waited till somebody got up and made it possible for her to fill man to move along.

ANIMALS IN THE RAIN.

The Necessity of Furnishing Shelter for Wet Weather.

Horses and cattle never look so miserable as when, standing exposed to cold and driving rain. Every field to which cattle are turned loose should have some right shelter provided, to enable them to get out of the stick. If left to themselves in a state of nature they would not allow to some well-known bush or thicket, which would at least give cover against the wind. Shut up in a room four hedges they are doubtful after the old of hegem. Four thoughts and of their own instinct.

Herwick's vignettes of old horses of unsupply donkeys, huddled together in driving showers on some lonely common, suppose a vastness of animal misery in an inch of woodcut. It seems strange that no animal, except it be the squirrel, seems to build itself a shelter with the express object of keeping off the rain, which they all so much dislike.

Monkeys are miserable in wet, and could build shelters if they had the sense to do so. As the creatures are domesticated they bring in the rain," writes Mr. Kipling in his Beast and Man in India "or crouch on benches with dripping hoods set against the tree trunks as shelter from a driving storm, they have the air of being very sorry for themselves." But even the snug-nature, which builds a small platform in the trees on which to sleep at night, never seems to think of a roof, though he thinks may that when it is very wet it covers itself up with the large leaves of the pandanus, a large form.

FASHIONS IN ORPHANS.

Some of the Institutions Have to Pay Into Their Aid an Advertisement.

A fussy little woman went to an orphan asylum to adopt an orphan. She picked out a little girl with red hair, and, after giving a receipt for her, left.

She returned next day and said to the superintendent: "My husband thinks this orphan won't suit. Haven't you got one with black hair and blue eyes?"

The superintendent hunted through the institution and found nothing the other wanted. It is rather a rare combination. I have heard. Then the woman got mad.

"Why don't you keep a proper assortment of orphans?" she demanded. "What's the use of running a place in this unchoose way?" Over in the Brooklyn home they've got orphans of all colors. You'll ruin the business if you act like this. Don't you find your customers are going elsewhere? When do you think you'll have any orphans with black hair and blue eyes?"

"The colors aren't fashionable," said the superintendent, "but I shall be pleased to communicate with you and fill your order when I am able to do so."

"Well, see that you do," answered the woman, as she left in a huff. "Those institutions isn't half what they used to be. Don't I know, I've dealt in them a week."

SAVED BY HIS HORSE.

Peculiar Escape of a Man From a Break in the Ice.

The story comes from Lewiston, Maine, about a man who attempted to cross the Androscoggin on the ice and was saved by his horse. The man in question had been hauling wood across the river for several days, and had just one more load to haul.

As the water was up on the face of the ice he decided to wait until Sunday to haul the load. He hitched his horse to the sled and started for the river. The road was very bad, and he had to stop and change his horse's shoes twice. When he reached the river he found it was in the same track where he had hauled the wood, so he went a little above.

The ice began to crack slowly when he got to the middle of the river, and he understood the two logs and one sled. Then he stood the horse sideways with the sleds. At the same time he jumped on the horse's back with a crash. He commenced to slide when the horse fell on his knees, which he jumped ahead, and breaking the off in blocks behind the sled, and he got out safely. The horse slipped and fell on his knees. Once he stopped and then got up.

When he looked back the top of the sled was all to shelve, and he saw sticking out of the hole in the ice. The water was up over deep. He says he has had rather lose the wood than go near the hole again. It is frozen in now.

A Unwitting Visitor.

Since October 1, Joseph Johnson of West Salisbury township, Chester county, Pa., has had 200 chickens, geese, ducks and turkeys. The snow fell on Saturday night, and when he went to feed the fowls, their home in a hollow in his barnyard, he found a little powder and a pick he unearthed the thieves, and was astonished to find two large polecats that his blast of explosive had killed. The cavity in which the polecats lived was immense, and in it were the skeleton remains of a large number of fully fattened fowls enough to make two large feather beds.

Entrance of Compliments.

It was a little hard on the boy, for he was a modest lad, and had a shrewd appreciation for the girl. They were sitting in the parlor with a number of others, and he passed her the sugar he mentioned in an undertone. "Here is a lump for you." The girl's complement was a little awkward, to be sure, but it was good, and it seemed more than court when, a moment later, having occasion to pass the butter to him, she drawled: "Here it is, sofa—just like you."

The Fairest in Fourteen.

Every year or two a fresh star in the still, lacquamarine Adelina Patti rises in the musical firmament. The latest of these is an Italian young lady, who has been near Bologna about twenty years, and who is as beautiful as a prima donna ought to be. Her name is Columbati, and she is at present exciting great admiration and rivaling enthusiasm, displayed the opera house at Valetta.

Thrasher took in the situation, and, finishing his cement filler, he drew his leather sleeve across his very large mouth, and, flinging his saddle bags over his shoulder, he said:

"I am going to the ranch."

"That is all right, my man," said Mr. Hodges, holding him a coin. "I'll see you again."

"Will you send back an answer, sir?" inquired Thrasher of the Captain's friend, as he gave you letters to hand to him?"

"But, sir, I must leave tonight."

"To-night! in storm from the pine-clad slopes Thrasher."

"Then I must go to Gardiner's Island, where a boat will take me to New York," replied the fellow, with a self-possession that proved him no novice in this business.

"How long will you remain?" asked Valentine Hope.

"About two hours."

"Very well, I can wait! try to have the letters by that time," said Mr Hodges.

Thrasher bowed his big hat and left, had just gone out of hearing when the Squire, with impatience, called out.

"Well, George, what is the trouble?"

"Trouble!" repeated Mr. Hodges, "Why, the trouble is that Fox is to be back in a few days, and I am to report by him for orders!"

"Report to Fox for orders!"

"Fox is now commodore!"

"What dogs-bath means?"

"Why, I have been over examining that books from the ships of the people on the roads when Mr. Hodges' difficulty the scheme given also."

Mr. Hodges ran the fingers of his left hand nervously through his frosted hair, he rapidly paced the floor.

He was desirous the propriety of reading it, and equally an important question, for he had the old-time regard for official superior. He could not afford to come to a hasty conclusion.

"Mr. Gardiner, he said at length, "I can't see any harm in letting you all know what every one knows, and the sailors must know in a few hours."

He was noticeably deliberate in his speaking, and painfully so in his reading. He looked over some of the wide, and his sonorous lips spat them in a musical lilting, pronouncing them.

This was the letter:

"New Amsterdam, Long Island, ...

"To the officers,
commanding officers,
Crew of Captain Hendrick Hudson, Sailing Vessel,
Sailors, Marines,
Officers of the ship,
Officers of the ship of sailors.

"Greeting: The Governor of the Province of New York, in the exercise of the duties of his part of the conditions and states of the provinces, and the rights of the people of the provinces, and the rights of the people of the provinces in his executive honor, must and does command the officers of the ship whose (blank) space will be explanation of your conditions, and the Captain of Sailors Marine shall be Deputy provincials.

"Provincials are Sailors, Marines and officers in the ship commanded by Hendrick Hudson, if a provincial crewer, his Hans, Hans Hansen, if a provincial Sailor William Tom, if M. M. Ship Wanderer, equal to him for service and honor to which honor his service and to be able his duties in ship and crew.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto affixed the seal of the Province of New York, at Amsterdam, New York.

"Wouter Van Twiller.

"Signed and sealed,
"Hendrick Hudson,
"Captain of the Provincials of the ship of sailors.

"Thrasher," said Lieutenant Hodges, "that is the letter, 'eh. What do you think of it?"

"I am very sorry," replied Valentine Hope, "but, of course, I have no right to nothing but ship orders."

"Of course," assented the Lieutenant.

"Oh, he is not intolerable; he must obey orders like ourselves," said the Sheriff with a laugh.

"My dear," said Mrs. Cordie, pushing her pretty head to her husband, and trying her mild eyes to his, where she believe them to more what the was about to say, "I do not believe that Lea wrote that letter."

"I'm sorry to say," said the lawyer, to whom a bit of wax with a seal on it was the badge of law and authority, "that there can't be any doubt about it."

"Still," she persisted, "I feel that it did not write it."

"Have you any other reason than your own feelings, dear wife?" asked the squire.

"Yes, I cannot think that Ralph Denham, who, man and boy has known George Hedges for one and twenty years, would write a cold, stiff, heartless letter like that."

"Not to believe that Ralph wrote it," added Ellen.

"Ralph didn't write the letter," said Valentine Hope. "It was written by the captain of the Sea Hawk in his official capacity, to the Lieutenant of Marines, or to no, or to any of us, as Ralph Denham, or any one else friend, he's got as much heart into his words as sole gain that ever published a you."

"Yes," explained Mr. Hodges, "you and appreciated the mistake of the ladies, official communications, even between friends, are cold and stiff, sometimes and time again it, the service, lest all go to be written that way. Why, they wouldn't be official if they wasn't stiff and cold, and dry and all that."

Neither Elian nor her mother attempted comment, for, with the exception of the Squire, there was not to them a greater author than Lieut. Hodges. Hodges is all the country round about.

"There is but little satisfaction in a man trying to do his duty," said Valentine, with a laugh, "for he knows he couldn't the Governor have left Uncle George to shape his course."

As no one attempted to answer the speaker, he continued, addressed Mr. Hodges, if he had any objections to letting him see the letter.

"Sake sir," replied Mr. Hodges, "read it for yourself."

The Hayden one, before, gave a little sigh a lee, and coughed with great solemnity, a little but the tone of the suppression of jubilant gravity which was the tone of all well-meaning people when they

The man who had only repeated what I so well know Lea, I love you."

She saw Valentine, and her uncle in earnest conversation, as they walked for the boat that bobbed to their side, the Sea Hawk, and she carried tiers, for she supposed they were discussing naval matters, and since love could only engross men when they had nothing else to do, while with her own sex, love absorbed all their thoughts, if it did not control the action of their lives.

Long after the boat left, Lea was coming back, and she made up her mind to hold him at arm's length. If he complained of her coldness, she could not even think kindly of her father while she was plagued her thoughts.

She was not sure that another person was to hear till the boat had gone, called in accents low, musical and thrilling, and looking up with a start, she saw Valtia before her. The Indian girl had attended the same school with Lea Ellen and the young ladies of the better families in the place, and in many respects she was the intellectual equal of the brightest.

She was particularly distinguished for the freakishness of her manners—a freakiness that was so far removed from carelessness as the clear waters of a silver alcoved spring differ from the tinged stream to which it gives rise.

Until in full all the dignity of character that distinguished the rulers of her race, but there blended with it a gentleness and a fashion of disposition which some call natural, and all know to be rare.

In a word, until it was to hold, here is an Indian heroine, that Lea, with the blood of Lord Ralph Denham.

In the days when they were laughing girls, Lea was so anxious to be the friends of the feeling then being warmed to life that should only die out with her own. And the Indian maiden, with a dignified reticence, as her people kept her own counsel, but as she could not, she felt, her manner to Ralph Denham told her feeling for him as plainly as if she had uttered it in the melody of the tribe.

Lea was, since the return of the Sea Hawk from the last cruise, now where the young Captain's affairs lay, and while her heart rebelled for a moment against the invitation, she made up her mind to submit, and for his sake consider him as her lover.

"Why, I utilize" exclaimed Lea, as she took the Indian girl's hands, and draw her to a seat on Cockatoo Iron, I am glad you came, I was just thinking away."

"Lea, I have to stay home, I should be there, for my brother Lea the white man Colonel Grantham, for a guest, were it not for you," replied Utilia, still holding one of Lea's hands.

"Then, my dear Utilia, if you come to see me, you must do it at my father's home, Lea, proper up to time.

"Is so at Gardiner's."

Big Prairie is Missing.

"If the horse could stand it," said a A. Hewlaban, a well-known resident of Winnipeg, Manitoba, to a Washington Star reporter, "a man could leave Winnipeg and ride 1,000 miles west and northwest over a level prairie before he would be confronted by mountains. This gives an idea of the great territory lying west of Winnipeg, which, to the Eastern man, conveyed, from which point he could be sent to Gardner's Island, then and still in the possession of the family that first purchased it from the Indians, and, if he had only repeated what I so well know Lea, I love you."

She saw Valentine, and her uncle in earnest conversation, as they walked for the boat that bobbed to their side, the Sea Hawk, and she carried tiers, for she supposed they were discussing naval matters, and since love could only engross men when they had nothing else to do, while with her own sex, love absorbed all their thoughts, if it did not control the action of their lives.

Long after Ellen and her mother had explained the situation, and Lea had expressed her sorrow to her fate raised from by words, the Squire read the letter aloud, and then, spreading it out on his knee he took off his spectacles, and after wiping them with a spacious handkerchief, he said:

"Thrasher, I'm sorry to say, I can't see any harm in letting you all know what every one knows, for, as the Governor says, Ralph Denham is a gentleman, and a gentleman's word is to be trusted implicitly.

Death of Milford Miller.

Milford Miller, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Miller, among the oldest settlers of Charlevoix County, died at the home of his parents, in South Arm township, last Friday, of pneumonia, aged 26 years.

The circumstances sorrounding the death of this young man are peculiarly distressing, and awaken sentiments of sincerest sympathy. He had been in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., through the winter, visiting among relatives, and but a month ago was married to a young Canadian lady, starting soon after for the home of his parents on their wedding tour. The young bride, but a few days after her marriage, was called upon to mourn the death of her father.

The funeral services were held in the Congregational church in this village, Sunday afternoon, the Congregational pastor at Ellsworth preaching the sermon. The services were largely attended.

Next year the State census will be taken, and if the farmers would keep an account of the number of acres of grain grown, and the number of bushels produced, the amount of butter made, and the dozens of eggs sold during the year, they would be enabled to answer the enumerator's questions correctly, instead of guessing at an answer.

Did you know that the State Board of Health classifies measles as a "disease dangerous to the public health?" And as such the law requires that prompt notice of it be given in writing to the health officer. Whenever a physician shall know that any person whom he is called to visit is infected with the disease, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the health officer. Any person refusing or wilfully neglecting to give notice is to be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a fine and imprisonment. Premises should be placarded, and, after death or recovery, disinfected. Two hundred lives per year are lost by measles in Michigan.

Advertisements state that the Lewis House at Central Lake was completely destroyed by fire last Wednesday. All of the furnishings from the first floor were removed. This house was built about twenty-one years ago and large additions were made by the proprietor F. J. Lewis, the place is in summer hotel management in Northern Michigan. It was a fine hotel with capacity of something over one hundred guests, and the grounds were very beautiful, the finest in Northern Michigan. It was an dear home for the tourists, and was for years liberally patronized. The loss was probably $20,000 or $22,000; no insurance.

Mancelona Herald: It is a well known fact throughout the county that Central Lake has hopes of eventually possessing the county seat. Whether this hope will ever be realized or not the Herald is unable to say, but certain it is that Central Lake people make no secret of their desire and anticipations to eventually land the covetest prize within the borders of their own municipality. Naturally, this discussion of the county seat removal is somewhat distasteful to the people of Bellaire, and some of them have—between discreet regarding statements made concerning a little town to the north of them, that promises to the near future to become a formidable rival.

A PROPER STUDY FOR SATAN!

The relation between 'Lies' and 'Goods.' Why do certain kinds of goods inspire so much more falsehood than others?

FOR INSTANCE:

There is much more deliberate deception about Shoes than about Dress Goods; there is more falsehood about Linens than about Silks.

It is important that we suggest the question—not for us to settle it publicly.

As a merchant with goods to sell, we tell our store news to public daily. The exact truth about our goods and prices is the fundamental rule of our advertising. Public discrimination is the only protection that honest and truth-telling advertisers have against unscrupulous competition.

A. T. WASHBURNE, Charlevoix.

There is a great margin between the Stock and the Show. For one beautiful novelty seen, there are scores on the shelves unseen.

Another difficulty confronts us—the standard we have set for our own Dress Goods Exhibits—it is hard to compare them with themselves. And the show of the past seasons have been so far beyond competition, that it is difficult to make still further improvement.

But progress there must be, for there is no health without growth, and progress there is—our shelves tell the story.

THE SENTINEL.

SEEN FOR A SECOND.

An Apparition Appears in a Sacramento Cellar.

About four years ago a stranger arrived in Sacramento, hired the store underneath the Clunie building and fitted it up as a cigar and tobacco establishment. He not only paid for the work, but also advanced his rent, and when he suddenly and mysteriously disappeared the fact occasioned considerable gossip and the belief that he had been foully dealt with.

Mrs. Green, who kept a dress-making shop in the same building, declared that about midnight on the night of the man's disappearance she heard a struggle on the porch in the rear of her apartments. She also heard a sound as of a blow and then a thumping noise, as if a body was being dragged down the stairway and into the cellar. The story spread, and the officers searched the cellar for the body, but in vain.

The affair had been nearly forgotten, until an incident recalled the matter. O. F. Washburn of the American cash store, was having his premises at Eighth and K streets remodeled, so that he could utilize the cellar, and one morning about 7 o'clock John Cassidy, a young man in Washburn's employ, was sent into the basement to tear down the partition. A moment later he rushed up the stairway, white as a sheet and screaming with terror. When able to speak he declared that while he was groping his way in the dim light afforded through the sidewalk gratings there sprang up before him the ghastly form of a man. The apparition remained for a second, so Cassidy declares, and then disappeared.

A curious circumstance is that Cassidy was not aware of the disappearance above alluded to, as he is a recent arrival from the East and had not, he asserts, been informed of the mystery. His description of the ghost tallies with the missing man's appearance.

Chance in Hunting.

The other day a hunter in the woods of Maine sat down upon a log to rest. Suddenly he heard a rustle, and looking up spied a big black buck looking straight at him. He got a shot at the animal which bounded away and disappeared. The hunter gave chase, but after half an hour's search he gave it up as a bad job. Suddenly a partridge whizzed out of a tree and a shot crippled the bird. It fluttered away among the underbrush and the hunter pursued it. He got the partridge, and had scarcely taken two steps when he came upon the deer alone dead.

Poor Little Indians.

"Mental arithmetic" in East India schools is a vastly more serious matter than it is in the schools of the United States. The oriental mind is fertile in the invention of catch questions, and the multiplication table is swelled into a mountain of difficulty by native teachers. They half-unkind brown creatures of 10 years but under are taught to carry the multiplication table up to forty times forty and to complicate matters by the introduction of fractional parts.

ECCENTRIC IDEAS OF JUSTICE

Thief Are Practiced in the Home of Judicial Calamity.

In China, according to Jesse Herbert late legal adviser to the government of South China and professor of law in the University of Canton, officials are held responsible for the conduct of the community. If a son has murdered his father not only is the murderer cut in pieces, but the house is pulled down and the ground dug up to a depth of about six feet. All the neighbors, moreover, are punished; the boy's headmaster is beheaded, the neighbors lose his place and the higher officials are reduced three degrees in rank.

There are two officials to each post, in order that one might spy upon the other, the idea being that no official shall report what he has done, but only what the other has done. From the highest official to the lowest all practice a system of unblushing robbery, called "squeezing." The salary of a viceroy in some cases is $30,000 per annum, and he has to pay $8,000. The salary of a judge is $150 a year; he regularly draws at least $2,000. There are 1,200 police in Canton, not one of whom receives wages, and yet the office is much sought after.

The fact is, we are assured, the police are on excellent terms with the gaol or fraternity of thieves, and they work harmoniously together. By the code a boy under 16 cannot be punished. What the Chinese do to pay him into prison and keep him there until he is 16. If Mr. Herbert were asked to summarize the government of China he would say the people are communists, managing their own affairs, ruled by a despot whose administrators are absolutely and whose administrators are liars, thieves and cowtorturers.

Appreciates Us.

Evidently the London Statist appreciates us. "The American people," it says, "are descended from, economically, the most effective race in the world. They settled in the states, taking with them a highly developed civilization and habits of law and order confirmed through many generations. They have half a continent at their command, there is even yet a vast amount of unoccupied soil, there is a diversified climate, there are no wars almost limitless, and there is absolutely no enemy they have cause to fear. Except to maintain internal order they are free at the moment to disband the army and navy, certain that no foreign foe will attack them. The world has never seen a people so happily circumstanced, with such marvelous opportunities for progress and improvement."

Country Boys in Luck.

A heavy snow fall brought a calamity in a curious way to the Chinese pheasants that are to be found in some parts of the Northwest. The short and snow stuck to their long tails in such a way that they were unable to fly. The country boys captured the birds by the dozen, and as many are sold to be worth $10 a pair alive and in good condition, some of the boys consider themselves very wealthy.

—Rev. Mr. Haynes, of this place, will preach at Ironton next Sunday at 3 p. m.

—Beautiful spring weather, and everybody is good natured—that is, most everybody.

—Capt. John Beattie returned to Chicago Monday, but will return in about a month to build his residence.

—The tug Aldrich was towed to Cheboygan Monday by the steamer Cummings where she will receive her new boiler.

—Geo. Gaines, who has sold Hannah, Lay & Co.'s floor for several years, has resigned his position, and goes into business for himself at Traverse City.

—The Perry seed warehouse, the bowl and chainbolt factory, the transfer dock, all this summer and fall, will give Charlevoix a forward impetus that will be felt.

—To-morrow evening Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 56, Knights Templar, will celebrate Ascension Day by attending divine service at the M. E. church at Petoskey, in full uniform.

—Wm. Wood was injured here last Thursday that Mrs. A. F. Vance, (née Mattie O'Neill), of Frankfort, was very low with consumption, and that she could not live more than a week. Lobert O'Neill left for Frankfort Monday.

—Jos. E. Dixon, having returned to Charlevoix, finds himself in active demand in the work of surveying and civil engineering. He has established an office here, and will confine himself to follow that profession in Charlevoix.

—Prof. H. Kutthain, the veteran piano tuner, is again among his annual rounds, and will be in Charlevoix about June 1st. Save your pianos tuning and repairing for him. He is no well known here to require any recommend.

—Mrs. E. P. King will give an entertainment in Petoskey, Friday evening of this week, consisting of various physical exercises and vocal music. The Cummings will start for Petoskey at 6 p. m., returning the same evening.

—A telegram from Clarkston, Mich., Monday, stated that the mother of Leslie Giddings was dying. Leslie was in Chicago but was wired the sad intelligence. Jas. Aylwert, a nephew of Mrs. Giddings, left Monday evening for Clarkston.

—Trout fishing is the order of the day and many early morning smoks are made to the haunts of the speckled beauties. Some of the fishermen come home happy—others return with countenances depicting the most melancholy misery. But most of the boys have satisfactory luck.

—Mr. H. el. Williams, of Indiana, is the man who last fall determined to locate his bent and chair factory in Charlevoix. He is here, and will meet some of the railroad folks this week, and arrange for side-tracks. It is expected that the concern will be in operation the coming fall.

—Wm. H. White is advertising for 50 men to work on the Boyne City railroad.

—Editor Eaton, of the Boyne Falls News, is to remove his paper to Central Lake.

—While we think of it, what about that big double stack furnace that was to be built at Ironton this spring?

—A cargo of coal arrives to-morrow for the Northern Michigan Line steamer City of Charlevoix. Manager Burke arrives from Chicago to-day.

—The steamer City of Grand Rapids is being fitted out in elegant style for her World's Fair trips. Everything done is substantial and convenient. The project is bound to be a popular one with Fair goers, as the steamer will be a home for them during the trip.

—Don't lose sight of the fact that Charlevoix is enjoying not a boom, but a boomlet. Houses are going up in every ward, several of them fine ones, notably that of Hon. Richard Knight and Mr Bulow. Every carpenter and painter is busy, and common laborers are in demand.

—Wm. Ferguson has leased the Ferguson House to M. S. Gagnon, late of the "New Charlevoix," who takes possession to-day. The Ferguson House has long enjoyed an excellent reputation, and, as Mr. Gagnon is an old hotel man, we have no doubt that that house will continue to be popular.

—The water-works are already pain lar. About fifty taps are already made and contractor Shepard is kept busy with his machine. Yard and street hose are multiplying. Superintendent Gaunt is receiving applications for taps daily, and the city fathers are feeling good over the way the public are taking to the improvement.

—The railroad people are to spend over $3,000 on their station parks here. Beside the main park laid out between the track and Pine Lake, they will utilize one of the angles for a small lake, with a fountain and an embellishment of pond lilies. A large force of men are at work on the grounds. Mr. Dallaven was up Monday looking things over. Now let the Chicago resort folks make a park on their Pine Lake front, and the dullest neighborhood will blossom as the rose.

—The carrier pigeon scheme has been adopted by the Fairport Fishing Company, the manager of which has invested in two pairs of the birds. Two pigeons are to be sent out with each boat going to lift nets. As soon as the nets are in one bird will be sent ashore with information as to the quantity and variety of the catch which can then be wired to market from Chicago. The second pair will be retained only in case of accident to the boat, when it will be sent ashore with a message stating the trouble and the location of the boat.

—The Mason & Morgan furniture is old enough to be good, but it is bad, very bad. It has outlived its usefulness, and should be consigned to the dismal graveyard. We are told the proprietors have, during the quarter of a century they have been manufacturing, accumulated a competency. If it be true, they should buy a farm and settle down and assign the artists of the company to the various departments of husbandry, from the dairy to the fallow. They should have retired when they stopped pounding "Uncle Tom." Their "Last Lynn" is below criticism; it is an incomparable burlesque.

—The establishment of W. H. McCartney & Co., in the Bartholomew block is this week undergoing a transformation. The removal of the boot making branch of the business to the upper rooms vacated by the tailors, the premises back of the book-store, and both rooms are thrown into one, which will be occupied by the book, stationery and news store. This makes the establishment the entire depth of the block, and it is useless to say that it is the largest concern of its kind in the county, because it is the only one. The north side will have a continuous line of show cases forty feet in length. With the increase of space will come a corresponding increase of stock. The dress-making rooms up stairs are, without doubt, the most extensive in the district. They contain a sitting room and work shop, neatly arranged and connected with the store below by a speaking tube. The establishment is a growing one and is a credit to Charlevoix. The store proper, will soon contain a largely increased stock of books, stationery, wall paper and everything usually found in establishments of this kind.

Married.

Another Charlevoix girl is lost to us through the good sense that dominates the soul of a young York State fellow. On Monday evening Mr. Geo. Zipp, of Tonawanda, N. Y., was married, at the residence of the bride's mother, to Miss Mary Scroggie, of this place, by Rev. David Ragle. About twenty of the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties were present, and after the shower of congratulations that followed the ceremony, a repast was spread. Mr. and Mrs. Zipp left on the evening train for Mancelona, where the groom's parents reside. After a few days visit there, they will go to Tonawanda, where they will reside.

Death of John McNeill.

John McNeill died very suddenly at his home in Marion at 4 p. m. yesterday. He was in town in the morning, apparently well and cheerful, returning home about noon.

Mr. McNeill was an early settler of Banks Township, Antrim county, residing on a farm near the present site of Ellsworth for several years. Later he removed to Marion, where he resided at the time of his death. He was the father of Robert J. McNeill, of this place.

The funeral services will be held from the residence at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Echoes From Kilworth.

Frank Pearl had a dance in his new building last week that was well attended.

It would be a good plan for South Arm township to fix the road through the St. Clair swamp with some short bridges here. We will furnish the saw-dust, and perhaps help out on the drawing of it.

Chas. Gotham made a trip to Cadillac last week, and bought a car load of building lumber.

Mrs. Adolph Supernaw held a social at her house last week for the benefit of the Catholic society at Atwood, and netted $40.

School meetings occur every few days now, and I can report everything coming on in good shape, and that we will have a nice school house for the fall term that will accommodate too scholars.

The board have employed Mrs. Vredenberg, of Central Lake, to teach a three months term of school, beginning next Monday. The board have bought fifty patent seats, desk, globe, etc., and will put them in the church this summer, which will be occupied until the school house is completed.

The wire for the telephone line is here and no doubt will very soon be strung, and the 3, hello yourself.

A brakeman on a freight train had a bad tumble and a narrow escape from death Monday noon at this place. While switching, two car-wheels became loosened and rolled off the car, smashing the brake and dragging the man along, mixed up with the heavy machinery.

Dallas.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Nowland, of Marion, are visiting the daughter, Mrs. H. Whitford, this week.

There were twelve cases of measles in Undine last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Whitford, of Tallapoosa, Ga., are coming back to Undine in a few days.

Mr. Chas. Swallow, 1014 West Madison Street, Chicago informs his Charlevoix friends that he will be able to supply them rooms during the World's Fair, and invites correspondence. 2tif.

PENNOYER IS PEPPERY,

SHORT REPLY TO SECRETARY GRESHAM.

Gilds Narrowly Escapes Pennsylvania's Awful Blood Experiment—Stings of a Belated Strategy Cross—President Has Established Cross Ownership.

Told in Few Words.

—The following were the events transpired—Wednesday passed between Secretary Gresham and Mr. Pennoyer.

Washington, D. C., Gov. Sylvester Pennoyer: The President directs me to say that the Chicago strikers are rapidly disbanding. Chicago when exclusive all takes effect and all lawful authority is restored, the President will hereby make the following proclamation.

Hon. Pennoyer immediately sent the following reply:

PAYNE, ORE.

To W. Q. Gresham, Washington, D. C.:

Your dispatch received. Is the President serious in his threats?

SYLVESTER PENNOYER, Governor.

Gov. Pennoyer, upon receipt of the correspondence, said:

The Gresham telegram is only insult to Oregon. I will enforce the laws of the State and repel the invasion of the United States troops. The President is not to be allowed to violate the laws of Oregon. Oregon is not a territory. The President is not to violate state law with his blackguard troops. He is not to be insulted by Gresham.

The break in the Lewiston reservoir, in Logan County, Ohio, which had been expected for several days, came late in the evening of last Wednesday morning. Apprehensively lest lives be lost, the people of Bellefontaine, the county seat, had gathered through the night. The waters gushed through the breach and dashed through the country, sweeping everything before them. The news was spread by telegraph to all the cities and towns in Hardin and the people in some towns by hundreds fled at once to the elevators for safety from a flood which they knew was on its way down the broad valley to sweep everything before it. No lives were lost, however, and not much, and only the loss of property in Logan and Hardin counties will be considerable. The Lewiston reservoir is a large lake, and is one of the famous fishing resort. It belongs to the State and contains 7,000 acres. The breach is not complete, but is growing. Thousands of acres of farm lands in Logan and Hardin and in the part possible that the whole basin will be emptied. If this happens, the loss of life will be great and damage to property will be immense.

—The jetties propeller Spey arrived at Bermuda from Mobile, after having been from London nearly seven months. Her crew, officers and engineers, Swedes, Finns and northmen of the Baltic coast, had a week after leaving the Mobile river, sworn off from all strong drink, and had finished the drinking water, swearing the crew so that they were in mutiny, in variance for the entire voyage, and refused for days at the complete mutiny of the ship. The only two men who did not join in the mutiny, their wages were overpaid, and their pockets filled. The Spey, in ballast, had been given up by the owners in Bremen. The vessel was seized by the Bermudan and the mutiny the experienced her captain was in great distress.

The Mexican government has imposed a tax of twenty cents per ton on all steamships in Mexican ports, which will prove very unpopular with the shipping of the United States, which has been carrying the greater part of the trade with Mexico, since French and the war with Mexico. The government will be constrained by the government could the opposition papers are strongly opposed.

The public debt increased $6,722,000 during the month.

—Ferney H. Fell, an old-time friend of Abraham Lincoln, died at Bloomington on the 4th ult.

—The Fort Worth (Texas) packing and stock yards plant has been transferred to the Chicago syndicate, a prototype of Chicago and Omaha. The consideration was $400,000.

—Charles Elmanora Duse, the Italian actress, is again ill at New York, and has cancelled her engagement to make a tour of the country.

—Surface water coal operation has formed a modified trust under the title of the Illinois Block Coal Company. The headquarters will be in Chicago, and about all of consequence will change to a mere agency.

—Sheriff Hart of New York has taken charge of the office of the Cable Piano Company, known as the Steinway trust, under an attachment for $54,000 in favor of Isaac Bell and Frederick K. Bay has been appointed receiver of the company in New Jersey.

—The steamer Australia arrived at San Francisco from Honolulu on Wednesday morning bringing advices to April 24. Paul Dissmann, who was among the passengers, says that he has come over merely on private business. The British cruiser Dynamite was arrived at Honolulu from Esquimalt, B. C. The United States cruisers Adams, which is expected at Honolulu to relieve the Mohican, had not arrived up the time the Australia sailed. A war option and ball was given in honor of the Queen April 24. Among a large number of invited guests were naval officers from Japanese and English warships in the port.

—The largest ball of mosquitoes ever made in West Virginia by internal revenue officers has been closed up and the producers forty-five in number, are now in custody, in charge of United States officers, and will be arraigned in Wheeling next week. Among the prisoners are two women. These fools and knaves defeated through the country, defrauding the town and the government out of hundreds of dollars in taxes. They were all gathered up in Kanawha and Wyoming counties, and Wheeling street practically breaks up the moonshine business in that portion of the State.

—There will be sent to the World's Fair from Clarke, Kan., in a few days an American flag made in 1776, which was carried at the battle of Plattsburg in 1812, and in the battle of Bellmanline, Va., in 1814. It is a five-foot square of what was once white silk and shows an American eagle grasping a shield and olive branch.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—Cracksmen robbed the safe in Fly Bros' clothing store, in Grand Pa., in addition to taking about $50 in money, they also took $15,000 in New York City collateral stock certificates.

—Public Warehouse for public Storehouse of Great Falls, Mont., would have burned to-day if other with the opening of the Glasgow Occasit Monday evening, but the water ran out when it was nearly gutted and the fire was extinguished by shooting blasts. He with resources of the vault a safe in the dining-room table, saying that the safe was "no good." The burglars were once discovered in the back hall. Be had Placed the contents of a pistol in his mouth and fired. Murdoch had been looked for for several months in making financial reports to the Council, and a write was issued to call upon his bondsmen to make good the deficiency. He was a heavy owner and broker in Seattle. His original home was near Indiana, Ohio.

—Hattie Newman, a clerk in a cigar store at Aberdeen, S. D., in attempting to stop a giddy young fellow, exploded it, the flying flame completely turned the young lady.

—At New York Jacob Barbanes, 70 years old, who for the last thirty-five years had been an officer of the Supreme Court, cut his throat with a razor in the room of his residence and then jumped into the street. He was instantly killed. Mr. Barbanes had been in very low spirits for some time owing to the fact that he was suffering from dropsy and dropsy.

—Mrs. Mary Jensen, a wealthy negress, Waco, where, aged 35, was shot and killed by S. A. Sandifers, aged 18, who then killed C. C. Sand'ers had been in the employ of Mrs. Jensen for a number of years and because she would not money him he killed her and then himself.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—William C. Goody, the noted Chicago lawyer, died suddenly at Denver, Monday, while sitting at his desk in the Chicago & Northwestern general office. He had been engaged in writing and was about to go to his office when he met General John MacArthur, when his eyes closed and he fell forward upon the desk with a gasp. He died before a doctor could be summoned.

—Lieutenant Governor Sheehan is seriously ill with pneumonia in New York.

—John Jacob Astor has given the Cincinnati Art Museum a statuette of the late Vivian M. Rice, the Mozart Hall Minstrel. Mr. Rice's death was caused by a fall from a ladder, and he died in the arms of his friend, Joe Jefferson, at Cincinnati.

—John Jacob Astor, Prince Minister at Vienna, died, died from heart disease in Paris. The news was received in the Austrian capital by the officers of Colonel Treasurer and Chamberlain Count Wrbna, who, with the exception of Prince Lichtenstein, the most prominent personage in the Austrian court.

HIGH TOWERS.

London to Have One Which Will Dwarf-top the Paris Giant.

Sir Edward W. Watkin, a railway president and promoter of England, has found that the financial success of the Eiffel tower—that is, the amount of income derived therefrom—justified the construction of a similar edifice in London, and has made the contracts for a steel tower to be erected in one of the parks of London, this to have a height, including the base, of over 1,300 feet. The tower part proper will be over 100 feet higher than the Eiffel tower, and the construction will vary in a number of respects from that notable structure.

As an income-earning investment the Eiffel tower has proved a wonderful success. Every stranger who has during the last two years visited Paris has considered his stay incomplete if he has not ascended to the top of that monument, and the view afforded from that elevation has certainly justified the trouble and expense. There is little doubt, in spite of the more cloudy and foggy atmosphere of London, that a high tower there will command a large patronage, and it is not impossible that the structure of a similar kind in several of our great American cities would pay largely on the cost of building them.

A VALUABLE TEAM.

It Hauled Enough to Make the Man From Saginaw Wink.

The man from Saginaw was visiting the national capital to see the sights. One day on Pennsylvania avenue he saw a heavy, close, dark wagon, save like a black Maria than anything else and he asked his guide what it was.

"It's rather strange about that," said the guide in the slowly dilatory style. "You've been talking about the salaries of officials here, from the president's $50,000 a year down, but do you know the horses to that wagon beat them all?"

"That so?" said the Saginawites. "They don't look like they could earn more than five dollars a day anyhow. I've got better horses than that to drive at five a day and feed."

The guide looked at his charge with pity.

"Why, my dear sir," he explained, "these horses draw millions from the treasury every year."

The Saginaw man wouldn't have it, and said so with profane emphasis.

"But it is true, nevertheless," insisted the guide. "That's the wagon they haul the gold and silver in," and the Saginawites looked at it steadily.

The Largest Topaz.

The largest topaz ever brought into the United States is now in the possession of James W. Ruesh, a well-known lapidary. The gem is eighty-two millimeters in diameter and weighs 2,800 carats. It was found on the southeast coast of New Zealand by a business man and sold to a trader, who took it to India and sold it for a large price to one of the native Indian princes. During a famine it was taken to the captain of a German merchant ship and exchanged for corn and potatoes. The captain on his return to the fatherland sold it to a lapidary, who cut it in the style of a rose diamond. This work on it may be estimated, when it is understood that months were consumed in the cutting and polishing and that it has six faces. It is hardly suitable for a ring, but night, with a small lamp behind it, be used for a headlight.

He Had Reason to Know.

A well known actor was talking one day in a cafe about an acquaintance he had picked up in a train. I was perfectly amazed at the intimate knowledge the man possessed of everything relating to the Berlin theatres. He was thoroughly informed in all their little schemes, and knew all about the financial position of each of the managers. I asked him, "I presume I have the honor to speak to a fellow actor?"

"No," he replied.

"Or a theatrical agent?"

"Nothing of that kind."

"Or one of our leading critics?"

"No, I am sorry to say."

"But allow me to ask, how did you acquire this unprecedented familiarity with the concerns of the Berlin theatres? You must have great deal to do with actors and managers?"

"Quite correct," said the man, earnestly, "I am a sheriff's officer."

Liberia.

A report from the minister resident and consul general of Liberia, recently received, speaks very highly of the prospects of the negroes who have emigrated thither from the United States. A liberal price of land is allotted to each immigrant, and they are cared for by the colonization society for six months, by which time it is expected that they will have raised enough to be self-supporting. A few of the negroes finding that they could not get rich at once, and were expected to work for their living, were disappointed, and returned to the United States. The rest are satisfied, and have turned their attention to planting coffee, which, in a few years, will yield them a fine income. One man who went out a few months ago now has a good house built and 1000 young coffee trees.

Curiosities About Snow.

The pure white luster of snow is due to the fact that all the elementary colors of light are blended together in the radiance that is thrown off from the surface of the various crystals. More than a thousand distinct and perfect forms of snow crystals have been enumerated and figured by the various investigators in that time, five hundred and fifty-one different forms were once observed by the English naturalist, Gaisher, who carefully made engravings of each and printed them in a paper attached to the report of the British meteorological society for the year 1855.

Daggers for Women.

A prominent jeweler says that he sells many daggers to women. These are not ornaments, but serious weapons. They are just large enough to slip easily inside a woman's glove. Some women have these made to order, when they are lavishly adorned and incrusted with precious stones. They are frequently carried in crossing, when they are intended as weapons of defense. They are preferred to revolvers, which are likely to go off accidentally and in the wrong direction.

A BULLET BARELY MISSED HIM.

An Incident of Ex-President Hayes' Wild Experiences in West Virginia.

The Ex-President Hayes was at one time the target for a Georgia cracker. It was not his by a scratch that his life was saved. The scene was on the Ohio river, in West Virginia, and the incident occurred when Gen. Rud, William Phillips, of Marietta, and the time was in 1861. For days General Floyd had been skedaddling with Gen. Cox and his men from the "Hawks' Nest," a picturesque and majestic monument of rocks rising over a thousand feet from the river road, at a point ten miles below the Gauley.

One fine morning General Cox ordered William Phillips, heard the bugle-blower, near the "Hawks' Nest," across the river, and an officer joined at the head of his regiment rode out into the very good distance, as the rocks sloped gradually. Colonel Phillips selected a huge range rifle from one of his men, and raising his rifle took deliberate aim at the Dunkard soldier. The distance was great, but Phillips was a Dunkard Boss, and at the crack of the rifle a pinnee from the ohio soldier's high hat flattened out into the water, and the officer dashed up the bank out of range.

In 1876 General Phillips was in Washington urging the appointment of Gen. J. Edwards as United States marshal for Georgia, and during the talk he said something about "Hawks' Nest" in 1861 and his aim at an Ohio soldier.

President Hayes delightedly up and inquired into details.

"I was the Ohio colonel," said he, "whose hat was grazed by that bullet."

That night General Phillips took his to the White House, and the president and his guest went over the young, exciting days of the war in the Kanawha valley.

MADE OVER FOR SAMMY.

How a Boy Was Bonbonized Wrinkled by Sunny Smiles.

There was a wretched boy coming down town on a New York street car the other morning. He was about 10 years old and was accompanied by a tired and thrifty-looking woman. He himself had a well-scrubbed, well-fed appearance, but intense pain overspread his youthful countenance, and he kept his hands thrust deep in the pockets of his overcoat.

"Sammy," snapped out his mother every few minutes, "take your hands out of your pockets directly, or I'll whip you when I get you home."

And Sammy would reluctantly drag out a pair of hands clothed in gray cloth gloves, which gave his digital extremities an appearance strikingly like those of a well-stuffed doll. Finally he slid his hands out of his pleas and left them in his pockets.

"Sammy," said his mother, severely, "didn't I tell you to put your gloves on?"

"I don't like them, ma," whimpered Sammy.

"You don't like the gloves I cut out of your pa's old gray pants and made for you, eh? Ungrateful wretch! Immediately put your gloves on! I'll make you wear them if I have to sew them up upon you, and cut down his neckties for you."

And the unfortunate Sammy meekly put on his gray gloves again and evidently felt uncomfortable to go in the cloth that went round the ear.

RIVAL BURGLARS.

One Tattered a Dinner by Stealth and Found Fortune Under Him.

When Isaac E. White returned to his home in Jersey Sunday at 7 o'clock after enjoying his Sunday dinner with some friends he was disagreeably surprised to find an unnecessary amount of light burning in his house. Proceeding to investigate he became suddenly aware of three men dashing down the back stairs, the foremost of whom ran at him full tilt and knocked him down. Mr. White picked himself up quickly and blew his police whistle with all his lungs. Patrolman Dobbins came up in time to see a man running into an alley and at once gave chase, finally overhauling the man. The other two escaped.

The prisoner gave his name as Frank Hearne, 22 years of age, and was charged at the Station House with burglary. Far from being disconcerted at being found in such a position, he seemed rather proud, and he only thing that troubled him was the thought that he had not been first in the field. He stated having searched the house, and said that he had gone to the house with the intention of burglarizing it, but to his amazement he had found two men already in possession. They had stolen a coal deal of silverware, and he was just laid in the soup. He promptly picked it up and was making off with it when arrested. He professed inability to identify his rivals.

Edmund Kean's Portrait.

Of the many theatrical portraits that John E. Du Ponceau gathered about him in his house was one which was sold to the only portrait ever taken of Edmund Kean. The dramatic giant (who weighed only 109 pounds) had an antipathy to photographers and would never grant them a sitting. When he was playing in Philadelphia he painter Neagle determined to steal a march on him. By a stratagem with Kean's manager, Mr. Jay, the painter was invited into his room. He had brought the costume for "Richard III.," and Neagle, in his manner, was supplied with canvas, paints, etc. Under the melting influence of champagne Kean was persuaded to make an exception under promise that it would take only a few minutes. Neagle seized the opportunity, and as a consequence this fine Kean of Edmund Kean was obtained.

Curious Death Customs of Fiji.

The Fijians believe that in case a marriageable youth or maiden dies without having gone through with the elaborate nuptial bind-tying ceremony of the islands his or her soul is condemned to wander alone forever in an intermediate region between heaven and hell. When anyone dies, man, woman or child, a whale's teeth is placed in the hand of the corpse, the whale to be thrown at the tree which stands as a guide post to point out the road that leads to heaven and the one that leads to hell.

"No, I must return; it is better that we should talk here; I wish to speak about Ralph."

"Why, Ralph has gone to New York, Eli, as I told you, Cap, Fox."

"So I heard, so I believed; but did Capt. Fox go to New York?"

"Certainly, there cannot be any doubt about that, for a letter came only a few hours ago from the Captain."

"That is strange," said Griffin, drawing her little red hand across her brow.

"But, why should you think it strange?"

"I meant captain, Lea, I do not quite understand the ground for my dread, but I feel that there is some harm, big or little, or in about to befall, Ralph Denham."

"But who could harm him. Your brother, I suppose, is the man I fear, the Prince chief of the Montauks, is not a coward."

"I cannot answer for him, for one reason, not even for Diego when he thinks a load to carry, his words of white tempers. This, Capt. Fox, did not sail for New York. He was ordered, for nearly a day off Montauk, and then he sailed for the east, after leaving some of his people on shore."

"Tis so, you know that! Did you see it?" asked Lea, excitedly.

"I did not, but I think those who tell me would not lie."

"May there not have been a good reason for this?"

"Yes, but I can but think it means harm to Ralph."

"He can take care of himself."

"Our man would be weak in the presence of a ship like the Wanderer, for, in the enemy of Ralph Denham. Has he not sent my brother, and treated his angel until he has been a demon—"

"Hush, hush, Griffin!"

"And then this Cut Gradam. Do you know that I met him in this place twenty years ago?"

"Yes and I were not here then, Dalila."

"True, but those are living who can recall him, through he is much changed. He is the man who brought Ralph here."

"Why, I had thought that Ralph was a—"

"Hush, she knows little crabam. She knew—"

"Stop! Not Denham too much, honey! Do time rob the freedom of female souls as it course you?"

The girls turned around to the old Irish standing behind them, with both her hands resting on the top of her long staff, and her chin resting on her hands.

Dalila sprang to her feet, and through the dusk of the evening, she saw the examine of surprise, and, it may or, of fear in her face.

"Tell us, Dinah, what you know about Ralph Denham," said Griffin, with at length, they her life raise scarce to his than mine."

"Hush, Lea! Dinah does be ever broad as I turn off! Let de story gib friend, an be sure that it never see its age'th. Can't yer leave dat to me, or as gib twenty year to de old life to de wor, fob to finish? He tell it high, dat lad an' I tell it low, dat lad, an' de blacker is dis old dreadnot wife on to de wor, fob to finish! Dat lad, he tell it high, dat lad, an' I tell it low, dat lad, an' de blacker is dis old dreadnot wife on to "Give me a little brandy, Dan, for I am wet to the bone," said Fox, when he entered the cabin.

The cabin boy, with that alacrity that distinguished every one subject to this man's orders, was about to start off, when the last word was uttered, for he was halted by a gesture from his master.

"See here, Dan.

"Yes, Sir.

"Has the storm disturbed him?" Fox jerked his thumb in the direction of the cabin where Ralph was sleeping.

"Not much, sir," replied Dan.

"Has it disturbed him at all?

"I can't say, sir. I only know that he has muttered in his sleep."

"You couldn't make out what he said?"

"He said once, 'Tis a long, long voyage,' and then called Lea.

"The longest voyage he ever started on—a voyage from which never a craft returned that ever set out. But away, get me the brandy."

Dan ran down and had Fox, lighting a candle, went into the room where they saw little Ralph Denham was lying, as he had been for the five days, wholly oblivious to the world.

Fox bent over and pressed his ear to the broad, slow-heaving chest.

"Strong as a bull, too, he seems; a tat of a pity that such a fine fellow, as he seems by my purpose to kill, should be worse or laugher with our ships and his, who might be of service to us, and secure on which the sun shines. We lack men, and we lack money, and we lack troubles with kings. But the Fullons have some other angels or devils, and this man is not a dwell.

He rose as he said this and unconsciously closed the door behind him. In the meantime Dan had come with the brandy, in, Fox took a glass to another man right into his mouth.

He was in the act of setting down the glass, when the door, which he had so deliberately closed, came down, with his glass, in the shape of a wedge.

"Give me brandy, Folsom. Ha, this rain comes!

"Thank you, Sir," said Folsom, emptying his lips, in anticipation of the brandy, and smacking them afterwards.

"Is the light still visible on shore?"

"Yes, sir.

"Pyramid is there, Signal him that I will be inshore in a short time. Let the boat ready, but do not lower—I am going to land a sick friend," said the captain.

"I understand, sir."

"Select good, cool men, and when all is ready let me know."

"Aye, aye, sir."

Folsom, a heavy, dark-faced man, had his foot on the first step of the companion-way, about to ascend to the deck, but too stopped him.

"Stay! Not so fast. Tell him that Mr. Pyramid and his three men will be landed on the Brooklyn side of the East River. Put as swing up off! I want to keep the Wanderer in sight."

Seeing that Captain Fox waited his time by way of dismissal, Folsom went on deck.

The sailors, many of them men of the old Montauk Indian, and the men on the watch saw the boat lowered, and the men in it, and the men in it, a very different uniform from the wild Montauks, over the coal waves and through the darkness straight as an arrow's flight for the land.

In the cabin and forecastle the officers and men of the ship were, some seeing their first meal that day, and congratulating each other that they had lived in spite of the fearful hurricane, and some, seeing part, instead of being, as they had anticipated, their last meal, for the storm that night.

Captain Fox was the only man on board who did not carry himself with an air of weariness, for the storm, which was at its worst when he was on deck, was the most fearful he had ever encountered. Fold a thick towel and tuck it around the neck; then with the other hand, let it be soaked with warm water. Continue doing this for fifteen or twenty minutes the water will fill the ear-drum, and flow over on the cheek. Afterward turn over the head, let the water run out, and pour the ear with warm glycerine and cotton. This may be repeated four small relief is obtained. It is an almost invariable cure, and has saved many cases of acute inflammation. The water should be quite warm, but not too hot.—Home-keeper's Weekly.

AROUND THE CAMP-FIRE

OLD SOLDIERS TALK OVER EXPERIENCES AND SPIN YARNS.

The Blue and the Gray Relive Incidents of the Late War, and in a Graphic, and Interesting Manner Tell of Camp, March, and Battle.

"YOU can talk all you want to about faithfulness and obedience to duty," said an old army captain to a company of listeners, "but when it comes to being true to a trust, the palm of honor belongs to the blue ribbon of the Union. During the war, he continued, "it was common for my headquarters to be left with a few men, and I used to let him stay and act as my private body guard. Well, I didn't care the fellow, but I sort of took pity on him and let him remain, and I was always very glad I did, for he would do anything I told him to, no matter how much of an idea it cost him.

"He was pretty handy as a forager and never seemed to have much trouble in locating a hen roost. We always had plenty to eat if there was any in the country. I remember one time I told him to go out and bring in some poultry. He said, 'All right, sassy!' and he was off. I was surprised when he failed to return. A week had passed and I was thinking of giving him up, for sure he had grown tired of camp life or had captured a Johnny Reb, but one morning he came into camp with two large roosters, he looked rugged and worn, and as he threw them his burden he said, 'That, sir, is a very dangerous chicken. Then, one of these roosters had a large crowd and a sturdy Southern rooster came from the other side of the altar. "Name this chief," said one of the officers, and the groom looked at the bride's hand. "Simon Bolivar Buckner," said the bride, in a little chilly tone, and the groom looked at her in terror behind the altar. Then the bride's hand fell down

WHAT SHE REALLY SAID.

The True Version of the Story of Marie Antoinette.

Every one has heard that old and popularly accepted story of Marie Antoinette and the starving peasants, and it is always told as an illustration of the heartlessness and carelessness of royalty concerning the common people. It has served its purpose well, but unfortunately it is not quite true. Mr. Mathieu Williams gives the correct version. He says:

We are told that when Marie Antoinette was informed of a famine in the neighborhood of the Tyrol, and of the starving of some of the peasants there, she replied: "I would rather eat pie crust than starve." Some of the story-tellers, by the way, have it pastry, others cake. Thereupon the courtiers giggled at the ignorance of the pampered princess, who could suppose that starving peasants had such an alternative food as pie crust.

The ignorance, however, was all on the side of the courtiers and those who repeat the story in its ordinary form. The princess was the only person in the court who really understood the habits of the peasants of the particular districts in question. They cook their meat, chiefly young veal, by rolling it in a kind of dough made of sawdust, mixed with coarse flour to hold it together, then placing in an oven or wood embers until the dough is hardened in a tough crust and the meat is roasted throughout to the proper point of cooking. Marie Antoinette said she would rather eat pie crust than starve, knowing that these meat pie crusts are given to the pigs, and they are nourished by them, and digest them in spite of the wood sawdust.

Sheep as Beasts of Burden.

In the southern parts of India sheep are put to a use unthought of in European countries. They are made to serve as beasts of burden. The mountain paths among the foothills of the Himalayas are so precipitous that the sheep, more sure-footed than larger beasts, are preferred as burden carriers. The load for each sheep is from sixteen to twenty pounds. The sheep are driven from village to village, with the wool still growing, and in each town the farmer shears as much wool as he can sell there, and loads the sheep with the grain which he receives in exchange. After his flock has been sheared he returns it homeward, each sheep having on its back a small bag containing the purchased grain.

A New Swindle.

Tradesmen are imposed upon in various ways. Recently a well-dressed stranger, accompanied by a boy, entered a hat shop in Frankfort, apparently with the intention of buying a hat. After much trouble the shopkeeper fitted him with one, and invited him to look in a mirror to see how handsome he appeared in it. After gazing at himself in the glass the man turned round to the boy and said, "How do I look, Carl?" "Like a thief," promptly responded the boy. The man darted angrily toward him, but the lad fled from the shop pursued by his accomplice. The storekeeper thought it was very funny, until their long absence made him realize that he had been cleverly robbed.

SEEN FOR A SECOND.

An Apparition Appears in a Sacramento Cellar.

About four years ago a stranger arrived in Sacramento, hired the store underneath the Clunie building and fitted it up as a cigar and tobacco establishment. He not only paid for the work, but also advanced his rent, and when he suddenly and mysteriously disappeared the fact occasioned considerable gossip and the belief that he had been foully dealt with.

Mrs. Green, who kept a dress-making shop in the same building, declared that about midnight on the night of the man's disappearance she heard a struggle on the porch in the rear of her apartments. She also heard a sound as of a blow and then a thumping noise, as if a body was being dragged down the stairway and into the cellar. The story spread, and the officers searched the cellar for the body, but in vain.

The affair had been nearly forgotten, until an incident recalled the matter. O. F. Washburn of the American cash store, was having his premises at Eighth and K streets remodeled, so that he could utilize the cellar, and one morning about 7 o'clock John Cassidy, a young man in Washburn's employ, was sent into the basement to tear down the partition. A moment later he rushed up the stairway, white as a sheet and screaming with terror. When able to speak he declared that while he was groping his way in the dim light afforded through the sidewalk gratings there sprang up before him the ghastly form of a man. The apparition remained for a second so Cassidy declares, and then disappeared.

A curious circumstance is that Cassidy was not aware of the disappearance above alluded to, as he is a recent arrival from the East and had not, he asserts, been informed of the mystery. His description of the ghost tallies with the missing man's appearance.

Coffee Drinking.

Coffee drinking to excess is getting more and more common in the city. Hundreds of customers come in five or six times a day, drink off a cup of coffee and go out without eating anything. Coffee is evidently used by them as a meal as well as a beverage, for from the frequency of their visits it is very evident they do not get a meal between breakfast and supper, which, it is presumed, they eat at home. The habit is evidently a very injurious one, for not one of the habitual coffee drinkers are healthy, nearly all being nervous and sickly. Some of them carry the habit so far that they even go to two or three restaurants in the course of their rounds.

Sic Was Disappointed.

A modest and small-eared man recognized a seat on an electric car. A robust woman, who clung to a strap directly in front of him, looked at him reproachfully now and then till he could stand it no longer. Finally he said to her: "Madam, I sent somebody give up my place to you, but in my judgment you are not able to sit since I am sitting." She said it was all right, and cheerfully waited till somebody got up and made it possible for the slim man to move along.

A Cunning Thief.

Since October 1, Joseph Johnson of West Salisbury township, Chester county, Pa., has lost 240 chickens, geese, ducks and turkeys. The same at last enabled him to track the robbers. He found their home in a hole in the hillside near by. With a little powder and a pick he unearthed the thieves, and was astonished to find two large opossums that his blast of explosive had killed. The cavity in which the possums lived was immense, and in it were the skeleton remains of his lost fowls and fully feathers enough to make two large feather beds.

Exchange of Compliments.

It was a little blow, and she felt for he meant well and had a sincere admiration for his girl. They were sitting at the lunch table with a number of others, and as he passed her the sugar he murmured in an undertone: "Sugar is a sweet—just like you." The compliment was a little awkward, to be sure, but he meant it, and it seemed more than cruel when, a moment later, having occasion to pass the butter to him, she drawled: "Here it is, soft—just like you."

Still Faithful to Previous.

Every year or two a rival star to the still unexplainable Adelina Patti comes in the musical firmament. The latest of these is an Italian young lady, who was born near Bologna about twenty-five years ago, and which is as beautiful as a prima donna ought to be. Her name is Colombati, and she is at present exciting great admiration and winning enthusiastic applause at the opera house at Valetta.

Fining the Sheriff.

Being high sheriff of an English county, as many lords and rich men are, is no joke. The judge of the Winchester assizes discovered, when opening court, that the high sheriff, Sir Henry Tichborne, had absented himself "without permission asked, and gone, without excuse, explanation or justification," for a six-months' trip to Africa. The judge fined him five hundred pounds.

PROBATE NOTICE.

For hearing claims before County Court.

State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. Probate Court for said County. At a session of said Court held at the Probate Office, in the City of Charlevoix, on Monday, the 1st day of May in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three. Present, Alfred J. Dixon, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of PATRICK B. GRIMES, Deceased. It appearing to be for the interest of the estate of said deceased, that the claims of all persons against said deceased should be heard and adjusted, it is ordered that all such claims be presented to said Court, at the Probate Office, in the City of Charlevoix, on Monday, the 1st day of August, A. D. 1893, and that such claims will be heard on Monday, the 1st day of May, A. D. 1893, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of each day.

ALFRED J. DIXON, Judge of Probate.

A PROPER STUDY FOR SATAN!

The relation between 'Lies' and 'Goods.' Why do certain kinds of goods insp so much more falsehood than others?

FOR INSTANCE:

There is much more deliberate deception about Shoes than about Dress Goods; there is more falsehood about Linens than about Silks.

It is important that we suggest the question -- not for us to settle it publicly.

As a merchant with goods to sell, we tell our store news to public daily. The exact truth about our goods and prices is the fundamental rule of our advertising. Public discrimination is the only protection that honest and truth-telling advertisers have against unscrupulous competition.

A. T. WASHBURNE, Charlevoix.

There is a great margin between the Stock and the Show. For one beautiful novelty seen, there are scores on the shelves unseen.

Another difficulty confronts us—the standard we have set, for our own Dress Goods Exhibits—It is hard to compare them with themselves. And the show of the past seasons have been so far beyond competition, that it is difficult to make still further improvement.

But progress there must be, for there is no health without growth, and progress there is—our shelves tell the story.

It will contain a steam engine for operating elevator fanning mills, bett picking tables, etc.

Death of Mrs. Mattie Voree.

Mrs. A. F. Voree, (nee Mattie O'Neill) died at her home in Frankfort last Thursday night, of consumption. The remains were brought here Saturday for intermeut.

Mrs. Voree was raised in Charlevoix, at least the most of her girlhood years were spent here, and for several years she was one of our most popular teachers. She was richly equipped as a teacher, and was endowed with those gentle graces which made her an ornament to society, and beloved by all with whom she came in contact.

She was a sister of Robert and John O'Neill, of this place, and of Miss Maggie O'Neill, Mrs. Ed. Bedford and Mrs. Al. Gilger, of Frankfort.

The funeral was held from the residence of Robert O'Neill Monday at 10:30, and was largely attended, the Catholic Priest of Petoskey officiating.

INSOLVENT.

The Bank of Charlevoix Closes Its Doors Last Friday Morning.

The town was thrown into a flutter of excitement last Friday morning, when the bank of Charlevoix failed to open its doors for the resumption of business. The closed doors was the result of an assignment the night previous to R. W. Kane.

It is not necessary, and it would be bad taste to enter into a review of the causes which led up to the suspension of Brown & Co. It is sufficient to say that there is no reason to look for a resumption of business by the assignors.

The future carries with it the Northern Michigan Seed Co., which was an adjunct of Brown & Co., thanks summer.

Assignee Kane has made no statement of assets and liabilities, but it is thought that individual deposits will not exceed $1,000. Several of our business men are involved, but, while some are temporarily embarrassed, no further failures will result.

Mr. Kane says depositors will be paid in full. Mrs. W. P. Brown has waived all personal interest in the property of the firm, and her right of dower, to protect creditors.

AFTER CHEAPER FUEL.

ORGANIZED AGAINST THE COAL BARONS.

Gone with $5,000 of Machinists' Funds—Tetanus Injuries Superior to Injuries of Altitude—Several Appointments by the President—A Tragedy Not on the Hills.

Told in a Few Words.

—One of the most notable conventions of 1893 will be that which will assemble in Chicago June 5, to deal with the great question of combinations to raise the price of fuel. The call for the gathering was issued on Wednesday afternoon by our Senator Stanford, who was authorized so to do in the following joint resolution by the Legislature of Minnesota:

Whereas, Combinations, corporations and coal mine owners have combined and are now combining in an unlawful combination or trust to prevent competition and raise the price of coal at an unreasonable and exorbitant rate, and have succeeded in raising over all the United States and Canada, plundering the people thereof of millions of dollars, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is illegal for any one man to control alone absolutely with this gigantic combination and wickedly and flagrantly violate the law of the land, and that it is a willful neglect of duty on the part of the executive of the United States not to enforce the laws of the United States, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senator from the State of Minnesota be and he is hereby respectfully requested to correspond with the government of all States of the United States of America and to request them to join in a convention at Chicago, Illinois, on the 5th day of June, 1893, to consider the following, and such other and further matters as may seem to them necessary to be considered, and to adopt such remedies as may be necessary to protect the people against the great evil, and submit the case to the Congress of the United States, and to take all other steps which they may deem wise and proper for the protection of members of said citizens of combination in the United States.

Jesse L. Isaacs, of Scranton, Pa., died Tuesday night. Grand Treasurer of the International Organization of Machinists, has decamped with $5,000 of the funds belonging to the order. He borrowed money to indemnify and deceived it in the Merchants National Bank. It was for the purpose of enlarging the business of his son-in-law. The theft was discovered there. Tuesday afternoon he was detected in the embezzlement and left the city early, drawing the funds from the bank, and taking with him a large number of valuable bonds.

—The Imperial Institute in Kensington, London, was formally inaugurated Wednesday by the Prince of Wales. It was a state ceremonial, and attended by a greater assemblage of young and shapely than has characterized the passage of the Prince of Wales's coach through London since her coronation on June 28, 1838. The event was a memorable one, somewhat less the fact that it was connecting to illustrate on the occasion of the Prince's first appearance in semi-officially stated that this would be the last occasion upon which she would make a public entry into the metropolis.

—The President has made the following appointments: Stephen P. Corcoran, to be marshal of the United States for the eastern district of Tennessee. Edward C. Bullitt, to be marshal of the eastern district of Williamette, in the States of Oregon and Washington. Thomas Spencer Hillsman to be collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of West Virginia. STRIP, THE ELECTRICIAN.

A Four-Footed Wire-Layer and His Ways of Working.

Many people in Brighton, England, are interested in watching the clever work of "Strip, the Electrician," who after laying down many miles' length of copper wire, for the purpose of electric lighting, in London, has lately gone to Brighton with the same object.

Lord Mr. Edison should not at once recognize the name of his distinguished "collaborator," we will explain at once that Strip is a clever little fox terrier, the property of Messrs Crompton, the electrical engineers and that she is under the special protection of that company's night watchman.

Strip's method of working is as follows: The workman lay down, to the desired position, a short length of the steel iron pipe which is to shelter a corresponding length of the copper wire along which the electric current will ultimately pass.

The iron pipe having been fixed, Strip is called, has the end of a copper wire fastened to her collar, and, at the workman's sign, goes in at one end of the pipe—"And comes out at the other end," says the intelligent but by no means too lazy reader. Not so, however. The other end of the iron pipe has a bar across it, over which the copper wire must be strafted to keep it taut. Strip, having entered the pipe with the wire fastened to her collar, presents herself at the other end to the workman awaiting her there, who throws his hand under the bar, unfastens Strip's collar, and draws it and the wire out. Strip, when she feels her collar pass, turns around, retraces her steps, comes out again at the same end she went in at, and lies down on the workmen's coats until she is wanted again.

THE WOMAN HAD TEMPER.

And Being Dead Was Sensitive to Personal Criticism.

She was a tall, lank woman, with the slender, graceful build of a lath, and she was being fitted with a cloak at a Chicago store. She was wealthy, the clerk had settled that in his mind by the size of her diamonds. But unfortunately he was not aware that she was slightly deaf.

"I think the other will suit you better," he murmured as he critically surveyed the garment upon her: "this fur is very thin."

"Sir," said she, raising her voice sharply, "did you say thin?"

"I meant to say narrow," he stammered.

"How dare you say such a thing to me?" she screamed.

Everybody in the store was looking by this time, and the little cash girls crept behind the counter for safety.

"Per-perhaps," stammered the young man growing red in the face, "I should have said slight, slim or poor."

"No, sir; you should have said nothing on the subject at all. I shall buy my dealing hereafter where the clerks know how to mind their business and make impertinent remarks about my personal appearance."

And she flounced out of the store, leaving the cloak and the clerk on the floor in two separate heaps.

ANOTHER "ANGELUS" STORY.

How Millet's Great Painting Was Treated Before It Became Famous.

M. Hennez is the authority given for the following anecdote, in addition to the dozen stories already current regarding the "Angelus" of Jean Francois Millet. When that painting had acquired sufficient merit to cause it to be engraved, it was intrusted with great ceremony to the engraver, who took it from its frame and wrapped it in an old newspaper and left it in the gateroom at the porter's lodge where he lived. On retursing to his rooms he forgot the picture entirely, and it was not till two weeks had nearly elapsed that he bethought him of the consignee. He then hunted through his room high and low and was somewhat disturbed to find no trace of poor Millet's production, for he knew that however insignificant it might be as a work of art the painter is all probability considered it, after painter's most a masterpiece. Luckily the porter did not think fit to throw it away, but called attention to the fact that an unwieldsome canvas was knocking about his room; the latter then found himself repossessed of the forgotten loan.

Wellington and the Cook.

The duke of Wellington was in his habits, one of the simplest of men. His daily food, for instance, was always of the plainest. That he kept a French cook is true, but this was for others, not for himself. It was the cook's constant complaint that he could not prevail upon his master to make a trial of his skill as an artist. Every day he sent up the bill of fare to the duke, but it always came back marked merely joint of meat and pudding or tart, or sometimes, by way of change, tart or pudding. And the cook also complained that the duke was so easy to please. "If I cook a good dinner," he remarked, "the duke only says 'It's well.' If I cook a bad dinner, he says the same thing."

Cow, Calf and Express Train.

The train crew of the Flying Yankee was an hour late and tearing down the line at a great rate when a most ambitious mulley cow and her calf which, it seems, had inherited something of the same quality, concluded to cut a race with the Maine Central's pride. They started, making good time, but the train soon gained a lap and the cow was stretch by the engine and actually turned out for cows, but strange to say, was little injured. The calf turned around, addressed some good bovine language to the train, and showed fight, but the train had passed before he finished the preliminaries of an attack.

In Japan.

Among the smaller, but still curious and interesting evidences of the decline of the Japanese to acquire European languages is the fact that the Roman letters, small and capitals, and the Arabic numerals, are to be found worked up ingeniously in patterns stamped upon the common cotton stuff used by the peasantry for their dresses. The effect is curious, but the continuance so cleverly made that it is not nearly so bad as would be imagined.

A CAT AND A DUMMY.

They Had a Fight, but It Was a One-Sided Affair.

You can sometimes see instances of a cat on top of any office sample on exhibition and be amused well out of your entertainment in every though it be unmixed with a perfect life-like repose duration. How different when the intruder is a dog cat. It seems ridiculous to watch, but nevertheless the writer which home was evading to find that the little four-pawed animals had been presented with one of those stuffed rag cats, with the expression painted, and altogether a fairly good imitation of a human. Whether she knew what effect would be produced by showing it to the thousand that lay sleeping behind the stove, I quickly placed the dummy in a sitting posture about three feet from the sleeping feline, and by fair means or foul, began to attract her attention. It didn't take long.

With a gentle "biff" on the side of the head to give her the impression that it was a cat blown, she awakened, and with a flying side-leap she met the unusual beauty on the jaw. A rough and tumble fight ensued. Grappling the dummy the pussies proceeded to unjoint it in a very rapid manner, rags, wool and other members of the dusty bagpus raining to shower, and the little girl being concentrated to such actions started to whimper, and, as the circus continued, gave vent to her feelings in loud broken sobs. With not a little difficulty I separated the fighters, and after gathering up the fragments, started out to purchase another dummy for the child.

INTERESTING EXPERIENCE.

Told by the Psychical Research Society Secretary to Initiates.

Ernest Albaumsmeyer, secretary of the society of Psychical Research, related some queer incidents before the Unitarian Inhibitors of Boston.

One experience of his own was quite interesting. A friend of his died, and the widow was about to dispose of the household furnishings when one day a little more than a week from the date of the death, the speaker on entering his own room felt distinctly the presence of the dead friend. It then came into his mind that he should write to the widow and tell her not to sell the furniture because another friend would come on from the West and arrange matters more satisfactorily.

To convince himself, if possible, that this was not a hallucination but a bona fide communication from his dead friend, he immediately called two ladies who live near him, one of whom is a medium, and without the slightest suggestion from him of the nature of his visit this lady informed him that the spirit of the dear departed friend, was present. He therefore wrote to the widow, as he had been moved to do, and later on he learned that the Western friend had come on without the intervention of any one and had succeeded in getting the furniture disposed of when the goods were bought to exchange in gleem which had no sunny unhappy associations for the widow for other articles.

HE WASN'T THERE.

The Course of True Love Is Crossed by the Smart Brother.

When the course of true love does not run smooth it frequently happens that a small brother or one of the lovers is the rub in the channel.

That was the case with Mr. Spatts and Miss Tommy, the young man was waiting for his adored one to be ready to the parlor, when Tommy came in and observed curiously:

"I don't see you."

"Didn't see what?" asked Spatts, startled.

"The two strings."

"What two strings?"

"Why, the two things tied to you."

"What on earth do you mean?" Tommy?" asked the young man.

"Ain'you got a beau?" demanded Tommy, who thought the best way to answer questions was by asking more.

"Why?" replied Spatts. "I suppose that is collegian terms I might be allowed to in that way."

"Then you must be the clap she meant."

"Who meant?"

"Sister."

"What did she say?"

"I heard her tell mamma she had two strings to her beau."

"That is slang, when Miss Kissam came into the parlor five minutes afterward Spatts had left the girl no great for anything. Mr. Spatts wasn't there.

Costly to Keep Her.

"This is your little sister, Tommy," said his father, showing him the baby. "You will love her dearly will you sister?"

"Yes, of course," replied Tommy, leaperting the infant arrival, "but it'll cost a good deal to keep her, won'tit?"

"I presume so."

"Yes," said Tommy, with a long drawn breath, "said when I asked you the other day to buy me a white rabbit you said you couldn't afford it."

A Rose Transfer.

Two visitors were observing with admiration the noble form of a passing policeman.

"Fine looking man," said one.

"Elegant," said the other.

"Do you suppose he ever caught anybody or anything?"

"Don't know. The newspapers, though, say he's a poor policeman that can't catch a hay nonexistently."

The Little Innocents.

Gertie's parents have staying with them one a visit an aunt whose disposition is chiefly of an artificial character. The little girl would like to have her aunt here, she is grateful. Next morning Gertie came running to her aunt in the greatest alarm. "Oh, auntie, I think I'd rather sleep again with you, for, do you know, auntie takes to dress."

"I wish old Graham was dead. But perhaps it is as well that he is here; I can report to him at once, or blood him again. Continual him, I am not in his power, but he is mine. Why should I care for him, or be ashamed of the work I have done for him? I am master, and he knows it. I am master, and shall be master, and he knows it. There is a place ahead, or a rag, above Fort Yukon.

He was conquering a man of action, but, when resolved, his command of words was equal to the energy with which he used them.

He put the map Frenault had given him into his pocket, and then, taking his axe, he chopped away with him to the fire.

They had but just reached there, when a tall form emerged from the darkness, and Fox, chief of the Mountains, the weapon in a scarlet mantle, that was stripped with numerous, stood before them.

"You are true to your word," said Uncas, shaking Fox's hand. "You have come, but where is he?"

"Gone, gone!" he said, motioning the other to sit down.

As Fox spoke to the Indian, he was broad, and, approaching the fire, he drew back his mantle, and held the light above the unconscious man's face.

"Do you know who that is?" he asks.

"Ralph Denham!" said the chief. And a will light leaped in his black eyes.

"He is yours," said Fox. "Now do with him as you please."

"Can you lift him out of the boat?" asked Uncas.

"I will have that, done."

Fox motioned to the sailors, and they lifted the head out of the boat, and placed it on the bank, the chief throwing an old cloak over the pale face, to shield it from the cold.

"Come, let us unlie i, while we are about it," said Fox, and with his slow, lounge, he helped to take out the boxes, and placed them under the fort on which Ralph Denham was lying.

With his customary energy, Fox worked, and made others work, till the boxes were stowed and all the sailors excepting four (the other boy was making his way to the shore).

"Uncas," said Fox to the chief, when the boat was out of sight and hearing, "that I trust myself to you, for I believe the Mountain chief will keep his word."

"So far, no man has appeared to doubt my word. I have, at times since meeting you, been in doubt, but, at times, I am a bad judge of men. Yet, I have, at times, been a good judge, and I believe you are true."

"Uncas," said Fox to the chief, when excepting four (the other boy, was making his way to the shore).

The appropriation bill for the Northern asylum at Traverse City has passed both houses. It provides for the erection of two large cottages and a barn and for the purchase of 120 acres more land, 20 acres on the north, in the cleared field owned by Hannah, Lay & Co., and 100 acres on the south 20 owned by Mr. Goodrich and 20 by Hannah, Lay & Co.

Boyne Falls News: Eastern Charlevoix county (Chandler and Hudson townships) are acknowledged to have the finest farming lands in the county Both these township lay high, watered with innumerable little lakes, hardwood timber, and a gravelly loam soil. These two townships would ere this have twice their present population but for the awful condition of the roads and the difficulty settlers experience in getting to market. The more for better roads and their gradual improvement throughout the country is rapidly lessening this objection, and we predict that in the next decade these two townships will double their present population.

Defense Against Book Borrowers.

A wise and venerable book-lover once hit upon a cunning way to which to defeat the nefarious book-borrower. He wrote the prefac, in plain figure, in all his books, and when anybody asked to borrow a volume he cheerfully answered: "Yes, with pleasure." Then he would add, looking at the fly-leaf, "I see the price of this work is so-and-so—you may take it at this figure, which will, of course, be refunded when the book is returned." Those who really wanted the books made no objection, to leaving the deposit, while those who lazily wanted to avoid a journey to the nearest library generally failed to take the loan. The old gentleman's beautiful library was in this way preserved intact.

Wasn't Brought Up Right.

A big knife of a boy, about 12 years old and well dressed, came into her presence and begged for "something to eat for my mother."

"A boy of your age should be able to work at something. My husband, when as old as you, worked at anything he could get to do that was honorable," insisted the lady.

"Yas," drawled the boy, "maybe your husband was raised for work—but I wasn't!"

That settled it! The lady gave him a peck of meal and some bacon to confuse the growth and development of that "cheek."

This Is a Big Country.

Great Britain, European Turkey, Switzerland, Denmark, Portugal and Palestine could be placed within the territorial limits of Texas, and with plenty of room to spare. Belgium, Holland and Greece do not contain as much territory as Arkansas, while Spain coincides to size with Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia. Italy and Florida are of one size, and Germany is the same as Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina. All New England could be accommodated in space in the state of Washington and Massachusetts is not one-fourth the size of South Dakota.

Could Not Afford It.

In a North Riding village lived an elderly man who had been married three times, but had been as often bereaved. After the death of his third wife a rumor was circulated as to a fourth wedding. On being questioned he replied in the following decisive manner: "Nay, nut all: what wi' marryin' an' ceas an' what wi' buryin' on 'em, it's over expensive. Ah won't afford it no more."

A Chinese Leper.

Horrible Revelations From Chinatown, San Francisco.

Officers of the San Francisco Chinatown police squad crawled down into a dark and dirty basement the other day and discovered a Chinese leper. When they entered the dark foul smelling hole their eyes were unable to penetrate the blackness until a match had been produced and lighted. Then they groped their way back to the rear of the cellar, bumping their heads on the joists at every step. Then down a gap of stairs into a deeper and still foulier pit, where they found the leper.

He is an old man, probably sixty years of age, and for 40 years he has not been penned up in a window-less and almost airless room, the entrance from which drove the policemen out when they first ventured in. They returned with lanterns, however, after a horrible sight was exposed to their gaze. They found the leper all but helpless. His whole body was in an awful condition and the leper's disease had eaten nearly all the flesh from one of his legs.

When the policemen left the place an officer was stationed there to guard the leper's pen. Sergeant Duffy then notified the board of health of the discovery, and Policeman McNamee went to the headquarters of the chinese Six companies where the secretary was made acquainted with the facts. The Six Companies positively refused to render any assistance, declaring that the matter was no concern of theirs, and the policeman was turned away. The leper must be disposed of by order of the board of health.

She Gave Him the Grip.

And Thereby Caused a Commotion in the Theater.

At the Lyceum theater, Rochester, two gentlemen sat in the front row next to the orchestra. Directly behind them sat a gentleman and his wife. A few moments before the curtain went up one of the gentlemen in the front row put his arm on the back of his companion's seat. While talking to his friend he felt a slight pinch on the arm. On looking around he saw that the lady behind him had turned to look up to the balcony, and in so doing had placed her hand on his arm. Realizing that she had done so unconsciously, he did not move his arm.

Soon, however, he felt a hard pinch. Thinking that the best way to call the lady's attention to what she was doing would be to ask if anything was wanted, the gentleman turned and asked.

"What is it, madam?"

"Sir," said the lady, and immediately she blushed blazed up.

"What do you mean by speaking to my wife?" he demanded.

"Don't mean anything," was the reply, "but I would like to know what four wife means by pinching my arm."

Then both men looked at the lady's hand, which still rested on the arm. Both smiled, became a little nervous and apologized. During the rest of the performance the lady kept her hand in her muff.

A Proper Study For Satan!

For Instance:

There is much more deliberate deception about Shoes than about Dress Goods; there is more falsehood about Linens than about Silks.

It is important that we suggest the question—not for us to settle it publicly.

As a merchant with goods to sell, we tell our store news to public daily. The exact truth about our goods and prices is the fundamental rule of our advertising. Public discrimination is the only protection that honest and truth-telling advertisers have against unscrupulous competition.

Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co.

A. T. WASHBURNE, Charlevoix.

There is a great margin between the Stock and the Show. For one beautiful novelty seen, there are scores on the shelves unseen.

Another difficulty confronts us—the standard we have set for our own Dress Goods Exhibits—It is hard to compare them with themselves. And the show of the past season have been so far beyond competition, that it is difficult to make still further Improvement.

But progress there must be, for there is no health without growth, and progress there is—our shelves tell the story.

A Miraculous Jump.

Little Sammy LeFevre, the 8 year old son of Dr. LeFevre, while playing on the revetment back of his home Monday noon, missed his footing and fell into the river with no possible way of climbing out. He was going down the third time when the screams of help from his playmates attracted the attention of Ed. Chalcopyka, who was at the time crossing the bridge. Ed. turned, and noticing a pair of little hands going down out of sight, at once ran to the spot and with a lunge, clothes on, caught him by his hair, and brought him to the surface. Ed. was struggling not only to save Sam's life, but his own, when Dr. LeFevre reached the spot, and hanging over the revetment gave Ed. a grip on his foot. When more assistance arrived, the three, for Chicago and other points. Capt Ormond Fox

Paras arose and again set its large form in the chair.

"Wait, worthy anchors, before you leave a few questions more, but first sit down, 'avast jinkers, motioning like Polly.

With a look of surprise the chief obeyed him.

"Did Fox say anything about—about Captain Dunham?"

"He did, sahib! Twice, cautiously, 'Where?'

"I cannot recall all that he said, but I'll tell you something wonderful that I know."

"What is that, Dunham?"

"Captain Ralph Dunham is now sleeping with the dead."

"Are you sure of this?"

"As sure as that I see you sitting up in that bed before me, Captain Dunham."

Colonel Graham coughed to keep back the shout of joy that thrilled on his lips, and then he groaned his long, white fingers in his eyes, and so remained for several minutes.

"Do not be sorry for me," said the chief, in surprised tone. "It is no sudden, fleeting wave of sorrow, I swear! I'm glad—glad!"

"Much better the young. Is that all you want to ask me?"

"No! there was one question more, but, perhaps, as you are so weary, and it is so late, I had better defer it."

"I am not weary, and not late at all this same to me. Ask me the question, Paras."

"Is it about your sister."

"What of her?"

"She is very beautiful."

"So I have heard from men say before. But, what's the question you would ask? Is she married, and is she giving that eyes on Graham's agitated face?"

"Do you know of any man that she is going to marry?" asked the colonel, with slight tremor in his voice.

"I do not. Why do you ask?"

"I am single, and in my own lands I have great wealth and large estates. I have some pains of my own country—women that I would rate to marry, nor have I seen any other woman in my land, though it has been my fortune to see most lands under the sun. I shall have your beautiful country as soon as my Jalamon barge is ready, and if your sister is unmarried—"

"Stop, Colonel Graham," interrupted Dunham, as some a—a—a—to say you would make a little fit the Mountains your sister. Do you would promise to go with you?"

"I am."

"Do should ask her."

"I do not know how I shall do that."

"Dunham! Dunham! Dunham. I would give you my fortune to provide for your sister."

"Was she well? I am good, but I am still a man—a my prince. My fortune is not so great, but I can give you three to the Highness of a city."

Paras was very tired, and he felt by the first syllable passed his lips, a shrill, piercing voice had commenced the chief in the lego.

He had the troubles his only begun; you know fish a water how did a—ever be—Dunham—Dunham—Dunham! Dunham! yes jim kilt nim! kilt nim! kilt nim! Dunham never leaves do sham Fox!

Paras was even more excited. The chief, Dunham, Jim kilt nim, and was on the Mountains on the floor, so finding his feeling.

"I will—I will—I—I—you again, this was all he could say, and the half strong mass now so frightened as a child at an imagined fusillade, he fell out of the bed.

In the meantime Captain Fox drew the precious one up close to the fire, and arranging them into a soothing like a cosen, lit lit a cigar, and stretched himself out on top of them.

Dan and Jim sat out right when Ralph Dunham comes back. Keep quiet, and listen and depend on me." he said.

"Tired, Dan?" asked the Captain, anxious to talk to some one rather than from any interest he had in the poor lad's condition.

"I am, sir," replied Dan.

"Why, sir, you look not long have you been with me?"

"A month, August, sir," said Dan, still looking at the fire, but with a tinder expression on his face.

"Why, I hear you will never be sufficiently grown to go for sea yet, you know, Dan, is the only one on that ship that did not perish."

"And I sometimes wish I had perished at the same time," said Dan, with a bitter tone in his voice.

"Tory, I would have had no cabin boy, sir."

"You saved my life to make me your slave."

"Come, come, my lad, some day you will be a captain in command of a ship like the Wanderer, the ocean will be your home, and every land will be you tribune."

"If I ever command a ship like yours," replied the boy, "I hope some man-o-war will come up to me in my pride and swing as all up to the yardarm. I'm afraid that will be my fate if I stay with you."

"Do you of being angry at this request, Captain Fox blew out a long puff of smoke, and laughed long and loud.

"Faith, lad, you are very hard on me, very hard, indeed, but I'm not angry at all! you would have me and all my crew in the morning if you, lad, go my way. Now, tell me that the truth, wouldn't you?"

"Yes, I would," replied the boy, bluntly.

"Good! I do like boyish candor, even a boy, just like you, but I had not the same hatred of Spanish men. Indeed I was in youth trouble to decide whether, when I became a man, I should join a buccaneer or on a ship. But you'll get used to this life after a bit. You'll down and go to sleep. Don't think of hitting me as I lie here, for I shall be awake all night, good night, lad."

Good night, my greatest! Dan, rather stretched himself before the fire and, being a very healthy boy, he was asleep in a few minutes.

The last glimmer of daylight saw the Captain and Dan up and down on the gulf of the map. Presently left Captain Fox was enabled to find the cabin; it was only a few yards away.

After examining the place and taking fresh bearings, and comparing them with the map, the Captain called to Dan to help him, and together they carried the boxes to the cabin.

This done, they closed up the windows with sheets. They were totally through their work when Paras returned a song.

Instead of being startled, Fox said to the chief.

"I have just commenced in this place a great deal of treasure, consisting of diamonds and other jewels.

The Mountain women prefer flowers and shells, and they are cheap.

"So I have heard; though I have received a great deal for your sister. I now ask you to consider this property as left in your charge, and that of your people in me.

"I shall guard it sacredly, though my people have a superstitious dread of the place.

"I wish all the white men in the world with the exception of myself had the fortune to find it, but as go over to the Sea, the Mountains, and I am the only one.

"They went back to the fire, where Dan set out the food, which he finished that had been brought from the ship.

"Dan, I have received an invitation to lay himself saying. "I have given orders to have food ready as we reach my lessons."

"That was thoughtful; I am a great worker, but I am also a great eater," said Dan.

When the meal was over, the Captain asked if there was any one near whom he could get to carry his trap.

"The chief said, "I will go now, and as he made no offer to help, Fox threw his burden across his own broad shoulders, and said he was ready to start.

"Do show by the chief, lead, and they went away.

"Dan, when they halted for a few moments with the chief by means of his rifle, pointed to the hill and the place in which Capt. Dunham was guarded.

CHAPTER XIX.

SUMMER FUN ON AN AMERICAN CORSICA.

With the morning sun behind her, the Wanderer came sailing up the Sea Sea, where the Sea Hawk lay at anchor, and the Indians in the huts and the dwellers in the cozy town of Sag Harbor saw a very fine progress with much interest, though with a different feeling from that with which they greeted her arrival when she first appeared in company with Captain Dunham's ship.

Valentine Dayton was on shore taking in his second load and he knew well when the report reached him that Captain Fox was the man coming up the bay.

As a good officer, who felt implicit confidence in superiors was the first requisite in a sailor's character, Valentine Dayton was willing to do whatever Captain Fox ordered; but it must be confessed that, in spite of his good, prosperous life in anything but pleasant, and, without any, the feeling of the sailor, the feeling he felt when he heard Ralph Dunham for permitting any other man to assume the temporary command of the Sea Hawk.

The sailors generally were not among those men, and the older ones were very much disposed to grumble.

The good people of the town, being principally fishermen, were not so entirely ignorant of the training that gives a blind obedience to superiors officers, did not hesitate to give forcible expression to their feelings.

The Sea Hawk, if not altogether the property of the dwellers in Sag Harbor, at least was owned by the province of New York. But there was in those waters, because she volunteered to be their cruiser, that all and most of the officers and World's Fair correspondence.

The Midway Plaisance in the World's Fair grounds will be one of the greatest attractions of the exposition. The term, Midway Plaisance, merely means an avenue lined with buildings in which entertainments are given, and to which those there extra fares will be charged. This also show avenue is a mile long and one hundred wide. Near the entrance to the Plaisance is Tower of Babel is the having a height of 40 feet and a diameter at the base of 100 feet. This tower is a very strange thing, the plan of the original by having a double track circular circular. The cars are drawn up to the top, 3 cities of India is installed at the top, from which a good view of the grounds is had.

The Irish Village.

One of the attractions of the Plaisance is a collection of houses, representing an Irish village. Towering over them is a reproduction of famous Donegal castle. Lady Aberdeen, living in one of the cottages, will preside over the little village. There are exhibitions of the work of Irish peasants and of some of the famous Irish industries. Shawls, embroidery, etc., will be manufactured, where he is not actually at work the owner, and no man can go in this cabin without being asked to eat and be asked to order our Sag Harbor boys about, and say to Elder Hedges, "Come, sir! I shall have to come, or the ship will have to go, I must remove it right against th. grass."

"And I, you, sir, remove all our grass, Source," said a steady old farmer in the crowd, gathered, some by fear and some by curiosity, on the floor, so finding his feeling.

"I will—I will—I—you, sir, you again, this was all he could say, and the half strong mass now so frightened as a child at an imagined fusillade, he fell out of the boat.

"Yes, I would," replied the boy, bluntly.

"Good! I do like boyish candor, even a boy, just like you, but I had not the same hatred of Spanish men. Indeed I was in youth trouble to decide whether, when I became a man, I should join a buccaneer or on a ship. But you'll get used to this life after a bit. You'll down and go to sleep. Don't think of hitting me as I lie here, for I shall be awake all night, good night, lad."

Good night, my greatest! Dan, rather stretched himself before the fire and, being a very healthy boy, he was asleep in a few minutes.

The last glimmer of daylight saw the Captain and Dan up and down on the gulf of the map. Presently left Captain Fox was enabled to find the cabin; it was only a few yards away.

After examining the place and taking fresh bearings, and comparing them with the map, the Captain called to Dan to help him, and together they carried the boxes to the cabin.

This done, they closed up the windows with sheets. They were totally

GRAND RALLY FROM THE ENDS OF THE UNION.

They Are Welcomed by Louisville—Delegates from Different States—President Harrison Nominated—Mr. W. Tener Elected President—Will Meet in Denver, Aug. 1.

Special to the Ledger.

Where the convention met, was hastily decorated with flags and banners, and the front of the stage was loaded down with flowers and tropical oddity plants.

It was nearly 11 o'clock on the first day of the meeting, before all the delegates were in their seats, the galleries were packed to the doors for nearly an hour and half before. When the clock had all been seated, President J. S. Clarkson of the league called the convention to order and the Rev. Dr. Hopkins, of the Unitarian Church of Louisville, invoked a blessing upon the assembled Republicans. At the close of the prayer Mrs. J. Ellen Foster was ushered on the stage, and her presence was greeted with a shower of applause. Mrs. Foster, of Iowa, a member of the Indiana Republican Leagues, then introduced Mayor Henry S. Tyler, who welcomed the delegates in the name of the city. The Mayor's address was interrupted when he came to the stage, and when Mr. Halstead speaking, I. L. Crawford, President of the Kentucky State League, was introduced and welcomed the visitors in behalf of the State. Mr. Crawford's address was only the quintet of the city of Louisville, and he made their people proud in the course of his remarks he referred to the fact that in the last fifty years 1,000 Republicans who had cast their votes in Louisville, and the fact that the time of Lincoln's name the curse accusation, defeated and hunted, arose and cheered most enthusiastically.

Mr. Crawford, in his speech introduced I. L. Rich, who welcomed the league in behalf of the Republicans of Indiana. Mr. Rich said that the great Republican league over the Union, the country was indebted to politics in the American flag over American interests and American labor. Mr. Rich said that the Democratic party in the first time in 30 years, had no platform, and that the Democrats were ashamed of the measure of the government, we now direct attention to the fact that the Democrats have no platform, and that the Democrats are in unusual platform or about that it called "Tariff reform." Mr. Rich's address was applauded.

The report was adopted, section by section.

Election of a President.

The rules of the last convention adopted President Clarkson directed the secretary to call the roll of States for nominations for the office of President.

William H. Tracy of Connecticut, was elected President for the ensuing year on his own motion, and amid applause of a work entitled "Life and Services of Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States." All duly penalizing traditions, habits, in fact, their whole life and one issue are bold in a manner which interest the reader and hold attention to the end. The book also explains our connection with the war, how it was about and what has come from it. The book is profusely illustrated and contains a portrait of Mr. Harrison and his family, and a portrait of the President, in the uniform of a Brigadier General, and other illustrations of the Harrison

HAT WEARING IN CHURCH.

Puritan Fashions Worn at Beginning This Century.

On November 7, 1801 Mr. Sumner Pepper went to church and they noted the fact in his diary, adding, with real venom to the sermon that he listened to, "A simple fellow spoke the praise of church manners, and exclaimed against men wearing hats in the church."

Throughout the seventeenth century this wearing of hats in church was a much-vexed question. The evidence on the subject is rather confusing, but it would seem to have been largely the practice for men to remain uncovered throughout the church service, but to put their hats on during the sermon.

The Puritans have often been charged with the introduction of this custom, but there is little doubt that it was in vogue before the name "Puritan" was heard of. Early in the seventeenth century many of the clergy began to attack the custom and to plead for a more reverent and becoming behavior in church.

Dr. Donne, dean of St. Paul's, when preaching at St. Dunstan's spoke very strongly on the subject and hinted that if the offenders would not listen to his admonitions other measures might be resorted to.

"I promise," he said, "that no man will mistaxpret this that I say here now; nay, if this may not prevail, also interpret the service of our officers, if their continuance in this unreverend manner give our officers occasion to warn them of that personally in the place, whenever they see them stray into the unseemly negligence."

INSECT WAYS.

Interesting anecdotes are given of the dangerous little creature called the tarantula. Formidable as it is, it has enemies fully able to hold their own against it.

One of them is the centipede, which, armed with its deadly sting, can make vigorous combat with the tarantula. A fight between them, which is of the quiet convenience, nearly always ends in favor of the tarantula. Before the centipede can reach it, it makes its spring, and kills instantly with the poison of its fangs—for fangs the tarantula may be said to have. The ends of its two long fore-legs are armed with fangs very much like a serpent's. But the tarantula has one enemy, which, as the boys express it, is "too much for him." This is a giant wasp, known as the tarantula hawk, which is much larger than the ordinary wasp as the tarantula is larger than the ordinary spider.

Like the common wasp, the tarantula hawk feeds in the tarantula the food it wishes to lay up for its non-hatched young. This food must be alive always, not dead, else the young will not eat it. Still, while it retains life, it must be incapable of motion.

The tarantula hawk watches its opportunity, and with a sudden dart is down upon its one squeeling enemy. The poison from its sting instantly paralyzes, not kills, the tarantula, and in this helpless condition it is borne away and packed into the cell where the wasp's eggs are deposited.

About the Cryptophrase.

The cryptophrase, which has been spoken of as a fashionable gem, is a species of agate which is semi-transparent. It is found in a natural state on lake in Silesia. It is not a novel stone, but has been known for centuries. There is a chapel in Prague where the entire walls are lined with it. The color of chrysophrase is pale, yellow green. It has been quite successfully imitated in ordinary agate, so that the price of the stone is comparatively low. It is the opposite stone of St. Paul and according to superstition it confers upon the wearer the gifts of eloquence, argument and logic. If the stone becomes a fad of the hour it will hardly be because of its symbolic meaning, for the gifts of argument have never been a popular attraction of womankind.

The hard coal stoves, while in one way very comfortable keeping a room at an even temperature all the time are, in ignorant hands, a source of serious danger. If the drafts are not properly turned, the carbonic acid and sulphurous fumes may pour into the house, and in a sleeping room may smother the sleepers before they are aware of their danger. Three per cent of carbonic acid gas in the air of a room is fatal to animal life, and a large-sized base-burner will not take long to supply this percentage in a close room. Such stoves should always be carefully watched and never handled save by experienced persons.

Flowers Artificially Scented.

The last trick with flowers is quite as revolting to the lover of nature as was the barbarous custom of producing artificial tints by chemical processes, an innovation which produced the celebrated green carnation of last season, but which was condemned at once, and has now fallen into disrepute. This year flowers are to be artificially scented. A scientist has discovered a method of impregnating the petals of a scentless blossom with a perfume of any kind that may be desired. The discovery may result in the adoption of artificial scenting, but the fashion is not likely to last long.

Fish Flour.

A remarkable article—namely, fish flour—has been brought forward in the last few years. It is not as yet manufactured in any great quantity, as the article is still new in the market, and consequently there is no great demand for it. The flour is prepared from dried fish of the quantity thoroughly destroyed, and then ground in a mill.

The Mission of Leaves.

The botanist, the real investigator who has got down to making real explorations for himself, will talk to you of how the thousand minute "stomata" on the surface of a leaf. These invisible "stomata" are really the mouths through which the leaves take in carbonic acid. They are most abundant on the upper surface of leaves; each is an oval opening guarded by a pair of lips which open and close according to requirements. They vary from less than 1,000 to more than 20,000 to the square inch of leaf surface.

ALWAYS READY TO SERVE.

How Phillips Brooks Made Friends While Journeying on the Cars.

During the progress of the journey in Boston, Dr. Phillips Brooks made and cultivated quite a few acquaintances and some of the acquaintances showed a character of such sort as to make the journey seem all too short. Perhaps some fellow creature in distress After seeing his own church on Sunday street destroyed Mr. Brooks next went to the shore of Nepeaug, Conn., to Lake, the well-known resort. Their doors were barred and their shutters spread on account of the heat. Going straight in the track of the flames, and already a large crowd, made up principally of roughs, had gathered in the anticipation of a chance to plunder and loot. Through this crowd Dr. Brooks made his way straight to the school house. His eloquent pounding finally gained him admission. Some of the moral influence of the place were friends of his. To them he said: "Gentlemen, I ask you to do anything for you in my power. Make my use of everything I possess." So they loaded him down with diamonds and valuable jewelry. This filled his pockets, his hat, even his shoes. Again the door was unbarred and out through that crowd of roughs walked Phillips Brooks, carrying on his person valuables worth thousands of dollars. The act must have been suspected by the roughs, yet not a hand was put out to strike or even to touch him. Towering above them all, he inspired a respect or fear which proved a perfect protection. His magnificent courage, which they all know was not four years ondied him to discharge his trust and leave the valuables in a place of safety.

COSTLY BALLS.

The Bills for New York's Fashionable Dinners Are Enormous.

Since the first ball of the Patriarchs, arranged by Ward McAllister in 1872, those "American aristocrats" have expended for their annual entertainments of the least mentle nearly $20,000,000. The average cost of a Patriarch ball is about $6,000 which means an assessment of $125 for each ball from each of the Patriarchs. Usually there have been but two dances each year, but this season the Patriarchs will assign polite society with three dances, the expense of which will make short work of $20,000.

Bradley Martin is very free with his money when a social entertainment is on hand. It may not have occurred to any of the guests at Bradley Martin's dinner at Delmonico's two years ago that the affair cost the host over $6,000. But Mr and Mrs. Bradley Martin entertained with extravagance in London during the season there than on this occasion in Gotham. About $10,000 is the average price of a Bradley Martin dinner dance in London. A conservative estimate has been made that if Mrs Martin is to be married to Lord Crewe in New York in 1895, she will hardly cover the expenses of the wedding.

The most expensive dinner ever given in New York was the New Year's ball of 1892 in the Metropolitan opera house. The floral decorations of the auditorium were on such a scale as to actually prevent sale of sittings in the great interior. When the executive committee had footed up the last of the expenses they found that $11,865.19 was the actual cost of the "diversion" for a few hours.

He Was His Own Grandfather.

The puzzle given below is probably the oldest—a simple form of reasoning to prove that a man may be his own grandfather. Here it is: There was a widow (Anne) and her daughter (Jane) and a man (George) and his son (Harry). This widow married the son and the daughter married the father. The widow, was, therefore, mother-in-law to her husband's father and grandmother to her own husband. By this husband she had a son (Harold), to whom, of course, George is grandfather. Now, the son of a great grandmother must be a grandfather or grandmother to the person to whom his mother was a great grandmother; but, in this instance, Anne was great-grandmother to Miss Harold, therefore Jane, could not be other than his own grandfather.

How the Crops Flourished On Tobacco.

There was once a crank in the botanical gardens that taught an impudent sparrow a lesson in good manners. The sparrow kept on treating the crank while the latter was at dinner. No one likes to be annoyed during a meal, and we cannot be surprised that the big bird took a cool revenge. Intending to take the portion of the sparrow, the crank allowed it to come within striking range, and all of a sudden drew its beak into it. Failing to hit the little thing, however, the passionate crank then held it below the water in the tank, and but for the keeper (who managed to rescue it), the sparrow would have been drowned.

Welcome to Try It.

A railway clerk, before the war, was on his way to Tennessee, and was met by a countryman, who questioned him as to the treatment he had received at the hands of his master. "Didn't you have enough to eat?" the countryman asked. "Yes," "Did you get enough to sleep?" "Yes." "And a warm place to sleep?" "Yes." "Then what did you run away for?" "Say, boss," the darkey replied, "if you think you'd like the place, I'm open to go."

That Would Be suitable.

"Why, the parlor is quite dark!" said Mrs. Hunting to her young son, who was home for his daughter and young Mr. Sparks were sitting.

"Yes, mamma, but I am just going to play some light music," replied Miss Hunting as she left the sofa and scurried toward the piano.

Spots in France.

If the French dools were attended with as many vacancies as a recent newspaper apologize would have the world believe, the population of "La Belle France" would suffer considerable reduction, for 8,000 men are shown by statistics to have engaged in what was intended for a "smooth combat" in the country during the year 1891. Of the 8,000 participants less than half a dozen yielded up the ghost on the altar of personal honor.

WAS A PET FOR A CENTURY

An Alligator Which Had Been Known for the Family Since 1773.

In the bayou flowing through the large sugar plantation of Gaston Mansteen, living seven or eight miles south of Thibodeaux, La., there was recently killed an alligator known to be somewhere over 120 years old. In 1773 Mr. Mansteen's father's great father, immigrating to this country from France, purchased this tract of land from its original Spanish owner, and in an attempt to clear the jungle of the ferocious and aggressive alligators, killed in the course of a few days thousands upon thousands in killing many of them, and among them the mother of the present young one, three of which he killed also, but the fourth got away, leaving five or six inches of his tail behind him, however. This one was afterward seen from time to time and always recognized by this missing portion of his anatomy. He grew to be a large and fat specimen of succeeding generations, and, however, thought it safest to keep him at a distance despite his friendly advances, but it has been a favorite task with the younger Mansteen and family to go out after each meal with table for Old Shorty, as he was called because of his deformity. This age of 120 years is not established with these animals, many being killed to attain the age of one though this is difficult of proving, one pair in such cases where the creature is marked in some such way as Old Shorty was.

WILLING TO TAKE A PENSION.

A Kentucky Darky Who Wanted an Office But Not Work.

The story of a recent application made to Senator Blackburn by an old negro from Kentucky perhaps the ingenuous to secure something from the government, whatever form the pilm may take.

The old man with the sweater was conducted from Woodford county, Kentucky, and was waiting to consult with his principal on "ver important matuh."

"Well, Mouse," began Senator Blackburn, as the gulmaing African was ushered into his presence, "what brings you to Washington?"

"Marse Joe," replied Mouse, impressively, "I've got portant business, suh. I wants an office."

"You want an office! Why Mouse, what can you do?"

"Yes, Marse Joe. What does everybody do that's got an office? Hess yer talk, Marse Joe, you don't un'erstand me. I don't wants no work."

Senator Blackburn with as much seriousness as he could command, assured Mouse that he was powerless to assist him to an "office," but that he might possibly obtain a place in some private concern. Old Mouse's face fell, but soon brightened again.

"Well, Marse Joe," said he, hopefully, "if yo hasn't git yer office fo' me, suh jes' recommend me fo' yer pension. I ain't at all sickleer, suh."

An Omission in the Ceremony That Cost Both Ways.

A minister, gifted with the power of seeing the humorous side of life and a good deal of fun himself, is often unjustly, perhaps, called to the grave of his parishioner, though it is often unexpected. One such he had deeply felt the loss of the generous and aggressive all-round man, and he felt the sympathy of thousands unconsulted in killing many of them, and among them the mother of the present young one, three of which he killed also, but the fourth got away, leaving five or six inches of his tail behind him, however. This one was afterward seen from time to time and always recognized by this missing portion of his anatomy. SOMETHING OF A LIAR.

A Young Colored Barber Who Is in the Mendacious Business.

In a Louisville barber shop is employed a little boy to keep the flies off the patrons of the place in summer and act as general utility man in the winter. Having nothing else to occupy his mind, he has developed a wonderful faculty for relating marvelous stories. He has far in time to outrival Joe Mulhattan and several others who have become noted as prevaricators. His talent in this direction is so marked, indeed, as to astonish the patrons of the shop, whom he never fails to regale with one of his choice selections.

The other afternoon a gentleman who was in a hurry to catch the train took a seat in one of the chairs. He had not got fairly settled in the big cushions when the youthful story-teller, with a most serious countenance, began a new yarn of the imagination.

"You are going away on the train, don't you, mister?" There was an assenting nod.

"I suppose you want be goin' down to George this time to pray. We are cold, you know. I used to live down in Georgy wuss my grandpa. He an' him raised pop-corn together. We had eighty acres in corn, and on five of them we raised pop-corn. When it got ripe we shocked it and put it in a big barn. It was so big the barn was dry.

"One night it waughf fire. The corn popped and flew all over the farm until it looked like it had snowed. The next morning when our old cow come out of her shed she saw the pop-corn all over everything, and, thinkin' it was snow, she lo'd down and froze to death.

AMBITIOUS TO HYPNOT

An Electrician's Experiences With a Professor of Hypnotism.

Robert Kramer is a young man employed by an electrical company. Recently he took a few lessons in hypnotism from a "professor" in a dime museum. One night he tried his hypnotic influence on one of the "professor's" subjects, who was in a neighboring house. According to his own story, he succeeded in putting the subject into the "trance world," but was unable to bring him back. He immediately sent for his teacher, but he, too, seemed powerless to restore the man to consciousness. Then Dr. Lozenge-good was called to the house. The doctor succeeded in the patient for a moment and then told the two men to throw a bucket of water over him. "The doctor left the house after giving the order. The "professor," acting on the physician's suggestion, succeeded in a remarkably short time in restoring the subject to consciousness. The teacher said that the man was "in a hypnotic lethargic catalepsic fit."

Dr. Lozenge said to a reporter recently that the case was a sham. Young Kremer evidently believed he had hypnotized his subject, but it was all a scheme of the "professor" to advertise himself.

Kremer's landlady ordered him to pack his trunk and leave her house. He went to Hoboken, where his relatives live.

CRICKETS FOR BAIT.

A Tenacious Man Who Raises Them for Fishing Purposes.

"Yes, cold weather is mighty hard on my cricket herd," said Afton K. Horton, of Greenfield, Tenn., cricket herd? Why, haven't you read about it? You see, I live in the middle of Tennessee, surrounded by the prettiest lakes that ever eye gazed upon. The waters are filled with trout and other game fish, and in the spring, somehow, they all the sportsmen flock here from all sections of the country. One of the most curious facts about Tennessee fish is that they will nothing but crickets. Bed worms, grubs and the like are all right, but they will bite at them in our waters, except suckers and small perch.

"The most serious obstacle, therefore, with the fishermen is to get crickets. I organized a stock company with a few hundred capital and started to work last spring. I had a large pasture fenced in with boards and filled it with crickets, and put up my bothouse and incubators, and then began gathering in my stock. My pasture consists of about twelve acres, and I calculated that I could well graze 5,000 crickets on the acre. They will readily do fishermen at 50 per hundred, so you see, what a rich harvest there is in such an industry. They flourished like a green bay tree all during the summer and fall, but since the cold weather has reached them they have been dying off at a remarkable rate, and if the freeze should continue much longer I doubt if I will be left with seed for next spring."

ANSWERED AN ADLET.

It Took All the Romance out of a Couple of Fools.

Fifty annual suns had bleached her raven tresses, jealousy's feet ran the chamois-like skin and otherwise blemished her youthful beauty, but the vigor of romance still lurked in her bosom. She invested her "all" in one of our dailies for a correspondent matrimonially inclined. The "bait" was answered by a Princeton gallant who thought she was hope beyond his fiftieth anniversary. Photographs taken in their palmier days were exchanged and last week the fair one came from her retreat to meet her beau, to find that he had taken sick and had hopefully on wings of love together to the end of their natural lives.

Both had so changed in the many years since the pictures were taken that they failed to recognize each other in the train. A misunderstanding followed. They viewed each other for a moment when the ice was broken. "You base deceiver, you horrid old fool!" the fair one hissed at the gallant

NATIONAL CONVENTION AT CHICAGO.

Many Lives Lost by Explosion, Storms on the Lakes, and Floods in Ohio and Pennsylvania—Stagger Sullivan Spent a Night in Jail.

Told In a Few Words.

—The annual convention of the National Editorial Association was opened Wednesday morning at Hotel Marie, Chicago. Not only delegates to the number of about 300 from the prominent newspaper centers of the United States congregated there, but numbers of plain, unaffected members of the trade. Since time party and enlivened the large rotunda of the hotel. After the appointment of the committees had been attended to President Byron J. Pike, of Hudson, Mich., read the ninth annual address. President Pike congratulated the association because of the large attendance, made many suggestions for the general welfare of the craft, and referred in touching words to one of their number who had died during the year.

—The storm of rain and wind which began at noon Monday and continued almost without cessation until Wednesday evening caused a flood unprecedented in the history of Northeastern Ohio and Northwestern Pennsylvania. Dispatches from points too high great damage has been done to crops, shipping, and the loss to other property will amount into the hundreds. In Pittsburg, Pa., which is located at the forks of two rivers and surrounded by hills, the damage will be more than thousand. Buffalo and Pittsburg together—and the city suffered from several disasters in the same time—an million dollars would cover more the streets, bridges, waterworks, manufactories, plants, homes, gardens, and grounds which fell under the flood within forty-eight hours.

—There is suffering and destitution among the lower classes in the Alleghany valley district, owing to the severe deluge that has prevailed there for the past four years. All the principle streets, springs, and wells are dry, and water must be hauled from the stream of the Allegheny a distance of twenty-five miles. The predominant details of the situation are how people cannot afford to pay that price, and water is selling at from five to ten cents per gallon. Hundreds of families in the Sixth Ward are obliged to go to the Allegheny River for their water, and have to carry it in buckets a distance of twenty-five miles. —Nine persons in Ingoldsby, outside of Chicago, who visited the World's Fair for a single day only, will find a very thing arranged for the conduct and comfort of their friends. Mail carriers coming to the city will hand passengers at the terminal station at the Fair for ten cents in addition to the regular railway ticket. Here hand baggage may be checked, and there attendant relief rooms, lunch counters, telegraph offices, and baths for writing. The Columbian Guards will direct the visitor to his quarters, which, where he may deposit his extra valise, he may use the great show, take a comfortable train for the depot at nightfall, and return home within twenty-four hours, all at a cost of fare, ticket of admission, lunch, and a trifle for a guide book or souvenir.

Those coming from a distance, however, and those who wish to thoroughly appreciate and enjoy the Exposition for a week or a month, should exercise considerable forethought. It is possible for such to formulate a pleasant and economical system of procedure, provided they know what to do and how to do it. Unless they arrive at night, at which case a stop at some hotel will be advisable—they should devote the first day to the securing of a settled abiding place. That care of their units, they have on a footing with the native-born citizens of Chicago, and are independent of the vicissitudes of time and manner of reaching the Fair, as of the vicissitudes of all the babyhood, who will serve to exert double power in the form of Sorted or unfortunate strange.

Chicago's Great Depots.

There are six great depots in Chicago. The Northwestern is the most centrally located in the North Division of the city. Trains arriving here bring passengers principally from North-ern Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and other points lying along the route of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. The depot faces east on Wells street, and a walk across this river and four blocks south, brings the visitor to the very center of the city. The Union Depot is the only one located in the West Division. Here several lines centre—the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, which runs through Illinois, Iowa and Missouri; the Pan Handle, bringing in mostly passengers from Indiana; the Milwaukee and St. Paul, crossing Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota; the Elton and St. Louis, cutting southward across the State to Missouri; and the Pittsburg and Fort Wayne, which takes in Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and the Eastern States.

GRAND CENTRAL DEPOT.

This depot fronts on the Canal street, at the corner of Adams. A walk of four squares east on the latter thoroughfare brings across a bridge to the business center. The Illinois Central Depot is on the lake front, and is adapted to leaving traffic from the State of Illinois, which it is owned, taking passengers of the Michigan Central Road from Northern Indiana, Michigan and Canada. At the Dearborn depot arrive the trains of the Grand Trunk, the Chicago, the Western, Indiana, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroads. It is located at Polk and Dearborn streets. The Grand Central depot is on the Harrison street and Fifth avenue, and is the Chicago terminus of the Northern Pacific and Baltimore and Ohio Railroads. The Michigan Southern depot faces on Van Buren, just west of Clark street, and the Chicago Rock Island and Pacific lines discharge their passengers here. These last-named four depots are all situated in the South Division, all face the business center, pretty stroll, where arrangements for food and toilet may be made, and in the North Division, just south of the main business, commercial, prevail. The West Division, however, comprising the wards of the outlying city, broad as it is long, affords a still better choice. It is filled with a majority of the homes and population, is less crowded, and its visitor enjoys a little objective point for a temporary residence, will probably be more speedily and satisfactorily suited than elsewhere. With the section in view as a prospective place of residence, he will find a hotel within are quite reasonable in their charges, and furnished comfortable accommodations. Madison Street as the central line, and proceeding east and west, the visitor will find a hotel within are quite reasonable in their charges, and furnished comfortable accommodations. Take a person gas or some almost any kind of accommodations, and the elegantly furnished suite of rooms adjoining apartment with two beds in it, for a pleasant, cheerful, comfortable room, the charge should not exceed $1 per day, or $5 a week, and with charge in the same house, about double that long best at the Fair gates all the time are somewhat visionary. There is far more, rush and discomfort. Many new hotels are built annually. Many of the lodgings and accommodations are overcrowded, but available visitors will find quite as reasonable rates and far more home-like accommodations away from the business and noise of the Fair. Distance, anywhere within the city limits, is a trifling consideration. However. The seven-mile ride to and from the Fair ground, if it is taken twice a day, is a fatigue, as they afford the visitor no time for the short or a delightful journey by land and water.

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

Members of the Lower House Elect the Orator of the Supreme Court.

The Chinese question occupied the entire attention of the Cabinet at its meeting Tuesday morning before the Cabinet meeting Chief Justice Fuller, who discussed with the decision of the Supreme Court, called at the White House and had a brief talk with President Cleveland. Subsequently the Chief Justice had an interview with Secretary Gresham. It is understood the conclusion reached by the Cabinet was that the law could not be enforced, for the reason that there is no appropriation for the proper purpose. The act only carries an appropriation of $100,000, Secretary Carlisle showed that not more than $50,000 of that amount could be used for the purpose of that it would cost to deport all the Chinese in the country, and that the law is not compelled with the law, more than $5,000,000.

The Cabinet officers were somewhat surprised by the decision, and the question of the constitutionality of the law settled. It is understood that the Cabinet will be in the absence of the money for the purpose of deporting the Chinese there seems to be nothing that can be done. If the Chinese should simply accept the situation and comply with the law it would simply matters, but the impression is that most of them will not do this, but will resist as long as possible.

DOWN A MINING SHAFT

TEN TIMBERMEN DASHED TO DEATH.

A Coupling Pin Breaks After the Cage Has Descended the Surface, and the Moving Mass Goes Down Thirty Thousand Feet.

A Fearful Plunge.

Ten timbermen were dashed to pieces in the first locket perpendicular shaft of the Calumet and Hecla at Calumet, Mich., Sunday morning. The men were coming up in the cage to dinner and the engineer lowered the cage against the timbers of the shaft, when the coupling pin broke and the cage and men dashed downward, over 3,000 feet, in the dark. The names of the killed are as follows:

Alex Jacobson, son of Captain Cameron in charge.

James Pickling, single, supporting widowed mother.

Andrew Hoss, aged or married.

John Hicks, single, aged 21.

Frank Hicks, single, aged 19.

John Gagnon, leaves widow and several children.

Joseph Page, leaves widow and several children, single, aged 21.

Thomas Trevaskis, married, and three children.

Robert Woods, leaves widow and three children.

Never in the history of copper mining has an accident so accidental occurred. Sunday work in the mine is only done in the shaft, timbering the walls of the shaft, and repairing the shaft. The men were coming to timber the mine, and worked down the shaft in a bucket to be hoisted 3,000 feet to the surface to get their dinner. The men commenced to being hoisted in usually good order, when the coupling pin gave way.

Cause of the Accident.

The cause of the accident was a coupling pin, which did not also the breakaway in charge of the hoisting engine, and the men were in the cage at the top of the shaft. Fred Tuffe, the engineer, was ordered to lower the men down the shaft. He could not stop the machinery. He could not stop the cage when it was in motion. The men were coming to the surface at the top of the shaft the coupling pin broke and the cage was suspended, the brake, letting the men down the shaft. The men were in a fearful state of destruction of the shaft, from four to five hundred feet, and the cage was suspended, dart upward then drop out of sight.

The intelligence of the disaster reached the mouth of the shaft. Most of the men employed in the mine were at dinner, and rushed to the mouth of the shaft, and the news of the disaster spread like wildfire. Men who were at work in other parts of the mine, hearing the news, hastened to the surface, hoping that the report had been exaggerated, but the sad reality was only too true and glad many of them were that it was not worse.

Men who were in the mine at the time of the accident, and who were in the cage, were in the terrible death their companions in the cage. Some of the men who were in the morning, but one of the men who was in the cage, and who escaped, accompanied by one of his comrades.

Dashed to Their Doom.

The mouth of the shaft was closed at 1 almost No. 4 shaft, a party went down away, and searching for the dead bodies or tumed to search for the cross-cut and the cross-cut, and the bodies of the men, clothes had gathered around them. The terrible fatality seemed to have struck the men in the cross-cut, and the men and Superintendent Dunnon are almost prostrated by the terrible fatality which has fallen on the men.

Everything known to Sebastian Erard, who he pedals invented called the foot pedal, which he lent to the Kaiser. The harmonious tone of the instrument contended (of course) carrying our theory to her that all artistic tones of the soul could be cured by music. The medical men of Paris tried to cure hysteria by this music. But in what twilight hour has many a sinner of God sobs with heartache with a hymn hummed or sung or played. Jerusalem of Tarsus was while burning at the stake. Over what hymn of joy or pain consolation has sobbed. Yes, in church-one hymn has rolled peace over a thousand of the worried, jaded, plowed and agonized.

While there are hymns and tunes ready for the jubilant, there is a rich treasure for the suffering—"Hymns" and "Exercises" and "Autumn Leaves" are "Come, ye discouraged," and whole portfolios and libraries of tears set to music. Of the hundred thousand musicians and all the new models of musical instruments for physical and mental disorders are discussed in medical conferences and spread abroad in medical books, and it is high time that some of the millions of souls that have been medicated by music, vocal and instrumental, let the world know what power there is in sweet sound, whether rolling from the organ pipes from cloistered choir or seen-thing from ivory key.

The Sweetest Nature.

But when in my text I see Saul declining from his throne and his sons killed and his kingdom in ruins, I see a man who is not the sweetest nature and actually harking a javelin at the harpist. Saul, in his rage, is a maniac myself of the fare that she would like to have the hymns of the sacred music that time that it was playing on the harp that day, for time to the music of the year we know that it was not a crazy murderer, but a man who was in the throes of the stricken suggestive of the melancholy. Saul, in his rage, makes the music of the sweetest nature, and he makes the harp of David, the sweetest harper of the world, a target for the javelin. Saul, in his rage, makes the music of the sweetest nature, and he makes the harp of David, the sweetest harper of the world, a target for the javelin. But in spite of Saul's rage, the music of the sweetest nature, and the harp of David, the sweetest harper of the world, the music of the sweetest nature, and the harp of David, the sweetest harper of the world, the music of the sweetest nature, and the harp of David, the sweetest harper of the world

Hastings from Hayes.

The following is a story from our first reader. "Once upon a time there was a Hayseite who owned a lean-leek horse named Billy. Now Billy was a staid old courser who loved to stand in the street and nod his head while his owner went inside to wet his whistle. But this Hayseite concluded he ought to get a horse with a Nasey Hanks gait, it would suit his gay boggy so much better. One day he saw an old Teuton busy at work in his field, and cried out, "say, my friend! You have a pretty tair horse there!" "Yaw, she is pooty fair!" "How old is he?" "She been nice ofer ten!" "Is he gentle?" "Yes she is gentle like an old sheep; my wife and gals don't cun't drive him nowhere when dey goes some place;" "How will you trade?" "I don't trade some!" "say now, my friend, I will give you an even trade." "Vell, I trades, but my wife and gals, dey kicks." The horse was soon put in Billy's place and the first move he made was to kick the dash board inside out, then he made a pass at our Hayseite's hat, and started off at a round. Hayse wins more money.

Dr. Gardner, of Charlevoix, and Dr. Lewis, of Norwood, have been in attendance on E. M. Covert the past week. He stepped on a nail a few weeks ago and for the past few days his life has been despaired of.

—For the World's Fair this week: Mrs. J. A. Hawkins and Miss Ella Miss Esther Buttars and Miss Blanche Bartholomew.

—A good attraction at Lewis Grand Opera House June 5th. "Side-Tracked" is a comedy that comes with the best of records.

—Rev D. Engle preached an able sermon Sunday afternoon at the Congregational church under the auspices of Baxter Post, G. A. R.

—Thomas Keating, of Petoskey, dropped dead of heart disease last Friday. Mr. Keating was formerly in the cigar business in this city.

—Mr. Van Vleet, of Plymouth, an expert bank accountant, is here examining the books of the defunct Bank of Charlevoix in the interest of the creditors.

—Mrs. Captain Finnemen and children arrived by the steamer City of Charlevoix this week and will soon be at home, on the corner of State and Clinton streets.

—The engineering class of the University of Michigan, were here one day last week, and gave Mr. Chapel, the druggist, who is a U. of M. alumnus, the college yell.

—Clinton B. Whitmoyer's oration at the cemetery Memorial Day is spoken of in the highest terms of praise. The address showed careful preparation and much thought.

—H. V. Kent, of Norwood, and Cameron Brothers, of Torch Lake, were in town yesterday staking out the transfer dock. Moonlight tug pile driver will begin the job next week.

—The City of Grand Rapids excursion to Traverse City last Sunday was well patronized, a large number of the boys took their steeds along, and said them to good advantage during their stay there.

—Dr. Will Lewis is home from medical college and will spend the summer in his father's office, returning again in the fall, when he will complete his course and come home with M. D. attached to his name.

—The Barnard Grange will give an entertainment at the town hall of Marion next Tuesday evening, June 6th, after which ice cream and cake will be served. All are invited to attend, especially those desiring an explanation of grange work. Admission free.

—Fred Wood is now in Ludington in a drug store.

—Mrs. Sandy Shear, daughter of John Whitney, died yesterday of consumption. Funeral Thursday from the M. E. church.

—Memorial day exercises drew quite a large crowd to town yesterday. The weather was all that could be desired and the survivors at the cemetery were unusually impressive and floral offerings profuse.

—Col. S. M. Moore and his grandson Silas, of Chicago, are here. Col. Moore comes to move his effects from his old cottage to his new home, the Smithson place. He will also give some attention to contemplated improvements on the resort grounds.

—Four gay and festive bicyclers, W. E. Hampson, Harrison Bedford, Fred Styers and Bruce Gollick started on their wheels at 5:15 Sunday morning for Traverse City, reaching there about 9 o'clock p. m., returning home by the steamer City of Grand Rapids in the evening.

—George Hughes is 76 years of age, but his experience of last week proves that he has considerable vitality left. He fell off Inslandy's dock into the lake and a heavy plank or board followed him, bruising his face seriously, not withstanding which he got out safely. But he has two very black eyes.

—Captain Wilkur announces that the City of Grand Rapids will leave on her first trip to the World's Fair on June 26. For this trip only he has decided to reduce the rate to $20 and $25, with all the privileges previously announced. This affords an excellent opportunity. Apply at once. The steamer is now in elegant shape and quarters are neat and comfortable.

—Connections with which to take water from the well—Hobensh's well—are ordered, and Superintendent Gaul says if your supply is not forthcoming some day this week you will know that the pumps are shut down to make the connections. Meanwhile a contract is being made with responsible parties for the sinking of another well, which the council propose to make a gusher if they have to puncture the Chinese Empire to do it.

—The Bank of Charlevoix failure is still the topic of all tongues. The examination of the bank by Assignee Kane shows a bad mess of affairs. No serious financial embarrassment has resulted, but some stringency occurs among those affected. The stationery page some time ago that exemplifies and sight of dower had been waived to secure creditors from loss is not true. Another incorrect statement is that the Northern Michigan Seed Company was included in the assignment. Mr. Kane states that the concern cannot be included. Their warehouse and office has been open the past week under Mr. Thacker's management. This week a reorganization was effected, with Mr. Thacker and Edmund Shapton as co-partners, and a fund in addition, with increased capital, is contemplated.

—The quality of true courage can be determined by no better test than that which presented itself to young Chalmpkin last week in the rescue of little Sam Lefevre. It was a brave and manly act, revealing a nature from which heroes are given to the world; an inate forgetfulness of self, an impulse of intuitive manliness which causes the pulse to bound quicker at the thought of it. The brave lad's disregard of his own peril was shown, as, with the unconscious love to his grasp, he arose to the surface with his cigar still in his teeth his face only above water, but holding the boy above him, intent only upon the object for which he made the perilous leap into the deep and swift current. No braver deed of its kind was ever done, and it merits popular recognition. It is also pleasant to know that the courage of the young man is equaled by his modesty under the influence of a spontaneous expression of admiration, which in many instances would inspire self-satisfaction. The editor of this paper ventures these observations as a personal tribute to manly courage. It is a great thing to save a human life, and that the young man may develop into the full stature of manhood which his chivalrous act seems to foreshadow is our ardent wish. No wonder the grateful mother embraced him, or that the father's voice trembles when he speaks of the rescuer of the apple of his eye. A gold medal never graced the breast of a braver life saver than Master Chalmpkin, but gold or diamonds cannot measure the gratitude that floods the hearts of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Lefevre. Meanwhile Sam, the little lad, has caused his mother vexations, thinking, in his juvenile way, but with "Young America" still blazing from his big brown eyes.

An Elopement and An Arrest.

On Monday a comely young couple glibly the name of Parker, secured quarters at a private boarding house of Mrs. A. F. Myers. Parker secured employment on the railroad park. Yesterday a warrant arrived from Grand Rapids with a deputy sheriff and arrested the pair.

Very little could be learned of the partnership, but the supposition is that "Parker" ran away with the man's wife, although he said it was his sister.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The tug Third Michigan has received her new wheel and came out Saturday.

The schooner Mineral State, which went ashore at South Manitou in a storm two or three weeks ago while on her way to Traverse City, is now found to be a total loss. The schooner struck a rocky bottom and the tug sent to dredge her out will not attempt it.

The steamer Puritan broke her wheel coming out of Chicago last trip and went into dry dock this week to receive a new one.

—Prof. Kaufhain, the piano tuner, is here and will remain a week. The professor is one of the most experienced and expert tuners in the country and piano owners should avail themselves of the opportunity offered.

—New York Sun, March 26, '93: "Side-Tracked," a sensational railroad comedy, was produced at H. R. Jacob's Third Avenue Theater last night. There were several new and ingenious mechanical effects and enough music to stock three or four ordinary melodramas. The story of the play was of absorbing interest to the East Side audience, which manifested its approval to the strong points of the play by tumultuous applause. The play dealt with the adventures of life on the rail. The principal character, that of a tramp, was assigned by Jule Walters, a very clever comedian. There was plenty of humor to relieve the considerable pathos, and altogether the play may be said to be a success. A number of specialties were introduced during the performance, including Hawson, a clever manipulator of the clubs. His set of swinging four clubs at a time when blindfolded was a hit.

—Our South Arm correspondent writes the following. "At 7 o'clock Monday morning, so the South Arm Lumber Company's mill started up. Ole Engle, one of the shingle men, met with an accident which may prove fatal. While he was attempting to tighten the oil cup, or box, near the bolt saw, the wristband of his jacket was caught by the set screw of the shaft upon which the saw revolved. Instantly his head and shoulders were forced through a small opening about twelve inches square, the clothing, excepting pants, were torn from his person, and had not James Fitzgibbons, one of the workmen, come to his assistance the unfortunate man would have been killed, as it was his right side is completely punctured by the wound gashes, two ribs broken, upper lip almost torn off and left ear almost severed from its head and skull fractured. Dr. Foster dressed his wounds and has hopes for his recovery, although his condition is precarious. He has a wife and children."

"You are quite right, sir. But may I ask what Captain Fox is to report back?"

"It may be today, or it may be to-morrow. Mr. Desmond is to inform me, in the committee, Mr. Dayton, I can say to you, sir, in confidential confidence, that I am not at all pleased with the appearance of things."

"Why, what is the matter, sir?"

"In regard to the Wanderer and on board the Sea Hawk, or ship and on shore. Silver my lubber, Val—big gentlemen, sir, don't like the appearance of things, so let us get on shore, where we can talk without fear of overhearing."

Valentine was more than willing to agree to this. They were soon at Mr. Bodney Bones, much to that gentleman's delight—and they hoisted on talking in a room apart, greatly to that gentleman's surprise.

"Well, Valentine, continued Mr. Bodney, hold his pipe, that the Wanderer is the shadow of a shadow. Fox, was a very good sort of a chap, what a hanging ought to be."

"Fox and you, I have been to see for over thirty years, Val, and may I be swung in the bowline, if I have seen anything like it," said the excited Bonsmart.

"I do not understand you, Uncle Bodney."

"You'll be plain, Val. Yonder ship—we owned Blackbeard—Blackbeard, the ancestor of good Queen Anne, whose only issue was Pretender—Val, we loosed so much like a pirate when I presented her, that I thought I was, and I am a sinner, damned Hodges, I feel not surprised to see the Hawk and prepaying for a shark."

"What particularly attracted your attention?"

"Ten mountains, I mean, of the cross and officers, and their only of the cross and officers, and their only of the cross and officers, and their only

USE BREEDS SECURITY.

People Who Go to Sleep in Danger-ous Places.

"Talk about people going to sleep in church," said Albert W. Ross, "why shouldn't they? I don't know any safer place on earth to sleep in than a church, and it seems all the more secure to me when I see the dangerous places chosen by some people to do their dozing in. At Indianapolis the other day I saw a tinsmith asleep on the roof of a house at the very eaves, and when two policemen stole up and carefully awakened him, he got mad because they had disturbed his rest. He felt secure up there because he was used to it. I have seen a man sitting asleep on a painter's scaffold, swinging near the top of one of Chicago's skyscraping houses, and when I spoke to him about it later he said it was nothing unusual that he often took a post-prandial nap in that way. There must be some skill or seventh sense in man that protects him during sleep, that enables him to wake up at the desired hour, etc. I feel more and more convinced of this when I see, as I do every day, teamsters sitting asleep on their wagons, nodding and snoring, but seldom, if ever, falling off. Especially on warm days can you see dozens of teamsters asleep on their moving wagons, and I believe it is only those who are under the influence of liquor that fall off."

CHANGED BY ELECTION.

The Remarkable Freak of a Horse Formerly Very Staid.

Captain Samuel Cruson, of Sullivan, Maine, once had a dark-colored horse renowned for his heavy virtues and steady habits. It so happened that at one "March meeting" the Democrats carried the town for the first time in twenty years. Up to the time of that election Captain Sam's horse had never been known to shy, balk, run away, or do any act unworthy of a model horse. Three days after the election some business in a remote quarter of the town required the attention of one of the selectmen.

He invited his wife to accompany him, and hired Captain Sam's horse to make the trip. They reached their destination in safety, the business was satisfactorily adjusted, and they started homeward. Captain Sam was a stanch Republican, and it is supposed that the horse was a Republican, too. At any rate, without seeming cause, the horse ran away at a breakneck pace with the official and his wife. Our Democratic friend held on so hard that he broke one of the reins, and, after a time, with the remaining rein, sheered the horse out against the fence and stopped him. Nobody was hurt, and it was the horse's first, last, and only exhibition of bad behavior.

HOW TED WON HIS CANDY.

A Boy's Interpretation of the Text He Had Heard.

Ted's grandmother was a martyr to dyspepsia and patent medicine. She was a great church member and took Ted to service every Sunday.

One evening the minister called and asked to see Ted.

"You know who this is, don't you, Teddy?" grandma said sweetly.

"Oh, yes. It's the man who sells all the tone in church," Ted said.

"And do you remember any of the things I say?" the minister asked.

Ted thought a moment. Then drew himself up and said in a deep voice:

"Get thee behind me, Satan!"

"And what does that mean?" the minister asked.

Again Ted was silent for a moment, then said:

"When grandma gets up full of pepsy, an scolds me for makin' or noise when I ain't makin' any, an scolds Sal for burnin' tinar bread when she don't burn it, an scolds mamma and papa, and says she wishes she was dead, she oughter say, 'Get thee behind me, Satan!'"

Everybody laughed except grandma, and pays told Ted he could go and buy some candy.

A Danger in Not Speaking Well.

A good woman of Central Maine, whose husband had some business in the upper amherst towns, heard him talking to his friends a good deal after his return about the "Widder Pitlock." She reflected on the matter in private, as is usual in such cases, and the more she thought the more "Widder Pitlock" disturbed her happiness. At last she confronted her husband with an emphatic demand to know "who that Widder Pitlock is." Her husband's laugh could have been heard over four townships and the neighbors thought there was an earthquake—the ground shook so he trembled. He took the Maine Register and showed her the name of the village in Kent plantation, "Wyngoh lock," thick as pronounced, sounds almost exactly as the had understood it. The domestic skies were very calm after that.

FIGHT WITH A BEAR.

The Old Hunter Was Armed Only With a Hunting Knife.

Obadiah Barber, who lives near the Okefenokee swamps, tells an interesting story about a bear he killed.

"The bears are numerous since the canal was begun.

"I went into the swamp, accompanied by a young man, to hunt the bears. Our guns were single-barreled. Presently a noise was heard. We followed and soon came upon a bear as she had reached her cubs. We were within about ten yards of her and fired our guns. The bear was shot in her lower jaw. She made for us. The young man ran and left me to fight it out.

"I had a hatchet knife, and as she reached me plunged it into her breast. The knife fell out of my hand and the bear was close upon me. I felt her hot breath upon my face and gave myself up to die a horrible death.

"Fate interfered and I was pleased to hear the cubs making a noise. The bear turned around and looked at her cubs. Being satisfied that they were not in danger she came at me again.

"I had my knife again, and used it in different parts of her body. She was getting a hold on me when I plunged my knife into her heart to the hilt. The bear fell to the ground and after a few struggles died. The cubs were dispatched with a pine limb."

BRITISH FIRE LADDIES.

The Appliances They Have and the Losses of Fires.

The great city of London had within its compass there in 1891, 4,761,757 persons and there 2,680,000 in improved buildings contiguous to it and in close proximity to it. Of brick and stone buildings in 1891, and the city has no wooden buildings, the number of fire alarms given in 1890 was 4,164, of which 2,000 were false alarms, 240 skimmer alarms and 2,924 actual fires, some of these fires were confined to the room where they originated and not extended beyond such room, only six fires extended to adjoining property and only three extended beyond adjoining property. The London fire department consists of forty-seven land steam fire engines, ninety-five land manual fire engines, nine steam fire engines on barges eight steam tugs 195 hose carts, thirty-six miles of hose, with ladders, ropes, fire escapes and an abundance of alarms, telephones, telegrams, etc., and yet the service of its 750 firemen very efficient. Nineteen million gallons of water were used during the year at fires, one-third of which was taken from the river, canal and docks. The causes of fires are curious. Fifty-one came from airing clothes, 70 from candles, thirty-nine from children playing with fire and sixty-seven from their playing with matches, sixty-one were caused by swinging gas brackets, sixty-three from escape of gas, thirty-seven from carelessness in blinds coming in contact with lights; 101 originated from hot ashes, 236 from spirit lamps (236 of them being from spirting such lamps) 100 came from sparks of fire and thirty-eight from improper wet stoves.

WALKING IN CIRCLES.

Why Is It That Men Are Made Invariable to This?

The fact that people lost on a desert or in a forest invariably walk in a circle is due to a slight inequality in the length of the legs. Careful measurements of a score of skeletons have shown that only ten per cent had the lower limbs equal in length, and in twenty-five per cent had the right limb longer than the left, while in fifty-five per cent the left leg was the longer. The result of one limb being longer than the other will naturally be that a person will unconsciously take a longer step with the longer limb, and consequently will round to the right or to the left, according as the left or right leg is longer, unless the tendency to deviation is corrected by the eye.

The left leg being more frequently the longer, as evidenced by measurement of the skeleton, the inclination should same more frequently to the right than to the left, and this conclusion is quite in one of observations made on a number of persons when walking blindfolded. Further, on the measurement of the arms it is found that in seventy-two per cent the right arm is longer than the left, while in twenty-four per cent the left arm is the longer; they had the same length in the majority of persons are slightly longer and of stronger. The inequality in length of the limbs is not confined to any particular sex or race, but seems to be universal in all esperts.

OYSTERS ON TREES.

Lyman Belding, the naturalist, has returned from a long hunting trip in the vicinity of Murray's camp, Dalhousie, Nepahing, about an article which was published recently concerning the oysters of Dalhousie bay, which live in rock, he said: "That's nothing. I've seen oysters growing on trees. That is not an uncommon sight in Lower California around La Paz bay. A dwarf tree called the Mangle tree grows at the water's edge. The water is always a foot up on the trunk and at high tide the tree is covered. Oysters grow on these trees, and when the tide is out you can see scores of them on the branches."

The Health Food People.

It is hard to follow all the advice which the health food people are in the habit of giving. "Eat the sure and well milk and water before drinking them" is the conclusion of one wing. "Where milk and water are boiled there most valuable nutritive properties are destroyed," retorts the other wing. "Skim milk is the butting part be-fore eating," said the latter last convert recently, "for there may be more health in a piece of butter than there are inhabitants in Europe." "Don't eat butter that has been cooked, for it is a deadly poison in the system," curiously exclaims a fourth food journal.

Goats Are Easily Tamed.

Peter Lamlin has been in the habit of throwing out feed near his house for a flock of quail. When a late storm commenced he put the feed under a box so quail in the house. The quail took shelter under the box, when Mr Lamlin took them into his house, where they enjoyed the warmth to the full. One remained in the house for several days, refusing to go out and join the others till the storm was over. These quail are the special pets of Mr. Lamlin, and woe be unto the person that molests them. He petts them so they will eiten the thistles from his farm.

Travel Bee in a Dream.

Through a dream, or sort of second sight, John Russel, a Brooklyn mayoral aspirant, is said to have been saved and brought to her home in Greenfield Hamlet, Surry, at the Putnam street, Brooklyn, The girl disappeared from her home a month ago, after quarreling with her mother. No trace of her could be found till Russel in a dream, saw her in Newark. Going to the spot he found her in New York, found her and restored her to her home. He claims to have accomplished many similar feats of second sight.

Sue Grows.

"In my dealings with reporters I have had only one experience with the newspaper death watch," said Chauncey M. Depew. "A couple of years ago I was laid up for a week. I was not very sick, but in some way it got rumored about that I was dying. At 11:30 o'clock at night the telephone in my house rang. I was up and answered the call. 'Is this Mr. Depew's house?' was asked. 'Yes,' I replied. 'Is he dead? No? 'Is he going to die to-night? I don't think so.' 'Thanks, good night.' Good night."

CANNING IN FRANCE.

Lead Poisoning Said to Be an Impossibility.

"You should have a law in America the same as we have in France," said T. E. Kirkland of Boulogne, France. "By our laws such a thing as lead poisoning in canned goods is an impossibility. Here it is a very great probability.

"In canning fruits and vegetables in this country you persue a very different plan from the French. Our cans have lost one piece of soldering. That is on the outside and down the front, where the can is joined. When the can is filled a light elastic band is placed inside. Then the top is rolled to the can by machinery. It is then placed in the steam bath and allowed to cook for twenty minutes or half an hour, and sometimes as much as forty minutes, according to the goods. The air escapes through the elastic bands and pores of the can. In America the soldering of the can is all on the inside. When it is filled the top is soldered on and then it is placed in the steam bath. Instead of being allowed to remain as with us, your cans are nearer to the bath over five minutes. Then the top is punctured with an awl and the air rushes out. After the air has escaped the hole in the top is covered with a drop of hot solder, which must naturally come in contact with the goods. Fruits that are canned with the pits, such as prunes and cherries, you can buy very cheap at this time of the year, as they are very apt to ferment. But they are not very good as a rule."

SKY-ROCKET PICTURES.

Novel Method of Photographing an Early Morning Train.

An exceedingly interesting English invention consists of a camera combined with a parachute, especially designed for obtaining photographs of fortifications and of the ranges of the enemy, although pictures may also be made for general surveying purposes. The parachute is snugly folded in a tube made in the form of a rocket, which is fired to the required height and burst open by means of a time fuse. The explosion sets the parachute back, which is protected from injury by means of a casing of asbestos. The parachute has a number of thin suspension lines, and these formed supward and kept in that position by means of a strong spiral spring.

From the parachute a camera is suspended, and a string held by the operator is attached by a universal joint to the bottom of the device, for the purpose of pulling the parachute back. The camera is fitted with an instantaneous shutter operated by clockwork, so as to give several exposures at intervals. At the back of the box is an arrangement by which the plates can be manipulated the same as clockwork. A swinging motion can be given the camera by the operator, and this will enable him to obtain successive pictures over a wide area.

The whole arrangement is exceedingly ingenious, and it is can be employed practically it would be a great step in the science of modern warfare.

CREMATING GARBAGE.

How the Work Is Done in New England Towns.

The consumption of garbage by cremation has been begun in quite a number of places in New England. In one which is an object lesson to our cities it is the double-fire system now in use in Lowell and in other parts of the country. This crematory is a brick structure, forty feet long, ten feet wide and twenty-five feet high, with a stack seventy-five feet in height. The top of the furnace is reached by a platform, and the garbage is brought in carts and dumped down the slopes into the fire holes in the top of the furnace. After the furnace has been charged two fires are lighted. The flames pass from the first fire to the garbage piled on the grates, and the gases and smoke attending the combustion then pass to the second fire, where they are consumed. The products of the burning of the garbage are so small that one of these fires. We have not room for detailing how this system is managed, but the results are such that it work successfully where it has been tried, and its adoption in many of our large cities is, apparently, only a question of time.

The French Nurse.

Parents who are in the habit of putting their young children out to nurse will do well to ponder over the following case recently tried in a police court at Paris. From the testimony it appears that a nurse woman was in the habit of taking her baby in her charge as artificial, healthy complexions are generally obtained by painting the infantile face with cosmetics. The child progressed so nicely that its weight increased in an astonishing manner, owing, it was said, to some short white mixture taken in the baby's clothes. Finally, the cruel fraud was detected, and the woman received two years' imprisonment.

Hint for Your Opera.

To reduce the polish on opals blow and scratch the surface, rub with a piece of tin or putty powder on a piece of chamois skin, wet, then with refined chalk, also on chamois skin, wet, then wash the opal with a soft brush and water. With a little care this may be done without taking it from its setting.

Blue and Green.

Blue is a great respecter of colors. To prove this take pieces of glass or boards and paint them red, yellow, green and black. Expose them all night and you will find that the yellow will be covered with moisture, that the green will be damp, but that the black will be left perfectly dry.

CAUSE OF HIS BAD TEMPER.

The Englishman Used He Perpetually Vipping All Kinds of Servants.

A rich Englishman who has been spending almost unlimited leisure in traveling on two hemispheres, says that he notices a wholesale tendency to malcontent and sullenness in the People travel so much more than they used to do and are served by so many more employes that some sort of a regulation is necessary. On the continent, he says, tipping is the rule, but in Italy though the landlords make a separate charge for their service, the tip is regulated and all but Americans know it. The local tariff being one sou to the franc—one cent in twenty. Nobody grumbles at this.

The Englishman on his own island, pays six pence for everything to everybody, and is insulted if he doesn't. As he has to fee waiters, porters, clerks, chambermaids, guides, verger, policemen, dudes, barkeepers and canal citizens, it is no wonder that he has contracted a continental grumble and can't stop grumbling all the time he is out of his own island.

But in this country it has been getting worse than anything else in Europe. Half a dollar is no unusual tip to give to a swell who serves you with a sloppy dinner in a place where you are waiting for a day board, where the waiters receive fair wages besides their food and lodging; "but," says the Englishman, "things are general currency for the time being."

"In one Southern hotel a negro waiter came to me at my very first meal and said: 'I only get $20 a month, boss. People generally allows a dollar a week.' I gave him nothing. At another hotel down South the waiters charge tables at every meal, so as to break up this working business."

A STRANGE CASE.

Constituting a Girl Who Sounds Bringer Her Out of a Long Sleep.

For the past five months a girl of 13, of a good family, has been lying in a state of complete lethargy in a private hospital at Vesinet, Belgium. The sleeping maiden has recently been removed from Brussels to the Vesinet, when her doctor, who had charge of her, in a peculiar manner. She usually lay asleep with her mouth wide open and her throat exposed to view. The physician noticed that one of the tonsils was enlarged, so he resolved to cauterize it with a red hot iron, an operation which would be beneficial to the patient, even if it did not have the effect of terminating her catalepsy.

After the iron had done its work, the girl, who had been previously insensible to the pricking of pins, manifested unmistakable signs of pain and uttered a feeble cry. From that moment she began to return gradually to consciousness, and at last awoke, exactly as one who was taking care of her, who was sitting by her bedside, told about her extraordinary long slumber. It is now quite as far in a normal state of health, full of spirits, and eager to make up for her long silence.

A Tempting "Ad."

A Stockholm paper publishes the following advertisement: "Wanted—by a young lady, aged nineteen, of pleasing appearance, good figure, agreeable manners, general information and varied accomplishments, who has studied everything from the creation to crochet, a situation in the family of a gentleman. She will take the head of his table, manage his household, scold his servants, mend his linen, check his tradesmen's bills, accompany him to the theatre, cut the leaves of his new book, sew on his buttons, warm his slippers, and generally make his life happy. Apply in the first place to Miss —, Hickory Grove, Ga., and afterwards to papa, on the premises."

He Brought His Ad.

The soldiers thoughts aroused by the arrival in a Maine church a few Sundays ago were quickly dispelled just after the benediction, when a crazy man, who has since been taken to the Augusta hospital, met the good pastor at the foot of the pulpit stairs and produced a good-sized turnip from his coat pocket passed it to him, saying: "Silver and gold I have none, but such as I have will I give unto thee." The pastor accepted the donation with the suitableness and never once intimated that there was anything funny about the affair, but other folks had to laugh just the same.

Boston Children Up to Date.

The Boston young lady is crazy at 17 years of age to use her adjectives with skill, expressiveness and originality. A mike of that age was at the breakfast table the other morning. There was bacon. She had eaten a piece and wanted some more. "Pape," she said, "will you please give me a little more that is a little less lady-ish?" Another young lady scarcely more than this one had a beautiful toothsome potted cut by her in the morning. "Ma," she said, "this is rather brilliant, but don't you think it looks a little morbid?"

With the Authoress' Thanks.

While an Andover student was admiring the Phelps homestead not long ago a lady who was walking near him paused and pleasantly referred to the house. He replied with enthusiasm and explained that with his mother at home he had read all of Miss Phelps's writings, and was anxious to get a photograph, another piece of evidence. The lady smiled and made a little bow. "I am much obliged to your mother," she said earnestly. "Will you tell her so from Elizabeth Phelps Ward?"

Differences in Americans.

A member of the diplomatic corps apparently holds an opinion of Americans which will hardly be indorsed by the most insignificant of this great nation. When asked by a newly arrived foreigner, anxious to gauge the social status of some one to whom he had been introduced, if there was any difference in Americans, the diplomat replied: "Oh, yes—some are rich and some are not."

FABULOUS GOLD FIND.

ORE SAID TO BE WORTH $175,000 PER TON.

New Mining Region in the Northwest Territories Said to Be Rivaling Pikes Peak in Richness—Two Expert Mechanics Discovered.

Told In a Few Words.

—The Alaskan boundary arbitration commission has adjourned from the Grand Beach hotel to Boston Monday in the Dominion Week's meeting circuit. Almost a solid half of gold and silver at a depth of 30 feet, a wonderful pillow of the aspect of pure Alaskan gold, which is about in value at $18 an oz. Ben Lomond is located in the Yukon district. The discovery of the two mechanics who found the gold and silver in the Klondyke region, and of a big vein of the same gold, is a thing sure to be a matter of great interest to people throughout the world. The discovery of the mine has placed a strong sensed quest in process the country and people of the Klondyke region, and the

"The Road Question.

To the Editor.

The time is near at hand when the pathmaster will be abroad on the highways, and, with your permission, I will again occupy a space in your columns.

There are P. M.'s and there are P. M.'s, and all you have to do is to place an inflection in the tone of your voice, and you get my meaning. Perhaps I would make it more plain by quoting what Commodore Vanderbilt once said of one of his sons-in-law—that "he was more different kinds of a d—d fool than any other d—d fool he ever knew." Now this is quite applicable to pathmasters, and when you see a man dumping in the softest kind of soft soil, or a quality of earth which, when once wet, will make mud both soft and deep, where there already exists a moderately hard road bed, you don't have to draw on your imagination much without being able to exclaim about this pathmaster as did the old Commodore about his son-in-law. I will here assert, that, owing to the nature of our soil, more work and better work can be done by ditching and draining the sides of the roads now built than by any other method.

For instance: At the bottom of a hill there may be a little mud puddle, and no chance to put in a sluice way to carry off the water which stands on either side of the road, but by ditching three three or four feet deep for a few rods, the water would find an easy outlet. In short, I say, ditch and drain the roads already made, and do not pile a lot of soft earth on the roads, for by so doing you make them worse than they already are, but use gravel freely. Gravel makes the best roads, and we have plenty of it. I claim that it is better to make one mile of good first-class road than 14 miles of soft mud roads.

An example of magnanimity was made at our last election which is worthy the emulation of our neighbors. I refer to G. V. Nash, the live merchant and mill man of our town (Norwood.) He proposed to raise a sum of money to improve the roads between here and Charlevoix, and, as a result, $250 was appropriated. When we came out of the hall I said, "Nash, do you know what Comodore Vanderbilt said about his son-in-law?" "Yes," was the reply. "Well, G. V., you beat that man. What do you want to spend your money (and he pays one-tenth of the tax of the town) for in improving roads between Norwood and Charlevoix? Don't you know that the better the roads are the more people will drive to do their trading, and that it will work against you?" "Van," he replied, "you, as a business man, know or ought to know, that I have got to sell goods cheaper in Norwood, with only one store, than they do in Charlevoix with a dozen stores. No, sir, I am not afraid to have them drive there, in order that they may find it out: and I want the roads in good condition for my customers to do it."

Now, citizens of Charlevoix, here is a chance for you to do something. Club together and see that the roads are made good from your main street to the town line and we will spend $200 to meet you; and if this is kept up for a few years we will soon have a boulevard eleven miles long, lined with trees on either side and a good solid road bed. We are the people, and don't you forget it.

P. M.—Don't forget to ditch and drain, and do not fill the roads with soft mud, but use plenty of gravel. Yours truly,

GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

Hastings from Hayes.

George W. Ford is preparing to build a new residence.

Fred Worth has planted twenty acres of corn.

A Mr. Kalbfleisch has purchased forty acres of William Wallace on section 11 and will proceed to improve it.

E. M. Sly shipped a carload of potatoes to Hoboken, N. J., last week.

Oscar Tilleison will build a barn, and also enlarge his residence, this summer.

Harry Sayers, an engineer on the Chicago & Western Michigan Railroad, is paying his parents a visit.

One of our Hayesites says he has a deficit of several thousand dollars and thinks of starting a bank.

John Leisch has taken his threshing engine for a motor to a shingle mill at Carpenter.

W. H. Brown buried an infant child last Thursday.

"Doctor, what do you think is the matter with my little boy?" exclaimed a Hayesite. "Why, its only a corrosified exegesis amijamodically emanating from the germ of he animal refrigerator, producing a prolific source of irritability in the pericordial epidermis of the mental profundity." "Well that's what I told my Betsy but she 'lowed it was only measles."

Norwood Notes.

George Ferguson, of Chicago, who has been here resorting for the past ten days, returned to Chicago Friday.

Mr. Mills, of Charlevoix, with a gang of men, are here building Mr. Van Pelt's new barn.

There was a social at the town hall last week for Mr. Holliday; receipts, 15 dollars.

Mrs. George H. Van Pelt and daughter Nannie, who have been absent in Florida since last fall, arrived home on Friday. Mr. Van Pelt, who was called to Chicago on account of the sad death of his son, returned with them. There is no truth in a sensational report in a Grand Rapids daily paper that a girl living at Traverse City, a Miss Germaine, was in any way mixed up or had any share in causing this tragic death. It is a sad affair at best, and Mr. Van Pelt and family have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in their great affliction.

Mrs. Bird, of Pentine, was in town over Sunday at her father's, John Bunyan.

A Lincoln Kirk, elocutionist, gave an entertainment here on Monday evening under the auspices of the Epworth League. Mrs. Holliday, of Traverse City, who is visiting at the parsonage rendered the musical part of the entertainment. Those who attended report a very creditable performance in all parts.

What Is Your Answer?

To the Editor.

Has the question, "Fathers what are you doing for your boys," appealed to a single reader of THE SENTINEL? I have faith to believe that with the large circulation of this paper, and its many read it, that it has, and I trust with beneficial effects, for it is plain, hard facts that unless we all put our shoulders to the wheel and try to stop the unlawful selling of liquor to minors that there is small hope of our future community being better than the present, and a dead sure thing that it will be worse; and while discussing this subject do not lose sight of the fact that it is not the "old sot" who is doing the mischief, but ye men of temperate habits—ye men who pride yourselves that "I can take only one drink and no more." Well, now ye men of Northern Michigan, ye can't do it. You may think that you can and you may do it for a season, but there will come a time when you can't, and if your boy don't see you go into a saloon some of your friend's boys will, and then they will follow your illustrious example and go in too; and remember the saloonkeeper is no respecter of laws or persons, young or old, rich or poor. It's your ten cents he is after, for which he gives you an actual cost of about two and one half cents worth; and in actual damage—well, its beyond computation.

It means loss of manhood, loss of respect of your fellow beings, a muddled brain, a disorganized and unhappy family, and all else that pertains to ruin. Your friend,

UNCLE PETER.

A Confession, and a Demonstrance

The SENTINEL confesses that Charlevoix is not given to demonstrative enthusiasm in its own interests.

Its other words, the town, by reason of its early environments and training, is given over to ultra-conservatism in the matter of its own progress. At times, with an acute spasm, it crawls out of its shell and makes a little noise; but it requires several volts of electrical energy to accomplish even that.

That it should be thus is a cause for astonishment, when we consider the elements of progress which are in our possession, lying dormant or partially inactive.

Nowhere in Northern Michigan is there a more diversified or inviting field for manufacturing investments than at Charlevoix. We lack in nothing. Every advantage exists here for industrial progress.

But the fact exists that our people do not rise to the emergency in this, the critical period of our history. We await the coming of the golden winged angel of prosperity, but we never beckon.

The SENTINEL has often spoken of this lack of interest in our own future, but feel a justification in repeating the warning that we must awaken from the stupor that comes to us from the days of Indian payments, and cast adrift on for deeper water; elevate our eyes above the ephemeral benefits of midsummer yachting parties and agate hunters, and propagate the doctrine of twelve calendar months.

We do not seek enterprise in some things, but we are behind in the essential quality of industrial development.

Canvass this in your own minds and say if it is not true.

What shall we do about it?

A Owl.

I wish to inform my friends, and enemies as well, that certain reports recently circulated regarding the cause of my resulting my house are not true. Certain parties who have had so much to say regarding the matter—doubtless take time to think up their own past and present and keep their own door yard clean; when they do this they will have less time to talk about other people.

—Inasmuch as the DEMOCRAT threatens to blackmail us, we correct our statement of last week that the Sidgwick arrived in Traverse at 3:30 p. m. last week Sunday. Eleven thirty a. m. was the time of their arrival.

—A West Bay City dispatch to the Detroit Journal says a man named William Saunders was murdered and left on the railroad track near Gaylord last week. The dispatch says he was on his way to Charlevoix where he had relatives.

—The railroad station grounds are rapidly assuming an ornamental appearance. The landscape gardener will soon leave to nature the work of completing the most beautiful depot grounds on the entire line of the C. & W. M. system.

—Will Hampton, in defense of his degenerate example, in this bicycle business, tells us that editor Bonteou, of the Petoskey Record, is buying a wheel. Capt. Bonteou, will you rise up and answer to this charge? We cannot believe that a gentleman of your well known dignity and stability of character will contribute to this movement to drag the editorial profession into disrepute. Tell us it is not true, Captain.

—Please read our "ad". Charlevoix Hardware Co.

—Farmers who have wood to ship will be supplied free sacks at Emery's dock.

—Supt. Girard, always alert, is beautifying the power house by replanting and gilding the pumps.

—Egbert Carpenter, the distinguished bicycle victim, is still confined to the house with his sprained ankle. The way of the transgressor is hard, old boy.

—Married, at the home of the bride, in this village, on the 1st inst., by Rev. H. Engle, Mr. Alexander W. McMaster, of Canada, to Miss Hessie Harris, of Charlevoix. Mr. and Mrs. McMaster left town the day of their marriage for Canada.

—Information from all sources indicate that the number of reporters here this season will be greatly increased over that of last year. Mr. Moore says the Chicago contingent will be much larger, and fully 200 St. Louis people are booked.

—That is a good building Mrs. Ayers is erecting on Bridge street. It will be 42 feet front and three stories high, and of brick veneer. The third story will be used as a hall, the second for offices, while the ground floor will be divided into two stores.

—The water works are making it lively for the Meech & Sons greenhouses. Cause why? Garden hose make nice door-yards, and nice door yards make a lively market for nice flowering plants. Dar says they are kept busy delivering potted plants about town.

—C. Barry is now settled with his cigar factory over Miller's shoe store. The rooms are large and convenient, and the force of workmen is being increased to meet the increasing demand for these ever popular goods. The new brand, the "O. M. A.," is winning golden opinions.

—By Gov. Rich's approval the so-called "pig bill" is now a law. By its terms any drunken person who would otherwise be sent to jail or the house of correction may agree to take the gold cure treatment instead. If he is too poor to pay for it the county may expend $20 on his cause.

We wish this habit of bereaved friends publishing "words of thanks" could be discontinued. It is the most useless and senseless of things, and we claim print on more of them in this Christian age, the ministrations of sympathizing friends require no thanks, they are only evidences of civilization. Human sympathy cannot be suppressed, and it is only a superfluous courtesy to publicly acknowledge yourself the recipient of it.

—Little Miss Ivy Wood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Wood, before their removal here from Traverse City several weeks ago, fell and injured one of her eyes. It was treated by Traverse City doctors, but continued to give her much trouble, until last week, she was taken to Dr. Swan, at Petoskey, who, after administering ether, removed from the inside corner of her eye a silver measuring pin inch and a quarter in length. Her eyesight will be impaired.

—The Crusader party, which has been holding revival meetings at the Baptist church for some time, are undoubtedly sincere people, and we hope they are accomplishing good results. But we don't believe their band music is acceptable at the Throne of Grace. We believe it would stampede the angelic choir if its discordant, tinny music should join in that locality. If music is divine discord is sacrilege. Pull the slides of your horns, dear brethren, and tune up. Shades of King David!

—A new complexion has been given the Bank of Jackson's complication by a gunsmiter suit begun last week by Capt. O. E. Wilber against the concern, on his own behalf, to recover 3 pistols. His attorneys are Pratt & Avery, of Traverse City, and another prominent attorney. They say the assignment can be set aside. No further developments have appeared more than to confirm previous reports, that the bank had no financial bottom. The assignee found less than $200 in cash in the concern, although deposits had been made almost up to the hour of insolvency. Several post depositors are lying awake nights trying to figure out where the money went so suddenly. Mr. Van Ulzet, the expert, is still on the books.

Death of Mrs Washburne.

Mrs. Abigail T. Washburne died at the residence of her son, Al. T. Washburne, in this village, last Saturday morning, of paralysis, aged 56 years and 5 months.

Her funeral was from the residence on Sunday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Haynes conducting the services. The large attendance testifies to the general esteem in which she was held. The floral offerings were profuse and beautiful.

Mrs. Washburn has made her home with her son, A. T., for the past ten years, the recipient of his tenderest affection and most dutiful care. Her death was peaceful and triumphant, the fitting close of a life of consistent Christian devotion. She was a zealous and faithful member of the Baptist church, from the circle of which she will be sadly missed.

The deceased leaves three sons, A. T. and Will, of this place, and E. M., of Chicago.

Hastings from Hayes.

Loren and Henry Hamlin each had a valuable heifer killed on the railroad last week.

The hall at Bay Shore is comfortably seated with chairs and Rev. E. T. Hill, of Petoskey, will preach there next Sunday at 3 p. m. Everybody is cordially invited.

Gustave Jerichow is building a residence on his farm lately purchased of Joel Weaver.

The Highway Commissioner will insist upon having the road work done in June, which is a step in the right direction.

Raise Hubbard Squashes and get your seed at the Pioneer Store-Bayshore.

C. L. S. C.

The last meeting of the C. L. S. C. will be held with Mrs. Walter Lamb, Friday evening, June 16th, when the result of the year's contest will be announced. All members are requested to be present. Program as follows: [Devotional; Reading, Lost in West; Last 18 questions in Classic Greek Course in English; Last 10 questions in Manual of Christian Evidences; Paper, Greece at the World's Fair, Miss Blanche Bartholomew; Matters Educational and World of To-day; Question Table; Paper, The Sapphos of the World since 1893; Greek Sappho's Day, Mrs. Lamb; Roll-call; Farewell quotations; Charades.

Undine Items.

The Rosa Bell loaded Monday with Lumber and slabs for Sheboygan.

Quite a number of the young folks went to Charlevoix Monday night to the theatre.

Mrs. F. J. Smith, of Grand Rapids, is here visiting her daughter, Mrs. W. W. Whitford.

Two cases of measles in Undine this week.

Leroy Hamlin goes to Sheboygan, Wis., on the Rosa Bell this trip.

—A. D. Cruickshank went to Chicago Friday, on legal business.

—The Legislature which just adjourned passed a law which gives the ladies the privilege of voting at all municipal and school elections hereafter held in this State. Governor Rich has signed the same and it is a law. Now ladies you have the thing in your own hands. You can vote for village officers and regulate saloon business to suit yourselves. You can hold successors and nominate your own ticket, and with what help you can get from "us men," you can have things pretty much your own way. What do you think about it?

—Young man, be a gentleman. It costs nothing, and will win you friends. Don't be a rowdy and a loafer. Cultivate the better instincts of your nature, and suppress the lower. Win for yourself the good opinions of your elders, and do something that will make your mother or sister blush for you. Study politeness, courtesy and refinement. Avoid evil associations as you would a pestilence. Look upward. It don't pay to be a loon, and sooner or later you will become it. You have only one life to live here; live it as a gentleman. It pays.

—Chapel, the druggist, has five different kinds of toilet paper, which are all standard brands; also a limited number of views of Charlevoix, which he is selling at 10 cents each, although they have been sold here for years for 50 cents.

EXPENSES AT THE FAIR.

WHAT IT WILL COST TO SEE THE BIG SHOW.

Visitors May Spend as Much Money as They Choose—The Man Who Wishes to Economize Will Not the Exposition at a Small Price.

One Day for 50 Cents.

World's Fair correspondent.

If a man is fond of Fink catalogues, with pages full of little type, dates epoch and Swanish Bubbs, liberty bells made out of glass, imported antiques at 10 cents a stalk, cigars costing 50 cents each and wearing gold labels, sodas choice carried by Turks at $1 an hour, Japanese vases, with yellow catfish chasing red butterflies over a pink landscape, effervescent drinks at $2.75 a pint, and other luxuries, he can manage to spend quite a roll of money in one brief day at the Fair. It is impossible to say just what is the expense of seeing the Exposition unless you know your man.

In spite of all that has been printed about the cheap excursions, extras and allowances, the visitor who keeps books will find his expenses down in incredible and startling without wasting any more than he would at home. Yet the visitor who wishes to get all he can, and the person who feels that he has paid his money for the fairies can find what pleasure they know and "actual." Between these two there is the happy medium, the man who is willing to see what is worth seeing, and expend a reasonable sum where it will do the most good. A man who recently made an official announcement that he had spent a dollar and got any satisfaction out of it at the Fair the visitor would be one of the most good. It would keep a man busy to spend that much. He would be compelled to eat numerous meals and pick up a lot of souvenirs to use up the full of fare. He would have to chase visitor may plunge into luxuries to his heart's content. The lunch may be elaborated to a most order with dessert and something to drink. This would cost 50 cents to 75 cents. In one day of ordinary sight-seeing it is impossible to take in more than one or two of the smaller shows, such as the Esquimaux village, Hagenbeck's sylvanic, from one end of the pleasance to the other, patronizing every show and selling the among the Egyptians. His pocket would be loaded down with souvenirs. Specially chartered pantomime and refined dances in the show service. At eventide the ambulance would carry him to the nearest hospital free of charge, and no one would know.

Go to Midway Shows.

Let it be supposed that the visitor arrives from downtown to put in the entire day at the grounds and return in the evening. This will make three items of expense absolutely necessary—transportation, admission to the park and some kind of lunchtime at the joint. Yet the visitor who has the price will over at least 40 cents, the cheapest rate, and he will have plenty of grounds. He the tools it is to cents on the Illinois Central, and 10 cents. The yellow trains on the Illinois Central are cheap, and the visitor can lunch on sandwiches and fruit may be obtained for 10 cents, and coffee for 15 or 20 cents, on the grounds a small. Yet he will have plenty of grounds and no more. Provided the trusal visitor is inclined to be economical he can buy pure up with this "snack," like any other meal for the day will be:

Car fare (Illinois Central)	$ .20
Lunch	.10
Total	$ .30

This is a low rock proposition, but hundreds of people who have visited the Fair have spent no better than this. Yet it is offered in the most satisfactory cheap. For 10 cents the visitor can get a good seat on the Midway Plaisance for the length of the ground and give him an excellent idea of the building and the sham or electric fountains will every hour and half an hour during the evening. The visitor can lunch on the grounds

WATER AS A MEDICINE.

One of the Best Remedial Agents Known to Science.

The human body is constantly undergoing tissue change. Waste particles are cast aside and eliminated from the system, while the new ever being formed, from the inception of life to its close, Water has the power of lubricating these changes, while amplifying the waste products, but at the same time they are removed by its agency, giving rise to increased appetite, which in turn, provides fresh nutriment.

Persons but little accustomed to drink water are liable to have the waste products formed faster than they are removed. Any obstructions to the free working of natural laws at once produces disease, which, if once firmly seated, requires both time and money to cure.

People accustomed to rise in the morning weak and languid will find the cause in the imperfect secretion of Wastes, which many times may be remedied by drinking a full tumbler of water before retiring. This even materially assists in the process during the night, and leaves tissues fresh and strong, and ready for the active work of the day.

Hot water is one of the best remedial agents. A hot bath on going to bed, even in the hot nights of summer, is a better reliever of insomnia than many drugs. Inflamed parts will subside under the continued poulticing of real hot water. Very hot water, as we all know, is a prompt checker of bleeding, and boilers, if it is clean, as it should be, make an sterilizing our wounds. A vicious stomach will nearly always gratefully receive a glass or more of hot water.

A CHINESE TRAMP.

A Rare Species, Yet His Methods Are "Alive Among Million Men."

A Chinese tramp is indeed a rare creature, and there is apparently only one in Gotham.

In appearance he is not unlike the regulation class, but presents a remarkable contrast when compared with his own countrymen.

The queue has been detached from his head, and as a substitute he wears a pompadour. Not a pattern of Chinese apparel is on his person.

He lounges about Mulberry street and Park row and leans against an iron post awaiting some philanthropic pal to give him a "stow off." As soon as he sees a tramp who is carrying an intoxication he ridiculously introduces himself as an old friend of his and then proceeds to relate some fearful yarn which usually finds a responsive ear.

His newly-found acquaintance will quietly accede to his wishes for some beverage to quench his thirst, and one is followed by another, and then in turn by another, until the Chinaman feels somewhat tipsy. This is his cutting work, and at the conclusion of the day he has a "jag" to be proud of, from a tramp's point of view.

His parlors as to what was conducive for him to join the ranks yielded nothing beyond a plausible story, which was obtained from a gutter bum, who is stationed in the neighborhood. He said:

"This Chinky has probably backed some fan-tan game and lost all he had, and then, believing his fellowmen responsible for his misfortune, he became despondent and resolved to take to drinking."

SANDWICH ISLAND GIRLS.

The Sort of Husband Luck Lies They Lead.

The ladies attire themselves in the holoku. The warm tropical climate makes loose, flowing gowns a necessity. The young girls wear wreaths of wild flowers around their brows and decorate their bodies with chaplets of green leaves. They do not use gold jewelry, but ornament their native with the floral beauty of the tropics. They are fond of outdoor life and live most of the time in the groves. They sleep in hammocks under the trees, and have their dances and feasts in the groves of the forests. They have little huts in which they dwell during storms, but are rarely found in their cottages except it is rainy weather. They build grass-thatched houses and cover their roofs with rushes and have wide porches in front of their doors to keep off the heat of the sun. They like to be near the sea, so they can bathe in the waters of the ocean. They become expert surf riders and can scale the breakers in the wildest storms. Like sea-gulls they ride the tossing rollers and smile at the ocean's neglected wrath. In their little frail craft they sail over the blue bosom of the Pacific and cruise many miles away from their island shores. Their little craft cross the channels from island to island and visit all the ports in the archipelago. They are not afraid of the ocean sublimes, but are afraid on its watery wastes and find delight in its expanse of blue.

Finger Tips of Idiots.

Impressions of the finger tips of idiots have been found to show very different markings from those of sane people. In a number of idiots the markings on the tips of all the fingers of each hand were identical, and in one idiot the tips of the thumbs had the same markings as those of the fingers. There was a noticeable smoothness of the finger tips in all the idiots.

Afraid of Number Thirteen.

Superstition finds odd manifestations even in most civilized Europe. The authorities of Frankfort-on-the Main have yielded to the prayers of several landlords and omitted the number 13 in renumbering several streets. The owners declare that they could not rent apartments in houses bearing that number.

A Tramp's Hue on a Conundrum.

A rather singular incident occurred on the Savannah, Florida and Western railway the other day. It was about forty miles from Waycross on a branch road from Chattahoochee to the track just in front of the train the engineer, Mr. Dufline, saw a sleep with a young lamb. It was too late to stop the engine, and the train passed on, leaving mutton in its wake. Arrived at Waycross the engineer discovered from his engine and saw the lamb alive and unhurt on the cowcatcher. It had been carried forty miles without a scratch.

THE MYSTERY OF A CAB.

A Sight Which Astonished and Perplexed Gotham.

A pair of plump legs in white stockings scrambling under a fast-going cab caused pedestrians to stop and gape on the afternoon last week.

The cab was on Lind ley Square, near New York, and the horse was trotting along at a good pace. The driver was singing it with his slip and mouth to go still faster. The legs ran along in a lopsided and jumpy sort of way, sometimes both feet off the ground together, sometimes stumbling. Shrieks and wild cries for help came from the cab. The fare and hat of a frantic woman would be seen lashing, and the legs apparently belonged to her.

Just as the cab turned down Lexington avenue a policeman shouted to the driver and he stopped. The policeman opened the door and a fat old lady got out. She climbed out over the steps and then fainted. She was in a frightfully disorganized condition. Perspiration and tears were streaming down her cheeks in torrents, her hair had come down, and her bun was all awry, while her skirts had a dusty and bedraggled appearance.

"Why, what was the trouble?" asked the policeman.

"Never there at the corner of Fifth avenue—hub—hub—the—hub—bottom of the nasty cab—cab—hub—fell out—here—here—here!"

"The bottom of the cab fell out!" cried the driver, hastily opening the door and examining his vehicle. Sure enough, the bottom was gone.

They gathered the old lady up and sent her home to retrieve our apparently none the worse for her enforced run. The bottom of the cab was found intact at the corner of Sixty-seventh street and Fifth avenue.

A BAROMETRIC WIFE BEATER.

Bad Hat Striking Effect of London Weather on a Man.

Every morning Mrs. Jenkins of Willow Cottages, Finchley, rose with a devout prayer that her husband might be possessed of nothing capable of being spoiled by the cruel barometrical showers known to the British isles. Jenkins is two brews and lay skin, but these personal imperfections are compensated for the well not in the form of rheumatism by his temper, inherited by his husband, upon whom it was a most temperate one expressed in exhibiting a black eye, the blows are shower was bad enough, and a rainy day was simply disastrous.

Last week has accordingly caused the unhappily married lady much sorrow, and led her to appeal to the magistrate at Westminster with several hot tears around her head to lodge a complaint against her barometrical husband.

"He hunnoyes me, sir," said she, "hunnoyes me in a sad way."

"Then remained Mr. Shell, "he beats you very often at this season of the year."

"Yes, sir," replied Mrs. Jenkins, with a deep sigh, "he beats 'im pretty nice." she continued, as an explanatory explanation of her husband's idiosyncrasies, "when it rains he has to leave off work and he don't know what to do with his spare time."

Perhaps a little cabman picking would form a pleasant recreation for Mr. Jenkins, who is an easy persuaded, and somewhat timid, under the supposition that wives are like engineers, to be treated as one until they are tamed—was remanded remorsefully for a week, during that time, though it rains torrents, Mrs. Jenkins is safe.

A DOG'S QUEER DIET.

A British Canine Has an Appetite for Rare Flowers.

Mr. Thomas Sopwith of Lentish Town, England, wondered for a long time why his garden remained desolate, and withstanding all the pains and seeds he lavished upon it, and why his neighbor's dog was always as plump and fat, until he discovered the cause and traced it to that the latter was unceremoniously fond of tulips, hyacinths, crocuses, and other flowers, and was in the habit of visiting the horticultural preserve and eating up all the blooms he found ready. He did not care about grass, or lettuce, or any of the common sorts, but for some reason he saw Mr. Morgan spent a much hard or more earnest in the eyes sparkled with the feast to stop, and the morning the poor thoroughly demoralized, it, stalk and all. For three years this went on. The dog was insatiable. He was a kind of walking botanical garden, and still had always an appetite for more. Mr. Morgan dared not kill the dog, because he knew he would be held liable for its value, which, of course, would not be equal to a lily, or any approximate, so he said Mr. Hall, its owner, in the Brandon county court, for the damage done to the garden.

Education is a Bad Way in New York.

The educational situation in New York state, as the report of the superintendent of instruction shows, is very lamentable one. According to the report, 72,126 children of school age did not attend school last year, being about fourteen per cent of the whole number in that state, in the cities the percentage of attendance was as high as fifty-two per cent, while in the country the returns were most discouraging being as low as twenty-seven.

The Boston Infant.

The human infant is not wholly a creation of fiction. Some time ago Professor Boyce of Harvard lay down to take a nap on the sofa, and on waking up saw the eyes of his youngest son fixed on him in a kind of great intensity. "What are you thinking of my boy?" asked the professor solicitously. "I was thinking, father, dear, said the budding philosopher, "that you look like the devil!"

Jack's Sad Story.

When A. J. Wilkinson, generally known as "Jim" Wilkinson, went on his last trip to Western New York a few years ago, he had with him a pretty horse to a farmer for $90. He then bought him back for $60 and then sold him again in another town for $100. At Le Roy's the other night the question came up: How much did he make in the trade? After a good deal of "figuring" by the audience some decided that he made $20 and others $30. The problem has not yet been settled. Are you fair figure it?

IN A SILVER BOX.

Wealth Unavailing to save the Life of a Sick Beetle.

A young lady, elegantly dressed, called at a bird store in San Francisco recently. She was in great distress on account of the illness of a pet that she spoke of in the most endearing way. She opened a small solid silver case and disclosed upon a bed of cotton was a black beetle.

"Your bugpie has been sick for over a week," said the bird fancier, "but if you will care him. Can't you do something for him?"

She told how she had received the beetle about a year ago from a friend in South America. She kept it in a leaves, small pieces of fruit, and ever sionally she would give it a drop of wine.

On leaving her room it was her custom to slip the bug up in its box. A month or so ago she was called out suddenly and neglected this ceremonial. Upon returning she called for her pet, and was surprised and delighted to see it crawl from its retreat forward her.

After the shock had frequently leaves it free, and it would obey her call. The cold weather of the past few days had no desire for roving caused the bug to contract a cold, from which, the clerk told the sorrowing young lady, it cannot recover. Upon hearing the news the young lady closed the box and left the store with tears streaming from her eyes. Entering her carriage, she was driven away in the direction of Nob Hill.

HOW WE TASTE

Tip of the Tongue Cannot Distinguish Between Flavors.

Strictly speaking, with the tip of the tongue one cannot really taste at all. If you put a drop of oil of bitter almonds on that part of the mouth you will find that it produces no effect of any sort. You only begin to feel it as it begins slowly to diffuse itself and reaches the tender region in the middle distance.

But if you put a little mustard or cayenne on the same part you will find that it bites you immediately—the experiment should be tried sparingly—if you put it lower down in the mouth you will swallow it almost without noticing the pungency of the stimulant.

The reason is that the tip of the tongue is supplied not with the nerves of touch, but nerves of fatty tissue, they belong to a totally different main trunk and they go to a different center in the brain, together with the very similar threads which supply the nerves of smell for comfort or pepper.

That is why the smell and taste of these pungent substances are so much alike, as everybody must know who has a good sniff of a mustard pot producing almost the same irritating effects as an insurrection does.

HER POINT OF VIEW.

The Old Woman Was Not Taking Any Risks With Her Basket.

A certain metropolitan belle on a bitterly cold day last winter, claimed to be leaving New York on a fashionable street car with a wicker basket. Opposite her was seated an old Irish woman, laden with a bulky market basket. Leaning on the platform loudly lamenting the cold, she said: "My hands all to frose all me," was her frequent exclamation.

A Lenten opportunity to mortify the flesh, thought the society girl to her pretty self.

"Your hands will keep warm if you give me your basket to carry."

The old woman struck a meditative attitude and gave a long, searching glance over the other's fashionable person. She took her head decidedly.

"I guess not. My pocketbook is inside that basket."

The blushing penitent dressed in a necessary discipline even for Lent, when rough fellow passengers ask the old dames with the protestations, "Oh, she's right."

Greedy Reptiles Have Their Trouble Then Their Whole Feet.

It is a too greedy snake with which Hermine Smith, of the central pack ess, has at present to deal. The fast growing snake is still hurling, and from all indications will continue to do so indefinitely, though he gets his milk bath regularly.

Two evenings recently Hermine Smith threw to the snakes two rabbits. One was captured by a big snake and the other by one of the smaller sizes. The larger snake had at the last previous feeding ate two good-sized rabbits.

At this feeding one of the other pythons objected to the large one's methods and a fight ensued which continued until Keeper James Burns was obliged to separate them. While one of the big reptile went for the keeper, and the engineer, who stood holding a lantern, dropped the latter and fled. Burns got out of the cage, however, and the greedy snake finished the meal.

Some days later the director decided to give the other snakes a chance. They all looked thin and hungry, and it was plain to be seen that one or two of the family had to feed. Keeper Burns got a shifting box, caught the two big pythons, put them in the box and fed the rest. The feeding was a success. Keeper Burns removed to each of the half-finished snakes got a fair ration for supper. A greedy snake, the director says, is more trouble than a fasting one.

AN ESSAY ON J. CAESAR.

What a Student Learned One Week About the Great Roman.

Julius Cesar was a Roman citizen. He wasn't made at first, but he proved it in the country and after while he launched the conventions and got elected boss. The first fourth of July or something, Cesar went up to the capitol to see about a bill. A man met him on the steps and told him to be aware of the Ides of March. Cesar said, "Ha, ha," and told the man to depress the front of his westcot and went on into the big joint. Some time afterwards he came out again and walked to the S. P. Q. R. saloon, where a lot of the Roman senators, members and officeseekers were lounging up against the counter. Cesar offered to pay for the drinks, but nobody accepted his invitation and he dropped to the fact that there was blood on the moon. Then somebody said something about his not having paid his fortune when he crossed the Rubicon, and butcher-knives began flying through the atmosphere. Pretty soon Cesar saw Brutus his next-door neighbor, coming at him with a stiletto and the old proverbial "What has it got you, Brute?" he exclaimed, and laid right down, and in a few minutes the patrol wagon drove up to the door. Just the same, you bet, Cesar was no slouch. Vale Julei

A Tribute to Tennyson.

Some time ago a tribute to Tennyson is that paid by Archdeacon Farrar, in which he says that a thousand things which we should never have thought of or felt we should never have read text's autographs of the poet's blessing. Tennyson has now taught us to observe with delight and love the black ash buds in spring; the rosy blossoms which tuft the hawthorn; the pure green streaks on the white leaves of the sycamore; the purple and yellow buds which glisten in the April blue; the sea which sparkle; adult with the flakes of foam; the liquid moan heard of the sea; the Pleiades glittering like a bunch of fire-flies; the little pink, five-headed baby ones; the light feet which treading on the shales make the meadows rosy; the dragon-fly's sudden head of living light, the sky sleeping to plunge in cataract, shelves of black rocks its breath of thunder.

The Sleepers of the Snail.

"A snail's pace" need no longer be used as a terse more or less indefinite expression of the slowness of "sociology" can tell you just as a slow snail's rate of travel. These interesting facts were established by some wonderful experiments at the Fisheries, Italy. Polymedes was born in 1888, and thus inclined to be exact can tell you one figure to support their arguments. It was all done in this way. A half a dozen snailets were permitted to crawl between two plants for four years. Exact time was kept from the start to the finish, and thus the average "pace" was ascertained. The experiments extended through the centuries of feet, yards, rods, furlongs, etc., and thus found that it would take a snail exactly fourteen days to travel a mile."

Wrong. Marchesi.

Mme. Marchesi's pupils in Paris have not been more or less indignant over her reflection of the length of her lessons, combined with an answer in her charges for instruction in singing. The graduating class made a respectful protest against charging, whereupon the famous teacher flew into a rage and delivered a letter of apology from every member. "Six of them are being Americans, preferred to leave the school, and two of the best voices are said to have gone to Italy instead."

The First English Book.

There is no absolute certainty as to what was the first English book, but a poem—"a paraphrase"—of the creation, written by Cædmon, a pagan convert to Christianity, about 657, is usually given the place. It was in the time of the Norman conquest until the time of King John few if any, books appear to have been written, then Layamon, a Worcestershire priest, brought out a remarkable poem of 32,250 lines called "Brut."

The Cigarette Habit in Germany.

I am pleased to think that as yet there are no signs that smoking will become a public vice with women, because it may be in private in this country. In Germany the habit has become so pronounced that an application for separate smoking compartments for women has been made to the railway authorities. The reply was rather curious, yet very much to the point: "Women who smoke are seldom consequently they may go and smoke with the other men."

GROWING OLD.

The failing hair falls from my temple,
The crows feet gather fast from off the place;
The furrows ploughed on earth can not shield,
And so I'm growing old, I'm growing old.

We had our dreams, those rosy dreams of youth,
They failed, and been well. This disappointed
Hope brought us to the grave and put us through
We hope's only how to live lower than
To make some other fellow happy.

We envied at times people of the purse,
Who could command the pleasures of life,
Who could travel from place to place,
Ah, our good fortune! Then came the sober second thought.

Only! Well, the brotherhood of man, this earth is Old enough to feel, nature's fruit, sweet sweet,
Which leaves us to have enjoyed, although
We cried bitter tears, we have lived.

We sing along and scatter as we go,
Soft words, for our fellows in every land,
All hail, with glory crowded joys and bright as the
We sing so sweetly that the echo
Echoes back to us the Alabaster Constitution.

SENATOR'S OVERCOAT.

When Senator Mersey reached home after closing the session of the legislature, he was met at the door by his wife. It was a big old mansion, and the hall was broad and inviting. Mrs. Mersey was an ideal hostess, and her parlors were the center from which emanated the best social and intellectual influences.

Senator Mersey had founded a college for the colored people in the South, and had endowed or become a trustee of several other institutions. His name was a talisman of benevolence. Mrs. Mersey was a true helpmeet. Her charities were lost well with such unselfish zeal. Her parlors were wished that people came to her to be taught how to entertain.

One day, about noon, one child her a beggar asking for work. Such a poor woman, she excained with tears in her eyes:

"Oh, give me something to eat. I won't rather see that woman than the queen of Sheba." And the best of it was, she not only meant what she said. She did it.

"How late you back" she said that autumn evening twenty years ago as she met her husband at the door. He trembled gently.

"Oh, sit down. Well, it is my old overcoat time deserves the compliment. I have had it years."

"I am glad you have," replied the lady. "It looks as if there is a place for it in the box that goes down South to-morrow. You'll have to buy a new one."

It never occured to the Senator to differ from his wife in such matters as an overcoat. He was a big man, and his wife was no larger than he was. The Senator—most wonderful of all—is little.

That was, as I said, long ago. Time and thoughtlessness for the poor was so common in those days, perhaps, that the Senator and his wife r ngt all about it.

Now, I am telling a true story, only changing the names and places, so as to protect the modesty of one of Charles's acquaintances, who thinks that their left hands do not tell their right hands what their noble deeds are.

Last year Mr. and Mrs. Senator Mersey visited the South. They stopped at a little country town. But there met a colored minister, who, through pool, was "much more superior for above the average of the colored people around him."

His wife was a livelier woman—intelligent, thrifty and clever. She had been a schoolmistress for a few years, and was a devoted mother, inspiring her children with a strong desire for an education. Indeed, so well had she worthy couple done their duties, expect that their oldest boy in professor of Greek, and another a lawyer, and would be her pride as a citizen in the community.

When these good people learned the name of their visitors they showed unexpected emotion. On the first mentioned the Minister's wife said the following story:

"About twenty years ago my husband was sent as a delegate to the Methodist Convention. That was before you were called Senator. I was the embroidery—she turned toward her husband with a smile—I was almost ashamed of my overcoat was quite shabby. It had been worn for years. I had bought the best for it I could. Before they made him Moderator, Dr. Simon Garvin came up to him.

"Brother Jackson," said he, "you ought to have another overcoat.

"I have a good one on, that I'm sure can't be a stumbling block to the people of Zion."

"I don't hear that" said the Deacon, feeling of the overcoat from collar to pocket. "Now, I can go to you up Zeuly, Brother Jackson," said he. "It has been put come from Senator Mersey, and in it is an overcoat that will fit you like the rind on a persimmon, and you can send your overcoat to some poor brother down on the narrow gauge."

"So he brought out the overcoat, and my husband tried it on, and it fitted him finely. It was a beautiful overcoat. We don't have such material here in those days. And how long do you suppose he wore that overcoat?"

She turned thoughtfully to Mr. Mersey.

"Three years, perhaps" inquired the lady, looking casual as if she were insulting the family. "It was quite worn out, wasn't it dear?" She appealed to her distinguished husband.

"I don't think I could the cloving of the overcoat," he said, smoothing the rim of his hat.

"You don't mean that." The minister's wife looked surprised. "Why, it was quite a fine overcoat! My husband wore it six years, and then I must say, it began to look a little shabby, didn't it, Mr. Jackson?"

Mr. Jackson nodded vigorously.

"Then I set my wits to work, and found a way out of the problem. I could film I would rip the seams and turn it, and put it together again, and then, as the material was so fine, it would be as good as new.

"That suppose you can't do the pieces together, said he, then I find fo without any overcoat.

"You give me the cost and ju.k trust me," said I. So I ripped it up, and dressed it, and sewed it together, and it did look as good as new. It was almost as good as new. I put on it a new collar and new linings. I declare it made the good man quite too, vain to live, for Deacon Garvin said to him:

"Where did you get your new overcoat, Brother Jackson? Has the lightning of the Lord struck your house?"

"It has," he said. "The Lord has given me a powerful wife. It's the same old overcoat of Senator Mersey's turned inside out."

"It was such a beautiful material, you see, Mrs. Mersey. And he wore that coat for five years and more.

"Now, says he, wife I suppose I shall have to buy another Senator Mersey's overcoat, eh? It's getting almost too shabby to wear."

"And I had to confess that it was pretty bad, all stained and colored with age. But I thought it over for a week. It was of such nice material and had been so handsome that it really seemed a shame to throw it away. It was like an old friend. Time nothing when I was a washing, it occurred to me. Why, it can be dyed. It is such good stuff. It will take the money! Surely the Lord sent me that thought.

"So I ripped it up again, and dyed it, and got a quarter of a yard for a new collar, and new lappets, and for less than two dollars he had such a good-looking overcoat that it was, I must say, quite stylish for a country town. Brother Garvin would have bought it himself, and he offered me two dollars for it, but I knew it was too valuable.

"Well, I've been I can sir," pleaded the mother. "It seems so like an old friend and home—and the dear man was Jimmy's."

"Now, you will excuse her, sir," said the husband; "you see we've been together in it."

"Never mind," said the Senator's wife, soothingly. "I know another way of letting the overcoat tell its own story to generous people."

And I hope she may not be disappointed with the way it has been used.—Youth's Companion.

An Intercontinental Chat.

At this time of year, when from all quarters of the globe letters of credit and all the other makings are coming in yearly in a foreign land, it occurs to one and mulilled in questions of Hamlet to wonder why we cannot have one single international coin, which would be good wherever it is spent, and from Uncle Pooh Washington to the entire international currency is a hoot reserved for our grandchildren, but a single gold coin of about the value say of $5.00 would be an immense convenience to travelers. A moderate sum in such coins would not be burdensome, and before leaving each country the national currency would be exchanged into that at the hotel office or the nearest shop without any fuss and feathers as now ever. Multiples of such a coin, to the extent of a hundred or more, would be easily portable, and fractions of it would not be large enough to cause serious embarrassment to travelers. The amount of time and trouble which a single international coin would save is almost incalculable.

TIMBREL OF JUBILEE.

MOSES AND MIRIAM ON THE BANKS OF THE RED SEA.

A Day of Rejoicing at the Brooklyn Tabernacle—Dr. Talmage's Eloquent and Inspiring Sermon—A New Departure By the Popular Divine.

The Tabernacle Pulpit.

Last Sunday was one of the greatest days in the history of the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The music, instrumental and congregational, was of the most joyous type; the hymns, the prayers and the sermon were celebrative of the day of great jubilant of the finishing debt of $100,000, accumulated from the disastrous fire which reduced the building of three summer Sabbaths. Text, Exodus xv. 20, 21:

"And Miriam the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her with timbrels and with dances. And Miriam answered thus. Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea."

Sermonizers are naturally so busy in getting the Israelites safely through the parted Red Sea and the Egyptians submerged in the returning waters that but little time is ordinarily given to what the Israelite people did after they got well up high and dry on the beach. That was the miracle of the Red Sea, which is its greatest worth to modern and its text with twelve notes. Why is the adjective "red" used in describing this sea? Is it called the Red Sea because the mountains on its western coast look so bloody beneath soft rosy dawn, and the water is colored with red sunset when the sun empurples the red cone?

This sea was cut by the knife of Egypt, Phenicians and Arabic shipping. It was no insignificant pool or puddle on the beach of which we just talk as to stand. I hear upon it the sound of a mighty tempest, for which the hitherto very another unknown instrument of music, the timbrel, is called for the occasion of social duel in the side of it, and make a blazing sound, and over it, as on a piece of parchment was distended, the hand of Moses, the lawgiver of the jew, the performer.

The Israelites, who were on the beach of the first sea, were making music on their deliverance from the Egyptians. Moses and Miriam led the Israelites men with their deep bass voices, and the women of Miriam led the women in their jubilee. Rather their instruments, you say, for religious service, the timbrel or tambourine. But I think I had mentioned it. And I rather think we will have to put a little more of the Israelitish into our religious services and drive out the dolorous and funereal, and the dan ce, and sing when the Israel will resume its place in the sanctuary. But that which occupied the attention of all the men and women of that Israelitish band, was the celebration of their victory. They had crossed. They had triumphed. They had won.

More wonderful was this victory and defeat than when the hosts of Israel overcame the hosts of Sisadra at Jaxine, than when at Thamnoscrive Sisadra was yet free, than when the Earl of Northumberland was driven from the Brankham Moor, than when at the battle of Wakefield York was slain, than when at Bloreheath Sir Richard was defeated, than when the Athenians under Miltiades at Marathon, and the Persians at Salis, for this victory of my text was called with the sword or sabbatic or spear. The weapon was a lifted and prostrated sea. And Miriam, the prophetess, the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her with timbrels and with dances. And Miriam answered thus. Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea."

A Glorious Triumph.

Brooklyn Tabernacle to-day feels much as Moses and Miriam and when they stood on the banks of the Red Sea, and saw the Egyptians thrown into the waters. It the hole of God and the Israelites. Brooklyn Tabernacle to-day feels as the ten-thousand-times-redeemed, 100 of floating church debt to forever. Brooklyn feels as we stand on the ground upon which it stands, represents Christ, I this day remember to God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, and I sing a strong desire to could this church get into debt so as to have the great joy of paying it off. Brooklyn Tabernacle to-day is the Israelitish band of Moses and Miriam, who stood across the Red Sea to say that.

"Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea." Brooklyn Tabernacle to-day is the Israelitish band of Moses and Miriam, who stood across the Red Sea to say that.

"Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea." There is some difference between the Israelitish band of Moses and Miriam and Brooklyn Tabernacle to-day, in that the Israelitish band of Moses and Miriam were in the returning waters that had just been a mighty wall on their right and left, and Brooklyn Tabernacle to-day is in the beach of which we just talk as to stand. I hear upon it the sound of a mighty tempest, for which the hitherto very another unknown instrument of music, the timbrel, is called for the occasion of social duel in the side of it, and make a blazing sound, and over it, as on a piece of parchment was distended, the hand of Moses, the lawgiver of the jew, the performer.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The yacht Bon Ami, Capt. Edward Rouse, is fitted out for her summer cruise. She goes to Chicago.

Capt. Edgar Gebo has sold his interest in the schooner Sea Gem to Albert E. Mason, who is now sole owner. Capt. Geo. Weaver will sail her.

The old schooner Col. Cook will soon be in service again. She was pulled off the beach at last week, where she has rested since last fall.

The schooner Sea Gem will receive a new mainsail this trip.

It is reported that a steamburge jettisoned a quantity of pork somewhere in the vicinity of the islands lately. The tug Parks, with the schooner Fleetwing in tow, went after some of it yesterday. Later—It was the steamer Russia, which went ashore in the fog. The fleetwing returned last night with 60 packages of fish, 10 barrels of pickles, and other articles.

The schooner Sea Gem picked up twenty-five barrels of flour from the recent jettison near Beaver Island.

The tug Avery left Sunday evening for Manitou harbor to dredge at the steamer Florence Smith, Capt. Tullock having bought out the other owners.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids arrived at the World's Fair on Monday—her first trip with forty passengers.

The old schooner Dresdin went out loaded this morning. When out about six miles the captain signaled for a tug, and came in for repairs. The vessel's jib-boom rotted off, and she could carry no head sails.

Northern Michigan News.

Central Lake will celebrate the Fourth of July in old fashioned style.

The Conant Row company is a new industry just organized at Mancelona. The capital stock is $5,000, all paid in.

Will Vinton, son of Hon. David Vinton, of Williamsburg, died in his home in that place last week of typhoid pneumonia.

Contractor McDonald with Foreman Smith and 10 men are at Boyne Falls making the side track over to Mr. Wing's logging road.

The route of the telephone line has been changed, so that it will run north from Central Lake through Ellsworth, to Charlevoix instead of across to Eastport as originally intended.

Traverse City is growing so fast that they talk of taking that place in to the corporation then Yuba and Elk Rapids. They claim 7,000 population.

The Latter Day Saints, or Mormons have leased the Judd hall and have fortified themselves therein, and are pouring brimstone into the abodes of sin, at Boyne Falls.

E. S. Pratt, of Traverse City, is looking up the records of the proceedings which Kalkaska county declared for local option, last year, with a view to finding a possible flaw in same, whereby the result of said election may be annulled.

The Freeman woodenware factory at Kalkaska was burned to the ground one day last week. The total loss is estimated at $10,000, with an insurance of $17,000. The works gave employment to eighty men, and was the most prosperous industry in Kalkaska.

The Cheboygan people seems to "hold the age" on the rest of us, as Captain James Reid who has the contract for towing the Columbus caravels to Chicago, proposes to stop at Cheboygan to let his fellow-townsmen have a look at him.

Boyne Citizen: The result of the vote on bonding the village for $2,000 last Tuesday, is a standing disgrace to Boyne City. True, the proposition carried, but by such a small majority that it was even worse than an overwhelming defeat, which would mean that public sentiment is against the measure.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Friday morning train run over and killed Mrs. Hansen's cow.

Many from this place attended the entertainment at Atwood last Friday night.

Dr. Gardner and wife, of Charlevoix, were in town Friday afternoon.

Two of the mill boys got run over by a log in the yard last Thursday, and will be laid up for a few days.

Plasterers are getting to work on H. T. Sleeper's new residence, and he will soon have as fine a house as there is in town.

Dr. Lewis, of Norwood, is over quite often to the "Gotlow City," making professional calls.

The Yettaw boys' new building is going up in good shape, and will soon be occupied by Fred Ladine, of Atwood, who will run a first-class boarding house.

The telephone poles are all set, and the wire will be strong this week. The office will be in the Ellsworth Lumber Co.'s store.

Frank Pearl moved into his new house last week, and Fred Yettaw has bought the lot adjoining and will build at once.

Henry Runyon and Silas Sheby have bought lots the past week, and new houses will be commenced in a few days.

Call for the "O. M. A." cigar.

Fast time to the World's Fair.

The C. & W. M. Ry. new "White City Flyer" leaves Grand Rapids at 7:15 a. m. every day and arrives at Chicago at 12:20 p. m., stopping at Midway Plaisance, right at the entrance to the Fair Grounds. It's a great train and a popular one, as the increasing patronage shows.

If you cannot take that train, there another fast train at 1:25 p. m. and one at 11.30 p. m., both good ones.

Both day trains have Wagner parlor-cars, and night train Wagner sleeper. Through coaches on all of them.

Wary Winston.

Mr. P. H. Winston and Hon. H. A. Gilliam were for years leaders at the Bertie county, North Carolina, bar, and had each a full appreciation, from experience, of the skill of the other. A case came Mr Winston who suddenly called away, and placed his business in the hands of his nephew, Duncan Winston, a recent acquisition to the bar. "Now," said he, "Duncan, if Gilliam makes you any offer of a compromise, decline it. If you make him one, and you find he is about to accept it, withdraw it immediately."

The Blue Sky.

The blue color of the sky is probably merely the color of the air, seen through the length of about forty five miles. It has been observed by those who have ascended about five miles above the earth's surface that the sky appears of a dark, inky hue, owing to the very small reflection and dispersion of the light, while the blue color no longer appears above, but below them.

DEATH IN THE SNOW.

Tender Solicitude of a Frantic Boy for a Younger Brother.

A touching fatality from frost occurred in remote Russian villages, last winter. A peasant and his wife had gone to attend a wedding party at some distance and were detained in revelling. They left their little child to the care of two small children, aged respectively 7 and 5 years. About midnight the children appear to have gone out to amuse themselves in the snow, and in the meantime the door, which opened outwardly, had become frozen in the jambs, resisting all the feeble efforts of the little ones to regain access to the hut. When the small victims were found it was noticed that the elder child had, in tender solicitude, removed his best shoes and dressed them over the smaller frost-bitten feet of his little brother, leaving himself bare-footed. The younger child's body, with fingers in its mouth and tears frozen in spikes on the bloated cheeks, was clasped in the right embrace of that of the devoted little elder boy. Fresh tears of a character less serious mature were of extremely frequent occurrence in Dublin during the intense frost. One among many cases at Warner was that of a young lady who remarked the symptoms of frost-bite on the nose while skating. She returned home immediately, and unprudently bathed her face in hot water, with the instant effect that the whole of the fleshy part of the nose fell away from the cartilage.

Dispatched But Not Executed.

At Mount ——, the other night, there was a temperance lecture in the chapel of one of the churches. A gentleman who was to preside did not show up and a man known to have a deep interest in the temperance cause was called upon to act in his place. Mr. S. is a very nervous man who easily gets rattled. He scrawled to his partner that he was called out, and handed gentlemen—Since Brother —— is not here to ask the blessing, we shall go at once upon this meeting, we will proceed with the business, and do the best we can without it. Amen."

A Beggar's Journal.

The little papers are very numerous and miscellaneous in character. I know, but I was not aware until very recently that it had included one entitled La Journal des Mendiants. This is a daily, each article being signed with the name of its writer, who is supposed to be a professional beggar.

—John Monroe Jr. was yesterday awarded the contract of building the D. M. Ferry & Co. seed warehouse and dock. Mr. L. D. Coulter, of Detroit, is here in the interest of the Seed Co. The plant, including dock, warehouse and machinery, will cost about $8,000.

—President Slater and the Marshall Monday morning gave the Ball dive, just within the corporation, twenty-four hours in which to vacate. If they are there to-day they will be pulled. A big row occurred there Saturday night, in which one man had his scalp badly cut and his ear amputated. Later, the have gone.

—L. A. Bacon's fine new residence on the north side is rapidly approaching completion, and will be occupied by July 1st. It is really one of the finest homes in Charlevoix. No pains have been spared in its construction. The finish here is in polished birch, and above the rooms are resplendent in selected ash. The parlor fire-place is gem in artistic effect. A complete water and drainage system is being put in by a Grand Rapids plumber, and all the modern conveniences are supplied. The location is one of surpassing beauty.

—Prof. S. Manzetti, the eminent pianist, composer and director, of Detroit, writes the SENTINEL that he will spend a portion of this summer at Traverse City, and if a class of 12 or 15 advanced pupils can be secured lessons will come once a week in Charlevoix. He will give private lessons in piano or voice culture in all branches. He also writes that he will produce a ladies' operetta here, with local talent, and will be assisted by the talented soprano, Miss Harriet Bellerville. Mr. Manzetti is recognized as a pianist and teacher of continental fame. He is director of the Detroit Conservatory of Music. His address is 129 Lafayette street.

—We did not think the Democrat would permit itself to be submitted into bearing false witness against its neighbor, as seems to be the case in the Baker barn-raising contest of last Wednesday. The editor of this paper had the honor to command one side, and fairly won by two rafters. Our friend Billy Miller, who commanded the other side, was the first to supper, of course, as usual, and, as usual, won in that contest, over all competitors, by a large majority. We are surprised that Billy, who is a graduate of the SENTINEL office, should attempt to snarch from his old editor an honestly earned victory. But putting this feature of the matter aside, the occasion was a notable one, and very enjoyable. About 100 Norwood and Marion farmers were there, and one of the finest barns in Norwood township was raised. The supper that was served would do credit to a wedding occasion. Mrs. Sista Baker's hospitality was as big as his barn.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The tug Argyle, of Bay City, was in port Saturday on her way to Frankfort.

The tug Avery brought in the schooner Florence Smith from Manitou harbor last Friday. She is being hauled out at Washburn's yard for repairs.

The fog whistle at Old Mackinaw Point, although seven miles away, causes the citizens of St. Ignace to lie awake nights and wish it was seven miles further off.

It is estimated that sixty-four boats will be in the excursion business in Chicago by July 1. This does not include the steamers of the regular lines which will bring excursions. As yet none of the steamers have paid expenses.

A fishing tug has been engaged in dredging a channel through the sand to the schooner Mineral State, ashore on South Manitou Island, but as the vessel rests on rock and clay, the prospects of floating her are not considered good.

The naptha launch Endelyon, which wintered here, is the finest thing of her inches ever seen in this port. Capt. Sinner Stinerson, who has been here the past two weeks fitting her out, leaves with her tomorrow for New York, via Buffalo and the Erie Canal. The Endelyon, is owned by a Mr. Lamb, of Chicago, who will meet her at Buffalo. She is forty feet long, elegantly housed in, and has every convenience for a small party. She uses four gallons of naptha per hour, and makes nine miles. She cost $6,000.

Hinduk polished her shoes in her dress, then she washed them to take, but Old Sequoyah, the only one that was not in an attitude to start right off—called out.

"We won't left here by the chief, and told to stay as we came our lives.

"Hold!" cried Fetitlia in clear, silvery tones. "Uncas, chief of the Mustangs, is at his mission in the settlements of the whites, and he cannot command! Are his sister, I am Fetitlia, a descendant of the mighty Wyandanch, and my brother's absence, my word is law. I commanded you to leave here at once, and open not your lips about what has happened till my brother or I tell you to speak!"

Fetitlia Uniuka was speaking, Old Sequoyah's wife and her people, and now she bowed the proud Wyandanch matron off at the bidding of the princess.

The Indians were out of sight in a few minutes, and then Fetitlia's manner changed like magic.

The spirit of the princess had left unannounced her purpose, so she threw them off, and, turning to the maid, she seized the flat stone that answered for a door, and rushed out.

Fetitlia was close behind her. The light was dim, as we generally with the glaring sunlight without, but was still sufficient to enable them to distinguish the bed, and to lift the form of a man.

We always knew that the head of the bed was other the foot, and in a few minutes they had carried Ralph Denham from the vault and placed him in the shadow of the cabin.

With amazing quickness, the old woman drew the cloth from the table. Except that it had a fringe, gained expression, as of one trying to be a fringed jib, it was just like the other, and, carefully falling manner by an effort of will, it looked very natural.

Hinduk was now all activity. She tore open the mat and stuffing, and the whole breast was exposed, and against this she pressed the side of her face. Increasing its fleeciness by the strange contrast.

She remained in this attitude so long that Fetitlia unable to suppress her anxiety, called out

"Hinduk, Hinduk! tell me! he will live!"

He moves strong, but he's drought, Ha, I knowed he was drought, or dead."

"Ah, he lives! he lives!"

Fetitlia was beside him, chafing the cold hands, which the maid had brought to a live mouth during that her own.

"We'll fetch in an Injun! Injun, honey, Dr. Hodgen be see Hinduk's stain, you go now and Hinduk know."

The old woman removed the white cloth from about her head and shoulders.

"Dar, de shoes am on," said Hinduk, decidedly. "Now, yo' go back to de fire where Fetitlia's got something to eat."

"Hinduk gives him the hand, and he grasped it in affection, rather than with any thought of wanting its support.

He was still sad sore, and when he gained his feet, he staggered, and would have fallen, had not a lithe, strong form sprang to his side, and thrown one arm about him.

"Fetitlia," he whispered "God bless you, Fetitlia."

The maid him over near the fire, and made him sit down, with his back to a tree.

"Where are the—rest?" he asked, glancing about him with an expression, half-sore, half-wonder, on his handsome face. Am I the sole survivor? How did I get home?"

"Wait, honey, on other a bit I'll pine you. Just now I'll say, on the Ark of de Ian on water, on ob all de waste, de Finder fetch yo' to me. Dr. Hodgen be gas, leg now saved yo from no chief of de Mustangs, said Hinduk, standing behind him, and smoothing back his curly brown hair. "Ah! Dar ebrybody thought, when it hung in golden ringlets to his shoulders in the days long ago, he would cry, in that other long island that was Injun blood in him."

The Wanderer is wrecked, he said faintly, opening his eyes, and looking at the anxious expression of his faithful fellows.

"Not that, sah! and we will tell you, when you are better."

"But how did I come here? Speak, I am strong enough to hear—if I can remember enough to communicate, that you think would interest you. My mind is very clear, I know, but I am very anxious to know if there was more known than I saw."

He sat back in the canoe, watching the crews as, in a few minutes, they piled their paddles, and five seizes the shadow near the shore, leaving them, their speed, it was too slow for this.

A moment's pause, then he spoke, and try to reason that's how we got home, that he would speak up to fail him out of board the Wanderer, and the Lord's Partner, for it was expected the ship would reach that port in a few days, and the Mormon Bishop in charge.

But Hinduk's voice, as she spoke in low tones to Uniuka, seemed like a fair sense of the wakeful reality of his position.

Hinduk's voice, with her strange accent and curious manner, it was only him that all his earliest recollections were associated. With that voice, Memory could not carry him back to the days when he was a little boy, and when other cries reaching manhood, when he knew that there would be danger from the mystery of his early life the Indian woman would come to him, and he would weep, and reject it, that the cry of the Indian woman, in the great sea that should explain it all. Yet till I put on yer shoes on stock, to a, so I'll tell yo 'bout it."

She could not have the spoken more appropriate words. Ralph Denham was his own experience, had known of men who by chance, sought to break in home mock on shipboard, and wake up on a stranger, with a pain, and ask a man about them.

Man, who frequently act bravery and conspicuously on occasions of great danger, have not the slightest recollection of their acts, when the danger and excitement are over.

Something of this kind through Ralph Denham's mind, and with his eyes closed he threw himself back on his couch, while Hinduk put on his shoes and stockings.

"Last night I took too much wine on the Warfare. Sh. man was been weakest off Montauk Point, after the rudder was repaired, and we so far, we was reversed, and here I am among old friends."

"It 'pears to me like yo don't seem to see no dar's a sight of trouble on hair."

"I seem you, Hinduk, I fully appreciate that, and hence my anxiety to get on board of my ship," replied Ralph.

"Now, yer let me splain 'one I feels 'bout dat," said the old woman, coming nearer, and adding force to her words by her quick, serious gesture. "Ef Fetitlia sent yer, yer no out in sayin' dat I'm Injun, Ralph. Fo, was yo'n board dat ship, yer ain't know, Tar-gods' hound, sig 'im, wy, dey jell yer, dey's ki."

"Go on, Hinduk. I will listen," said Ralph, crossing his arms and letting his chin rest on his breast.

Hinduk ceased her long words, she only knew a few of that character, and she was never quite certain that she comprehended them. "Now, she wanted Ralph Denham to understand her distinctly, and not to be diverted from her meaning by any unusual actions in her speech.

Her vocabulary was limited to words of one syllable, which she invariably mispronounced. She seemed to prefer arranging them in ways that measured their movement from a grammatical standpoint; yet she never left her hearer in doubt as to her meaning.

Hinduk's characteristic that had taken root in long during Ralph's early years, she showed him that his friends believed he was in New York, that one of his sons in law—Solomon Graham—believed he was in Chicago, and that his three sisters were dead, and that he was in their power.

Dinah went on to show him that neither friend nor foe knew of her life in Long Harbor at this time, and that he were to enter the town at once, Fox, who was in virtual command of the ships, not only could, but would have him killed at once, and so defeat the project, which Ralph himself had in view. Dinah, and both more, she showed him in her quick, earnest way, closing by telling him that the Lady Gertrude and the Lady Ethel were in the town at once, that Mr. Hodges, and Valentine Dayton, quietly tell the ladies where, and bring them to the ship, but that, after a consultation with them, would know how to act.

Ralph Denham was turning with anxiety to be away, yet he was impatient to hear the end of his story. Hinduk's plan was, and to saw that they would be off.

"Yer gwell, how long will you be gone?" he asked.

"They look like they would arrive as soon as they found the officer. Dat's dat all, Hinduk. Yer ain't know, I'll tell yer what we gwine do. Yer ain't know, Ralph Denham, yer ain't know, I'll tell yer what we gwine do."

"Yes, Hinduk, Ralph Dee'am, yer hear will me on Fetitlia. Yer ain't know, Yah! yah! I put on yer shoes on stock, to a, so I'll tell yo 'bout it."

She could not have the spoken more appropriate words. Ralph Denham was his own experience, had known of men who by chance sought to break in home mock on shipboard, and wake up on a stranger, with a pain, and ask a man about them.

He sat back in the canoe, watching the crews as, in a few minutes, they piled their paddles, and five seizes the shadow near the shore, leaving them, their speed, it was too slow for this.

A moment's pause, then he spoke, and try to reason that's how we got home, that he would speak up to fail him out of board the Wanderer, and the Lord's Partner, for it was expected the ship would reach that port in a few days, and the Mormon Bishop in charge.

But Hinduk's voice, as she spoke in low tones to Uniuka, seemed like a fair sense of the wakeful reality of his position.

Hinduk's voice, with her strange accent and curious manner, it was only him that all his earliest recollections were associated. With that voice, Memory could not carry him back to the days when he was a little boy, and when other cries reaching manhood, when he knew that there would be danger from the mystery of his early life the Indian woman would come to him, and he would weep, and reject it, that the cry of the Indian woman, in the great sea that should explain it all.

AN INTERESTING CANE.

Made that of 1,000 Different Pieces of Wood, and Valued at $2,000.

William H. Vale, a wealthy bachelor, has a cane that he carries with him, which is undoubtedly the most costly and unique of anything of the kind in the world. The stick contains about 1,000 pieces of wood. Each piece is cut in a curious and artistic shape, so that the cane with the various colored and shaped woods has a strange appearance. Mr. Valespimend and made the cane, and work upon it consumed weeks of labor at different times in the course of several years. Sixty of the 1,000 pieces of wood are of great value to relic hunters.

The head of the cane is made from a post in the house of Shakespeare's birth-place at Stratford, England. Set in the head is a small lock of white hair from Martha Washington's head, the lock having been given Mr. Vale thirty years ago by Robert E. Lee, a descendant of Mrs. Washington. There is a piece of wood from the birth-place of Napoleon, on the island of Corsica, and one from Napoleon's writing desk at St. Helena.

Other pieces of the cane came from the Charter Oak, from the home of John Adams, from a chair of Oliver Cromwell, from the home of John Hancock, from the Mayflower, Roger Williams' pew, from a desk of Abraham Lincoln, from a pewholder of Gladstone, from a ruler that Garfield used at school, from a pewholder of Longfellow, from a trunk that Independence used during the revolutionary war, from the bed upon which John Wesley died and from the guillotine upon which Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette were beheaded.

Mr. Vale spent years and much care in collecting the relics. He has been offered $2,000 for the cane, which is truly a wonder. He will leave it to the historical department of Cornell university when he dies.

WHILE HER FATHER RAYED.

A Pennsylvania Girl Elopes From a Prayer Meeting.

Miss Lois Grittman, daughter of Harrison Grittman, of Forest Hill, Wyoming county, Pennsylvania, and Arthur Vanderveer, an athletic swamp hand, fell in love last fall and soon became engaged. Mr. Grittman refused to give his consent to their marriage, and commanded his daughter not to receive Mr. Vanderveer's attentions any longer.

The young man did not call at the house again, but the lovers met occasionally, however, and some days ago they decided to elope. There was a prayer meeting at the Forest Hill schoolhouse, and Mr. Grittman took Lois to it. It had been planned by the couple that Mr. Vanderveer should look in a certain window of the schoolhouse when he was ready for Miss Grittman to join him. Mr. Grittman was praying when Mr. Vanderveer's face appeared at the window, and Miss Grittman got up unnoticed and went out.

Mr. Vanderveer had a double team and carriage in readiness, tucked the robes around Miss Grittman, and was soon on his way toward the New York state line. Mr. Grittman did not miss his daughter till the meeting was over, and did not follow. Mr. Vanderveer and Miss Grittman drove all night, and the next day they were married.

The Nervous Speaker.

At a Massachusetts town the other night, there was a temperance lecture in the chapel of one of the churches. The gentleman who was to preside did not show up, and a man known to have a deep interest in the temperance cause was called upon to act in his place. Mr. S——— is a very nervous man who easily gets rattled. He struggled to his feet, and this is what he said: "Ladies and gentlemen: Since Brother ——— and I have got the blessing of God to rest upon this meeting, we will proceed with the business and do the best we can without it. Amen."

Hiring Aquarius.

You may hire almost anything in New York, even to an aquarium stocked with sea vegetation and strange creatures of the deep. The aquarium is an occasional table ornament at a fashionable dinner, and is fitted for the occasion. The trade in all the things that go to make up the aquarium is a growing one in New York, and those who engage in this business have taken to themselves the title of aquarist. You may have of them gentlemen armed with very queer fish, at prices ranging from 10 cents to $5 per specimen, together with any one of twenty varieties of aquatic plants.

TOUCH ON TRAMPS.

A Boston Saturday Newspaper Makes Effective Use of Fiction.

A clever woman residing in one of the suburbs of Boston has 151 open accounts at her grocery, and is one of the annoyance of tramps. For a long time she had been overrun by these tramps, who would come to her door in search of ridding herself of them. Finally she hit on a plan which has been overrun by these searchers after an eleven-hour job with twelve hours' pay. At first, from an inherent thriftiness, she was content to serve them with hot coffee and a fairly good meal, but the tramp increased so in numbers that this made soon became not only expensive, but burdensome as a matter of labor as well. Added to this was also the loss of small articles, which some of these tramps, ungrateful for pay or proffered favors, would purloin, will-not-resist-much as, 'by your leave."

What to do to get rid of this gentle was a puzzle. The old saying "good man has a will, but woman has a way," found exemplification, however, in the present instance.

What did she do? Well, the 151 became lodged in her brain that in order to drive and keep these tramps away, the premises must be made objectionable to them. So she began to put some cotton oil in the coffee that she dispensed to these gentlemen of leisure every morning. She soon had the pleasure of seeing their after day, fewer and fewer of her former tramp friends.

Whether, as the shrewd matron remarked to a neighbor, to whom she confided her riddance remedy, the tramps ever really do recover what "recovers" the cotton oil, she has never been able to tell, but they do not come to her door for drink and sustenance any more.

JUSTICE LAMAR.

He Once Had a Tough and Tumble Street Fight.

While a minister to Washington the late Judge Lamar was once knocked down in the street by a carriage. Everybody else was alarmed at the accident, but he quite leisurely remarking: "This is only the second time in my life that I have been knocked down."

"Years ago, when I was just entering politics, I had a dispute with a local celebrity whom we all knew about my house as 'Uncle Jimmy.' He was a very powerful fellow, and when I saw his wrath boiling up I knew that I had no chance for my life if he once got after me. He was seated in a chair, and at something I said he came so savagely that I saw he was about to make a spring in my direction like a flash I drew a pistol, covered him with it and exclaimed: 'Uncle Jimmy, if you attempt to rise from that chair I will shoot you!'

"Uncle Jimmy concluded not to rise, but he swore vengeance. Not long afterwards I was in a cross roads store talking to some of my constituents when I heard an excitant voice say out behind me: 'Lamar, I've got you now!' The next instant I felt the flat of an ax back of my head and went to the floor in a heap.

"As soon as I could pick myself up we clinched and went down again. He was on top. My friends tried to separate us, but we kept rolling and tugged at him he cried out in a whining voice, 'I ain't holding him he's holding me.'

"The bystanders thought that why I kept so silent. They now discovered that I had twice Uncle Jimmy's finger between my teeth, and I would not let go till he was entirely cry-enough."

A COREAN FEMALE BANDIT.

She Smokes With a Sword a Traveler Who Tried to Make Love to Her.

The Shanghai Gazette prints very full reports of the exploits of a female bandit in Corea who has spread the terror of her name all around Seoul, the capital, and whose nerve is said to be equaled by her beauty. These have been rumors of her predatory exploits for months, but the first definite news was brought to Seoul by a trader from the northern province of Corea, who was journeying to the capital to buy furs and had to sell a stock of furs and other things.

When about twenty miles from the capital the trader had to pass through a lonely forest. Suddenly from behind a tree appeared a woman, and the procession of coolie porters and guards was stopped by her imperative demand for toll. The coolies turned their ranged but had been known to kill travelers who tried to resist them, seeing the bandit was young and good-looking, tried to make love to her but his advances were met in a way that made his lute cool. Instead of responding by words to his high-flown compliments on her beauty she took a sword in a scabbard sword and cut him over the shoulder.

The sight of blood flowing from his veins so alarmed both the guard and coolies that they ran away in a panic, leaving the trader to the mercy of the bandit, who ordered him to depart at once for Seoul under pain of instant death. There was no choice for him so, leaving all his goods in the woman's hands, he set out for the capital, where he arrived in a wretched condition.

Rags for Russian Jews.

An important law which will mitigate the severe measures to which the Jews have been subjected in Russia for years past has been proposed at the ministry of the interior at St. Petersburg. Jews living in villages and towns situated within the western provinces, which has a breadth of fifty versts, will have the right of continuing to reside there whenever they have now in force deprives them of this privilege unless they set up in their present abodes prior to October 27, 1891. The new scheme is to be discussed by the council of the empire. Meanwhile the prohibition against the Jews from the villages, and pleading it over the head and in like is to be advanced beyond the Methodists been passed and savagely attacked the farmer, who had to rescue two of them shot Holcombe in the shoulder, but he escaped with his life and rifle, gun, and, aided by the boys, drove the Methodists over the line into South Carolina.

Very Common Manners.

Boston culture is not excluded, even the house servants know it by sight. Witness the following recent occurrence: Dorothy is only comfortable circumstances, with one servant, a girl who is a young gentleman to dinner. After he had gone the guest was asked by her mother, where the servant said to her mistress: "I noticed he never said a word of thanks." Dorothy's mother said that you mean by that." "Why, a whipped word or two, and the undertaker hurried out. It caught at one sitting before, and I resolved to try the experiment again. I have done so, and it has always proved very fetching indeed.

NEW USE OF PHOTOGRAPHY.

Pictures of the Whole French Army Are Kept for Identification.

A French photographer lately invented a process by which a bit of ordinary paper—the leaf of a book, for example—can be made sensitive to the light without affecting the rest of the page.

Acting on his hint the French war minister has begun to take the portraits of conscripts and recruits on the leaf of a book, showing their height, complexion, age, etc.; and the champions and well-dressed of Spain, but careful inquiries at Madrid failed to supply any definite information on the subject. Last summer, on reading over an old number of Cosmos (Paris, 1887), I found a brief paragraph referring to a pigmy race living been found in the province of Isarcena, Spain, who had slightly Mongolian eyes, yellow, broad, square faces, height from 1 to 1 meters to 1.15 meters and red hair.

An Austrian gentleman recently told me he had seen in the market place at Isarcena some very ugly, undersized peasants, with broad faces and mahogany-colored red hair.

You will see that these accounts all agree substantially, and that these dwarfs and those of Africa are precisely similar.

I have got a good deal of information from an old Spanish woman who belonged to a half breed negro family and who says there are in such families frequently some pure negroes who have red tufts of wool and are as small as ordinary small boys. But these tufts of wool are peculiarly characteristic of dwarf races nearly everywhere.

It is most fortunate that they live in the Congo Free State, and not in Tonkin, within a little more than a half day's journey from Tonkinese. Some beastly-seekers or tourists in the south of France are perhaps feel inclined to pay a visit to these little people.

SHE WENT HOME.

Did Not Believe in a Husband Who Wished to Be Single.

"And who, pray, is Doria?" was the question that startled Mr. Brown (who is addicted to that ill-considered habit of talking in his sleep, as he wakes up) from his peaceful slumbers, and waylaid the minister, and, while some of the party patrolled the road, others, as one of them who turned queen's evidence expressed it, "used their swords."

They plead in defense that they were about to carry out the orders of the maharajah in consulting the act. The court held that, as orders had been given, but decided that they constituted no defense, and sentenced two of the party to death and others to various terms of penal servitude. Adequately to appreciate this affair it should be remembered that Ulwar is not a wild hill state on the outer confines of India, but an ancient principality in the heart of the country, within a short distance of Delhi. The late maharajah has received an English education, and Ulwar is in many respects accounted an excellently administered state.

HE WAS CALLED.

Brother Young Finds the Preacher too Much for Him.

The Mormon Creek neighborhood has a negro preacher whose reputation for curious ways of demonstrating liquity bids fair to rival Brother Gardner. Recently, while hauling his congregation over the coals, he said:

"Stan' up dar, Brudder Albert Young; I want ter see yer. No wonder you is sleepy dis mornin' an' has to squat way back dar behine de door. You know wine you's at, kin' ettin' I heerd you jess baffle de over what dat Bible was gwiber, close to de coal yard in town, an you was howlin' out:

"'Give my fat man down in the corner, Give my fat man down in the corner, You gotta jump an' shake yo' shoulders my fat, Jump an' do dat yo' shoulders my fat.'

In imitation of the offending member the pastor sang these lines at the top of his powerful voice, keeping time by patting himself vigorously and knocking a resounding backstop. Crashing he glared at Brother Young and said:

"Now, of you gwin to show yer penitance, you walk rite up hyeh an' exorgation an' kun over de ais into what de Bible pall you for calling dat dance."

Amid the silence Brother Young handed over several dimes and nickels, explaining in a low voice that he had lost the rest. The pastor pocketed the fine and proceeded with his sermon, a vivid description of eternal fire and the personal appearance of the devil.

TO KEEP THE WATER OUT.

She Was From Boston, But Has Didn't Know Boats.

She was from Boston, a sweet, simple thing, lovely to look upon, and almost good enough to eat, but she knew nothing of the ways and strains of life. But she thought she did, oh, yes, and had an idea in her head that what she didn't know wasn't worth knowing.

So one day in her Detroit boarding house, when the weather threatened a spring freshet, she went to the landlord and said:

"I have some trunks in the basement. Do you think the water will get into them?"

"Dunno," answered the landlord, who had his money in advance. "It's been a foot deep now outside, and rising."

"Dear, dear, how perfectly dreadful! I have a wardrobe in those trunks that I value at $10,000."

"Shu, now," answered the heartless man, why ain't you a swearing of it?"

"Something must be done and done at once. Are there windows to this subterranean storeroom?"

"There are, mum, several."

"Then I have a plan. Go at once and have bars put across the windows."

"You've. Might I ask what for?"

"To keep the water out!"

GOING TO FIX HIM.

A Boy's Inquiring Mind Grasps a Broad Assertion as a Fact.

Parents cannot be too careful how they answer the apparently trivial questions of their children. It would almost seem as if a child's dictionary were a second edition of the age. Here is an illustration:

"Pa," said a little chap to his father, "what does a man mean when he says he will fix you?"

"Mean that he'll do him up," answered the father, briefly.

"But, then, what does 'do him up' mean?"

"Brother: You ask too many questions, child. It means that he is going to kill him."

The little fellow was silenced for a time, but, as events proved, he thought over the matter. Soon after he was taken ill, and the family doctor being absent, a strange physician was summoned. Left alone with him for a few moments, the little fellow began to ask questions.

"Going to cure me, doctor?" he inquired.

"Yes, yes, my little man," said the doctor, who was preparing a dose. "I'm going to fix you."

What was the doctor's surprise to see a small, white-robed figure dart from the bed and make a bee-line for the door, through which he disappeared. The astonished medical man followed him and found him sobbing in his mother's arms. To her he was relating his fears that the doctor intended to "fix" him in the sense that his father had defined the word to him a few weeks before.

Epileptic Infancy of Great Men.

Sir Andrew Clark is reported as saying at a meeting recently held in London to promote the founding of a colony for epileptics: "It was a cognitive fact, and has been proved by specialists, that a large proportion of our great men, from Newton to Charles Darwin, were sickly in their infancy—in fact, they had been epileptics—and yet what they had attained to manhood they were capable of great things."

A Narrow Escape.

A farmer in Camden county, last week, fell asleep under a tree. While slumbering, with his head against the tree, his dog ran after a large gray squirrel, which, in its haste to reach a place of safety, jumped in the farmer's mouth, taking it for a knot-hole. The farmer, not being used to raw game, disgorged the squirrel with an effort, and it is said has not fully recovered yet.

Shamrock and Shamrock.

NOT ONLY CHILDREN.

But Even Fish Will Risk Their Lives for Sugar.

"I never knew that fish liked sugar," said Garnett C. Swift, "until some three years ago. At that time a small incident illustrated to me the truth of my present statement. My parents live at Green Bay, Wis., and in the month of July, 1891, I decided to go home for two weeks. The old house stands at the edge of the bay, and across a little stream that empties into the bay, and within a stone's throw, is a wooden wagon bridge. One afternoon I started from town to walk home, and then I remembered that I had been advised to bring a package of sugar along.

"I turned back and secured it, and then started for home. On this little bridge I stopped to view some salmon that were wriggling about in the sunlight. I rested my package on the railing and forgot everything but the shining sands on the bottom. Then the sugar tumbled in. The paper broke, of course, and there I had food for the fishes. The evil being irreparable, I began to amuse myself in the minutest way. The shoal increased in number, and they all lung about that sugar. Big fish came, too, and chased the minnows away. I went home and brought back a line and hook. The shoal fished. I felt regaled for the loss of my sugar, and the fishes seem to have enjoyed the feast. I felt that I had given them a good time, and so I

DROWNED AT A PICNIC.

SIX PERISH AT A MINNESOTA RESORT.

Three Thousand People Homeless and Three Million Dollars Loss by Fire at Fergus Falls Yesterday—A Rural and County Blaze.

Full Line Like Wonds.

—A sad accident befell a picnic party Wednesday afternoon at Lake Alice, one mile and a half from Alexandria Springs, about six miles southeast of Fergus Falls, Minn. Esther Tonne, John Gunnas and daughter, and Mrs. Bertine got in Tonne's row boat, went to the outline for water, and in going out to the drive along the south side of the spring, which is very deep and large, something suddenly slid from the water's edge. In some way the boat became frightened, jumping off the bank and upsetting all but the water drowning three and the rescue. Their screams attracted the attention of the grasshoppers, who rushed to the scene, but too late to save life. The bodies of Tonne Gunnas and daughter were recovered, but Mrs. Bertine was unable to find the body of Mr. Tonne. Much praise is bestowed upon all concerned and much regretted. Mrs. Bertine leaves one child.

Fergus, N. D., is in ashes. The fire started Wednesday afternoon in a rubbish pile on Central street. Among the principal Fergus sufferers are Hotel Dakota, dry goods, Crane's restaurant, Magill's restaurant, Dakota Grocery, Fergus Falls water buildings, Western Union Telegraph office, Northern Pacific, Merchants' National Bank, Daily Herald, Northern Pacific Hotel, Fergus Falls Tribune, real estate, Fergus Falls Mercantile, Hagen, Dr. Wheeler, Dr. Wheeler, Dr. Dowling, and John Dorey. Insurance on a business value about one million dollars. Flowing drug store, Valley & Lamb, grocery, Hotel Dakota, Dr. Wheeler, Dr. Dowling, Hotel Dakota, Dr. Dowling, Dry Goods Dakota, Dr. Dowling, Dakota Dry Goods, Northern Pacific Hotel

Northern Michigan News.

The work of constructing the Boyne City railroad is about completed.

T. S. Kinert, of Indian River, has leased the U. S. Hotel at Boyne City and took possession last week.

The Sea has appointed a committee of one hundred to lustle for the location of the new insane asylum in that burg.

Decoration Day revealed the fact that their are twenty-six gold soldiers buried in Petoskey; viz., twenty-four in Greenwood, one in the Catholic and one in the old Indian church-yard.

Cadillac gets its water from Clam Lake. Recently dead lizards and fish have been coming ashore, and the people think that what is not good enough for lizards is not good enough for them.

The G. R. & I. railway is making big improvements all along their line. The reverse curve on the Boyne Falls hill has been taken out entirely and in another place the track has been lowered four feet to make a perfect grade.

In the U. S. Circuit Court last week Judges Wood and Jenkins rendered their decision against the opening of the World's Fair on Sundays. Judge Grosscup has not rendered his decision as yet, but it will not alter the final decision. The Court holds that the U. S. Government absolutely controls Jackson Park and that the acceptance of the $2,500,000 by the World's Fair people as a gift, made the closing clause operative.

Frank Ives, who used to play ball for the Petoskey club, and who afterwards blossomed out as a professional billiardist, defeating all comers until he was champion of America, has just defeated Roberts, the English champion and Ives is now the champion of the world. He was born in Plainwell, this state, and is a little fellow who never seemed to be good for much but to play ball. But he made his mark in the billiard world.

Grand Traverse Herald: For many years the Herald has advocated a railroad from Traverse City over to the lake shore, through Leelanaw county. The Herald's "narrow gauge" was a standing joke for a good many years. The road is coming now, probably, but the gauge has widened out to the standard. The Herald is able to announce this week a most important addition to the rail facilities of Traverse City. The Manistee & Northeastern has already done much for Traverse City, and has helped very materially to make this a railroad center. The management of this road now purpose running a line to the lake shore. The new road will leave the main line at or a little south of Carp Lake (Pouch) run to Cedar City, the one a little north of Maple City, but so close to the town that the station will probably be named for that living village. From that point the line is not fully determined. It may go north of Miller's Hill, skirting that sightly outlook and thence to the shore at Glen Arbor and on to Glen Haven, or it may take Bardickville in its winding way, thence on around the shore of Glen Lake on to Glen Arbor and Glen Haven. The surveys only can determine the route from Maple City. But the half-way of the road is an assured fact. And what is of great importance to Traverse City is the fact that a separate train service will have to be put on, running directly between this city and the Lake Michigan shore. The distance will be about twenty five to twenty-seven miles.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Thos. Forman, of Petoskey, was in town on Tuesday.

Alex Crego, road commissioner, has resigned.

C. W. Smith, of Charlevoix, visited last week at W. C. Mear's, and did some trout catching while here.

Thos. Denton and wife are the owners of a fine young boy who arrived last Tuesday. Weight nine pounds.

Harner, of Petoskey, was in town last week and prevailed on some of the boys being measured for new suits.

Jay Price and his brother have been in town for a few days trying to organize a Maccabee tent.

The Ellsworth Lumber Co., have put in a planer at their mill and Chas. Gotham will have charge of it this summer.

Everybody went out to the social at Joe Dennis' last Saturday evening.

Got wet? "Well, yes we got wet," that's what Will Bell said when interviewed on the subject last Friday morning. While out rowing on the lake last Thursday night Will Bell and Belle Raney in changing positions upset their boat but were rescued by Will Superman and Miss Charlotte after they had been in the water for some time.

The telephone wire is strung past here and the instruments will be in in a few days.

Notice elsewhere, a notice for bids on our new school house which will be erected this summer.

Will Bell who has been bookkeeping for the Pine Lake Iron Co., left Monday for Petoskey, where he has a job in the express office.

D. Parks is painting his new building this week. Fred Gillett and Bob Stafford, of Norwood, have the job.

Tickets.

In accordance with the custom of past years, a limited number of tickets will be issued for the graduating exercises to be held at the Opera House on Tuesday evening next. On Monday at ten o'clock, 450 tickets will be placed on free distribution, at Hesler's drug store, where they can be obtained by adults until the supply is exhausted. Those who desire to do so can reserve seats for 5 cents each. The proceeds of this fee will be applied to defraying the expenses of the ball.

The gallery will be reserved for the 8th, 9th and 10th departments who may wish to occupy them. Parents of children in the primary department are requested to secure tickets for them in person if they wish them to attend, and to keep them in charge at the ball.

—The Gipsies are here again.

Fast time to the World's Fair.

The C. & W. M. Ry. new "White City Flyer" leaves Grand Rapids at 7:15 a. m. every day and arrives at Chicago at 12:20 p. m. stopping at Midway Plaisance, right at the entrance to the Fair Grounds. It's a great train and a popular one, as the increasing patronage shows.

If you cannot take that train, there is another fast train at 1:25 p. m. and one at 11:00 p. m., both good ones.

Both day trains have Wagner parlor-cars, and night train Wagner sleeper. Through coaches on all of them.

GOVERNMENT RED TAPE.

An Unfortunate Clerk's Petition Refused in Official Style.

A French government clerk entered the private office of the head of his department to ask for a fortnight's holiday. The official received him with his usual affability and told him to hand in his request in writing.

"Oh! I did not think that was necessary if I applied to you in person," said the clerk.

"Oh! yes; in fact, it is indispensable."

"Then I will go back to the office."

"No need to do that; we have pen, ink and paper; sit down and write."

The clerk obeyed. The petition was written out, signed and folded.

"Now," said the functionary, "you have only to present it."

"To whom?"

"To me, forsooth!" And, taking the petition, he wiped his glasses, carefully adjusted them, read the document from beginning to end, placed it on file along with a number of similar applications and then remarked with the utmost gravity: "I have read your petition and regret exceedingly that I am compelled to inform you that I cannot accede to your request."

Imagine the feelings of the poor clerk!

—John Monroe Jr., will bring another pile driver from the north shore to work on the foundation of the D. M. Ferry & Co. warehouse the work on the railroad approach to the transfer dock is nearly done.

—It is reported on good authority that the C. & W. M. R. R. Co. has sued the Pine Lake Iron Co. for $20,000 damages, for failure to perform its part of the contract entered into when the Ironton branch was built.

—The steamer City of Grand Rapids returned from the World's Fair Friday. Her passengers all unite in saying that the first trip to the World's Fair was in every way a success, and that there is comfort and convenience in the plan adopted by Capt. Wilbur.

—The steamer City of Grand Rapids will leave Traverse City for the World's Fair to-morrow (Thursday) evening. If enough passengers can be secured here she will leave Charlevoix at 2 p. m. on that day. The fare will be $[illegible], with all the privileges previously advertised. She will be six days at the Fair.

—Sheriff Myers spent Monday and Tuesday in town.

—No, thank you; we take no interest in the coming Fourth of July. We don't want to hear a live cracker or a brass band on that day. We want to go far from the busy haunts of men, and remain in the enjoyment of the happy memory of last Fourth at Charlevoix, and the big house once rotten. We are not patriotic enough this year to buy a toy balloon. Hope it will rain all day and all night.

—We don't care for precedent nor custom, the school board should see that all classes of our public schools are graduated in good style without expense to them. Charlevoix can afford to graduate its scholars without their being obliged to assess them selves for the expenses of the occasion. Let us graduate our boys and girls with same pride and interest that we would have in their marriage—pay the bills, with the possible exception of the preacher.

—A committee of Baxter Post, G. A. R. have issued the following "The Annual County Camp Fire of the G. A. R. and W. R. C. will be held at Horton's Bay on the 29th and 29th of June. The steamer Gordon will leave Charlevoix at 7a. m.; fare round trip, 50 cents. At the last Camp Fire it was voted to have a basket picnic on this occasion, consequently parties will make provision accordingly. Horton's Bay will furnish coffee. Horton's Bay is a very pleasant place in which to spend a day, as those who attended a picnic there on a former occasion can testify, and made from G. A. R. associations, may expect an enjoyable time. All are cordially invited to attend."

—The services at the Congregational church last Sabbath evening was conspicuous in the chain of events attending the Charlevoix High School Commencement. The class of '93, and a large congregation listened to the baccalaureate sermon preached by Rev. W. H. Macphersons. The effort did eminent credit to the speaker. It was thoughtful and eloquent, pregnant with the spirit of intellectual progress and laudatory in the appeal for noble thought and action in the realm of learning. The speaker lucidly portrayed the distinction between wisdom and learning, and pointed out the dangers that lie in the pathway of the student. Rev. David Tagle, and Rev. Mr. Sly participated in the services. The church was tastefully decorated with plants and flowers.

—Prof. H. M. Enos, for the past eight years Superintendent of the Charlevoix schools, has resigned. The school board accepted the resignation, although it was against the wish of every member of the board. The retirement of Prof. Enos will cause much sincere regret. His record here has been marked by a conscious and intelligent application to the duties of his office. He has, during the eight years, been not only the official head of our schools, but he has been a part of them, we may say, the nerve centre of every department. No class has been graduated that Prof. Enos has not regarded as almost members of his family, and with the diplomas which they received from his hand, went the tenderest sentiments of fatherly pride and regard. The alumni of the Charlevoix high school, could they have a voice in the matter, would emphatically deny his right to resign. Added to his attainments as an educator, is the dignity and probity of character which constitutes ideal citizenship. We hope his resignation will be reconsidered, but wherever he goes, the high regard of the people of Charlevoix go with him.

—One of a party of Harbor Springs Indians, who got on a royal Chippewa root here last Saturday evening, was around Sunday morning with a face that exhibited unmistakable evidences of having come in contact with something. It was the restraining influence of a barbed wire fence—an accursed invention of the palefaces. He was on his climatic way to the wigwam of one of his tribe over toward Lake Michigan, when he came in contact with this invisible thing, calculated to restrain cows, but not Indians. "Ka way-ching-a-bung; ki-ya-ta, cho-ne-ka-man!" He backed up and charged into the fence, got one leg through below, the head, through above and there he was found by a Hayes white man, also bound home with a jag, who was attracted from the road by the yells of the visiting Chippewa. He was a badly coagled up Indian, and when released turned around and came to town after more firewater. But it was Sunday morning, and the disgusted jibaway was compelled, against his will, to sober up.

"NON NOBIS SOLUM."

The Graduating Class of '93 Join the High School Alumni.

"Not for ourselves merely." That is a noble class motto, and worthy of the Charlevoix High School graduating Class of '93.

Roy D. Perce, Winnie Bartholomew, Lillian Eaton, Chloe McCartney, Mary Wood, Mary Holmes and Annie McCartney, last night, at the Opera House, received their diplomas from the hands of Superintendent Enos, and to-day the High School Alumni is larger by seven worthy members.

The limited time at our command between the event and the hour of our going to press, prevents such notice as the occasion merits, and we will not particularize.

But the class of '93 came out with credit to themselves, to their excellent tutor, and to the school. Mr. Perce looked somewhat lonesome among the six pretty girls, but he bore his honors well. Every member of the class, in their program numbers, drew from the large audience, merited applause.

The stage was elaborately trimmed the class motto occupying the most conspicuous place, and floral decorations added beauty and fragrance. The members of the class were recipients of beautiful floral offerings.

The Alumni reception to the class occurs to-night at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The water is higher than it has been before this season, and gives promise of remaining so.

Capt. James Holbeu, of South Arm, has sold the schooner T. C. Wilson to Chicago parties, and will settle down on his farm.

The Connable Fishing Co's tug Parvelee has gone to the Soo for the balance of the season.

Inspectors Dodge and Scott looked over the tug Martin last Saturday.

Three of the World's Fair steamers have been libeled for unpaid coal bills.

The schooner Mineral State, on shore at the Manitous, has been released and towed to Manitowoc.

The value of the freight jettisoned from the steamer Russia is placed at $7,500.

Robert Sinclair goes as engineer on the tug Martin.

It is quite probable that the steamer Gazelle, of St. Ignace, will be brought here to run on the Pine Lake route about July 1st.

The fishing tug Clara Belle was burned nearly to the water's edge at Petoskey one night last week. She will be rebuilt here.

Marine business at Chicago is so slow that several tugs have been placed in ordinary. Receipts of lumber have fallen to a lower point than in the past ten years.

The vessels owned by the lumber companies have been turned into other lines of traffic. Along the east shore of Lake Michigan a half dozen mills have shut down, and the rest of them are piling the lumber up rather than accept a reduction of $2 per thousand which lumbermen have been trying to force. There are a score of vessels lying at Chicago for which no cargoes of any kind can be found.

—We are becoming weary of hearing certain people talk about the unsafety of Lewis Opera House, generally when it costs 50 cents to get in. Last evening seats were free, and over 600 people occupied the hall. The fact is, the talk about the hall being unsafe is the absurd nonsense. A free medicine show will fill it to overflowing, as has been demonstrated.

—"St Plunkard" which played here last summer under auspicious circumstances, is booked for June 29.

—A change of card goes into effect on the C. & W. M. next Sunday, the 25th. The train leaving Chicago at 8:00 a. m., reaches here at 9:05, p. m.; the one leaving Chicago 5:35, p. m., arrives here at 7:20, a. m., the one leaving Chicago at 11:35 p. m., arrives here at 3:15, p. m. Trains going south leave here at 6:35, a. m., 2:00 p. m., and 9:05, p. m., arriving at Chicago at 6:50 p. m., 6:30 a. m., and 12:30 a. m.

—Mullen still has a few of those light suits left, selling for $10, cost $15.

COUNTRY ROADS.

There a post by an orchard,
Where I used to sit and
And I am that obscure dude
That about fresh once back,
Where I used to sit and
Is sitting out of doors
Is enough to an old
Is pretty cool, to write.

Here the sidewalks end in fresh
Upon a side street,
Where the sidewalks end in fresh
Are no people to meet,
Where the sidewalks end in fresh
For some hundreds and miles,
The sight makes me to think back
A thousand times or more.

In cities spring through sidewalks and
Our houses have to pass
Through sidewalks and over a month
With first warm days, come
No apples to the cider mill
Or pretty girls to meet

FINDING THE TREASURE.

It must be nearly fifty-five years ago now since the events happened. I was about sixteen, or twenty-one years of age and had made one voyage in the Golden Gem out and home to the West Indies and Honduras. The Golden Gem was schooner-rigged and was a little thing of about 250 tons burden. She was owned by the captain, a Welshman named Thomas Thomas and had made many voyages in the West Indies trade.

In our second voyage we took out a general cargo from London to Santos, on the South American coast; we had a fair average passage out, and it was the captain's intention after he had discharged our cargo there, to run up to Valparaiso and load up a cargo of nitrate for home, as usual.

However, when we were discharging at Santos we changed his mind, and, instead of going for nitrate, we sailed to Rio Janeiro and there loaded a lot of war material—guns, cannon, gunpowder and other stuff—for Valparaiso, for the government of Chili.

This was a longish voyage for the little Gem, but the Chili government were anxious to get their ammunition round quickly, and offered such a tempting freight that our captain could not resist the chance of making a big haul.

All went well, and in due course we arrived at our destination and discharged our cargo successfully. We learnt at Valparaiso that trouble was brewing between Chili and Peru and that hostilities might break out at any time. This, of course, accounted for the anxiety displayed for the war material we had brought round.

Captain Thomas had intended going to Callao, in Peru, for a cargo of guano for some port on our way home, but with such a close prospect of war between the two countries he concluded to give the idea up.

We had been discharged some few days and our captain was on the point of sailing in ballast when a messenger from his agents came down to the schooner and asked him to go up to their office.

Night passed and we saw nothing of our skipper till next day, when he came on board and ordered us aft.

Of course we were all agog to know what was going on. Every man and boy felt a keen personal interest in the life, the craft, and when the mate was sent for to join the captain and the stranger we guessed something special was on.

After awhile the mate came forward, and we all clustered round him to hear the news.

"Have any of you any experience in diving?" said he. "I mean," he continued, "going down indeed in heavy dress."

"Yes, sir," answered two of the men—Bob Green and Tom Swift. They had been employed in some harbor works in England and knew all about the business.

"That's first rate," replied the mate. "The captain is thinking of going on a little expedition where you will be of some use, and I'll put down your names there will be a nice little bonus all round for you."

It appeared that the stranger had chartered the schooner to sail for the Lobos Island, which was a little bit of an island about 600 miles northward of Valparaiso.

The stranger was a Spanish grandee named Don Carlos de Avilgara, and from what had transpired in the cabin it seemed that a Spanish merchantman, had, many years before, been wrecked on the island and become a total loss and none of her crew had ever been heard of.

Two sets of diving dress were sent on board, with the accompanying pumps and other arrangements, and another experienced diver was engaged to superintend matters.

After we had got our supplies of fresh provisions on board the anchor was weighed and we stood out to sea.

The run was soon accomplished and by noon of the third day we were at anchor off the western side of the island. After making all snug aloft we got a boat out and Don Alfaqui, the captain, Harris, the diver whom we had shipped at Valparaiso and four men, of whom I was one, started off for the shore.

The island was surrounded by a belt of coral reefs, which in ordinary fine weather did not much marring their wherry alongside, so they lay quiet and tranquilcurrent about a fathom or so of water.

But when the sea ran at all high and the long rolling swell of the Pacific Ocean broke from one end to the other, then the vicious, wicked-looking sharp teeth showed their ugly teeth.

When we got ashore we pulled the boat up, and then, under the captain's instructions, we separated and spread ourselves over the shore to hunt for any remains or signs of the lost Spaniard.

After a short time we heard a hail from the northern end of the island, and, hurrying on, we found the captain and others grouped around a mass of black and rusting timbers, which we immediately recognized as the debris of a wrecked vessel. This was clinch proof that at some time or another a vessel of considerable size had been cast up at this spot.

Don Alfaqui was satisfied that his quest was here, so after we had eaten our fill of food, hunting for further evidence, we returned to our boat and went aboard.

It was then arranged that a camp should be set up on the island, and the men, with the three divers and three other men, should prosecute their operations from land. This would leave the schooner free to put to sea in case of bad weather, and also allow diving operations to be commenced at once, by the aid of a boat on the inner side of the coral reef.

Next day we were busy getting the things ashore, and it took us till well on to noon before this was completed; then, while some of the men commenced rigging up a couple of tents, the tent was made ready, and Harris, the head-diver, with his suit and accessories, went off, with captain Thomas and the rest, to make his first reconnoitre on the margin of the reef, commit the remains of the crew on shore.

I went in the boat with them, and I assure you I felt uneasy likewise when he got rigged up in his sea-proof suit of clothes, with his wonderful looking metal helmet, with its great big staring glass eyes, he appeared like some monstrous amphibious monster.

For some while we had no intimation from him, beyond his occasional appearance more or less all. After we had been down ten minutes or perhaps a quarter of an hour, we could see the bubbles of air rise and burst as he got it to the surface, we found the cord made fast to a small, impoverished chest.

The iron was all rusted and rotten, but the box itself was hard as preserved. We soon had it open and its contents out. They consisted chiefly of papers and books, but from their long immersion in the sea we could make nothing of them, they fell to pieces as we handled them—the ink had disappeared into lines of indecipherable status.

The books were little better, seldom as they were, but we hoped, when they were dried, something might be learned from them.

While we were examining these we received the call from Harris that he was coming up, so we started hauling in the slack of the signal line, and in a few minutes his monstrous bedeggled rose up alongside, so he climbed up the rope ladder.

We had chosen our spot so fortunately that we had anchored right over the sunken ship. The wreck had settled almost upright, but was much covered with sand and broken coral, she had so literally laid there for years.

He had found the box pinned to the cabin gangway, he gave it as his opinion that, with time, we could get at everything in the wreck. The difficulty would be the clearing out the sand and rubbish, which had drifted into the cabins and below the decks in every direction.

Don Antigara was much elated with this report, and it certainly looked as if the information he had obtained had been more a problematical basis of truth in it. We took the exact bearings of our anchorage and then went ashore to make preparation for commencing hard work on the morrow.

Next morning we started at daylight to get our boats loaded for our first day's operations, and, after a hearty breakfast, we put off with the three divers. The boats were cutters, and we had each a boat-load of men, that two divers could work at once.

Everything being in readiness, down they went, and we all waited anxiously for the first intimation of their search. We could get some idea of their movements from the working of the air lines, and presently we got the call for hauling up, which we did, and found another iron-bound box.

The hauling-up operation had rolled a mass of yellow doubloons and silver dollars. Then we sent up a chest of triangle, which the men on shore and on board schooner took up, and repeated again and again.

We were still in the midst of our excitement when we noticed the diver here hauling to and operate a similar chest; this was as far away could scarcely clustered with our own, and we waited in breathless suspense while it was being piped open.

Then another hurrah "can them be, indeed the contents, and Captain Thomas, who was in the boat, held up his hat, from which he showered a stream of gold and silver.

The day could wait no longer for the divers below without leaving where the treasure was found, so we gave them the signal to come up, and as soon as they were released from their helmets he commenced to pry them with questions.

They had got into the main cabin, in which they found nothing of importance; then, carefully examining the sideboard the cabin, they had come on a door differing from the other doors opening out of the cabin, by the aid of their crowbars they soon broke open the half rotten door, and found the place contained a number of more-chests, large and small. Coming to the sentinels of the entrance they had made, and the weight of the chests, they had much difficulty in getting out the two they had sent up.

After a short spell of afternoon, during which we refreshed the inner man, Bob Green and Harris again went down to work, and we sat anxious and expectant, waiting for their signal to haul in.

The minutes seemed hours as the time passed slowly by and when near, it had so have had created an intense length and still no summons, we scarcely knew how to act.

While we were discussing and guessing the reasoned there was a tell-tale line gave a sudden jerk, which was followed immediately by the signal "An accident."

Then all was quiet for a few minutes, when the air-bubbles from our man bub began to move and he signaled that he was coming up.

When he got to the surface he could scarcely get aboard and we had to pull him in; then, hastily removing his face-piece, we waited full of anxiety for him to speak.

He made no sign, however, but lay motionless in the bottom of the boat, quickly we discovered his inlaper and poured some brandy down his throat, this pulled him round, and after a bit he told his tale.

He and Harris had finished breaking open the door, and were lifting down one of the cases, when at the lower leaves burst asunder, and the top boxes had fallen on them, he was thrown backward and fell through the doorway, while one of the chests had on jammed his legs against another that it was some minutes before he could get free.

He found Harris prostrate in the corner near the door, with a couple of chests crushing his legs and thighs; he lifted one of the boxes off him, and then, finding himself growing faint, he hastened up as fast as he could.

Tom Swift, the other seaman, kindly dressed his diving suit and went down to help poor Harris, if he were not too late.

How eagerly we watched for a sign from Tom. Presently it came, "All right."

Surely some mistake. How could he mean all right? Before we had time to think came the signal, "Coming up."

Then we neared the air line which supplied Harris from the other boat shortly more and nearer to us, in position, while the bubbles up which Tom was climbing marked and warned

"He's bringing him up," sounded Captain Thomas, as this thought flashed upon us all at the same instant.

The winding made progress, we listened and close, as we could feel from the way on the boat, and when he from appeared with his bubbles to his arms, which had been pinned them both into the boat.

Harris was alive yet, not seriously hurt, his legs were badly bruised, but no bones were broken.

Next day Tom and Bob got into the box of the chests, which all contained bars and ingots of gold and silver and metals. It was quite a little pile, they we had required the damaged cases, to get them on board. In the meantime Jose found chests which all had and they were broken and scattered about two hundred yards apart.

A long conclave of Don Antonio was held and the most advisable and the calculated ships were sent 4,000 all together.

We spent several more days search, but the search, for Harris, but without success, evidently the strong tide ran the side, where in which it had been stowed. Our camp was now broken up, and the Golden Gem was put on her homeward course.

As we had plenty of provisions on board, our captain agreed with the dons to double Cape Horn and sail direct for London, and they were now all anxious to get home safely.

Our captain's share of the treasure was to be 10 per cent, besides the freight already paid, so he stood to make somewhere about £4000, the two mates were to receive £500 apiece, and the men all where there were twenty, £200 each.

In due time we made the English channel and arrived in London safe and sound. We had some good news to work, and we all had our promised share of the captain's lost treasure. Some of us married and lived happy ever after.

COUNCIL FIRE, "EAGLES."

How a Member and Appointed a Master in Eastern Parlance.

She was young, stylishly dressed and very attractive looking. I had seen her quite often in the morning to take a constitutional in Central Park, with the "Y" friend, she strolled along the park, with an indolent air, quite in contrast with the bustle of the beau, and thought and dreamy, as she was apparently absorbed with her own thoughts.

A young man, also well dressed, happened to be passed by about this time and, noticing the fair creature seated before him, deliberately seated himself by her side. Obviously he was affronted by the presence of a newspaper. Occasionally however, he would cast an admiring glance at his fair neighbor, which was only, I think, but in a manner to encourage the latter, who, turned to address her.

"Beautiful day!" he remarked.

She looked up, smiled sweetly and said nothing.

"Do you live in New York?" he ventured.

She looked at him superiorly and then said in a low, musical voice, in deliberate tones. Her tone had in this instance a decided superiority of intellectual, which seemed to encourage the young man.

"What I say, sir, is none of your business," was the reply.

"Why, you are very pretty, I do you understand, sir?"

Still the same answer.

The young man then began to make signs, but without electing any further response, he finally gave up the attempt.

"You are mental, I, no doubt?" he ventured to remark.

"I am quite Legless."

Thinking to please her, I mean. Handsome—home—home" and looked at her inquiringly, as he seated himself on the bench.

"Yes, I am." Still the same well bred, but very cold, and, I fancied, a little bit of a sneer.

"Well, I am very pretty, I do you understand, sir?"

"Do you understand?"

The young man then began to make signs, but without electing any further response. He made another attempt.

"You are married, is, indeed?" he ventured.

"Yes, sir, I am married." Still the same well bred, but very cold, and, I fancied, a little bit of a sneer.

"Well, you are very pretty, I do you understand, sir?"

A New and Curious Law.

The following is the new law affecting the recording of instruments in Michigan, by the Deeds office. It explains itself:

SECTION 135. When any deed, land contract, plat of any town, or village, or addition to any town site, village plat or city, or other instrument for the conveyance of title to any real estate, shall presented to the register of deeds of any county in this State for record or filing in his office, he shall require of the person presenting the same a certificate from the Auditor General, or from the county treasurer of the county, whether there are any tax liens or titles held by the State, or any individual, against such piece or description of land sought to be conveyed by such instrument, and that all taxes due thereon have been paid for the five years preceding to the date of such instrument, and in default of the presentation of such certificate he shall not record the same until such certificate is secured and presented. The register of deeds shall note the fact upon said deed that such certificate has or has not been presented to him when such instrument is presented for record, and in case the person presenting such instrument shall refuse to procure such certificate, he shall endorse that fact upon said instrument, over his official signature, and shall refuse to receive and record the same: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the filing of any town or village plat for the purpose of incorporation, in so far as the gland therein embraced is included in a plat already filed in the office of the register of deeds, or in so far as the description of lands therein is not changed by such plat, nor to the filing of a copy of any town, village or city plat in case the original plat filed in the office of such register of deeds has been lost or destroyed, nor to any sheriff or commissioner's deed executed for the sale of lands under any proceeding in law, or by virtue of any decree of any of the courts of this State, or any deed of trust by an assignee, executor or corporation executed pursuant to any law of this State. A violation of the provisions of this section by any register of deeds shall be deemed a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, he shall be fined not to exceed one hundred dollars, and he shall further be liable to the grantee of any instrument so recorded for the amount of damages sustained, to be recovered in an action for debt in any court of this State.

The Charlevoix resort people are anxious to have Charlevoix put in an electric light plant. A prominent Kalamazoo reporter last week said: "I have no doubt that our people would guarantee $1,000 a season, and probably they would contribute half that amount on the other side. It will pay your people to put in a plant."

A Manistique teacher recently received the following excuse from a parent whose little girl had been absent from a school: "Dear Miss——: I wish to apprise you of the fact that the indisposition of my little daughter operated to prevent her from presenting an appearance at your recent pedagogic exercises, and hence this concise explanation is respectfully offered to subserve the interests of justice and in hopes that in the kindness of your heart, you may be induced to accept this excuse as valid, sufficient and satisfactory and may feel inclined to gratuitously condone the offense, if one has been committed.

"Si Plunkard" held the boards at the Lewis last night and a glance at the faces of the large audience during the progress of the performance was a sufficient indication that the farmer comedy and its rural simplicity had met full appreciation. There is something unique and entirely about the production of this agricultural extravaganza that is as taking as it novel. Its newness and the further fact that in the company there were no stalks serve to please wherever it is seen, and it is presented. The parade by the farmer band was good and the music was first-class. The company carries a fine orchestra and in its program introduces many musical novelties. Oregon Statesman, Portland.

A very important change in the game warden law takes effect July first. It continues the present system by allowing three game and fish wardens in each county, but they will be termed county wardens under the new law. The state warden is also authorized to appoint deputy wardens who can serve anywhere in the state, and who receive three dollars a day from the state for work they actually perform under his orders. But as there can not be more than ten deputies at any time, and as the whole amount expended must not exceed two thousand dollars a year, the office will not be desirable from a financial point of view. The law will, however, enable the state warden to have violations promptly attended to when the circumstances warrant sending a special deputy.

—It takes a live men to make a town. Dead men are only fit to inhabit cemeteries. If they are really decidedly dead all over, we tenderly lay them away in the sleep of the tomb; if they are dead to all enterprise and spirit, outside the narrow lines of their own selfish interest and yet persist in walking around, moving their callous-ed hearts and conscience when real business is wanted to pant and throb with vigor, they are only like the drone bees, in the way until they are stung to death and dragged outside the hive of legitimate industry. Twelve really live men are worth more to a town than a round thousand of such useless material that lays around like rubbish in a running stream that is aching and foaming to run mills and factories. Live men bless and dead men curse a town.

—The Crusaders are still at work at the Baptist church. Last week they were reinforced by the Major in command of the Slate Force, and others. Two of our up-lake exchanges, we think, have been unnecessarily harsh in their criticism of the Crusaders. We have yet to hear of any harm they have done society. They are orderly, mind their own business on the street, and are evidently sincere. If their work here results in the emancipation of one soul from the thraldom of sin, they will have done good work. We have had no occasion to change our opinion of their "music," but will be the last to throw a straw in their way to hinder them. There was a time when the Salvation Army was considered an organization of functional tramps. It is now recognized by most Christian people as a power in the realm of religious work. If the Crusaders can quicken the conscience of some of our young men, or reclaim one poor soul, we wish them God speed.

School Matters.

The Charlevoix schools will start in next term with an entirely new corps of teachers.

The new superintendent has not yet been decided upon, and three teachers are yet to be employed. The following appointments have been made: Miss Allie Waters, late of East Jordan, will take the first intermediate; Miss Josie Peterson, of Fowlerville, second intermediate; Miss Mary Chaplin, of L'Anse, assistant superintendent; Miss Chapel, of Grand Haven, primary.

Of the old teachers, Misses Kaye and Stover go to Petoskey; Miss Litzan to a school near Chicago; Miss Dean to Cadillac, and Miss Tracy gets married.

Chicago Club.

The following cottages are open for the season: Keith, Wilson, Hoyt, Funk, Humphrey, Hatchford, Moore.

On the Club cottages: E. F. Philbrick, Concord, N. H.; Geo. S. Merrill and family, Boston, Allegn Merrill, Cambridge, Mass.

Col. A. C. Litchfield and family, of Petoskey, were guests of the Club last Friday.

Bicycles.—These are the latest in shoes. We have them in many pretty styles and colors for ladies, misses and children. Spencer, reliable shoe man, Petoskey. tf

Charlevoix Summer Resort.

Col. Meier, of St. Louis, and family, are in their cottage.

O. M. Allen and family are settled down in the Blue Belle cottage.

Mrs. Gulley has arrived on the grounds for the season.

Mrs. Richards and three daughters, of St. Louis, are here for the summer.

Mrs. scott and children, of St. Louis, have a cottage, and Mrs. Forbes and two daughters are located here for the summer.

The Randalls, of Cincinnati, have the swing cottage for the summer.

In Sheep's Clothing.

By Capt. Ormond Steele

CHAPTER XXIII.

Before calling on Doctor Hedgeon Captain Fox had laid back long and, to himself, satisfactory conversation with Owen of the Montana.

He had brought from the ship a trifle quiet on Texas, part of the plunder of a Spanish galleon, with a fine sword, a rifle, jewel-hilted dagger, and several wonderful jabots, among them a revolving cannonette to the chief.

As the travellers now in one were not invested in anything and a half after this, the lad wanted present may seem out of place in the land, but the Porto Ganno lad practical, resolutely, very Gonzaq, of course, a century before the date of our story.

The chief and Fox parted with an understanding that they should meet on the morrow, when the day should be set for dispatching Ralph Benham.

Fox was so delighted with his prospects that he went at once to the inn, got a room, and changed his graceful costume for the gorgeous dress of a Spanish Major General, from head all.

As the sailing lad where Captain Dentata was at this time was only a nice or so from Sag Harbor, and was the property of Hayes, and provided with sleeping accommodations for one, he always went there when jaunted on business to be in town in the morning, instead of sleeping at the inn. He had an Indian's objection to sleeping in the village, and always felt cramped by meeting the windows and doors.

After sailing from Montauk as well as he could in the circular silver will which the Indian had presented to him, Fox was surprised at making a given clasher behind him, and, as he turned, saw Ralph Benham before mentioned, but, as Squire Condit, would be put it.

The fire lit by Hinah and Lotilla had nearly died out, leaving the place in a dull glow on the hearth that threw a pulsating, spectral light about the little apartment.

Though the open chicks and doorway Fuchs saw this night, but it did not surprise him, for it was customary on any of the Montauks to stop there, as his lodge to the Indian chief, and he knew he took his road.

Unless wanted badly on, his award making a shatter which to him had all the exciting novelty of a surprise.

Ralph Benham found the cabin, and coming almost behind the door, the latter opened inwards, he looked out upon the Indian.

The chief was lounging on the scarlet cloak and the gold cord, and it was evident that he was fond of the open doorway that Ralph recognized him.

The chief on seeing recognized the lad behind him by giving it a sick with his thumb, then he walked to the small dying fire, placed the scattered brands together, and, by some sort of the Major General's chapeau was fan, he started up a flame that lit up the interior of the uniform till he looked to be on fire and to sking on the little cinders of fire all over.

Without turning round, Chief, who now felt significantly important and warm, said aloud:

"When I am the friend of a white man he knows I am. And when I am the friend of a white man, he knows I am. Ralph Benham he had never been here."

"Ralph Benham is dead!" said a deep, sepulchral voice, that startled the young man.

Hinah was superstitious in his every fibre. Especially there lived no braver man, but he believed in ghosts and in supernatural agencies, and believed in he was even fond of them.

On turning round, which he did with great rapidity, he was standing with his back to the door, and the light falling on his pale face and blazing eyes, the erect and resolute form of Ralph Benham.

The chief gasped and staggered back as far as the contracted walls of the hut permitted. His eyes and every feature denoting the most intense fear and terror the best of reasons he supposed that Ralph Benham was dead, and that this was his spectre.

Ralph, with the advantage, and with that promptness and presence of mind which he always displayed when he called out, without changing his position, one hand to the door, and the other pointed, the other behind him and exclaimed:

"The dress you wear in the price of which I paid, and which I gave to you."

With trembling hands the chief unfastened the scarlet cloak and let it fall on the floor.

Take off that uniform. It is stained with my blood," said Ralph with the same blood-curdling tone.

Without a word the chief, who had remained back at the inn, the Eighteenth of Brumaire, and who, in the library believed was the ghost of Mr. Benham, and would be very—said sitting down.

"Now, tie down on that bed, and turn your face against the corner!" Ralph.

The chief with some evidences of reluctance, obeyed, and he was felt convinced that the spectre was going to give up his life and stay on here, with, or he might prefer to punish him with the scarlet cord.

This impression was made a certainty in the chief's mind when he heard Ralph Benham, the lad.

"I do not feel to die," said the chief, "The Montauks do not turn their faces to death, but you are a spirit and not and not an evil spirit. Before I die let me get rid of my sins and my sorrow."

"My doing that depends on the answer you give me. Tell me you sorry to me, truthfully," asked Ralph.

"I reply. I can do it in no other way."

"Can tell if you deceive me."

"That power is given only to spirits," "Will it make chief of the Mohawks, answer me?"

"I do not know at time. Come your eyes that you are farther away so my back. The chief obeyed him.

Ralph's object was to get the chief to confirm the seemingly impromptu story of Hinah, and, that, at the same time to cause all that I knew know about the buttons and conduct of Captain Kyle.

With a skill that would have excited the admiration of Squire Condit, and which he would have been certain to attribute to his own example, Ralph Benham put his questions and the chief answered, truthfully, but in a reluctantly Lotilla and Hinah, and providing by the chief, that, if he lied, that the companions of the Wanderer was indeed the infamous Ralph Kyle.

So far all had gone well, but it was not in Ralph Benham's nature to continue a second after he had fulfilled good purpose for which he had undertaken.

Confident that in any event he had the advantage of the Indian, he knew how they would be the cruel through which he had passed, and, in the hope that he was in the hands of a friend, he determined to reveal the fact that he was in the land.

Advancing to the side of the wooden cot on which the chief lay, he said, with fresh enthusiasm:

"Chief of the Montauks, you have answered me truly. I tell you I have pleased for my mother, though I never did you a wrong. Is not the continuity have been ever your friend?"

"You were Lion Heart, the woman I loved," groaned the chief.

"If she pretended to you, was that my fault?"

Hinah did not answer.

"You have become the partner of a bad man, the worst man that lives to-day, and in the world where brave spirits dwell. Hinah, you are a coward, the mighty Wanderer, cannot rest in the tabernacle of his descendant."

"Did he go to hell?"

"Yes, he was taken with the utmost severity but the sense of honor was so strong, that, when he felt that he was improved with the oddity and grotesqueness of the situation, he was absolutely forgetful of the many important things pressing on his attention. He, half, but, fortunately, altered so suddenly as to be seen in the speech of his other half.

"Now, I mean, you can live to a ripe old age if you promise me to do as I say. Will you agree?"

After a few seconds' hesitation, the chief replied:

"I will."

"Good then you must promise never to tell a lie, or to deceive."

"I am genuine."

"You must pledge yourself and the warriors of your tribe to help the officers of the law, and Hinah should they call on you?"

"I am promise that."

"And lastly you must give up all trickery and deceit, and, if you have been a good boy! Ralph Benham was alive," "Ralph Benham was alive," said the chief, "but don't ask me the other question, I can't tell you anything about it."

"Well, that be the time had come to confess himself, he imagined that the chief would not tell, and, if he did, that was not a chief, or he loaned over the cot and said:

"Open your eyes, I know, and look at me."

The chief promptly obeyed.

"Do I look like a dead man?"

"I know you are dead!"

"I am not. To-day your sister and Hinah rescued me from the tomb, and here I am to the Hinah."

Ralph Benham erring on the side of his own generosity made a mistake. So far he was certain he had been in no talking to a spectre, but the moment he let the chief know that he was alive, that his hated rival was before him in the flesh, but his cousin was dead, and had terrorized him that all his murderous plots had failed, the chief felt that he was in the power of the Montauks.

Hinah, who, divining Lotilla's purpose, gazed under the bed and drew those from a bundle of rope and an old net, the cole of a fishing smack.

Ralph Benham watched, while the two women, with wonderful skill and rapidity, fastened the ropes about the unfortunate Sachem.

With the captain's assistance they lifted the chief off the bed and arranged the scarlet uniform under his head and shoulders.

Not knowing when she might be called on to exercise her skill, Hinah always went provided with herbs and crude surgical appliances, and, the moment she dressed the chief's wounded head, whispered in an instinct was to know how they were and, and then telling him that she would call prematurely in the morning, she wished him refreshing soap and pleasant dreams, and turning to Lotilla and Hinah asked them if they were ready to leave.

While Hinah was dressing the wounded man's head, Lotilla gave Ralph the directions which the Squire had given, helped him to assume it, and at the same time gave a careful report of what had happened at Squire Condit's.

They were about to leave the hut, when Hinah stopped suddenly and said:

"There is no loss blood here a finger full water.

"Some did not answer.

"You have become the partner of a bad man, the worst man that lives to-day, and in the world where brave spirits dwell. Hinah, you are a coward, the mighty Wanderer, cannot rest in the tabernacle of his descendant."

"Did he go to hell?"

"Yes, he was taken with the utmost severity but the sense of honor was so strong, that, when he felt that he was improved with the oddity and grotesqueness of the situation, he was absolutely forgetful of the many important things pressing on his attention. He, half, but, fortunately, altered so suddenly as to be seen in the speech of his other half.

"Now, I mean, you can live to a ripe old age if you promise me to do as I say. Will you agree?"

After a few seconds' hesitation, the chief replied:

"I will."

"Good then you must promise never to tell a lie, or to deceive."

"I am genuine."

"You must pledge yourself and the warriors of your tribe to help the officers of the law, and Hinah should they call on you?"

"I am promise that."

"And lastly you must give up all trickery and deceit, and, if you have been a good boy! Ralph Benham was alive," "Ralph Benham was alive," said the chief, "but don't ask me the other question, I can't tell you anything about it."

"Well, that be the time had come to confess himself, he imagined that the chief would not tell, and, if he did, that was not a chief, or he loaned over the cot and said:

"Open your eyes, I know, and look at me."

The chief promptly obeyed.

"Do I look like a dead man?"

"I know you are dead!"

"I am not. To-day your sister and Hinah rescued me from the tomb, and here I am to the Hinah."

Ralph Benham erring on the side of his own generosity made a mistake. So far he was certain he had been in no talking to a spectre, but the moment he let the chief know that he was alive, that his hated rival was before him in the flesh, but his cousin was dead, and had terrorized him that all his murderous plots had failed, the chief felt that he was in the power of the Montauks.

Hinah, who, divining Lotilla's purpose, gazed under the bed and drew those from a bundle of rope and an old net, the cole of a fishing smack.

Ralph Benham watched, while the

Was Is a Case of Second Sight.

MONG the many curiosities of seeming second sight may be placed the following incident, one of the saddest tragedies of modern times. Mr. Dunlap, married to the daughter of Gen. Custer and his gallant followers.

The live lightning flashed between Cust Hinah and his blue-eyed, golden-curled boy. Mrs. Custer, the pet and darling of the whole garrison, was expecting to be remarried. Wherever the tall, soldierly figure of the young father was, he was, of course, on duty, that of the child was never far from his mother's side, and in accordance with the Squire's edict or, rather, they insisted on taking him to his own room.

He wanted a light, but as Squire Condit had given orders to have no light burning there, they refused.

"Where is my father?" asked Ralph—he had always called him by that name.

He has gone for Alice-time and Mr. Hodges," replied Elias.

At that moment the Squire's step and voice in the hall were heard without in the garden.

The Need of Trained Executors.

Probably more young men do not enter the engineering profession because no regular schools of landscape design, and it is consequently hard to determine how one may secure the training, therefore, in point, being out the probability that, for some, the opportunity for great work may exceed the available supply, we begin to attract the serious attention not only of young men but also of the directors of our educational institutions, and of liberal citizens anxious to work for the public good. The establishment of a department of gardening art in connection with one of our universities or great technical schools would be left a noble and an extremely useful work for a young money for the benefit of the American people. It might also be established, perhaps, in Boston or Cambridge, owing to the neighborhood of the Arnold Arboretum, and to the fact that a more thorough and popular interest in such matters can be noted here than elsewhere in America—doubtless because of its influence. Mr. Olmstead and Professor Sargent, and of the late H. H. Richardson, who was the first among our architects practically to recognize the inestimable advantage of a brotherly accord between his profession and that of the landscape gardener, but in any place where facilities for acquiring at least the rudiments of architectural, engineering and botanical knowledge already exist, a department of landscape-design would be of very great public benefit. The Number of Languages.

The least learned are aware that there are many languages in the world, but the actual number is probably beyond the dreams of civilized people. The geographer finds enumerated 860, which are entitled to be considered distinct languages, and 5,000 which may be regarded as dialects.

Africans, another modern writer says, have 1,000 languages and dialects existing, and we have allowed either of these the number of languages, we must acknowledge the existence of almost infinite minor diversities for almost every province has a tongue now or less peculiar, and this we may well believe to be the case throughout the world at large.

It is said that there are little islands, lying close together in the south Sea, of inhabitants of which do not understand each other.

Of the 860 distinct languages enumerated by Balbi, 58 belong to Europe, 114 to Africa, 121 to Asia, 417 to America, 117 to Oceanica, of which term he distinguishes the vast number of islands stretching between Hindostan and South America.

Hard Under a Double Apple.

The man who sells color should have to get a government license or purchase revenue stamps, all he sells is a keg of the fluid and a dipper and he is ready to scatter desolation and pave the avenues to drunkards' graves at the rate of 5 cents a dipper. The cider that is sold is sometimes sweet and innocent, but generally it is "hard" or a dear kind and a small quantity of it will cause a man to imagine himself a lion tamer in a striped uniform and lead him to fight with his grandmother. There is no liquor in the entire category which will compare with hard cider; it excites a spleen seriously its own, its lasting qualities are wonderful. It get intoxicated on it in early manhood you may sober up in old age, but the chances are that you won't. The tendency that follows its use is to make the heathen rage and the sicken imagine such things, that it should be done to restrict the powers of the dealer in hard cider. In his cheerful, offhand way he is setting traps for the feet of the young and pitfalls for the unwary. He might be possible to urge him to soften his color without hurting his feelings.—Washington News.

Hinah Gazed Intently.

THE man on the cot to my right to the hospital had been wounded by a fragment of a shell for the first three or four days I was given said he had a fever and was raving delirious. Then there was a change and he was in his right mind and one afternoon the nurse told him he was to be transferred. Two or three times a day he asked if my friend was still in the hospital, and one night I had been lying asleep about an hour when I woke and he might live to see him again. I said he would if he could, and was the boy baby he had left behind when he enlisted. I could see in front, and I heard for the letter all the time he was talking.

That day, during an hour when he was at his best, he had spoken of his sister, and, perhaps, perhaps of the beloved ones far off across the ocean. To every English and Irish heart, Hinah gazed in front, sparkling, inv living.

"Master," said the Indian, "let repay Coding his valiant." I heard he—

"I know you are a good man, mother and, stooping to kiss the little dashed head, Hinah. Bites were near." he would come home and stood it and I am a good man.

"He's coming Injun," the child said, and "and half cost you Injun." Will hell come home?"

"Yes, I hope he will," sighed Mrs. Hinah. "Hon ora and play, Hon ora, and don't go in the sun."

"Who Hinah does talk about lies far time?" some one inquired. I often meet him running along with some one, and, child or man, soldier or officer, you can always know, by his face, if he is talking to a lie.

Then the talk was ended, as, always in a minor key, for there had been quite an interval of time since the letters, and there was always immediately before the mother, the unbounded faith in the powers of the gallant Seventh.

Presently the sound of a child's letter crying brought Hinah to her feet, and Hinah ran into Ria mother's arms at the door, sobbing wildly.

"Mama," he sobbed, "the Injuns lay dead in the ravine, and I saw a man in his valise; he's stuffed it all. O! I want my papa, and he had Injuns has dat lung."

Hinah knelt down on the floor beside her boy, drawing his head to her heart. "Hush, Hinah," she said, very gently, but, for the life of her, she could a silly little boy; the Injuns can't get your papa, he is a long ways there; he will take care of papa and his boy, too. Hinah, I'm sure, he would let the Injuns get papa? See, you are mak, ig as all fed your lad, and papa would say that you were not his brave little lad." How stop crying and go and play; you could not hear lead?"

"Yes."

"Hinah tind! I shall be with him this very day. It is good news—good news. And I know what is lost."

Then he closed his eyes and lay hands together and death quietly that we knew it not.—Chicago Times.

Jere Dyer of a certain Massachusetts regiment was what might be called a slender little fellow, and of coarse features and somewhat unprepossessing appearance, though he was a good soldier and did his duty faithfully. He got on well enough in the rear rank, but when the company line was being formed, and the rear was composed of its two ranks, it happened sometimes that Jere Smith became number one, so that when the sergeant gave the order, "In two ranks form company," he was in the front rank.

Then the trouble began. It seemed impossible to keep the lines. The rear wavered like tall grass in a high wind. At last the lieutenant noticed the state of affairs, halted the company, and Jere changed places with his rear rank man.

KILLED IN A WRECK.

RACE TRACK TRAIN MEETS AN ACCIDENT.

Four Coaches of a Manhattan Beach Special Crushed Near a Tunnel—Nine Lives Crushed Out and Many Persons Are Injured.

Crushed to Death.

Four passenger cars of a train of six cars were demolished 200 feet east of the Manhattan tunnel, on the Manhattan Beach branch of the Long Island Railroad, at 6:45 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Nine persons were killed, and so far as is known, at least half a hundred persons were injured. Several of those injured, it is said, by the motion who attended them, will probably die. The killed are:

CHAS. J. HUBERT, New York policeman.
CHARLES MCCLOSKEY, Brooklyn.
EDWARD MCCLOSKEY, Brooklyn.
EDGAR JONES.
WILLIAM MCCLOSKEY, New York.
JOHN MCCLOSKEY, New York.
JOHNSON, FRITZ E., New York, both long engaged and long united lived at Sealy Hospital.
MCCLOSKEY, J. of Philadelphia, died at hospital.
PRINGLE, H. S., New York.
DWYER, THOS. V., died on way to hospital.
HOPKE, HENRY J., city marshal at Jefferson Market Police Court, New York.

The train was composed of a Pullman car and five other coaches, and was running along the slips. When the train left the Manhattan Beach station, it was crowded with people, and, as it approached the tunnel, it was seen that the train was off the track, and as the big iron ground the passengers and the people on the slips, that they might be thrown off on turning a curve. The Captain's telegraph office was crowded. Every seat was taken, and men and women were standing in the aisles and on the platforms and steps. The track is a single track, and the two lines come together on a single trestle. To the south of the tunnel there are two dead yards in a dead switch. This switch is spliced to the main track at the west side of the tunnel. The switch was open, and the train, which was intended for use in preventing a collision between a mixed train and a train of cars, had been placed in the dead yard, and I hoped for the letter all the time he was talking.

That day, during an hour when he was at his best, he had spoken of his sister, and, perhaps, perhaps of the beloved ones far off across the ocean. To every English and Irish heart, Hinah gazed in front, sparkling, inv living.

Sleep Was Impossible When the Verdict Is Announced.

Little Jennie Dyer, charged with the murder of her father and stepmother at Fall River, Mass., on August 4, last, was tried in the New Bedford, Mass., court-room, and the jury found one hour and a half to reach that conclusion. The trial, from the beginning, has been the talk of the town, and the scene in the court-room was packed with people who were anxious to see the little girl who is charged with the double crime. The evidence against the girl was very strong, and it was a little little little girl who had told her that Mrs. Borden had gone upstairs to lie down, and that she had left her alone. The girl was at Hiram Allison's when Lizzie called for her, and Mrs. Allison testified that Lizzie STUDY BUGS.

A Growing Use for Entomologists in Agricultural Districts.

The Colorado potato-beetle is practically under the thumbers' parts green. The coddling moth whose larvæ infest our apples, is readily controlled by spraying the trees with the same poison at the proper season. So with many other pests of the farmer and fruit-grower. But, as Professor Riley estimates that one-tenth of our agricultural products is annually ruined by insects, it is evident that plenty of work remains to be done in this direction.

The total annual loss from insects in the United States is placed by the best entomological authorities at about $150,000,000. As the economic gists of the various state agricultural experiment stations and of the national department of agriculture pursue their investigations further this enormous loss will be greatly reduced.

When their labors become better known and appreciated their opportunities for work, as well as the wants at their disposal, will be increased. Many more hands and brains will be needed to do the work, and young men and women trained in entomology will be called for as assistants.

Most of the states have now established agricultural experiment stations, and at the majority of these an entomologist is the chief work on his specialty. Some of the agricultural colleges give courses in economic entomology, and as the farmers learn to better appreciate its money value to them they will devote more and more time to its study.

CHINESE VILLAGES.

How Local Self-Government Works in Celestial Dominions.

A recent writer describes the manner in which local self-government works in China. Every Chinese village is a kind of little republic by itself, the theory in regard to the business of village affairs being that they are chosen by their fellow-townsmen, and confirmed by the district magistrate. In Chinese fashion this is actually done, and for the good conduct of the headmen in their office the leading landowners are required to become responsible. They are not necessarily the oldest men in the village, neither are they necessarily the wealthiest men, although it is probable that every family of property will in some way be represented among them; they are not necessarily men of literary attainments, although this may be the case with a few.

In those regions where the method of selection is most loose the number of headmen has no necessary relation to the size of the village, the position is not hereditary, neither is there any fixed time or service. A man may act in this capacity at one time and refuse or neglect to do so at another time. The headmen are not formally chosen, nor formally deposed. They drop into their places by a kind of natural selection. The qualities which fit a villager to act as headman are the same which contribute to success in any line of business. He must be a practical man who has some native ability, acquaint with the ways of the world, as well as able and willing to devote upon occasion an indefinite amount of time and attention to the affairs which may be put in his charge.

BELL-RINGING FISH.

Queer Tricks That Are Done by Two Small Brook Trout.

Fish have many times been taught to perform tricks, and it would appear as if they had sometimes more intelligence than is attributed to them. Mr. James A. Baker of Green Island, N. Y., has brook trout in a small aquarium in his private residence that would jump at the sound of his voice and take flies from between the forefingers and the thumb, and would also dart for a little shell when they required food. They would also leap over little bars of wood placed about two inches above the surface of the water.

Mr. Baker's simple matter to teach the fish these tricks. At first a little tower containing a bug, or other food, was fastened to the iron work of the aquarium with a piece of string attached to the tongue of the bell suspended into the water where the trout were. In the lower end of the string an insect or other tempting morsel was placed which the fish would at once seize. Mr. Baker would ring the bell pulling the string carefully inside. After this had been repeated several days the fish would bite without food for some little time until they made the discovery that they could obtain it by pulling at the string to pick the delicacies had been attached. This they never failed to do, even afterward when they were hungry, and as that was nearly all the time the little bell was constantly rung by the fish, were continually pulling the cord and it was quite a pretty and novel sight.

OUR MANY LANGUAGES.

Some interesting statistics have been compiled by a Frenchman respecting the different languages spoken in various parts of the world. He states that the language in which Shakspeare and Milton wrote was then that of less than 5,000,000 human beings. French was the mother-tongue of at least 30,000,000 people at a time when English was spoken by less than 20,000,000, and 40,000,000 of French speaking people were living when the revolution broke out in 1789.

Between forty and fifty years the English language equaled the German in the number of those who spoke it, and now the latter is left far behind. German is now spoken by 70,000,000 persons in the Austro-Hungarian empire, by 45,000,000 in the German empire, by 40,000 in Belgium, and by about 2,000,000 persons in Switzerland. German is also spoken by about 2,000,000 persons in the United States and Canada, giving a total of almost 80,000,000 who use the German language.

French is spoken by 34,000,000 inhabitants of France, by the 1,000,000 people in Belgium, by 500,000 in Alsace-Lorraine, by 600,000 in Switzerland, by 1,500,000 in the United States and Canada, by 600,000 in Italy and by 1,500,000 in Algiers, India "the West Indies and Africa—in all about 42,000,000. English is spoken by 37,000,000 persons in the British Isles, by probably 22,000,000 of these among inhabitants of the United States, by 1,000,000 persons in Canada, by 1,500,000 in Australia, by 2,500,000 West Indians and by 1,000,000 in India and other British colonies, bringing the total of the English-speaking race to over 100,000,000.

STALL AND PEW ALIKE.

A Marksman's Lesson of a Stand Elle a Sent Bullet in Church.

The question as to what estate or interest a lessee has in a market-house was decided for the first time in Pennsylvania in an opinion handed down by Justice Williams in the supreme court lately. In the case of John C. Strickland, appellant, against the Pennsylvania railroad company, an appeal from court of common pleas No. 2 of Philadelphia.

The company took the market-house at Seventeenth and Market streets as a site for part of their terminal improvements, after tendering the market-company a bond to secure damages. They then turned Mr. Strickland out of his leased stalls in the market-house, and he brought the suit to recover damages for his ejectment. Justice Williams affirms the decision against the lessee of the stall and says: "His right resembles that of a pew-holder in a church. Such a holder knows interest in the land under his pew or the building above or around it. He abridges the power of the church to remove or take down and rebuild their place of worship."

A Coaching Bedstead Was a Fresh Hit in Olden Times.

"What kind of a hotel is this—to put a man in a room that has no bed?" said the guest.

"And what kind of a man is it you are insulted by a room without a bed?" said the clerk.

"Now look, I don't want any sass from you, I don't want you to go to bed. And if I don't get a bed I'll get it I'll get off I'll settle things fly."

"Sure, now, you can take sass from me as much as you want to, and I'll put down that bed that's against the door, and you can sleep on it."

"There's no bed here and you know it. I'll go to the office and see if a man is going to be treated this way, let out of my way."

And he posted Nara aside and started down the hall. Nara stood with her arms akimbo.

"Did I even see the fellow? That? The man in his own country don't know his own mind. Sure, it is long time before grossing that I knew these Americans. Sure, I'm lucky, even luck, I say, and I'll show you some fun, though it's from the tirrens late I am."

But the man wouldn't listen. In a few minutes there was a consultation of Irish brogue, Indiana dialect and Greek outlines, and the result was that the "American bed" must have one leg shortened. In a short time everything was quiet on the Potomac.

A SPOONEY FAD.

How the Harvard Boys Dabble Up the Silver Tea-strainer.

The fad for collecting spoons for souvenirs has become so little frivolous of by those who too curiously with the family silver. Harvard boys are the victims and sweethearts, but they do not seek the uttermost ends of the earth for their treasures. The Boston boys confine their hunteries of the neighborhood, where they carry on their depredations. The more thoughtful and thrifty sportsman has that the collecting water does not have to replace a spoon, but that when they slipp a fork, or a spoon or a knife, it is a matter what the check may amount to in the spoony. Harvard is happy, for he has added another to his collection, and he is able to supply his fair friends.

This amount to no one, as a little surcoal took ten from an Adams House spoon and slipped it into a bearing the word "Sunshine."

If the student has been industrious, every individual of a party of a dozen goes office from a different hostelry.

Woman's Notions.

Russia boasts of over 300 women doctors and America claims about the same number of women unofficially. Fortunately the two countries are widely separated or one professor might be considered responsible for the other. Those that are waiting in the legislative profession—and everything is a profession now from plumbing to philosophy—are enthusiasts as well, and receive generous compensation for their service. Our ancestors imagine that the ghostly office to the dead and take on a tenderness of malfeasation when performed by quiet, gentle, women that would be grateful to the bereft. But what of the women themselves? Men understanding are proverbially jolly and philosophical, but women are naturally given over to melancholy.

Hardness of Copper and Zinc.

An interesting fact concerning the hardness of copper and zinc has been brought to light by means of M. Paul Janssen's new micrometer. Most authors regard zinc as harder than copper, but Mr. Janssen has examined in a sufficiently pure state, it appears that copper is the harder of the two, this removes an exception to the rule that the harder the body the less its atomic volume.

A Justifiable Fib Fib.

"We ain't no Columbian jubilee here," said the country landlord, cheerfully. "You ain't charged no free cents for the use of a plate in this house." The drummer stared away at this rank slander for two or three minutes in a pleasant way. "Then we charge Mathie Iron don't charge for the use of your plate, just I don't think any man would be justified in letting a man be charged for the wear and tear on your unless."

WHAT SHE KNEW ABOUT DOGS.

A Trick That Lost the Office Boy Money and Peace of Mind.

Nick is an office boy employed on Broadway, New York. He hangs up in the office hat, whether with an organic hankering for the laboring on a fashion-plate coat which he had lingered long from some reminiscence in the back parlor. The chief clerk sends his head of at least 30,000 people at a time when English was spoken by less than 20,000,000, and 40,000,000 of French speaking people were living when the revolution broke out in 1789.

Between forty and fifty years the English language equaled the German in the number of those who spoke it, and now the latter is left far behind. German is now spoken by 70,000,000 persons in the Austro-Hungarian empire, by 45,000,000 in the German empire, by 40,000 in Belgium, and by about 2,000,000 persons in Switzerland. German is also spoken by about 2,000,000 persons in the United States and Canada, giving a total of almost 80,000,000 who use the German language.

French is spoken by 34,000,000 inhabitants of France, by the 1,000,000 people in Belgium, by 500,000 in Alsace-Lorraine, by 600,000 in Switzerland, by 1,500,000 in the United States and Canada, by 600,000 in Italy and by 1,500,000 in Algiers, India "the West Indies and Africa—in all about 42,000,000. English is spoken by 37,000,000 persons in the British Isles, by probably 22,000,000 of these among inhabitants of the United States, by 1,000,000 persons in Canada, by 1,500,000 in Australia, by 2,500,000 West Indians and by 1,000,000 in India and other British colonies, bringing the total of the English-speaking race to over 100,000,000.

Northern Michigan News.

Judge Corbett of Boyne City has been to the World's Fair.

The Petoskey graduating class of '93 consisted of six young men and four young ladies. That is something like it.

Rueh's Military Band, of Petoskey has been engaged by Traverse City to furnish music for the celebration at that place on the 4th of July.

The State Teachers' Institute for Antrim county will be held at Bellaire commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Monday July 24 and closing at 4 p. m., Friday July 28.

Rev. John Redpath, the pioneer pastor and church builder of several northern Michigan towns, Petoskey included, is thinking of removing from Boyne Falls to Petoskey.

Benzonia College is rejoicing because Merle Amos lireed has accepted the presidency of that institution. President lireed though only 33 years of age, has an established reputation as an educator, and will bring to his work at Benzonia abilities of high order. Any one desiring a copy of the catalogue should write to Rev. E. S. Shaw, Benzonia, Mich.

Boyne Citizen: The bubble in East Jordan's railroad boom has burst, so we are informed. While East Jordan and South Arm were prepared to do about everything asked of them and when they had the "necessary goods" ready to deliver, then the bubble exploded. David Ward was not prepared to say that his road would be built inside of five years which caused the progressive and ambitious people of that place to become indignant.

Petoskey Democrat: The finest catch of trout ever brought to Petoskey, if not the best ever made in this part of the state, was made by Rev. Fraud Hoyt, of this place, in the Pere Marquette river Tuesday. He brought back twenty-seven speckled trout, none of less than twelve ounces in weight and the entire averaging over a pound. The largest weighed three pounds and a half and was one of the most beautiful fish that ever gladdened a fisherman's eyes.

Common Council.

The following bills were allowed:

E. Shaw & Son, water works supplies,	1 25
A. E. Mason,	10 75
P. M. Rae & Son, merchandise,	1 75
Colwell Lead Co., paint,	2 50
A. E. Hinckley, tapping mains,	125 00
J. E. Hinckley, painting sawhorses,	3 75
Fire department, Dixon fire,	7 00
Charlevoix Democrat, printing,	5 50
Sentinel, "	1 50
H. A. Hawks, services, etc.	4 25

On motion of Trustee Hampton, the sum of $100 was appropriated for a free column "write up" in the Grand Rapids Democrat, the same to be at the discretion of the Council, as to dates.

The assessment roll was accounted and referred to the Assessor with instructions to spread the roll as follows. General fund, at 7 mills, $22,717.30; highway, $776.00; water tax, $1,000.00.

Moved and carried that $75 be appropriated, to be divided between the two hose companies as follows: The winner in a series of three contests to take $45, the loser $30. Said contest to be under the management of the Chief and the fire committee, who be empowered to purchase a suitable championship emblem, the award to be made at the first meeting in October.

Further resolved that the sum of $5 be awarded the company which gets first water on a fire.

Superintendent instructed to purchase pipe for new well.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The steamer Columbia has been at Campbell's yard the past week where a dining room and kitchen has been built on her upper deck. The Columbia has abandoned the Mackinac route, and will hereafter run between Traverse City and Harbor Springs.

The tug McLane, of Traverse City, is hauled out at Campbell's yard to receive a new wheel.

The tug Avery has gone to Lake Superior to work for the Connable Fishing Co. She will carry fish from Grand Marian to Marquette.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids has abandoned the World's Fair excursion scheme, and will go into a general excursion business between resort points.

The schooner Fleetwing, of this port, went ashore near Point Betsey life saving station, in the fog, last Friday night, bound here, light. She went on a sandy bottom, and at last reports had suffered very very little injury.

Last Friday the steamer Skater was totally burned off Frankfort. Capt. Mel Thompson was bringing her from Manistee to run on the Harbor Springs and Petoskey ferry route. The fire originated in the forward hold, but from what cause is unknown. The steamburge Hilton was near by and took off the crew, towing the wreck back to Manistee. She was owned by Seymour Bros., and was insured for $15,000.

The U. S. survey steamer Hancock left here yesterday for Grand Haven. While here, the engineer in charge has made a very careful and detailed survey of the harbor and surroundings, upon which to base a report to the Chief of Engineers.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Wild strawberries are plenty; so are mos—musketers.

Quite a good many from here attended the dance at Norwood last Friday night.

Mrs. Cooper has been quite sick the past week, and a physician from Charlevoix has been in attendance.

A large fishing party from here were up the Jordan last week trout fishing and caught the usual number, also sight of two large bear.

Peter Boyer, of Charlevoix, has moved here, and will keep on hand a full stock of pumps and well tools of all kinds. He has taken contracts of putting down several wells.

Chas. H. Ferguson Jr., with a party of boys, including Ed. Stafford Sr., of Norwood, are camped just south of here for a two weeks fishing trip. We don't think the fish will suffer much, but we would advise our neighbors to take in their hen-roosts, and watch those boys mighty close. They have a boat with them that is sixteen feet wide and eight feet long.

The fast flyers on the railroad will stop at Ellsworth. We'd run 'em into the sink-hole if they didn't.

In about two weeks Mrs. W. C. Mears will give the people of Ellsworth an opportunity to listen to a fine musical and literary entertainment. She will be assisted by thirteen of Charlevoix's talented ladies and gentlemen. The object is to increase the thickness of the pastor's pocket book, and also to raise the standard of entertainments here. Ice cream and cake will be furnished. Programs and bills will be out soon.

The entertainment spoken of last week in these notes as gotten up by Mrs. Mears was a mistake. It was arranged and given by the "Daisy Aid Society" of the Ingalls neighborhood.

Hastings from Bayes.

The days are shortening.

Wild strawberries are ripe.

James Hooper has planted over 100 bushels of potatoes.

Ben Singer and Horatio Murry had their barns burned last week, caught from burning fallows.

Roy Pierce has returned from Battle Creek college for the summer vacation.

Geo. W. Ford has discarded the old Armstrong mower and bought a Champion.

The Town Board will meet at the residence of Commissioner Grandy on July 8th to transact various important matters; all interested attend.

Miss Lora Sly returned home from Alma college Friday.

Syd Jones has moved back to Bay Shore.

Ben Singer lost a portion of his household goods stored in his barn, beside farming utensils and grain, by the fire last week.

Haying will commence this week and the crop will be light.

Land plaster in any quantity and very cheap, at the pioneer store.

Norwood Notes.

S. H. Chase and family, of Chicago, arrived on the Charlevoix Sunday, and now occupy their summer quarters at "The Owl's Nest."

A lady boy met week on the flat at Mr. Clark's.

Mr. Babcock has the agency for Charlevoix and Antrim counties for a patent clothes line and will spend his summer vacation canvassing for it.

Will Superman was over from Ellsworth on Sunday as usual to see his girl, etc.

Mrs. Corbin Johnson, of Tamarack, West, formerly of this place, is here on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Lapier.

Last week Elmer Mayne turned the black-smith shop into a shipyard and he and Ed. Stafford have been engaged in building a boat for a Chicago firm now tenanting here. It would take too much space to give a full description of this boat, but when completed it will be very much like the house that Frank Bishop built 20 years ago back of Dick Cooper—if the house stood bottom side up. It will either run in opposition to the Grand Rapids to the World's Fair, or be put on the Intermediate at Ellsworth. At her mast-head will be perched this beautiful and appropriate legend: "This is a boat. Nuf sed."

Late Notes.

Gov. Altgeld, of Illinois, has pardoned Schaub, Fielden and Neebe, the Chicago anarchists.

Chief Justice Fuller has handed down an opinion which opens the World's Fair on Sunday.

The British ironclad Victoria, while maneuvering off Tripoli, was run into by the warship Camperdown and sunk, taking 405 men down with her, including the Admiral of the fleet.

Lake Bates Fire-Fly Fancies.

The G. & W. M. and D. L. & N. lines will sell on July 3rd and 4th, good to return July 5th, excursion tickets between all stations at one fare for the round trip.

C. & W. M. agents at Grand Rapids and Muskegon and points south will also sell to Chicago.

GEO. DEHAGEN,
G. P. A.

Mr. Chas. Swallow, 1013 West Madison Street, Chicago, informs his Charlevoix friends that he will be able to supply them rooms during the World's Fair, and invites correspondence. 26tf.

—Mrs. Hawkins and Edie returned from the fair last week.

—Hon. A. J. Mills, of Kalamazoo, made us a call Saturday.

—A great attraction—"Chip o' the Old Block," to morrow night.

—Ralph Washburn and Ed. Horton spent the Fourth at Grand Rapids.

—Dr. Burr, Superintendent of the Traverse Asylum, was in town Saturday.

—County Clerk Keens has been appointed by Judge Stroud as Probate clerk.

—Miss Georgie Reed, of Stanwood, is the guest of her cousin, Miss Katie Smith.

—Mrs. A. D. Cruikshank and daughter returned from Grand Haven Saturday.

—"Chip o' the old Block" at Lewis Grand Opera House to morrow (Thursday) night.

—Capt. D. Guard is entertaining Frank Burch and wife, of Amsterdam, N. Y.

—Prof. Enos left yesterday for the World's Fair, and will remain three or four weeks.

—W. D. Thompson, of Marion Township, is about to remove to Minnesota for a year or two.

—If you want to laugh long and hard, go to see "Chip o' the Old Block" to-morrow night.

—Two resort gentlemen one day last week caught a 22 pound muskellonge in Intermediate lake.

—William D. Engle, who has just graduated from Albion college, is here visiting his parents, Rev. and Mrs. D. Engle.

—Married, Sunday, at the Fountain City House, by Rev. W. H. McCartney, Mr. Noah Shatford and Miss Josie C. Holmes, both of Bellaire.

—Married—By the Rev. David Engle in this place, on Monday, July 3rd, Mr. George S. Sheppson and Edith G. Phelps, both of Charlevoix.

—About 100 of the people of that part of Marion full a picnic at Mr. Anderson's place yesterday. Plenty to eat and lots of old fashioned enjoyment is reported.

—The Orangemen of Northern Michigan will celebrate the 12th, of glorious memory, at Central Lake this year, and a great time is anticipated by the faithful.

—Dr. Lewis was in Traverse City yesterday and saw "Chip o' the old Block," which appears here to-morrow night. He pronounces it equal to anything yet seen here.

—Yesterday the school board closed a contract with Prof. D. F. Wilson, of Mussellell Mich., to superintend the Charlevoix schools. Prof. Wilson is well recommended as an educator.

—Geo. Wells, of Norwood Township, cut his foot very badly one day last week. Dr. Thad Lewis was assisted by Dr. Will Lewis, who at the request of the former, amputated the large toe.

—Mr. Chapel the druggist, has employed Mr. Faber, a registered pharmacist, as clerk in his store. He is a druggist of ability and graduate in pharmacy from the university of Michigan.

—The finest rain that has blest the earth this year fell yesterday afternoon and last night. It will lift the hearts of the farmers who had begun to complain of the effects of the dry weather.

—Be Towanda and be pretty quick, or their tents like the Arabs," but they didn't "quietly steal away." They went away bearing the good will of everybody, leaving their mediocrities for sale at Bowman's.

—D. A. Pattee, of Marion, was arrested by sheriff Myers to-day, on a charge of violation of the State law regulating peddlers. Mr. Pattee sells meat from a wagon. This has been a vexing question for some time, and we hope the matter will be settled once for all.

—C. C. Barnes, of Manitowoc, Wis., is here visiting his daughter, Mrs. E. H. Green.

—John Buttars, of Fort Austin, is in town visiting his brother and son, the "two Archies."

—Prof. Delos Buzzell, formerly principal of the Charlevoix school, and his wife, are here for a few weeks. Prof. Buzzell is now a teacher in the Chicago schools.

Charlevoix did not celebrate, but it came near having two or three runaways for which fire-crackers would have been responsible. They are unmitigated nuisances, and should be suppressed, especially on the business streets.

The Fourth at Charlevoix was quiet, although there were a good many people in town from the country during the day. The hotels did well. A good many of outtown people went to Traverse City, some to Central Lake and East Jordan.

—The Northern Michigan Transportation Line advertises a $10 round trip rate from Charlevoix to the World's Fair, for the next ten days; tickets good to return any time in July. Agent Emmy may be found in his office at any time during business hours.

—John Burns, a resident of Kearline township, and a pioneer of Charlevoix county, died last week. Mr. Burns a short time ago sold his farm and deposited most of the proceeds in the Bank of Charlevoix, and was about to visit friends in the East, when the bank went glimmering. There is no doubt that he died of a broken heart.

—The Petoskey Record is fifteen years old, and Capt. Bontemps has been its editor most of that time. The Record has always had the ring of true metal. It has never been cowardly, vacillating or nitrogenous. It is one of the foremost papers in Northern Michigan, and will continue to be as long as Capt. Bontemps continues to fill its editorial chair.

—A ten year old son of Phillip Sparke, formerly in the employ of A. J. McLeod, was drowned Sunday afternoon. He, with a number of other boys, was playing on Connable's dock when he lost his balance and fell into the lake. He was seen by several men who were on another dock, but all efforts to save him were futile. His father was in Cedar Springs, where the body was taken.

—Charlevoix people remember with much pleasure Miss Emma Martin, who, as the guest of her uncle, Rev. W. H. Macpherson, spent last summer here, returning to her Scottish home in the fall. Mr. Macpherson received a letter yesterday announcing the sudden death of Miss Emma's father, in the prime of life. She may be assured that there is much sincere sympathy for her among her Charlevoix friends.

—Miss Ida Byers, second daughter of W. C. Byers, of Banks, died suddenly at her home, Saturday, of hemorrage of the lungs. She had been in poor health for some years, but at the time of her death was feeling better than for some months. After a hearty supper she began coughing, and rupturing a blood vessel. She died standing up, supported by her father and a friend who was present. The funeral was held Monday, Rev. W. H. McCartney, of this place preaching the sermon.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

A new hull for the machinery of the tug Parks will be built next winter, and Capt. Bill Cross says she will be the best tug in the crick.

Capt. J. M. Thompson is in command of the tug Higgie.

Capt. Wm. Taylor, late of the tug Higgie, is now sailing the Barker tug Mary McLane.

The schooner Fleetwing was released Saturday and arrived here Sunday, very little the worse for her being piled up at Point Betsey.

The schooner Florence Smith has been launched as good as ever and will soon be refitted and put in commission.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids is doing well in the excursion business. Sunday she had a big crowd of Harbor Springs and Petoskey people for East Jordan.

Capt. Sandy Bennett, of Traverse City, came up the Fourth after the steamer Onekema, which goes on her old route on the bay.

For Sale—A saddle horse, kind and good style. For particulars, apply to Byron Dooy barn.

CHARLES HUTTON.

Death of Mrs. Phoebe Thompson.

Mrs. Pebbie Thompson, relict of the late Medad Thompson, died at her home in this Township, yesterday, aged 82 years and 8 months.

In the death of Mrs. Thompson there departs hence a most conspicuous figure in the early history of the Pine Lake region. At the time of her death she was the oldest living settler of Charlevoix county. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson located on the well known Thompson farm, at the foot of Pine Lake, in this township, in 1854. This even anti-dates the advent of the Dixons. Only a few transient fishermen inhabited this locality before they came, and Mrs. Thompson has resided continuously on the homestead all these 39 years.

Mrs. Thompson was the mother of six children now living,—Hiram, of Boyne City; Melvin and George, of this place; Mrs. Geboo, of this place; Mrs. John Newman, of Marion, and Mrs. Atchison, of California.

The funeral occurs from the Congregational church this afternoon.

Norwood Notes.

The LaPentie loaded with bark and lumber on Monday.

A daughter at Manfred Pearl's last week.

Larnie Ferguson arrived from Chicago on Tuesday.

A grandson of Mr. Goodrich came on Sunday and will take charge of Mr. Goodrich's property at Norwood.

The ice cream social for the benefit of the school netted 12 dollars, which will be used in buying books for the school.

On Saturday, while at work in the mill, Peter Scott was seriously injured. A board thrown backward by the edger, struck him on the breast, breaking it in and injuring the upper part of the lungs. How much injury was done to the lungs cannot yet be ascertained. Drs. Kanaga and Gardner, of Charlevoix and Dr. Evans, of Traverse City, have been in attendance on the case. He is doing as well as could be expected, and the prospects are fair for his recovery, but it was a hard blow, and may terminate fatally.

CHAPTER XXIV.

BALLYCLUNAN MAKES NOW A GREAT CONCERT.

Sophie Condit was a man of force. He could make his will felt. Even the Mrs Hawk, but he did find a curse with a bright, and in such a hopeless place where was not an Indian on the bay within miles, he had to be satisfied most of one of those unremunerative areas.

It is quite necessary to remount the troubles he had in getting aboard the ship, where she crouching cannot no little con-sumption to the night walks.

He had Lieutenant Hodges and Adjutant Dayton very busy. He took them to every ship, told them his adventure story, and brought Valentine back in triumph.

When the Sophie found Ralph was in the house, and in his own room, he ran and caught the young Captain in his arms, and for some minutes he was so overcome by his emotions that he could not speak.

Mrs. Condit, good, resolute woman, appeared at the sitting room door in the hillock, locked the door in the direction of the Sophie's quarters, and explained to us present the necessity of speaking to her husband, and that he, Ralph, is effectual enough to be sane.

Though Valentine was fully prepared by Sophie Condit's story to see Captain Dunham, the whole affair was so sudden and so far from what he was expecting that he was overcome by his emotions that he could not speak.

A NATURAL MISTAKE.

The Man Asked for Room No. 13, and the Landlord Was Suspicious.

He took the room in finest style, but when he asked to be shown to his room the landlord requested him to wait.

"You see it takes some little time to change the furniture and get things ready," he said in a mysterious way.

"He must know me," said the guest, as he walked off with a strut.

Pretty soon the bell boy told him his room was ready. He followed him to it and found that every article of furniture had been swathed in quilts and the carpet covered with an old matting.

"What does this mean?" he asked of the boy.

"Dunno," said the imp with a grin. Then he went for the landlord and demanded an explanation.

"Oh, it's all right. You see we must protect ourselves."

"I don't understand."

"There'd be the coroner's inquest and all the mess."

"Good heavens, man, what do you mean?"

"Don't you intend to commit suicide?"

"Jerusalem, no!"

"Then why did you ask for No. 13?"

"Because it's my luck number. Oh, ha! ha! I see. Well, just take this rubbish away and give me a chance to be comfortable. I haven't the least idea of shuffling off yet."

The landlord apologized, and had the room restored to its normal condition.

A CASE OF SKEPTICISM.

A Child Who Would Not Believe in Whiskers Executions.

"While we were spending the summer at our country home a little girl called to see my wife. As she was engaged I attempted to entertain the child by showing her pictures of famous French women. The first was Charlotte Corday. I gave a brief account of her life, and finished by saying they met her head off. The child caught her breath, but said nothing. The next picture was that of Mme. Roland. I told about her, and finally said, 'And they cut her head off.'

"The child's face grew rather incredulous; but still she said nothing. The next face was Marie Antoinette's. Oh! she exclaimed. 'What a beautiful lady! How lovely she is.' 'Yes,' I answered, she was perfectly lovely, but they cut her head off.'

"This was too much. The child arose, and looking at me in the most indignant way, said: 'Humph! What do you take me for? I ain't so green as I look!'"

Germans in Samoa.

Robert Louis Stevenson has found frequent occasion to criticise strongly and adversely the actions of the white rulers in Samoa. Recently a proclamation against seditious persons, aimed directly at him was promulgated in the islands. The governor of Fiji and high commissioner of the Western Pacific, Sir John Thurston, has been drawn into the squabbles, and he announces to the British press that he is not in any way hostile to Mr. Stevenson, but that he considers that "peace and good order are unattainable in Samoa, owing to the unnecessary interference of meddlesome and irresponsible persons."

Small Horses or a Big—

The geologists tell us that the ourbiggest, the ancestor of the noble horses of to-day, was but little larger than the common rabbit of today, and that each had sixteen toes, four on each foot, the same as the cattle of to-day. After the lapse of ages this sixteen-hooded equus shed a toe or hoof from each foot and thus became a twelve-toed animal. The sixteen-hooded variety are first found in the eocene period of geological epochs.

A Convenient Loophole.

Hinerant—Madam, I would like to sell your attention to an article which no housewife can well do without at this season of the year. It is a new moth exterminator.

Madam—Excuse me, sir, but what I'm interested in just now is exterminating the old moths. When I get rid of them maybe I'll talk to you about the new moth exterminator.

DID NOT RECOGNIZE GEORGE.

American Naval Officers Non-Plussed by a Statue in Europe.

An American man-of-war, just into a Mediterranean port for several days in the course of a cruise not long ago, and several of the officers made up a party to explore the town. They enjoyed themselves immensely in ferreting out all the notable sights, but there was one thing that puzzled them. Occupying a conspicuous place in the heart of the city was an equestrian statue, in bronze size. A Washington tourist, who, if it were necessary, could read music in half a dozen different languages, translated the inscription. No name was given; that doubtless would have been purely a work of supercreogation, but the individual was described as the pride of his countrymen and the ornament of his country. The Americans, all men of wide reading and considerable information, were completely nonplussed. They recalled scores of portraits of famous men to compare them with the features and general makeup of the hero in bronze in vain. Rather disconcerted at their failure to place so exalted a personage, they trudged back to the hotel and ordered all the guide books available to be sent up at once. The page at which the first book that was taken up fell open contained a cut and voluminous description of the statue in question. The inspiring traveler was thereby informed that the monument had been erected by the citizens of the town as a witness of their admiration of the nobility and unselfish patriotism of George Washington.

A REAL BAD MAN.

But He Was Quickly Turned Down by a Louisiana Judge.

At Opelousas you may hear even yet of a certain noted character whom we will call La Blanc, whose reign was not so long back but what many men can still remember it. La Blanc was a man of great stature, a perfect shot with rifle or revolver, and totally devoid of personal fear. He moreover knew how he chose, and if the wife of any man suited him he would send word that such and such a day he would call and ask for her. A refusal meant death, and so none refused.

Judge Martel, a man noted for his courage and determination had occasion to call a session of his court for a certain day. La Blanc sent word that court could not sit. Judge Martel sent back word that court would sit just the same. La Blanc returned his compliments, and said that if court did sit that day he would be on hand and would then and there kill the judge-presiding. Judge Martel replied courteously that he would be at home on the bench then and there and would be pleased to receive M. La Blanc's call.

When the day came around court did sit, and Judge Martel was on the bench. La Blanc entered the court room and walked boldly down in front of the bench. A word and his hand sought his weapon. At that instant—bang! bang!—two bullets struck him and he fell dead. Judge Martel had suspected to uphold the dignity of the law. They obeyed their instructions to the letter. This ended the La Blanc dynasty. Judge Martel is alive to-day.

TROUBLESOME PECCARIES.

Incidents Which Tend to Confirm Life in the Southwest.

"Arizona, from the nature of its location, or, I suppose, the most peculiar country in its animal, insect and reptile life on the continent," said C. M. Bruce, a day or two ago. "There are peccaries that are very savage in the high Rincon and Chiricahua mountains. I have heard it said that they have hoofs like mules, but I never saw a pig of that kind. They are as big as a six-month-old shoat, have a sharp back and long hair and emit a musk something like a skunk.

"They are so savage they will attack you whether you annoy them or not. Every once in a while some of the boys get caught in the trees by these peccaries. They have to take to the trees or be torn to pieces. I know a fellow in the Rincon mountains who was kept up for several hours. There was a large band of peccaries under the trees. The tops of the Rincon mountains are covered with live oaks, or what they call post oak, and the peccaries feed on the acorns. They are simply wild hogs. I am confident our domestic hog is descended from them.

"Speaking of peccaries throwing musk and the danger from their musk reminds me of the spotted black and white skunks whose bite down there is poisonous. The skunks have rather a bite from one at such a time is fatal. They make for a man as quick as they see him, and he has to be very lively if he gets out of the way.

THE DUKE'S BULL CROP.

Columbus Descendant Fosters Spain's National Amusements.

All the stage properties and gorgeous paraphernalia of the bullfighting "arena" in Paris were recently sold at auction to reluctant purchasers at low figures, though when the building was opened to the public in 1889 people trod on each other's heels to gain admission, and there were days when the gate receipts amounted to $15,000, this within a year the novelty of the performance had worn off. Interest declined, and as the expense were enormous a collapse was inevitable. At the auction one purchaser secured eighty-four Spanish flags and a lot of other trophies for $2.50. Among our readers will be interested to know that all the bulls that were killed in the arena for the amusement of the Parisian populace were supplied from the ducal estate of Veragua's estate. The cost from $100 to $400 apiece, and the toreadors were nearly as high priced as opera singers.

Ice Cream Almost.

There is no other work in the world of which so many copies are printed annually as of the Chinese almanac. The number is estimated at several millions. This almanac is printed at Delhi, and is a monopoly of the empire. It not only predicts the weather but notes the days that are reckoned lucky or unlucky for commencing any undertaking, for applying remedies in diseases, for marrying and for buying.

SHE MATCHED HIM.

A Wee Sir Find Yet Who Won the Money in Our Her's gun Wills.

"Speaking of Easter," said a groundbreaker, "I had some fun called 'em' my folks have a most sacrilegious fun in the memory of person. A couple before Easter my little girl, who is a sixteen-year-old, reminded me that she needed a new pair of shoes to complete her Easter Sunday costume. I was interested in an newspaper and made some badgering remarks about the duty of children to wear bargains at all a pair may give her a dollar. She went away without a word, a fact that surprised me, because I thought that she would protest. But finally she came to me and said:

"'Papa, I'll match you for a quarter dollar—heads I win, tails you lose.'

"The proposition nearly knocked me off my chair. I looked across the room at her mother, a decent woman, from whom I expected an emphatic lecture. She, however, was paying no attention, and so I said: 'Don't you know it is wrong to gamble? Where on earth did you ever hear of matching big dollars?'

"'Oh, I found out; was her reply. 'Will you match?'

"'Well, you know me. I don't take any stuff like that, so I fished out a silver dollar and laid it on my knee. The child was about to follow suit, when she hesitated, drew away, and then went to her mother and said with much solemnity.

"'Mamma, may I use the money for another dollar?'

"Her mother only smiled in a deprecatory manner. Then she came back and said:

"'Now, papa, heads I win, tails you lose.'

"And of course I did lose, sure enough, and the child looked me in the face and said:

"'Now, papa, you see what prayer will do.'"

DULL GEORGE III.

He Is Not Credited With Many Witticisms—His One Joke.

Wihit phrases seem to have been among the chief accessions of the sotter but dull monarch, great George III. According to Lord Dover, his son, he was "a man of very little wit." Lord Dover adds that George III. "usually whispered to the king that he Vincent's excellent mots spoiled all whist. 'The royal lips themselves betrayed the character for when the good old fellow came to pay his respects at court it was frequent with the salutation. 'Well, Mr. Bean, do you play at cards as much as ever?' The Bean was quick to see the occasion, and with great presence of mind said with words equally courteous, replied: 'I hope whenever I did your majesty that I played at cards said also that my eyes will not serve me to any other purpose by candle light.'

"And he lived some years later, the reply might have been supplemented by the sage and shrewd of the county physician, Sir Henry Halford, to a patient in a similar state: 'If you wish to preserve your eyes, never read by candle light.' Another story is told of the king's witticism. He had been buried there one day, and asked the king if he could see the eyes, but, said, although the reply was as fresh as if they had been but lately uttered, the joke was long dead. Seattle.

A Monthly Advertisement.

The largest advertisement that has ever been thrown out for wondering humanity to gape upon is that of the Glasgow News, made of flower beds in the form of a mountain back of Arbroath, Scotland. The words, "Glasgow News," can be seen and plainly read at a distance of four miles. The length of each letter is forty feet, the total length of the line 223 feet, and the area covered by the letters 16,945 feet. The borders of the letters are set with white flowers, the centers with red and purple. The effect from a distance is said to be very grant.

THE PENNIES WE LOSE.

Uncle Sam Kept Busy Coining Them—No One Knows Where They Are.

Small copper coins are lost in such enormous numbers that the government is obliged to keep on coining them to make good several millions of them every month. They change hands so often as to be subject to a multitude of accidents, and, owing to their small value, they are not taken care of. This is the cause of regret to Uncle Sam, who is seen as he sups the pennies in black from a film in Congress. He rules at 1,000 for one cent. The cost of the coin for one dollar is only half a cent. Nobody knows what has become of them, except that once in a while some of them are found in change. A few years ago 4,000,000 bronze two-cent pieces were set afloat. Three millions of them are still outstanding. Three million three-cent nickel pieces are scattered over the United States, but it is very rarely that such coins are brought back, even when exchanged in value to English threepenny bits, or one has been returned to the government for recoinage or labeled by the "curiosity."

A Happy Man.

"How happy I am," said the lecturer, "in the possession of an order-loving wife! If I love to get up in the middle of the night, I am sure to find my bride of long, etc., I may happen to want to strike a light, within one half hour of the Opperman hall closed and found for patronizing, apply to the office of

PEOPLE WHO CANT CRY.

Lunatics Never Shed Tears in Spite of All Their Unhappiness.

One of the most curious facts connected with madness is the utter absence of tearwatering in lunacy. Whatever the form of madness, tears are suppressed by the insane, as much in the depression of melancholy or excitement by mania as in the utter apathy of dementia. If a patient in a lunatic asylum be discovered in tears it will be found that it is one for long to recover, or an emotional outbreak in epilepsy which is nearly truly insane; while actual lunacy seems among us to have lost the power of weeping, it is only returning reason which shed one sore unless the fountains of their eyes. Even when a lunatic is telling one in tones of agony how he has been deprived of her children, or the outrages that have been perpetrated on herself, her eye is never even moist. The tears of tears which accompanies the plaint of the same woman consciousness, sanity with the dry-eyed appeal of the talkative lunatic it would seem that tears give relief to feelings which, when they are too deep for tears, it is one of the privileges of reason to be able to weep. And all the misery of the insane they find no relief in tears.

Safe on the Transatlantic Lines.

The safe or treasure rooms of the leading transatlantic steamers are fireproof, and contain vaults, which are strongly constructed and contrived and are strongly built that, with a single exception, that of a Pacific liner carrying gold on a long voyage, we believe they have never been robbed. In some vessels there safe vaults are placed amidships, in some aft, but they are always at the bottom of the ship, below everything else, and practically in the safest part of the vessel. The room is generally some eight or ten feet square and high, and built of iron plates three or four inches thick, and it is furnished with such a formidable array of locks, bolts, and bars as to strike dismay to the hearts of even the boldest and most experienced burglars.

Mark Twain Again.

The following story is told of Mark Twain by a gentleman who then lived his residence at Hartford: One day Mark answered the telephone, and after hallooing for some time without an answer, he used some language not generally seen in print, but which was certainly picturesque. While thus engaged he heard an answer in subdued tones, and recognized the voice of an eminent divine whom he knew very well. "Is that you, doctor?" questioned Mark. "I didn't hear what you said. My hearing has been at the telephone and said to the doctor, "I should you.

Sad, Indeed.

A friend was visiting Mr. Oscar Wilde one day recently, and found him hard at work "cutting" super-human dialogue from his latest play. "Isn't it fearfully hard work?" he asked after a moment or two. "what right have I to do this, pray? Who am I that I should tamper with a classic?"

Cheaper Than Dirt, Too.

It has been the current opinion for centuries that places of burial are haunted, especially after nightfall, with specters, ghosts and other apparitions. Persons who have investigated this matter declare that the ghost idea was pretty near before Noah built the ark. Even Ovid has put himself on record as believing that spirits occasionally left their abodes to visit wonderful sheets working whom they might devour.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed by Michael Dowling and Ellen Dowling, his wife, of the town of Charlevoix, County of Antrim, State of Michigan, to Charlevoix Savings Bank, of Charlevoix, Michigan, dated the twenty-first day of March, A. D. 1892, and recorded in the Register of Deeds office, for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on the twenty-first day of March, A. D. 1892, in Liber "A" of Mortgages, on page 449, on which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date hereof the sum of Twenty-Five Dollars and Ninety-Five Cents principal and interest, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted to recover the money now secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on in the afternoon, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, by a sale at Public Auction, to the highest bidder, of the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with the costs and expenses of foreclosure, including the attorney fee allowed by law, and also the taxes, if any, on said premises, with interest on all said sums from the date of said sale, which premises are situated in the Village of Charlevoix, Michigan, and are described as follows, to wit: Lots Nine (9) and Ten (10) in Block Twenty-Three (23) in the Village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat thereof.

Many ladies have used our machines twenty to thirty years in their family work, and are still using them, and have never yet been surprised them a generation ago. Many of our machines have been run more than twenty years without repairs, other than needles, and are yet perfect and never wear out, and seldom need repair.

We have both rotary and vibrating for more than forty years and have constantly improved them. We build only one grade, on honor, and they are recognized everywhere as the most accurately fitted and finely finished sewing machines in the world. Our Lock St

HOW CHICAGO GROWS

CLAIMS TO HAVE PASSED NEW YORK.

Big Flue to a Little—Many Worlds' Fair Attitudes Inflated Sentiment and a Little Concentrated Mirth Says His Honor the Young.

—Upon the authority of the new City Directory will be based the claim that Chicago, disgusting world, Chicago is today the metropolis of America. Within the legal limits of the city flows from at the moment a prescribed number of people—to be exact, 1,838,693 souls. Chicago's population is about 400,000 larger than New York's. The Government census takes in Jam and Jam, and gives the Chicago population of 1,199,000, in round numbers. The school census, which is exact as far as it goes, but which is still necessarily imperfect and incomplete, was taken shortly the same time, and made it 1,226,000. Two years later (or 1893, mark) it showed that the population as 1,439,000, and a month or two before the official census showed this was computed the Chicago Directory published—showed that the population of Chicago at 1,838,693. There is no school census this year, but the city directory will contain 1600 more pages than last year. Each page of the directory represents, according to the publishers' method of computing population, a city less than 50 people, each page containing an average of a little over 350 names. In the 1892 Directory publication the 1600 Chicago's will show a population of about 560,000 at the present. It is a sore fact for Gotham, however, that the publication of the Chicago Directory lies very strongly in the direction of a claim for precedence in the matter of world population and wealth, and is every of exceptional prominence in the city's growth these calculations have fallen into disrepute low the city's growth.

—Sidney Sullivan, a boy of 14 and four days, lives in Chicago, a village of 1,838,693 souls, by Gotham's reckoning. He attended school in Chicago last year, and he knows that Chicago is a village of 1,838,693 souls, because the Director of the Chicago Directory publication told him so. Sidney, by the way, is a pupil in the Sullivan School, and he knows that the Sullivan School is the biggest school in the world

"L" CARS HAVE EARS.

Knife Cannot Not Bear to Hear Her Mistress Abused and Spoke Up.

The other evening when the New York L cars were crowded with parties returning from the theatres, a young and very short Irish girl boarded the train at Twenty-third street. It was impossible for her to reach a strap, and a gentleman rose and gave her a seat.

Presently the young woman became forced and not uninterested listener to the conversation which he was carrying on with the friend who stood beside him. They were discussing the merits and weaknesses of certain friends of theirs, whom we will call Mr. and Mrs. D——.

Mr. D—— was benevolent and ridiculously fond of his wife. Mrs. D—— was good-hearted, but a very pushing sort of a woman, while the growing-up son was described as a most selfish young man with no ear criticism of the sort that some of us bestow so liberally upon absent friends.

"Poor man," said Katie the next day, when she was relating the incident to her mistress, "I river knew before how bad yez was."

Her mistress laughed heartily, when the faithful girl resumed:

"Well, I gave him a piece av me mind. When I couldn't hear it still any longer I jist said, 'Here's yer seat, sor. I'm tired with them pale yeller a-talkin' av iver since I came from the gold comathrer, and I'll set oil and hear 'em abuse.'"

PITCAIRN ISLANDERS.

Descended From Criminals, They Are Patterns of Sobriety.

Pitcairn Island, where the descendants of the mutineers of the bounty live in seclusion and primitive contentment, boasts of being absolutely free from the vice of drinking. The prohibition laws there touch not only liquors, but tobacco. A shipwrecked sailor named Coffin, who was cast ashore there a few months ago, had managed to save his dearly cherished pipe and pouch of tobacco. The chief magistrate of the colony promptly informed him that he must give up smoking if he wanted to enjoy their hospitality, and when he refused he was as effectually boycotted that he fled this ocean paradise by the first passing ship. Captain Bailey of the American merchantman Vigilant, from Japan, brings this story. He stopped at the island and traded trinkets for food with the natives, and found them happy and prosperous, though not a drop of rain had fallen there for two years and the volcanic soil of which their island lies has been giving ominous indications of activity.

Yale's Class Baby.

The class of '93, which was graduated from Yale in June of last year, has a class boy. He was born April 22, and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand A. Houston. The parents of the class boy are both pursuing post-graduate courses in the philosophical department of the university. It was only last fall that women were admitted to Yale. This is the first child ever born to the university whose parents are both members of it. The mother was, prior to her marriage, Miss Helen Dawson, and was graduated from Smith college in the class of '89. She spent several years studying in Germany, and, returning to this country, married Mr. Houston shortly after he graduated.

The Worst Kind of Debts.

Kenny Meadows, the artist, was the author of a well-known studio pun. There had been one day a long talk about the frames and the palette necessary for it, and the repeated remark that it needed a palette of earthly quite tired him out. "You talk of others," he said, "but the worst of all you haven't named, though it's the commonest. That's the mellower!"

The Golconda Mines.

The Golconda mines are now exhausted. At one time 60,000 men were employed in them. When the sultan Mahmoud, who reigned 1377-1396, died he left in his treasury over 700 pounds weight of gems from Golconda.

Two Mammoth Apple Trees.

The two largest apple trees in the state of New York are both near the town of Wilson. The largest was planted in 1815, and thirty-three full barrels of apples were once picked from its branches in a single season. The other is on the farm of J. G. O. Brown, and yielded twenty barrels of "choice" fruit and five barrels of "culls" in the season of 1891.

LOOKS LIKE A HUMAN HAND.

The Singular Growth of a Tree Which Has Once Been Blighted.

Up on the east side of North Seventh street, about midway between Poplar street and Girard avenue, Philadelphia, stands a strikingly curious tree. It stands just in front of a valable yard and the employes of the place say that dozens of people come to them every week and make research or ask questions about the strange growth. From the thickness of the growth at the base the tree is probably about forty years old, but its branches and foliage are new and fresh, and look as though they were but the growth of a year or two. The trunk rises straight from the ground to a height of fifteen feet. Above this, for a short distance is a thick, globular mass of foliage, the leaves appearing to grow directly out of the wood. Above this growth ran up three thick stalks or attmps, six or eight feet high, also covered with a dense, close mass of foliage. When the tree is viewed from the north side it presents a startling resemblance to a giant human hand protruding from the earth. The three big attmps at the top represent the middle fingers, and upon other side of these can easily be seen configurations of the surrounding foliage which correspond to the little finger and thumb. The explanation of the phenomenon is a simple one. The tree was once full-grown and vigorous, but was attacked by blight or some other disease, and the dead trunk was pruned down to its present proportions, whereupon the present new growth developed.

SELF-CONDEMNED.

A Piano-Tuner Who Criticises His Own Bad Work.

"I had about finished tuning the piano, when he looked up and said:

"Your instrument was in ad awful condition. You ought to have sent for me sooner."

"It was tuned only three months ago."

"Then the man who did it certainly didn't know his business."

"Why?"

"Ko, ma'am; he had better be working on the railroad than tuning pianos. Why, my dear madam, a delicate instrument like the piano needs fingers equally delicate to handle it, combined with an ear of unerring accuracy. The individual who attempted to tune this instrument last evidently possessed neither of these. In fact, I am free to say that he did more harm than good."

"Indeed!"

"Indeed he did. May ask who it was who so abused your instrument?"

"It was yourself."

"Madame, you are wrong. I never tuned a piano in this house before."

"Probably not, but you tuned that instrument, nevertheless, or made a bunch of it in attempting to do so. It belongs to Mrs. Gimram, who sent it here within she is out of the city. She told me you always tuned it, and to send for you when——

But she did not finish.

The unhappy man fell to the floor and expired almost instantly.

A CHINESE LEGEND.

A Combination of Figures Which Made a Young Lady Sad.

She was visiting her brother's house and, happening to stroll into the library, she noticed the combination "3—4—6" marked with pencil on a card hung on the wall. Instantly she grew indignant, for she was a most religious maiden and was very fond of her brother, whom she considered, indeed, a model young man. Quick to write an exclamation, she immediately sought him out and gave him a lecture on the wickedness of policy playing.

All the while that she was imploring him to live up to his exemplary belief he maintained a stolid indifference which nearly aggravated her. When she had sweat her fury he burst into a loud laugh and explained the mysterious figures. Every time he had sent his laundry to the Chinaman he had lost pieces of linen, and, as he had never counted the number he had sent, he was at a loss. He had determined, therefore, to keep a record of the number he sends to be "done up." The "3—4—6" he explained, represented three shirts, six pairs of cuffs and eight collars.

Now his sister likes him better than ever, and since that day she never has been induced to listen to anything derogatory to him.

HE GOT THERE.

Westlake's Mint Prayer Because He Was Not in Full Dress.

A good story about Professor Tucker, formerly of Bowdoin college, is told.

About the year '61, when he was "Tutor" Tucker at the institution, he had long for prayers at the chapel, as now, very early in the morning, and it was imperative upon tutors and pupils to respond.

As a rule Mr. Tucker was very popular, although very strict, and he was always going to take his place at the head of his class at the early morning devotions.

One morning, however, he found his clothing gone and his door nailed while the bell was ringing.

Finding a hatchet he soon split the door down and at the last stroke of the bell appeared, clothed in his shirt and a pair of overalls, barefooted, but with a smile of serenity on his expressive countenance. He took his customary place and neither then nor afterwards were words of complaint heard from him.

A Student of Mankind.

Mrs. Micks—There! There is another born sick handkerchief that my husband has stuffed into the rag-bag. That is the last of the half a dozen he bought last year or year before, and he put them all in the rag-bag himself. Now wait.

Sister—What for?

Mrs. Micks—In about a week you will hear him raving around wanting to know what has become of that half a dozen new silk handkerchiefs he bought only a few months ago.

—Before leaving here last week, General manager Heald appointed Fred J. Meech, of this place, superintendent of station grounds and yards at Charlevoix and Petoskey. The appointment is an excellent one. Mr. Meech is an accomplished florist and landscape artist. He knows the latin name of every plant, from a hobby-hock to a hemlock tree.

—It is expected that Miss Winifred Hale, of Albion, will give one of her entertainments consisting of dramatic recitals and readings in Charlevoix early in August. Miss Gale is remembered as a grand-daughter of Rev. J. T. Iddings and has achieved success in her portayals of the greatest authors, for one so young.

—Supt. Guard very properly calls attention to the extravagant use of water for lawn and garden purposes. There is no doubt that the waterworks regulations are violated to some extent, but it will be very difficult to enforce the letter of the rule in regulating the use of water, as to hours. There is no occasion for the city to be miserly with its water, yet proper regard should be given the rules as to extravagance.

—That well known citizen of Northern Michigan, Mr. Edwin Marshall, of Banks township, Antrim county, whose life has been despaired of for several weeks, is on the high road to recovery. Mr. Marshall, besides being a pioneer of Northern Michigan, is one of its foremost citizens, and that he is to be spared to his family, neighbors and friends is cause for rejoicing.

—A little girl of Mr. Yost had a narrow escape Monday. The delivery horse was hitched in front of the meat market, and the little girl had just climbed into the buggy when the horse broke loose and ran toward the bridge. Several vain attempts were made to stop him, but he crossed the bridge, turned to the left and ran around the old Fox residence, and was finally caught back of the Penn Cash Store. The little girl was unharmed.

—A prominent summer visitor, recently, in complimenting our waterworks, added: "But you will not get the full benefit of your water-works until you get sewerage. The laxative you desire now are only nominal compared with what sewerage would give you. Besides the matter of convenience, it is the most important sanitary measure you could adopt. Don't talk about electric lights until you properly drain your streets and premises.

—The SENTINEL is by no means an enemy of that convenient animal, the bicycle. Of course, it is understood that our bicycle talk has been in the way of bullmange only. But, seriously speaking, there are abuses connected with the use of the machines. The sidewalks are made for pedestrians; the roads for vehicles, and the habit of riging on sidewalks for people to step aside to allow bicyclists to pass should not be encouraged. Some of these bicycle riders will be a bicycle wreck, and the riders summary will be laughed up in the machine, and the whole outfit will be left in the gutter. We clip the following from an exchange: "A case of interest to wheelmen and pedestrians has just been tried in the Supreme Court at Goshen, Orange county, N. Y., before Judge Cullen and a jury. The action was brought by a resident of Port Jervis against Charles Parr, of Brooklyn, for damages for personal injuries received from being run down by a safety bicycle on a sidewalk in that village. At the time the injury was received there was no village ordinance forbidding the use of the sidewalk by bicyclists. The action was based on the law of the road and the paramount right of pedestrians to the use of a sidewalk. Judge Cullen charged the jury that the law of the road did apply, and that a bicyclist had no more right to run his machine on a sidewalk than a person had to ride a horse upon it. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $700.

The Silsby & McCracken Claims and the Railroad Bonds.

Ament the visit here last week of General Manager Heald and Attorney Smith, of the C. & W. M. Ry., it appears that a lusty and well organized revolt against the payment of interest on the so-called railroad bonds is existing among the Silsby & McCracken creditors, among whom are numbered some of our leading citizens.

They are deeply in earnest, and proclaim that they will oppose by every means in their power any recognition whatever of the bonds until the aforesaid claims are paid. They state that previous to the turning over of the bonds the attorney of the road said that "there would be no Rock business connected with their construction affairs," and that all claims would be adjusted.

This, we are told, is not denied by the railroad management, but their defense is that action on the part of the said creditors is the only means through which adjustment can be reached. They also acknowledge that they are now in possession of a certain percentage of the McLane contract money, withheld, presumably, to protect the company against claims of the Silsby & McCracken sort.

The claims against the company growing out of the Silsby & McCracken failure aggregate $5,000, about $3,500 is held in Charlevoix. If the railroad company has the power to adjust these claims, Mr. Heald should cease beating about the bush, and Attorney Smith should no longer evade responsibility. While the people's money lies under the ties of the C. & W. M. Ry., they do not feel like falling over each other to pay interest on railroad bonds.

But the gentlemen who constitute the moving force in this revolt possess too much sense to lose sight of the fact that there is another side to this question—a feature of it which touches our integrity and may seriously affect our most vital interests. A quarrel with the C. & W. M. people should be avoided if possible; as, whatever the outcome, greater damage will accrue to us than to them.

Morally, the fact of irregularity in the bond issuing cuts no figure. Every legal feature of the transaction was as well understood on the day which the electors voted the bonds as they are now. We have received the goods and we should pay for them. We should pay our debts; so should other people.

We sincerely hope that a speedy and amicable adjustment of the difficulty will be reached, and an end put to the existing feud between Charlevoix and the railroad company restored.

Our Beaver Island Friends in Trouble.

Suit has been begun in the U. S. court at Grand Rapids against the county of Emmet, of which St. James, Beaver Island is the county seat.

Six years ago, to make up a deficiency in the operating expenses of the county, bonds to the amount of $2,500 were issued and negotiatated at Petoskey. Neither principal nor interest have been paid, the people professing poverty as the reason, and the bondholders have begun suit to collect.

If they win, and the bonds are still unpaid, they will be in a position to claim ownership of the islands on the decree of the court.

In Sheep's Clothing.

By Capt. Ormond Steele

CHAPTER XXIV.—Continued.

The book was brought; and Ralph Graham, who knew the chance taken at every man on board, called out the story, or rather forty-nine stories he wanted, and Valentine wrote them down.

Now, have them assemble quietly in the waist men," said the captain.

Within ten minutes the sailors were gathered in the waist room, where lights were lit and the doors guarded.

Captain Dunham removed his disguise before meeting the men—he was very surprised he was in New York, their surprise and joy may be imagined, as second mate.

As has been said, he was a very man in whom the men had been boys together. He could trust them implicitly as he could Mr Hedges or Mr. Valentine. They were more than a lot of ordinary young sailors, they were seamen of rare intelligence, any one of whom could manage the Sea Hawk if occasion required. They were cotton-loaders, fighting for the honor and safety of the planter in which, indeed, they were born.

Subterfuge was out of place with such men, so Ralph wisely concluded to tell them the whole truth, which he did, after first cautioning them to silence and secrecy.

He told of his own adventures, who he was, and the plan he had, Captain Dunham, had decided on to capture the pirates and bring them to justice.

While Ralph was speaking, the men were all listening with the keenest attention at the head, for, of course, they had heard the story in no very much.

"I have spoken of my shipmates," said Ralph, in conclusion, "not because they are better and more reliable than the rest of the crew, but I wanted, or rather Fox wants, only fifty men, as we have all been friends since boyhood, you will understand, and when the time for action comes as others might not."

The men would have broken into a cheer had not Ralph checked them in time.

Believing that Fox would not permit idle sailors, he had, when he had arranged that he might by telegraph to Fox, which he, made such man consent two pistols and a long dirk on his person. A rattling cry was agreed on in the event of a fight at night, and no one should move from his own quarters, so that, as the name Captain Dunham was to go by, and the fact that they would have to make more noise of him than of their other companions at the time capture.

The arrangements were not perfected when day came, so Ralph, after Mr. Freeman had gone ashore with a letter from Captain Fox to Commodore Hedges, asked if the men required would be sent in boats.

"Our men are volunteers," said Mr. Hedges, "and I have not the power to send them to another ship without their own consent. Fox, I know, has explained to them that there was a chance, if they went in the Sea Hawk for a week, to have a brush with that traitor and dog, Blake, so fifty of his men are ready."

"Ah, that is good news. If we don't show them Kidd," laughed Freemaid. "Then that fellow will be harder to catch than the Flying Dutchman. We have fifty more men on the sea but others we shall leave with you for a few days. Then are not much under the weather, but I fear they have been indulging all such on shore." Captain Dunham, of course, called Captain Dunham back.

He asked Mr Hedges could not report to him with a straight face.

"Oh, shiver my timbers!"

"Oh, shiver my timbers can not along without him for a while.

Within two hours the boats of both ships made their transfers, and Ralph Dunham and his pirates were on the Wanderer.

The ship's boarded ruffians who came on board the Sea Hawk did not look like men who had been sick, but they had had a party, and it can be said, whether for good or ill, they had played it exactly as Capt. Fox wished.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE WANDERER'S CREW WELCOMES ADMIRAL.

Captain Fox believed that he had Colonel Graham safely in his power, and he liked him accordingly. In addition to the same reasons the Colonel had already paid to his foe, he now gave him another, in his quiet, dignified, but grateful acknowledgments to Captain Fox for his generosities on Long Island, Hoboken, and Staten Island, New York.

Fox would not have been quite so comfortable with his aristocratic guest could he have known the truth.

Before reaching New York, Graham had arranged with one of his mates to write to the governor of a certain date that Captain Kidd would be about that time off the Jersey coast off Long Island and this tool did his work well.

The governor, after sending for Captain Dunham was to put him on Fox's track, had no fleet, were no other ships in the harbor sailed to the, vessel, and Freeman had telegraphed to a person nor by letter, the authorities were perplexed, and the young captain knew it.

After Graham had assured that Ralph Dunham was safely on the way, he wrote to his friends, who could be have come home safely, that the Wanderer was commanded by Captain Kidd.

Graham loathed and dreaded the man whom he had made an effort to save further his own designs; and now a few hours, at the longest, before the, the colonel was assured at the man's mercy was imminent.

It was arranged that by daybreak of the morning the Ralph Dunham and his men went on board the Wanderer, that Colonel Graham and his friend should go ashore to the inn, and make immediate preparations for returning to New York.

Othello, or some other servant equally skillful, was as essential to Graham's comfort as his clothing and his food. But when daylight came, and Othello did not report at his master's door, Graham his lordship, Colonel Graham, was in a fearful rage.

He had been in the Wanderer's quarters, the officers of the ship was made for Othello, but he failed to reveal himself. One of the most active of the searchers, and the only one who could have thrown any light on the matter, was the shrewd Rattlin Dick, and he did not think it to his interest to tell that he had seen Othello vanishing through an open port the night before, and swimming in the direction of the Sea Hawk.

"Depend upon it, that old bar, Hinak, has reclaimed his boy off," said Fox, "and he will be free to go to go ashore and invoke the assistance of Dawes of Captain Fox's princely generosity and Christian thoughtfulness.

He found Ellen Cundit at his house, and told her that he would go up soon to see her father, whose extraordinary conduct late puzzled him not a little, and made him extremely uneasy about his old friend's health.

"I think, said Ellen, "that father is feeling very well but if you go up to the place this morning you will not find him.

"Where is he?"

"He boards the Sea Hawk."

"Why, he spends half his time there."

"Is mother and I tell him, Hector, and we should not be at all surprised if he came back at any time, dressed as a sailor and walking with a rolling gait, while he shouts to us that he has enlisted, said killed, stuffing.

"Oh, Heaven forbid. But of course, Ellen, you will attend the reception on board the Wanderer this afternoon?" said Mr Hedges.

"Yes, Les and I were talking about that. We think some of the officers and men on that ship are the most delightful——

"Ah, Ellen, Ellen," laughed the gallant doctor "I'll not tell Valentine, but don't say that again. And so you really think that some of the officers and men on the Wanderer are very fine, eh?"

"I do indeed," replied Ellen, "and I know Les will be of this time, had never kept a secret from her husband. She would not have kept the one were it not that she feared he might give it publicity and so defeat the plans of those who were working to help Captain Fox at his own game.

"I—I—we—we—"

Gazette in Error.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune says that the gazette of the Rome have all the curiosity, shrewdness and impudence of street boys in general, together with some traits peculiar to themselves. They have a sharp eye for foreigners, and have developed a keen nose for the scent of news. The Tribune's letter, which appeared in the Tribune's issue of the 8th, contained a report that a German baroness he demanded a tip in order to be regular fare. Nadie was were talking a little fellow of 6 or 7 years, who had evidently been listening, assuring lose.

"Stay continues a rough, sir. The rascal is very impudent. Don't give him anything."

In the same breath he asked me for a quarter, and when I gave it to him he handed him a coin, laughing at his pocket and at the boldness of the proceeding. Then, as the driver reached for his whip, he gave a lark off, saying, "I'll see you later." I worked on, and presently another urchin was at my side.

"Say, sig, sig, do you see quite right, this time? Is the lady's ankle in the middle?"

Then I drove off, but in a few minutes another came bounding up.

"My lord my lord! you are losing your handkerchief."

And I was another solo.

Next a bootblack, hardly more than 3 years old, caught sight of the bobbing, "Your boots, sir! your boots!" he shouted.

I tried to ignore him. He appealed to my self-respect.

"But, my lord, such boots!" he expostulated. "Just feel of them, if you don't believe me! What nasty boots! it Santa Maria! Dirt! What boots! I really you, sir. Indeed! such boots! In fairness I must be sorry for you."

All this was uttered in a tone of pathetic remonstrance, and I was so delighted for the most disinterested feeling of regret and sympathy. But when the appeal failed, he dropped behind me and I was quite disengaged.

"Just look at that American! yaps Antonio. Let us shame him by his dirty boots."

But I was too much for me, Rather than be shamed I gave the little imp the 20 lira.

A Crusty Editors Scrimmage.

"The greatest transformation scene I ever witnessed occurred in Indiana. I was on the Pennsylvania Railroad, five miles out of Pittsburg. It was a little after dark, when I, there over was one. A large, well built, jolly-looking man was going east, and running at a high rate of speed.

"Suddenly I broke rigging on one of the main rearing-lines of the train, and broke in some way and dropped to the floor. The collision of the wheels of the car with the obstruction snapped an axle, which threw the car from the track. Instantly car whoop, broke, smashed, rolled and pitched. I was thrown in the air, as car after car went over me, upon the first one and one of another. Ten cars were torn to splinters.

"Two others were hurled over on the opposite side of the track, and lay in embankment. Nine lay on a single track, and one was left on a single track, upon the embankment, with its wheels in the air, a mass of twisted iron and splinters, and three single piles of stove wood and broken timber. The engine was thrown upside down the line for a distance of 100 feet, on the track, and stuck in for 200 feet on the west-bound track.

"The engineer lay dead beside the engine, with his head in a pool of water, and his face and hands were scalded and blackened with steam and coal dust. I was pinned down by a double, and I could not move, but I could see and hear all that was going on around me. The baggage car was crushed and broken, and the mail car was crushed and broken, and the mail car was crushed and broken, and the mail

A SLOW TRAIN.

The Detroit Drummer Has Gone to It—Always That Way Hereafter.

The Chicago drummer and the Detroit drummer were thumping away at a rather late hour in the morning in Indiana, and the Chicago man was saying:

"Confound it," he said, "won't we ever get started?"

"What's the matter with this?" inquired the Detroit man, philosophically.

"It's the slowest train • ever was on," he growled.

"I've seen slower," returned Detroit.

"Come off; there never was one slower."

"Well, let me tell you about it," coaxed the Detroiter, found it pleasant to lounge around to find a soft place on the worn-out springs in the seat. "One day last fall I was in a Mississippi town that has a branch road running somewhere off into the country, and about three miles out in the country there is a church, with a graveyard, where sleep the people who in life had their homes about it. The country road from the town passes the railroad station, and runs along the track clear to the church. The train going down that way was apparently waiting for a freight procession to cross the track, and as I stood in the doorway of the passenger coach a customer of mine came by.

"'Time of our prominent citizens is to be buried to-day down at Kissmeer,' he said, 'and I wanted to go, but all the carriages are full.'

"'Is that his funeral passing?' I asked.

"'Yes; I just came down from the house.'

"'Why don't you get on this train and go? I inquired. 'It takes you right there, doesn't it, and leaves now in two minutes?'

"He looked at me as if he felt real sorry for me.

"'Yes,' he replied, scarcefully, 'but I'll be blamed if I want to get there half an hour after the funeral is over,' and the conductor yelled all aboard!"

Call Up by the Sea.

Flotsam is the term for such goods as are lost in a wreck and the floating in the water; jetsam for such goods as have been thrown overboard, and ligan for such goods as have been sunk with a cask or buoy attached to mark the place where they lie. Between jetsam and ligan are not the lawful spoil of the finders, but must be delivered up to those who can prove a right to them, the owners paying a reasonable reward to those who saved and preserved them, which reward is called salvage.

Queen Victoria's Will.

The queen made her will in 1876. It is engrossed on vellum, quarto size, and is bound as a volume, secured with a private lock. Several blank pages have been left at the end of the book for codicils, some of which have already been added. Thus, when the Princess Alice died in 1878, modifications of the bequest were rendered necessary, and in the summer of 1881, after the duke of Albany's death, further revisions were imperative. One entry relates entirely to the disposal of the queen's jubilee gifts, which are not the property of the nation.

The Matinee.

There are actually horse matinees in the service of the United States, but these are merely those other horses that are entitled to ride to ride. If they go on shipboard they do not take their horses with them. Majors, lieutenant colonels and colonels in the corps have horses. It is a matter of history that a woman named Hannah Snell fought for a time in the ranks of the royal British marines. She was wounded twelve times in various actions, and was finally discharged honorably, her sex being unknown. Marines are a very ancient institution. Such sea soldiers were regularly employed on war ships by the Greek and Phoenician fire centuries before Christ. They did the fighting while the sailors managed the vessels.

How to Manage a Husband.

Mrs. Oliver Shoemaker of Pennsylvania pointed a rifle at her husband to frighten him into getting up in the morning. The rifle went off, and so did two of Mr. Shoemaker's fingers. He got up.

SAID "BOO" TO THE SENTRY.

How a Mischievous American Girl Startled a German Soldier.

A story was recently told by the friends of a certain New York woman whose pulchritude is understood among her intimates and copied as such may be when it is modified by a gentlewoman's instinct within the bounds of simple fun. The young prank player was recently abroad and while walking out in treedom one day the stolidity of the soldier sentinels pacing back and forth like automata attracted her notice. A sudden impulse seized her to test this cast-iron rigidity and waiting till one had passed she slipped into his little sentry box. When he reached it on his return, marching with measured precision, she suddenly jumped out before him, crying "Boo!" in his very face. The soldier was completely upset at this most unexpected performance and actually dropped his musket and ran away, while the young woman, having thus routed a portion of the German army, walked on and leisurely rejoined her friends. The incident, it is said, came to the ears of the emperor himself, who expressed a wish to meet this extraordinary young woman, but Miss ——, admitted that her dodge did not equal his, as she was not sure in quite what light her joking impulse would be officially regarded.

DO BABIES' EYES GROW?

An Interesting Question for Young Mothers to Ponder Over.

How big is "a young baby's eye?" We have heard it stated within the last day or two that "a young baby's eye" is as big as a grown person's eye, that the eye does not grow as the baby grows, that it is the same size when the baby is born as it is after the baby has grown up to be a man or woman; that it is born full size, and is as big as it ever gets to be. This statement has been submitted to a number of experts on babies, who generally agree that "a young baby's eye" grows as the body grows, though not in the same ratio. But is it true?

Authorities are sometimes in error. Expert witnesses frequently tangle themselves up in all kinds of contradictory statements of facts; expert physicians do not reach the same lucid conclusions; expert cotton buyers offentimes buy when the slumps in the market prove that they should have sold. It may be that the baby experts whom we have questioned upon the subject of baby eyes have spoken without due consideration. We should like to have the puzzle settled. Do babies' eyes grow? How big is a young baby's eye?

Cost of Stopping a Train.

By a series of calculations it has been demonstrated that it costs a railroad ten cents to stop a locomotive and four cents for each stop of a passenger car. It often happens that a passenger does not make any move to leave the train until the order is given to go ahead, and a train must be brought to a step again to let the lookout gain a passenger off. This little incident costs the railroad company sixteen or twenty cents, sometimes as much as the lordly passenger has paid. This is one of the little leaks that a railroad company undertakes to guard against, and the number of coaches to a train is limited to save expense of stopping, as well as to lessen the number of pounds of coal consumed and wear and tear of its running gear.

Stock Watering.

The late Daniel Drew, of New York, is reported to have been the originator of that familiar phrase used in the financial world, "stock watering." He is said to have fed the cattle he had for sale with liberal doses of salt, thereby creating a thirst which was gratified only by copious draughts of water, that helped to increase the weight of the beasts when they were sold. And it was in the Erie road that Mr. Drew proved his ability to repeat the tricks of a cattle dealer in railroad management.

Big Earrings Coming in Again.

"Monster earrings," says a jeweler, "belong to the era of cannibalism and widow-burning, and I never expected to see the mastodonic oriental fashion revived, but English swindlers has decreed that big earrings must be worn again, so be prepared to see the lobes of ladies ears weighted down with great heavy combinations of metals and jewels. I wonder why the women stop short of wearing rings in their noses and tee-penny nails stuck through their upper lips.

An Alluring Sale.

Here's an odd story. And you must believe it, for facts cannot be denied. Here is a little lady, Lillian Hart, Eleanor Beebe, Harriet Avery, Carrie Edwyn, Rita Selby. These young ladies were all successive Tonys in "A Trip to Chinatown." They've all made runaway marriages. Now, what alluurement has Tony, for the marriageable young men about town?

General Grant and the Baby.

General Grant, who was fond of children, was introduced to a little girl four years old. She gazed at him with an expression half incredulous. "Are you the General Grant that fought in the battles?" she asked. "Yes, I was in a good many battles," said Grant. The little one looked at him in wondering silence, and then said: "Let's hunt you bullets!"

One Cure of a Georgia Cyclone.

The wind sometimes cuts very queer capers. An old colored woman in the upper part of Georgia owns a very large wash pot, which she claims was carried inside out by a cyclone. She says the pot is as good as ever, only the legs and handles are on the inside now, and poster ner when she stirs the clothes

A generous Offer.

A good reason, in a small New England town, who is on intimate terms with the Almighty, and believes that good deeds should be promptly recognized, gave this encouraging assurance, the other evening, while "leading in prayer": "And, O Lord, if Thou wilt move the heart of any young man to enter Thy service as a missionary, we will show our approval in a way which Thou will appreciate." Whether or this offer has been accepted is not yet known.

WHY THE LECTURER STOPPED.

The Score of a Brownback Student Knocks Astronomy Hollow.

There is a certain professor in London who lectures before a class of students on a subject extremely abstract and difficult to grasp, and a story is told of a situation in which he suddenly found himself one day while lecturing on one of his most abstruse topics. The members of the class had evidently had an inkling of the nature of the lecture on the day in question, for at the beginning the professor faced but half a dozen students. He adjusted his glasses, smiled his pleasantest smile, and, turning to his manuscript, was soon revelling in the intricate and bewildering theories of his favorite subject. Attention from the benches lasted but a short time. There was plenty of room to stretch, and stretch they did. In the course of half an hour every one of these six was practically extended at full length or in a semi-recumbent position. If the professor had looked up he would have counted but two heads—the others were lost behind the high-backed benches. Everything was quiet, except to indicate closed lids on the part of the students and the ability of the professor was to go from mundane environments. Suddenly from one of the benches there came a great, loud, grief-stricken snore—the phens had left hold of him. The ball broke quiet supposed their grip, glide the best they could. The professor dropped his glasses and eyed the two heads with a look of great reproach. He took in the situation immediately, grasped his manuscript and strode out of the room. "And he never went there any more." The course of lectures was completed.

SNAKE HOT WATER PLEASANT.

Half-Cleaned Cooking Utensils Often Responsible for Its Bad Taste.

"There are many persons who insist that it is impossible for them to drink hot water and make all sorts of disagreeable faces about it," said an enthusiast of hygiene. "I have heard a great many people say this and for a long time I could not understand it. One day I dropped in upon one of my friends and found her very ill. I made up my mind that a little hot water would be beneficial and ran down to the kitchen to get it. While pouring out a glass for her it occurred to me that it was a good opportunity to indulge in a bit of it myself, so I poured a second glass and after it was cool enough I attempted to drink it. I didn't wonder that she had said she disliked hot water, for such a nauseous tasting mess I think I never tried to swallow in fact I just absolutely couldn't do it and had to give it up. I hardly knew what to say to her when she upon tasting, declared she couldn't take it to save her life. I could imagine nothing but dishwater in the taste of that liquid. Whether the maids were careless about their cooking utensils or what the difficulty was I couldn't tell. I have experienced the same annoyance in hotels and other places. The water has a greasy, stale, intolerable flavor, and even the smell of it might, I should think, make a well person sick. I have a special little kettle for my 1st water and take the greatest pains that nothing that will give it a disagreeable taste is ever allowed near it. When it is prepared it is as bright and clean and refreshing as the purest spring water. Ever since my little experience as my friend's home I have had no difficulty in accounting for the dislike of many persons for hot water.

Sam Lett on the Ark on April 30.

April 30, is the date given in all ancient calendars as being the one upon which Noah and his family quitted the ark after having withstood the siege of the great deluge. The day is marked in all ancient calendars, especially British, as equal to Noah, anno 1656 of the month of March, the day upon which Noah, his family and their great floating collection of natural history specimens, set sail, being designated in the annals of early printed literature as terrestrial Noah in anno, "the day of Noah's entrance into the ark." Why these days were chosen as the days upon which the stupendous carbuncles and debarkation were made are enigmas which the antiquarians have not yet solved.

WON THE CASE BY BLUFF.

His Client Had no Leg to Stand on in the Matter at All.

When lawyers get together to unlay old pretty good stories in the vein to each other, they tell the following to another. In one case have another chance gathering recently in a Chicago office a number of lawyers had to quarter. He said he was trying to defend a fellow, who, as counsel for the plaintiff, had no defense. The lawyer urged his client to throw up and on the merits of the case.

"Not by a jugful!" cried the lawyer, unlaced, and subsequent proceedings showed that he knew his man. He explained that the justice was a middle-aged man, who never wanted to go against public sentiment regardless of the tendency of the case.

When the case came for trial the small, stuffy room was crowded with the friends of the respondent, who were filled with his cider. The state was represented by a rising young lawyer who presented a perfect plea case against the respondent. There was not a break anywhere in it and the justice looked decidedly gloomy for the respondent. When the government finished the counsel for the defense rose and in a most impressive manner asked the counsel for the state if he was through.

Having been answered in the affirmative he turned to the court and solemnly remarked that he would not insult the intelligence of the court by offering any testimony in such a miserably lame case and sat down.

The second looked at the court sternly. The old man pushed his docket and remarked: "Verdict for defendant," and a celebrated case was over.

THE NEWEST FAD.

It Is to Keep a Chameleon in a Cage for a Pet.

"Have you seen the latest fad?" asked the Washington man of pets, opening a large cage surrounded by small wire cages. "They are the chameleons. Notice how this little fellow will change his color," and he took a small lizard like animal from the cage. The little fellow, when the reporter first looked at him, was a light brown, and almost immediately a rapid change took place and he turned a most beautiful green. The skin upon the lizard's back was changed, or had the appearance of a rough grained leather. The back is sharp, the tail long, round and prehensile. There are five toes on each foot united by the skin as far as the claws. The change is the most peculiar feature of the animal, it is lively, prehensile and capable of an elongation of six or seven inches. It has been live on flies and other insects, which they seize by means of their long sticky tongue. They are slow to move, but the weary fly, citizen fingers too long, for when this tongue shoots out like an arrow it seldom misses its mark or loses a victim.

Chameleons have been known for generations. In fact, they are one of the animals mentioned by Aristotle in his history of animals. The name is of Greek origin and means little lion, or as some maintain, camel lion. It is a harmless creature, and has been indigenous from the earliest times of the Nile, but such is not the case, though they are seen in stances where they have gone for months without food. The reporter only gave rise to the statement that they live on air.

THE LOVELY MOUNTAINEER.

Complained of Not Receiving Courteous Treatment.

"When I was down in North Carolina last," remarked the drummer, "I met a mountaineer beauty in Asheville for a day sightseeing." She was tall and angular, and her calico dress and limp sunbonnet had the same material clung to her as if they had no other support in the wide world. Her face was freckled and her teeth showed like the other "lipper" of the pipe. I met her in the railroad station, waiting for a train, and she spotted me on sight.

"'Ain't you a drummer?' she inquired.

"'I'm a traveling salesman,' I replied, 'what will you have?'

"'I want to know about my train, an' they ain't nobody round that knows anything about it. Reckon you know it, all,' she laughed.

"I tell her what she wanted to know, and then she brumbled off.

"'I was over there in the waiting room when the train came in, and I seen a little bit of the despot a while ago,' she said, 'lickin' round an' when I went in there every man was smokin', and the way they treated me was real rude.'

"'You didn't expect them to stop smoking when you came in, did you?' I asked. 'That's their waiting-room, you know, and they have the right of way.'

"She tapped the floor with the toe of her big cowhide shoe for a moment. "'But they might have been polite,' she continued, wrathily.

"'What did you want them to do?'

"'Well, some on 'em, and here she peered, 'might 's axed me to smoke.'

"'They offered her my cigar once and the rush all I had and smiled.

Gigantomic Fungus From Apples.

Attention is called to the fact that apples should be cellars or elsewhere are invariably covered exteriorly with mould or mildew—often invisible, but just as real. This mold consists mostly of microscopic fungus, and of which are seven species of fungi, all of which are more or less poisonous. Physicians say they have traced cases of diphtheria in children to the use of apples grown in the infinite of giving little children apples to play with, and the idea is to try to eat it on. In such cases the mold should be carefully removed from the apple.

Effect of Frost at Niagara Falls.

The water and falls of the cataracts on Niagara may be better remarked in early spring than at any other season. Great boulders are continually falling from the faces of the cliffs where they were loosened by the action of the frost, and the same process, no doubt, is going on in the stone under the cataracts. The crashes power of the waterfall is not so great, but water, wind and frost together make the roar and tumult of the gorge, particularly on the Horseshoe side, quite perceptible.

STORY OF BIRD LIFE.

Two Times Persons Who Would Answer to Their Owner's Whistle.

Some years ago my father had a pair of robins that had built in his place for very long, and because very much attached to him, so much so that they were almost his constant companions, accompanying him in his walks or when out driving. They would answer his whistle like a dog, and would sight on his proffered hand, or enter his pocket if opened for them. A skeptical friend thought they would show the same familiarity to any other person, and to give them a fair trial, he procured a suit of clothes of the same color as that which my father wore. Arrayed in his disguise, our skeptical friend, imitating my father's whistle as nearly as possible, whistled to the pigeons. Immediately they left their perch on the fence rail and flew down to the hand held out to receive them. At first when they came within a few yards of it, they nearly checked themselves, fluttered perpendicularly for few moments around our friend, and then flew back to the fence rail. This was conclusive evidence. But a still accident happened. One morning one of the pigeons was found upon the lightroad dead, its body bearing marks of injury, but from what cause we never knew. We buried the dead body home and buried it in a quiet and sunny spot in the garden. For three days the surviving pigeon, with ruffled feathers, perched on the country fence and near to its mate, but in vain. It refused to leave the place, and even the influence which my father usually exercised over it was gone. On the third day we found it dead in the dovecot, its little breast broken with grief by the loss of its lifelong companion. We buried it beside its mate. Since then my father has never kept pets.

HIS FUTURE WIFE'S NAME.

The Conjurer Promised to Tell it and Did So.

He was a dusky kind of conjurer, but was as much up to date as the evening entertainment merely. So he stepped into the parlor and asked the judge and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, if there is in this audience any young man who would like to know the name of his future wife, if that young man will kindly stand up, I will undertake to tell him, and this is no guessing competition. Now, will any single young man kindly stand up?"

The judge's young man in the center of the room.

"Thank you," said the conjurer. "Now, do you wish to know the name of your future wife?"

"I do," said the young man.

"Well," said the man of magic, "I always like to do things in a proper business fashion, and you kindly give me your name."

"Yes, certainly," said the young man, "my name is James Jackson."

"Thank you," replied the conjurer, "then the name of your future wife will be Mrs. Jackson."

Bay View Dates.

Many are asking for Bay View dates, and here they are. The summer University opens this week Wednesday, July 12, and the Assembly the following week, on July 19, both continuing until August 16.

The advantages offered in the summer University are greater than ever and are going to attract people from all parts of Northern Michigan.

Many will go to study in the school of Music where the finest instructors from the widely known Detroit Conservatory are the teachers; others will go to study Art, Oratory or Physical Culture, while large numbers of teachers will be drawn to the school of Methods and the College, and many ministers and Bible students will go for the Bible School which is to open a week later than the other sessions. Bay View grounds are the finest teachers in the county.

The railroad will give half rates, expenses at Bay View are very moderate, and, taken all in most economize will be surprised over what can be done in boarding themselves by the aid of a fifty cent oil stove, the bakery and markets.

Any who think of going to Bay View are advised to write to Superintendent J. M. Hall for the University Review which gives full information about the University courses and the splendid Assembly Programme.

There is no more interesting place in the World than Bay View during the Assembly and University.

Mr. Chas. Swallow, 1014 West Madison Street, Chicago informs his Charlevoix friends that he will be able to supply them rooms during the World's Fair, and invites correspondence. 26tf.

METHODIST YOUNG PEOPLE.

International Convention of the Epworth League at Cleveland.

The first international convention of the Epworth League was held last week in Cleveland, Ohio, and lasted four days. The organization is the Young People's society of the Methodist episcopal church, and though only four years old it has a membership of at least twenty-five thousand. The meetings at Cleveland were largely attended, and the Epworth Leaguers had a very enjoyable time. The following table compiles the statistics of the Epworth League in various countries:

	Societies	Members
United States	24,000	1,000,000
Canada	1,000	50,000
Australia	1,000	50,000
Total	26,000	1,100,000

The Epworth League shows as the young people's society of the Methodists of India. Though only four years old the Epworth League is now the largest Methodist society in Canada. Hugh Price Hughes, the celebrated English Methodist preacher, was present, and he gave a glowing account of the work of the Epworth League in Canada. In Canada the Epworth League is the young people's society of the Methodist church. It has extended to Bermuda, Japan, Mexico, and the Methodist Church of Canada, the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the Japan Methodist Church of England.

There is a peculiar appropriateness in holding the first general meeting of this society in Cleveland, because it was in August, 1889, that the Epworth League was born, just a little more than four years ago. It was at that time that the significant event occurred in Cleveland, when it was decided that the representatives of the Young People's societies of the Methodist Episcopal church should form a League, the Young People's Prayer meeting association, the Methodist Union and the Methodist Epworth League, which had been formed in Canada, and the Methodist Protestant Young People's Christian Endeavor society, and formed a new society. This was done with the greatest harmony and cordiality, and delegates increased with great enthusiasm to their churches. The energy of Methodism in the girls, in the consecrated church, from conference to conference, and from conference to conference, the Epworth Leagues is thriving wherever the Methodist church is found. The constitution of the society has been adopted in Canada, Australia, Norwegian, Swedish, Danish, Italian, Japanese, Chinese, Hindoo, and Spanish languages and dialects of India. The list of chapters in the United States, and, with the junior leagues, which is growing very rapidly, and the weekly prayer meeting, which is growing almost points run over that limit, it is now estimated that there are 20,000,000 to 20,000,000 members of the Epworth League in the great industry of the North. The Epworth Leagues are the farmers only for cash returns. From the sale of the Epworth Leagues of their harvest, until the end of the year it is a rule such a possible to get the wheat under roof. Railroads are overcrowded with transportation, and more than they can attend to. The Epworth Leagues are the most thing is for the farmer to be in his fields and get the grain stacked and then and either the Epworth Leagues or the Epworth Leagues are the big milling and elevator combines, and the farmer is not to be in the middle, under the people of the Epworth Leagues.

Meanwhile, the wheat remains in the fields, and the farmer is waiting for the receipt may decide to sell and ship it. Meanwhile, the Epworth Leagues, a Minneapolis dispatch alleges, sells the wheat in the city, and, when he gets it into his warehouse, making the Epworth Leagues, of Minneapolis, and Duluth at once the Epworth Leagues, and then full his forwards the grain to one of the Epworth Leagues, while it lies in bins with fresh wheat going through the same process, and the farmer has for it and collecting carrying charges and storage and insurance.

Many warehousemen are satisfied with the Epworth Leagues, and the storage charges on the capacity of the Epworth Leagues, are worth five cents and less overall, not only sell out the Epworth Leagues, but "short" the market an amount equal to the quantity represented by outstanding certificates. Then when the property is called for, it is found to be only they still have it to sell, the warehousemen cannot be short, for to just that extent. Not all warehousemen are Epworth Leagues, and yet some it is alleged that many of them in the Northwest are.

—The feeling in Wall street Thursday, so the opinion of the market was morally Bearish that not enough active activity to make a quorum of stocks, preferring to hold off until London was heard from as it was thought the price of silver would be moved down there. But none was expected to be made, and stocks were sold down a few cent. When the regular calls came, the market was dull and prices lower. The bears were encouraged by a rumor that the white metal had fallen 25, proof the London market, making the present price fifty pence. The silver brokers in London were discouraged and made no attempt to improve on the present depressed condition of the industry. Within half an hour the opening of the New York market for silver the quotation price was 99 cents, and the transactions were made at that figure. This represents a drop of 62 cents an ounce. The market seems to be thoroughly demoralized and no one can tell where it will stop.

Summer school at Bellaire opened on Monday of last week and will continue one month.

Traverse City people living near the asylum are kicking because careless attendants allow insane patients to wander about promiscuously.

Capt. Olsson and his crew of the U. S. L. S., of North Manitou island rowed across to the mainland one day last week in 90 minutes, a distance of 13 miles.

George Burley, of Elk Rapids, was badly gored by a bull lately. He was repairing a stall in which the animal was tied and slipped and fell The animal broke two ribs, injured his leg and otherwise ill treated him.

Traverse City is again on the war path for manufacturing establishments and has offered the Cadsey, Quinlin & Hawley factory, of Petoskey, a tempting offer to move to that place.

The officers and crew of the Lawrence says they saw "Jack the Ripper the Sea Lion that escaped from Chicago a year ago, in Traverse Bay last week. He seemed to be well and having a good time of it.

The largest brook trout of the season was caught by George Valentine, of Manistique on the Indian River recently. It weight was five and one-half pounds, and its length eighteen inches.—Manistique Tribune.

R. P. Richards, of Frankfort, set out a butternut twig on his place in 1876, 15 years ago, which now measures two feet five and one half inches five feet from the ground. A ten acre tract of such timber would be worth a small fortune.

The Indian camp meeting at Kewadin, near Elk Rapids, held annually in August is a great feature and draws hundreds of people. The meeting will be in session six days and many white and copper colored orators will be present.

Harner Bros. an enterprising clothing firm at Petoskey, have been advertising lately by pasting a label to it exactly on the side of a silver dollar It is said that this is contrary to law and that they are being looked up by detectives from the United States treasury department.

The schooars at Central Lake presented Professor Clinton Whitmoyer with a very fine and handsome clock at the close of the school year. The clock was set with numerous rare mineral and geological specimens from various parts of the U. S.

It appears that all is not smooth sailing even with the new Boyne City railroad. It is said that one A. Jepson, of Petoskey, who owns a piece of land over which the grade runs, celebrated the 4th by tearing up a considerable of the new grade here. An injunction was gotten out against him

There was a very small attendance at the meeting of the Charlevoix County Association of the Soldiers and Sailors at Horton's Bay, last week. Those who did attend however were well pleased with their entertainment. The next meeting will be held in Boyne Falls, Aug. 23 and 24, 1893. The officers for the ensuing year are: E. K. Robinson, commander; F. P. Myers, adjutant; L. Meaker, senior vice commander Wm. Mears, quartermaster; A. J. Stroud, officer of the day.

The finding of a box of human bones in a swamp near Traverse City recalls the mysterious disappearance of a farmer named Ely and his entire family. Ely's hired man took possession of the farm under a deed conveying to him everything about the place. He died some years ago and the house has since been deserted. It has always been suspected that the hired man knew something about the family's disappearance and the bones found are believed to be those of the Elys.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The Spanish caravels passed through the straits last week Tuesday morning. They encountered heavy weather and anchored during the day in Sand Bay, Beaver Island.

Grand Traverse Herald: While coming in about nine o'clock Sunday night the City of Charlevoix suddenly landed on a sand-bar near Traverse Beach. The pilot was steering by the compass and it is thought that a number of mowing machines in the cargo in some way affected it. She was pulled off in about four hours.

Hastings from Hayes.

Clifford Fish, a former Hayesite, has been visiting his parents the past week.

Several of our citizens enjoyed a Fourth of July picnic at Kaw-go-che-weng.

Allen E. Bowman had a valuable Jersey heifer killed in the woods a few days ago.

The rain on the Fourth has revived everything. The hot, dry weather gave us the Hay(e) fever and residing ten miles from mineral water was tough.

We enjoyed the holiday at Traverse City, but we were foolish enough to start off with a small bottle of smelling salts, and not knowing the back-door combination in a strange city, we were obliged to return home at an early hour.

Sand plaster in any quantity and very cheap at the Pioneer store.

Isaac Stauffer has been appointed drain commissioner by the town board.

W. C. Grandy was spointed school inspector to fill vacancy.

We have two young men, 23 years of age, who were never inside a saloon.

There is one thing about the new tax law that is commendable; the limit of paying taxes is extended to March 1, and the foolish custom of the town board meeting to extend the time of tax-paying is abolished.

All members of the Board of Review who hold over are knocked out by the new tax law which authorizes the electors next spring at the April election to elect two members, one for two years, and one for one year.

The Pine Lake cemetery will be improved and platted and made to look a little pleasanter than it now does.

Michael McDermott is improving his premises with a wire fence.

Fred Smith has been appointed by the Board of Health to superintend the Pine Lake cemetery, and applications for burial should be made to him.

A petition has been circulated for a drain near Bay Shore and we hope to see the bit of road that has been macadamized with saw dust fixed up in good style.

Homer Sy, of Chicago, spent the Fourth with his parents at Bay Shore.

Please read our ad., and oblige,

Yours Truly,

CHARLEVOIX HARDWARE CO.

Norwood Notes.

Kate and Jessie Meech arrived Saturday from Chicago.

C. H. Ferguson and his friend Mr. Haskett arrived last week.

The late rains have been a great help to growing crops. The hay crop will be light, but corn never looked better at this time of year.

Peter Scott, who was so badly hurt in the mill, is slowly recovering.

Ben Pearl has bought the Bartlett house and lot. This looks as if Benjamin was matrimonially inclined.

C. H. Ferguson and party, under the protection and guide of Commodore Stafford, who has charge of the culinary and wet goods department of the expedition, left here Monday on their annual fishing trip to Interlochte and Grass lakes.

Fred Myers has bought 100 acres of Mr. Nash on Sec. 23, where the old camp was on the boulevard.

—The Central Lake Torch prints the following in its review of the celebration there: Next was the fat men's race and for a time it looked as though there would be not entries at all but George Miller, of Charlevoix was doing considerable blowing and finally wound up by challenging some of the Central Lake fats to try a race with him. Of course he was soon accomodated and Nels Dythergreen, Frank Sears and C. E. Ramsay consented to make a public exhibition of themselves for the amusement of the assembled crowd. The betting was pretty much in Sear's favor with Miller a hot favorite among the ladies on account of his beautiful figure. At the word go they were off, or rather part of them were. Ramsay took the lead from the start and held it through with Sears at his heels and getting every jump. Dythergreen ran about ten feet and came so near falling down that he quit. He claims that the awkwardness displayed by the winner set him to laughing so that he could not run, but that is not so. He simply can't run. As for Miller we will say that there is liable to be a day of reckoning with him. After getting the rent into the scraps he never run a step, but stood still on the line like a great fat frog and laughed at the rest. That may be a good joke but it is drawing interest.

Many women, who were terrible sufferers from periodical headaches or other nervous troubles peculiar to women, have found relief in Dr Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. The Doctor will gladly give advice free of charge. Sold at Beaman's Pharmacy

We Are of the Opinion

That sufficient time has elapsed for Egbert Carpenter to prove that he is not afraid of a bicycle.

That those street lamps which the council purchased and have stowed away in the public building should be set up.

That Silsby & McCracken should come to Charlevoix and spend the heated term.

That the 8:00 which the council blew into the Grand Rapids Democrat for a "write up," will do that paper more good than it will Charlevoix.

That a revival of the Improvement Association, and a system of intelligent, earnest work is what is required.

That we should have a funeral and forever consign to the grave our most formidable enemy—old fogyism.

That the Lord will never help those who will not help themselves.

—Mrs. Dr. Vaile, brother and son, of St. Louis, are at the Fountain City House for the season. The doctor and Judge Glover and wife will follow later.

—F. N. Chapel has a fine display of flowers on his show cases and in the windows. Among them is a cluster of Bermuda lilies which alone perfume the whole shop.

—Frank M. Sears and wife, of Central Lake, spent Sunday in town. They have decided to return to Charlevoix, and next week will see them here, for the balance of the summer, at least.

—Yes, times are hard. Money is close, but you can spare that $1.50 or $2.00 which you owe for your paper. We need it to pay expenses and keep the mill rolling. Can't you just call in and make the editor happy by paying up and renewing. The SENTINEL has pounded away for Charlevoix for a good many years, and has earned some consideration. Don't you think so? All it wants is what belongs to it. If this blot does not dry the week, we shall be compelled to make a business of collections. Come now, can you say this is not right?

—Mr Egbert Carpenter, money member of the pioneer firm of Carpenter, Barthomew & Co., need not think we propose to drop this matter of his weakness and shy cousinage. During the week of mowing which followed his bicycle disaster, he was by the board of the grange that he would yet prove his ability to conquer the animal which threw him. We have waited long and patiently for the gray hairs floating in the wind, over the bright bandles of his machine. He hopes when he sees the editor of this paper around, but we are told that he can kick a barrel of sugar up from the warehouse as freely as he ever did. Come now, Egbert, get a bump on you, or own up that you dassent.

—M. J. Bartlett has been laid up the past week with sciatic rheumatism.

—Miss Mary Sutliff, of Norwalk, Ohio, is stopping with Mrs. Winsley for the summer.

—Rev. Macpherson speaks on the subject, "Practical Methods of reaching Young Men," at the Sunday School Convention held at Bay View this week.

—Bro. Bontecou, editor of the Petoskey Record, is suffering from an causes in his windpipe. Petoskey, however, is blessed with another editor whose windpipe is free from any obstructions.

—It is stated by a village official who has kept track of the matter, that 25 more water takers will bring the water-works plant up to a self-sustaining basis. There is very little doubt that these will be secured before snow flies.

—Alden Chamberlain and wife, who live two miles north of here, had a narrow escape Sunday night. They were sitting in the house during the thunder storm, when the house was struck by lightning. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain were thrown from their chairs, but sustained no serious injury. One end of the house was knocked out and the siding torn off.

—The Macatawa, of Charlevoix, have arranged for a picnic in the park July 27th, and have invited all the lodges of the county and adjacent counties to participate. The park has been cleared and seats and speakers' stand will be erected for the occasion. There will be a short program after which there will be bicycle and horse racing at the Driving Park with a bicycle street parade in the evening. The colors for the day are red, black and white.

—Messrs G. A. Lacy and G. A. Altman, of the Whitney Grand Opera of Detroit, realizing that the summer season is closed and that many big theatrical companies have left the road, which places at liberty many artists whose names are well known to all, have organized a comedy company composed of some of the brightest and wittiest comedians and talented soubrettes in the country, for a summer tour. This company has been secured for only one performance by the management of the Opera House here and will be seen in "Blunders," a ridiculously funny farce comedy. The attempt of the manager of our Opera House to bring here companies of known merit should be appreciated.

—The Supreme Court last week handed down the most important decision ever made upon the liquor license law of this State. It has long been held that the Mayor and Council has no option in the matter of granting the license because if the bonds tendered were sufficient financially. But in a Grand Rapids case involving the matter of whether counsel had the right to reject bond regardless of its sufficiency, the Court has just made a decision and we now clearly and definitely the rights of a municipality under the liquor law of the State. Hereafter a man may not open a saloon in any place at his option, regardless of his neighbors, and a Council may refuse license to open a saloon where the residents object, or where in the judgement of the Council it will be a nuisance and an offense to the general public.

—There is no more sorrowful thing to contemplate, or touching picture to behold, than a bright, honest, well-bred young man, every fine of whose being is naturally manly, crushed under an overpowering appetite for strong drink. It is and beyond expression to see such a young man as we have described lying prone, and cared for only as a few personal friends have made provision. Yet such a case exists here in Charlevoix—a case calling for the tenderest compassion, and the administration of tender-hearted woman. Where is the W. C. T. U.? It is necessary for them to hold a convention somewhere, before they can reach out and rescue some mother's son? Or must we have an election before they can see any of God's work to do? Perhaps a set of resolutions would lift the young man from the quicksands, and overthrow him of his awful condition. Contrast with the dingy appointments of the town hall will not consummate more than the saloon visits did ten years ago. Kind words, the perfume of flowers, encouragement and cheer is the thing of a "mistake" that wins in the battle for souls. It is easy to sing "Rescue the Perishing," but where does the rescue come in? There are 150 people in Charlevoix who would give $1 each to the W. C. T. U. toward a fund to place this young man beyond the danger of his appetite. Let the organization of which we speak prove the force of its "calling and election."

WOUND AROUND THE SHAFT.

Horrible Death of a Man at the Enterprise Factory Monday Afternoon.

Hugh Green, a young man employed at the Enterprise factory, in this place, was killed in a most horrible manner on Monday afternoon. As he was adjusting a belt to a pully attacked to the main shaft, his blouse caught on the shaft, which was running at full speed. With the terrible velocity of two hundred revolutions a minute, Green's body was whirled with the shaft, and rent in the most horrible manner.

His right arm was entirely severed from the body; his chest crushed, both legs broken, and one of his feet entirely whipped off against the joist above. He was disemboweled, and scarcely a part of his body that was not fractured.

Deceased was 18 years of age, and lived with his parents. He was a brother of Mrs. John McCabe. His acquaintances speak of him as a quiet, industrious and very trustworthy young man.

Lindsay Park

All doubt as to what the railroad people intend to do with their Lindsay Park property (the Dixon farm) was dispelled Saturday, when General Passenger Agent Geo. DeHaven, and his son-in-law, Mr. Bliss, the real estate agent of the company, arrived here in a special car to arrange for the preliminary steps in the work contemplated when the property was purchased.

Engineer Dixon was intrusted with the work of staking out the streets, and Dixon avenue will be laid out and opened to Pine Lake. The other principal streets will also be opened and sidewalks built.

This work will be pushed vigorously, and on its completion, the entire plat will be placed in the market, and thoroughly advertised as a resort.

That Mr. DeHaven is in charge of this work, is a sufficient guaranty that lots on Lindsay Park will be made desirable, and that this fall will see a good start made toward building.

—We are glad to state that Mr. Clayden's mother, who has been sick since her arrival is recovering and will soon be about again.

At the annual meeting of the Directors of the Charlevoix Summer House Association held yesterday at the Belvedere, Mrs. O. S. Gulley, of Detroit, was elected a director to succeed D. A. Waterman, who has resigned to New York. Mrs. Gulley is the first lady to be elected to such a position. Bishop Gillespie was reelected and D. B. Merrill of Kalamazoo.

—The crop report for July shows that the wheat crop throughout the state will fall far short of an average yield. The unfavorable weather of May not only delayed corn planting but caused a large reduction in the average. In condition the crop is from five to fourteen per cent below an average. With favorable weather until harvest oats will be nearly a full crop. Potatoes promise to be a average crop throughout the state. Apples in the southern counties promise about one-third in the central two-fifths and in the northern two-thirds of an average crop. Peaches in the northern counties promise 74 per cent of an average crop. In the adjoining counties indications are fairly satisfactory. Hay will be an average crop while wheat and oats are promising well. Potatoes and corn are looking finely, and the farmers are feeling well over general crop prospects.

—It is coming sure! What? Why, "Blunders," the finest comedy now touring Michigan, and do not confound it with the cheap companies now traveling around the passing off upon the people a class of inferior plays. "Blunders" comes heralded by both press and public as the most emphatic hit of the season. It is replete with funny situations, crisp and sparkling dialogue, entrancing music and elegant dancing, a company of artists that cannot be excelled. "Blunder" is a sure cure for the blues and will make you forget your troubles and incidentally your board bill. The Detroit Free Press of June 19, says: "Blunders" was presented last night to an audience that completely filled the Whitney Grand Opera House to overflowing and the artists of the company were tendered a reception such as has never been seen in the history of that house. There were continuous bursts of applause from the rise to the fall of the curtain, and at the conclusion of the second act the entire company, were tendered curtain call. "Blunders" will be here for only one night, Saturday July 22.

THEY LOST THEIR GOD

MEXICAN INDIANS WILL GO ON THE WARPATH.

Stinging Reception to Captain Anderson and His Brave Crew—Story from Mexico—Hurt in a Falling Bridge—Typhus Fever in Philadelphia.

Told in a Few Words.

—A short time ago a Yakutsk fishboy discovered that the Indians at Nelchinsgo, Mexico, worship a god in the form of a fish recognized by the Bishop as being one of the mythological gods of the Aztecs. The discovery was reported to the Archbishop and he ordered the idol to be confiscated to the National Museum. The order has just been executed and the Indians so much stirred up over the loss of their god. They threaten to go on the warpath if the services remain in forced.

—From the high press of its queen vessel, Captain Magnus Anderson, the noblest Viking, disembarked Chicago at 8 o'clock Wednesday, as his pennants, led Erikson from the prow of his ship, first to the shores of Newfoundland nearly 900 years ago. But the reception that greeted the bold Dane in 1893 was different from that accorded him in the year 1000. No sound but the enthusiastic cheer of the soft breeze in the forests of the rocky wilderness Erikson. Almost two million people assembled to pay welcome to Anderson. Guns thundered, bands played, steam whistles shrieked, the multitude applauded. From the deck of a vessel that had carry the Norwegian craft at its gaffs, the chief executive of 4th great city of the West hailed welcome the representative and descendant of the hardy sea-rovers of the strife and of Norway thrilled with pride.

—Among the large shipments of bones from Mexico to the United States recently made for fertilizing and sugar-refining purposes were ten carloads of human bones, said to have been taken from ancient mounds in Southern Mexico, but more properly speaking from vaults old and abandoned cemeteries. As these bones are from people of different nationalities 50,000 individuals are represented in the lot.

—The bridge over the Valley Railway Canon, at the foot of Bank Street, in Cleveland, fell, carrying with it four men and three horses and wagon. Two of the men were seriously injured. Two horses were killed and the other three were more or less injured. The bridge was a city structure and has been considered unsafe for years.

—Three cases of typhus fever have recently been discovered in Philadelphia. The victims came from Bangor and landed at New York.

—At Alexandria, Pa., Detective Wilkins arrested Charles Bieber. Bieber is wanted in Findlay, Ohio, for the murder of Jacob Sells about three weeks ago. Chief of Police Hunter, of Findlay, identified the man.

—Statements of treasury accounting officers show the Government has a balance of about $5,000,000.

—Knickerbocker singers left a Sunday-school meeting near Colfax, Ohio, because of objections to a dance.

—Bishop McQuaid confirmed the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration at St. Patrick's Cathedral in Rochester, N. Y.

—Two shocks of earthquake was distinctly felt at Albuquerque, N. M., Wednesday morning. The first occurred about 3 o'clock and the second twenty minutes before 7. The latter was severe enough to ring the clocks in different parts of the city and to rattle dishes and crockery on the shelves. It caused quite a commotion among those who were awake at the time. The course of the wave was supposed to be from northwest to southeast.

—J. S. Conover, commissioner of fisheries at New York, has failed, with Hatchery of Delaware.

—Hendrick & Sons woolen mill at Stockton, Ill., was destroyed by fire. The loss will reach $100,000.

—The imports of Treasury for the first quarter of 1893 amounted to $8,940,831 and the exports to $6,238,251.

—There are eighty-five cases of cholera in the hospital at Alexandria, Egypt, daily deaths from cholera have occurred.

—The body of Alexander Justice Second Lieutenant, of the United States Engineers, who had been lost while in the Lake, was finally recovered at Grass-wood Cemetery at New York Wednesday.

—The President, accompanied by Colonel Lamont and Surgeon General Bryant, drove from Bennett Bay, Mass., to Bourne, on Wednesday, where they met Joseph Jefferson and his son. Colonel Lamont, Dr. Bryant, and Mr. Jefferson were fishing, but the President decided not to go, and returned to Gray Gables. Mr. Cleveland's health is good, and the rheumatic trouble is nearly all left.

—Dr. Warner Hich, the Missouri pensioner who was dismissed by Commissioner Raum because he stated of Congressman Tarsney, that pensions had been granted for bardness, was reinstated. He submitted truth of his statement was proven.

—Cholera has reappeared in Moscow, Astrakhan and Nothrous Govern. In Moscow there have been thirty-two cases and eighteen deaths.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—A Boston dispatch says: It may be authoritatively stated that a decision has made upon the authority of a notaphon of President Cleveland to the effect that the President's illness which confines him to his room at Gray Gables is not serious as reported by the Associated Press Saturday to remove anxiety. The report came from Dr. Bernard's Day Thursday morning, and later information from Dr. Bernard's colleagues before the Bernard's Day report was received there. How much truth there is in the startling assertion cannot be learned, because the Bryant-Colonel Lamont and other persons near the President will not discuss the President's indisposition otherwise than to declare that he is suffering from a slight attack of rheumatism which will keep him confined to his room for a few days. The information previously declared trivial, however, the report is accepted as a very serious one.

—The list of active members of the Chicago Board of Trade is not so long as it was Saturday. There seats have been erased from it by death, one that of a former director and president, George W. Hunt, the second that of Owen V. Sharp, fully recognized as the ablest of Chicago's commercial men, and the third that of Thomas Dunlap, a member of the board who was among the traders whom everybody knew.

FROM WASHINGTON.

HORROR AT THE FAIR

COLD-STORAGE BUILDING WAS A DEATH-TRAP.

Seventeen Firemen Cremated in the Burning Building—Engineered by Fiends—They Jump from Our Death to Another Below—A Sickening Sight.

Its Erection at Blame.

The World's Fair has received a baptism of fire and blood. Seventeen firemen were killed outright, others still alive, and still others are seriously injured. Incidentally a number of speculators, whilst property inside the grounds to the value of $250,000 has gone up in smoke.

Shortly before two o'clock on Monday afternoon flames of fire were discovered darting out from the cupola of the cold storage building, 200 feet above the earth. The online brigade of the World's Fair fire department answered an alarm. The grounds were thronged with visitors. The business was then above, a brisk north wind swept over the park, and the gaudy engines and carts and building crowns and towers were in a blaze. While the reasons of fire are not definitely known it is believed that spontaneous combustion of some sort caused the conflagration. The cupola and in the present state of affairs little more than indulgence is not last probable.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE FIRE IN THE DEADLY CUPOLA

JUMPING TO DEATH.

hoping that their comrades below could save the flames with streams of water so offered some other relief. But it was too late. The water streams were filled with the roof one hundred feet or more below them and poured down upon them all the way down.

Heroic Efforts to Escape.

Some of the men tried to slide down the lightning conductor, but it was too. The first man who tried descended half way to the roof, but the heat became intolerable and he let go and fell, and he dropped, doubtless dead, before he struck the roof. Another and another tried it. Each, doubtless hoping to get through the air. The area were soon crowded and the gazetters were thronged. A rope dangled down from the roof. Some of the men tried to slide down their very faces fought to reach the rope. Some had fallen, some had fled, eighty feet below. One unknown man, in a fireman's helmet, reached half way down the rope and then he lost his grip and fell, and he fell, downward. A man

MAJOR OF THE TENTH MAINE.

A Newfoundland Dog Which Saw Much Service and Died in Battle.

The Tenth Maine Infantry was one of the best disciplined and best drilled regiments in the Union army. One of its members was its honorable mention was a Newfoundland dog called Major. He was always in advance of the front line of battle, and as the bullets flew around him he would bark and jump at them and tear the ground where they struck. On the march he took his place on the right of the regiment with his company, at the side of the sergeant. Company H claimed him, but he was the favorite of all. The men shared their delicacies, when they were fortunate enough to have any, with him. He was welcome wherever he chose to stay. When the men of the Tenth Maine engaged in any scuffle among themselves he looked on unconcernedly and never offered to take sides, but if a stranger took a hand or another dog offended he would go for him in a moment. Major had seen service before with a New Hampshire regiment and was at Bull Run. He wore a silver collar, on which was engraved every battle he was in. On the retreat from Winchester he was captured, but not liking the Confederates he escaped and found his way to the regiment. He passed through Cedar Mountain and Antietam without injury, but died at Sudley Crossroads, Ga., at the post of duty in advance of the front line of battle. His memory is as tenderly cherished as that of any member of the regiment. Whenever any information for publication about the organization is sought among officers or men the invariable injunction is "Don't forget to mention our old dog Major."

HYPOCRISY OF MOURNING.

People Wear Heavy Crape Who Carry no Grief in Their Hearts.

Of all the incongruities of daily life the woman with the happy, smiling friend and gown heavily trimmed with crape is the most noticeable. Every day one sees on the street, in the theaters and sometimes in a ball room people who wear the habiliment of woe, and whose actions are entirely out of keeping with their attire.

The wearing of mourning is, of course, a matter of custom, and in the sensitive woman such attire affords a protection from many remarks that would otherwise wound most deeply to such it would mean a real sacrilege to wear the bright colors that were once typical of their own bright feelings, but many others, simply because they are slaves to a custom, will shroud themselves in crape and bombazine and have not the slightest change in their feeling.

It is an fancy picture when we tell of gay little parties attended by those wearing deep mourning, who are perfectly willing to enter into every form of enjoyment if the matter is only kept quiet. Hyperbites abound in this world, but there are many more pitiful in sable garments than of any other type. Mourning is very expensive and often costs a family more than they can well afford, yet it is worn by rich and poor alike, though they may not at least feel the least bit hatted to do so. Invitations are refused because the parties receiving them are in mourning, but in many cases the refusal will be accompanied by feelings of regret that they cannot go, the heart sings for the pageantry and the dress prevents them from indulging.

Bonapartes in Music Way.

A comic imitation of the exciting effect produced upon bluejackets, even in mimic warfare, is found in the report of the umpires in late naval maneuvers, presented to the French parliament. During an attack in Bellport Lough the feelings of both officers and men ran so high that to avoid personal encounters, and probably loss of life, it was found necessary to restrain the action which might otherwise have been taken by the guard boats, even during the peace maneuver. In one case, it will be remembered, a small boat was sunk by a collision with a steam launch, which after rescuing the crew beat a hasty retreat. But when the captured blue jackets found that they were to be regarded as prisoners they, to a man, jumped overboard and swam about until a gunning boat of their own side picked them up.

FISHING BY HORSE POWER

A Sixty-Five-Pound Bass Landed Near San Francisco.

Mathias Ketchens, bandleader of the Seal Rock house on the ocean beach near San Francisco, has caught the largest sea bass that the coast has seen for many a long day. It is Ketchens's business to rise early each morning and, hitching a horse to a wagon, patrol the sands for a couple of hours in search of driftwood. But Mathias, or Mike, as he is more familiarly termed, has other callings. He is the "lone fisherman" of the beach. Every one knows him, for he is famous. Each day as he scours the beach for wood he takes a long line with him which he throws out into the sea and awaits results. A few days ago he got more than he bargained for. Mathias had scarcely thrown his line in when, to his astonishment, it was pulled from his grasp. He had some to spare, however, and grasping anew endeavored to land his prize. Soon the jumpings and the writhings of a large object came to his vision and Mathias concluded that he had hooked some sea monster. Pull as he would he could not haul in his line. Then his inventive genius asserted itself. Hastily making fast the line to the axletree of the cart he yoked for his horse Dompey to "Gee!" Dompey got. The result was that the prize was hauled and proved to be an enormous sea bass. Mathias put his catch into his wagon and started for home. There his fish was weighed. It proved to be four feet seven inches in length and sixty-five pounds in weight, the largest fish of its kind that has been caught on that part of the coast.

LOSING HER ATHLETIC LEAD.

England Holding Her Gallic Neighbors Formidable Competitors.

Now that the French people are cultivating athletics of all kinds the performances of the French amateurs and professionals are attracting considerable attention in England. The victory of the French oarsmen on the Seine was a great blow to English boating men and M. Terront's feat of riding something like 392 miles on a bicycle in twenty-four hours is causing considerable apprehension in cycle circles over there. Only a couple of years ago, when Mills won the Bordeaux-Paris race, it was considered inevitable that the winner would be an Englishman and, as a matter of fact, the first Frenchman to arrive was hours later than the last Englishman. Things are, however, very different at the present moment. Terront's rise of 392 miles in twenty-four hours has been beaten by only one Englishman, Shorland, who did 413 miles in the same time. The difference between the two men was probably greater than it appears. At the Herne Hill track, where Shorland rode, the measurement is from the inside edge, whereas at the Palais des Machines in Paris the measurement is from a distance of rather more than a yard toward the center. This would make a difference of, say, a yard a lap, so that Shorland's performance is really better than Terront's by about twenty-two and a half miles.

THE BELIEVER IN BARE FEET.

Lectures on His Water Cure Recently Delivered in Berlin.

Pastor Kneipp, the famous water doctor, makes a very strange attire. He wears a long black robe, which covers a middle-sized strong body, on which rests an energetic head. Although his hair is rather gray his bushy eyebrows are deep black. From the way he holds himself and his freely movements nobody would take Pastor Kneipp to be over 72 years of age. He is wandering advertisement for his doctrine, to which, as he says, he owes his life and strength, and which he has lived up to since 1852.

He said that what could not be cured with water was altogether incurable. Water was the panacea for all these evils. A good remedy must be everywhere easily available, especially to the poor. It must be able to be burnt and salted to the different complaints. Herr Kneipp comes to the conclusion that hydropathy, and especially his method, unites all these advantages. He insisted that he was not a medical man. He had never read a medical book. He himself and been given up as incurable forty-seven years ago. He had cured himself with water and in love for his neighbor had led him to apply the same cure to his fellow-men. And great results had proved that his method was the only right one.

Finally Pastor Kneipp pleaded for the use of simple food and clothes, as these things, combined with the use of water, would produce a healthy human race. For Pastor Kneipp hydropathy is the alone saving principle which can be applied everywhere. As one wants nothing but a bath, a watering can, two rough towels, and water, one can apply it at home and in the hospital. It costs nothing and needs no fine buildings. "In my old wash house," he said, "I recently treated a minister and a general from Munich, and both would rather remain in the old wash house than in the new bath house.

WEALTH IN A POOR FARM.

It Was a Bed of Gravel and the Ballrods Wanted It.

There is a man in Alabama who takes life very easy for the simple reason that his farm extends up and down the Louisville and Nashville railroad for a distance of fifty or sixty miles. A great many persons will be disposed to doubt this statement, but nevertheless it is the truth. A short time ago the old Alabama countryman was a victim of impudence, because his farm was so poor that the cats would not stay on it, but one day the engineers of the road came along and discovered that his farm was nothing more than a vast deposit of gravel, the very material they desired to use in ballast for the bed of the road. They endeavored to buy the farm outright, but the old countryman stubbornly refusing to sell the only home he had on earth, it was finally arranged to pay him a royalty on every car load of gravel taken from his land. The royalty has made him rich and as the supply of gravel is practically inexhaustible he will soon be able to boast that his farm is the largest in the world and extends all the way from New Orleans to Louisville.

THE CURTAIN DIDN'T FALL.

Lotta's Stage Manager Was in the Gallery and Forgot His Duty.

Lotta's stage manager is a harrowing affliction and is always getting the time into all sorts of trouble. Lotta, the actress, recently told a story about an absentminded stage manager who she once had and who made her much annoyance. She was traveling, giving a number of plays, among which was "Little Nell." She was always on the alert for pretty songs and music to introduce into her connection. Her musical director was ambitious and wrote some music which he wished her to use in the graveyard scene with Little Nell. Hence. She was favorably impressed with the music and concluded to try it. She told the stage manager to go up into the gallery in the course of the performance and give her his opinion of the music. In accordance with instructions he perched himself up among the gallery gods and listened intently to the music. He saw Little Nell wandering among the tombstones and, the proper moment she began to die. The music was just right to accompany her and he continued to listen and admire his star's acting. But when Little Nell had finally died, he began to wonder why the curtain did not go down. When it suddenly dawned upon his mind that it could not descend without his signal. Here he got down the stairs and reached the back door he never could get out but he finally reached the stage and the curtain fell with a bang. Little Nell came to life in "double quick" time and gave him a good lecture.

FREAKS OF THE WIND.

A Cyclone That Took Cutting Familiarity With Mayor's Whiskers.

"Cyclones is funny things," said the man with the ginger whisk.

"Yes," assented the grocer, as he lifted the cut end of the dried apple barrel, "I guess you are about right. Leastways I think so.

"I don't know just what you might have read, but I will tell you of things I have seen. I saw a little town out in Iowa, which was cut exactly half out by a cyclone, while the other half was untouched. Place was cut in two just as if it had been done with a knife. The mayor of the place was terribly shaken up, and he said that when old Cy came along. Now, this mayor had worn a pair of pretty good side whiskers I ever saw. In fact, this is how come that he was mayor—the women vote out there you see. Well, as I was saying, he was outside in the middle of the storm when old Cy whirlwind came along. Are what does it do but just barely reach out to where he was and pull one of them side whiskers clean off, while the other side of his face wasn't touched. That mayor was a clean and narrow path one of these cyclones takes. So never you mind what you have read about cyclones in the line of destruction. I mean known nothing about them when he ain't seen one.

An Isosceles Bishop.

Of the late Bishop Kipp many a good story might be told. One of his eccentricities was assuming on week-days a clerical costume which he would wear a long, confining overcoat and carry a hunting crop or whip, a style so in fact that gave him the style of a horsey Englishman. Without, one day he had just barely enough of his dignity and position, or he quicker to come to his senses, he would have done his late grace. One day in his entirely secluded room he had crawled into an auction room and joined a group waiting there for the sale. All knew the bishop, but the sight entirely individual who, after a few second reflection, took a sharp against the newcomer and said:

"Get out of the place, but I've seen you before. Where in hell did I know you, anyhow?"

"I cannot say," retorted the bishop. "What part of hell are you from?"

Gentlemen Giraffe Men.

Judging by the details of the edible variety of the giraffe, given by a writer in a recent issue of the Lancet, it would pay some enterprising and, if such a phenomenal creature exists, rich farmer to start a farm of giraffes in America. Giraffe meat is said to be very good, and, if it is, one or two or three game animals in all Africa, it is the most real, well, game flavor, but there is a slight drawback to the giraffe, it is a very young giraffe is delicious and comparable to almost any game flesh in the world. The unfortunate thing is that when it is only eight one-hundred-and-eighteen to twenty-one inches in length—in a real delicacy, and as for the marrow-bones of a giraffe, there is no other luxury in Africa comparable to them. The milk of the giraffe, it is also said, is rich and well flavored.

THE MODERN AQUARIA.

Disappearance of Old-Fashioned Globes and Window Glass Effects.

The little old-fashioned globes for gold-fish are disappearing, and so are the tanks made of window glass and inserted into a blue or iron frame. The new aquarium is made of iron in form, and is made of a single piece of glass without joints or metal work, and holds from two to four gallons with about one fish to each half gallon.

The bottom is covered with pebbles and sand to a depth of six inch and a half, and in it are some water plants that not only add to the beauty of the aquarium, but absorb impurities and keep the water clear. If plants enough are used it is sufficient to add a cupful of water once a week to replace what has evaporated.

If there are not plants enough the fish will stay at the surface and gasp until the water is changed. In inexpensive aquaria algae are used, and anemones and other beautiful forms of sea life thrive. They are so easy to maintain as fresh-water aquaria, because, as salt does not evaporate, only occasional additions of fresh water.

To the Point, Though Brief.

Dr. Donne had asserted a lady belonging to a rich family without the element of her parents, and in consequence was treated with great superiority. In fact he was told by his fashionable lady that he was not to expect any money from him. The doctor went home and penned the pithy note: "John Donne, Anne Donne, undone," which he sent to the proud woman in question, and this had the effect of restoring them to favor.

WORKING OFF WRINKLES.

The Reason Why a Barber Says He Shaves for Nothing.

"You must pay your wife some allowancy," said Judge Levy sharply to J. Rufus Wilcox, in a San Francisco court.

"I can't," was the reply.

"You are working on Pacific street, aren't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, pay her some of your salary."

"I don't get any."

"You don't mean to say you are coining money and give it all away to the shop?"

"Certainly, I do. You see, Judge, I am a very nervous man naturally, and I have been so for years, due to my business in this domestic trouble. So I have been in the habit of going into a barber's shop in this city, so I've got over a job till I have a lot of wrinkles down to a regular working steady working hash. I'm just blowing off nervous steam, as it were, in the place where I'm working now; trying to get back my touch so that I can work for money."

The judge eyed the supernervous barber sharply while he was deliver himself of this extraordinary excuse for a plea, but the man of lather never turned a hair.

"Well," concluded the court, "I'll jog up your nervousness some to a good purpose. You pay your wife $50 a month, beginning the 1st of next month, or you'll go to jail till you do."

Dyspepsia in the Mouth.

Cleaning the mouth is of the greatest importance in dyspepsia and in diabetes. I know a woman who gets up in the middle of the night to brush her teeth if she wakes with a foul taste in it. This is her habit, although her teeth are religiously brushed before retiring for the night. She says it pays in the sweet, whole sound condition of the mouth and breath on waking in the morning and the restful sleep induced by clearing the mouth thoroughly. Thorn in my side, dyspepsia in the mouth as in the rear of the alimentary canal, for dyspepsia is really forward, with corresponding and other beautiful forms of sunbeams and nerves.

Germander of the Pass.

Speaking about the cost of travel to and from Chicago, a man relates that about 1848 a sister of his, who lived at Aurora, Ill., a few miles west of the present city of Chicago, having lost her husband, started with two small children and 25 cents to reach her father's home in the southern part of Dupage county, New York. She packed up enough provisions to suffice for the journey and went first by steamer over the great lakes and by packet over the Erie canal. When she landed at Port Byron she had 50 with which to pay a livery man to carry her to her father's house, there she arrived with just twenty-five cents left.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.
Abraham Lincoln's physician, the eminent Dr. Holland—his attended him in his last moments—says the brave man's life was ebbing away, standed that it was not the direct result of the fatal shot of "Booth" but the reduced physical condition of the president due to the enormous strain upon his nervous system; that if he had taken the necessary precautions to have kept his Blood, Liver and Kidneys in a sound and healthy condition, recovery would have been certain, and he would have, as always recommended was Hepatiacne, the genius of sulphur of amonia and twenty-five gallons of water. He then allowed them to drain a whole day, in order that the epsom salts might swell before planting. Prize potatoes treated in the same manner are found in the usual way be obtained a yield of forty-fold tons of potatoes to the acre.

Presents to a Pennsylvania Pair.
A country newspaper in Pennsylvania publishes the following list of big presents at a rural wedding in its parish: Free father and mother of the bride, one farmer and mother of the groom, one hale breath made from pure air of the mountains and one side white shirts; from Brother Hiles, one bottle of pizzin, one dress lamb, one polite letter writer and a dog; from Sister Hiles, one bottle of pizzin, also a jar of tomato catsup; from Cousin Sarah, one poem made herself on the bride and bridegroom, fifteen verses in all.

Legislators and Population of Canada.
The following figures lately compiled, show the proportion of legislators to the population in Canada. The proportion in Ontario is one legislator to every 19,933 of population, British Columbia has one to every 3,900 persons, Prince Edward Island one to every 2,836, Manitoba, one to 4,915, New Brunswick one to 7,835, Nova Scotia one to 11,856, and Quebec one to 20,300.

Hard on Hunter Antors.

Mrs. Hodges is a great admirer of Ralph Denham, and if she was the only one to consult, no obstacle would have been thrown in the way of his union with her daughter.

It may surprise the reader to know that, in view of the incontrovertible knowledge these young ladies had of Captain Fox, that they should ever think of going on board his ship.

But they had a double object; at least they reasoned themselves into the belief that they had, and then they could not even imagine the sin of gently commandeering a pirate.

Ada was quite the entertainment was a proof that whatever in life she had missed of real Bachelor bliss to the fatal purpose, the capture of the Sea Hawk.

Again, Inez Hodges and Ellen Cardiff were devoured by an intense curiosity to know what kind of a husband is her lot to be, as Sarah Denham in his disguise, or rather in try and discover him in the disguise.

Certainly the latter was not a good motive for going on board the Wanderer, but, the world owes them no so pleasant a place to live in if usual excuse could be made for what they had to do.

Promptly at two o'clock the young ladies, after bearing many sage injunctions from their mothers, and duitfully promising to obey them, went down above to the boat, where they found from the Wanderer was waiting to take the visitors to the ship.

They met there with a number of young people to whom the invitation was extended, and so a few of the oldest men, among whom Doctor Hodges, who had been dazzled by Fox's magnetism.

Although every man on the ship had been forewarned, and every man had prepared clothes, they seemed to feel, day attire, and the boat was gay with bunting.

Awnings covered the quarter-deck, and the Wanderer looked quite a pleasure boat, and if she was the only one to consult, no obstacle would have been thrown in the way of his union with her daughter.

"Ay, ay, sir," replied Fernandi, and the whole crew of the Wanderer cheered, proved them for our share, they should remember that we have on board fifty gallant men from Denham's ship, the Sea Hawk. Surely we should be able to drive off one a struggle.

"We are not at all afraid, Captain," and Doctor Hodges, who seemed the leading spokesman, which his daughter and Ellen Cardiff exchanged.

Fox looked at Inez and Ellen, who alone knew the character of their host, and been the great danger they incurred, the visitors showed a laudable desire to make the best of a bad bargain, and Captain Fox successfully entertained his guests.

A sumptuous supper was served, and the ladies were entertained instrumental music, and with cards and all the games of the day, and the time passed very pleasantly for the guests. Fox would hurry on deck from time to time to see how the ship was proceeding, and, judging from the laughter that occasionally reached him, much delightful conversation.

Every now and then the question would leave his guests, and hurried on deck to see how the ship was proceeding, and, judging from the laughter that occasionally reached him, much delightful conversation.

"Up into, it is Kidd's intention to keep as come here.

The actors, added with more vigorously to indicate that they endorsed this very well, as Captain Kibb, as they all now called Fox, Kibb.

"I think we be caught napping. Two strong men can prevent our being here by the way we come."

The sailors nodded with equal vigorously and kept time at it.

"So we must make a way for ourselves that will lead to the deck, when by morning we hear the signal gun from the Sea Hawk."

"I think, Captain," said one of the men, "that we can cut through the bulkhead with our knives. One of the ladies I fitted a bit ago cuts like old cheese, and I made a hole and saw some light through it."

"Whew!" asked Captain Denham, rising suddenly.

"The sailor led him over to the bulkhead, drew out a wooden plug he had fitted to a hole, and told him to look in.

The Captain did look in and the men were surprise, that he should look so long, and the Captain had good reasons for it. He saw inside a little cuddy, lighted by a lamp with a candle burning and a boy, whom he recognized as Jim, the cabin boy, who he knew beside a little table.

Waiting till the boy rose, the Captain put his mouth to the aperture and whispered.

"Jim, don't be frightened, we are the men from the Sea Hawk."

An intelligent light flashed over Jim's face and he looked to discover the exact place from which the sound came, but first he secured his own door, to prevent any one coming in on him unexpectedly.

Capt. Denham, seeing the boy's object, drew his dirk, and pushed it into the hole, as he was flashing on the blade, Jim approached the plates, and putting his lips to the opening he whispered.

"I've just been praying for you and the mother at home."

"Thank God," replied Capt. Denham, "you have proved yourself our friend."

"And I am just friend," said the lad, "and I'm here to help remove one of the planks in the bulkhead, and when you come, we are fastened in, but at the proper time we will be able to get out of the cuddy.

"I can and will help you. Go back and wait," replied Jim.

Capt. Denham and his men went back, and soon after they heard a low grating sound, like that made by the turning of a key.

This was going on when a forty man, as we must call officer, to give the man-of-war rank, one of the Wanderer's men, who had been sent aloft to the Capt. Denham and his men, and in a low voice called out that "Come, my lads, it is 9 o'clock, out lights, and turn in."

A cheery "Ayye, ayye" from the Sea Hawk men told that they had heard the order, and the alacrity with which they swung their hammocks, after putting out their lights showed how willingly they obeyed it.

Satisfied with this, the man, who carried a lantern, gave it a final look over the line of hammocks, and withdrew with a hearty "Good night."

CHAPTER XXVI.

PLAYS UPON WORDS.

Evidence that Pounding Is Not Among the Lost Arts.

The Chicago Partridge must be a ruffled grouse.—Lowell Courier.

There are times when a man can display altogether too much originality in his writings," said the merchant who was looking over some suspicious entries by the new bookkeeper.—Washington Star.

Every poor poet knows that writers

CAUSES OF DISASTER.

FOUND IN THE DEMANDS OF THE CHICAGO PLATFORM.

The Present Business Conditions Are Chiefly the Result of Democratic Ascendency—Mr. Cleveland a Minority President—The Sherman Law Not Responsible.

Free to Democracy.

Certain Democratic organs assert that the charge that present conditions are the result of Democratic ascendency is "an insult to the people." The people deliberately chose Democratic rule and placed, on a free trade, without money platform, and the statement that his election has brought about universal loss of confidence is scarcely an "impertinence." This Democratic pretense is overwhelming a humbug that it ought not to impose even a reader of ordinary intelligence. In the first place, the assumption that Mr. Cleveland was the choice of a majority of the voters is a fraud. Mr. Cleveland is a minority President. His supporters were a minority of over a million in the popular vote last November. In the second place, Mr. Cleveland was not the choice of the substantial, intelligent citizens of the nation. He was elected by a combination between the democratic "cheap" money fanatics of the West, the Southern men who want the great masses of unenlightened people in Southern states to be kept unfamiliar with American institutions and school, Democratic demagogues. The forces behind the Democratic candidate were the forces of danger and destruction. Their success meant the monetary disorganization and disaster. It meant war on American industries; it meant the overthrow of the public credit; it meant the repudiation of the public obligations; it meant the National bankruptcy; and the country has accepted these results as the logical outcome of the Democratic party.

Blame Than Free Silver.

The belief is general in well-informed circles in Washington that the President proposes to offer the repeal of the Sherman law as a sop to the Democrats, a bribe to induce Democratic Congressmen to vote for the repeal of the free silver clause. The New York Press says some time ago pointed out that it was impossible to expect the Southern and Western Democrats to vote to repeal the silver purchase act unless the administration was prepared to sanction it by the strongest possible recommendation. Of the two, State bank notes are far more dangerous. A silver dollar, however depreciated, must always have a bullion value of 53 cents. A million in it may be worth sixty cents or it may be worth forty, but it is always worth something, and its holder, even under free coinage, could always purchase a greater or less quantity of the necessaries of life with it.

Without currency it is without bullion value. Its value is only in the single bank which had failed might be worth 50 cents on the dollar, it might be worth absolutely nothing. The chances are, if it was one of the state institutions that the responsibility for the shrinkage of more than billion of dollars in bank notes issued, is due to the Sherman law; it is no wonder the administration is view of such enormous losses by the people, and in prospect, puts forth "statement" of the situation, which is an effort to convince the public that the cripling of the currency and the disastrous results are due to some other reason than the Democratic victory and the Democratic platform of destruction. But the people are not to be deceived. They know that the Government has been purchasing silver bullion for the last three years, and that the country was prospering under the operation of the law. The Sherman law party was in power; they know that the year before the election of Cleveland, with the Sherman law in full operation, the country was prosperous to the nation's smash.

Blame Free Silver.

Such variegated oratory is intended to confuse the people, and it is to such voters as Mr. Watson.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Echoes From Hillsworth.

Our notes last week went on a 4th of July excursion and didn't get printed.

Well, the entertainment gotten up by Mrs. W. C. Mears for the benefit of our pastor, Mr. Seibert, was largely attended, and everyone expresses themselves well pleased with it. With Mrs. Jessie McGibney at the piano, Mr. Macpherson, Mrs. Kling, Mrs. Hines, Miss Carpenter and Miss Mason, vocalists, it couldn't help but be fine, and the little girls, why they did better than the older ones. "We not only got an inch but an Ells-worth."

Charlevoix sportsmen are all down here after our big fish, and they get some of them too. Dar Meech took home a fine basket of trout the other day.

A team belong to Mr. Walters of Central Lake was frightened Tuesday morning while in town by a train and ran away and made things quite lively on Main and Center Sts for a short time. The double buggy was completely wrecked. The team was not hurt and was caught about a mile south of here in the woods. Tie your team when in town.

Will Ward of Detroit stopped off here between trains the other day.

Capt. Fred Smith owner of the City of Bellaire is going to locate here and then we will have steam craft added to our shipping.

Nice pleasant time was enjoyed at the ice-cream social Tuesday evening at Park's Hall.

Another post office petition is under way and has received many signers. We hope it may be located where it will benifit the public more than it now does.

Jas. T. Drink Secy of the Universal Loan and Investment Co. of Chicago was in town last week looking after the interests of his Co.

Plasterers are at work on the Vettrae building and it will soon be opened to the public as a first class hotel.

Dr. Gardner and family are now located here in the Parks building. The Dr. will put in a drug store, and now when in need of a physician remember we can help you out.

Chas. Graham has his large new boat house completed down near the station and can now take care of sportsmen in nice shape and can tell them just where to get a big catch of fish. He has the fish all marked.

Postmaster Campbell is doing a fine job of cleaning up over his way has the Orr Creek cleaned out and many improvements made around his nice location.

Norwood Notes.

Mary Clark, who has been in Chicago for the past two months, has returned, and is staying with her sister at the Eagle House.

Naomi Goodrich, of Vermont, grand-daughter of Hossom Goodrich, arrived on Thursday.

Miss Catherine Chase, Flora Sours and other friends, came on the Charlevoix Thursday.

The Ferguson fishing party have returned. They didn't catch many fish, but had lots of fun. Ed. says the natives came in crowds to see the boat he had Mayne build.

Frank Myers, Fred Mayne, James Gellick and Robert Tullock were here on Friday last on account of the People vs. James Gellick, selling liquor to minors. Mr. Gellick waived examination and was bound over to next term of Circuit Court.

Governor Altgeld and wife under the protection and fatherly care of S. B. Chase, arrived at 6 p. m. Sunday in the midst of a hard shower and thunder and lightning for accompaniment. The Charlevoix landed the party at this place before going to Traverse City. We are in doubt whether this was done in compliment to the Governor or to the Village of Norwood. The fire-works Monday evening at Mr. Chase's, were very fine.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The tug McLane is doing a general towing business at this port.

Vessel captains are ill-natured, and we don't wonder. Freights are so low that vessels have to have fair winds built ways to pay expenses.

Vessel-owners are beginning to submit to the inevitable and lay up their vessels until an improvement takes place. Just when that will be no one can tell, but there are those who do not anticipate a betterment of the carrying trade the present season.

The steamer Onekama is on the route between Elk Rapids and Old Mission, with Captain Sandy Bennett.

Cheboygan Tribune: Daniel Williams returned from Harbor Springs last evening. He says the steamer Puritan, of the Seymour line, and the Manitou, the new steamer, had a race from Petoskey to Mackinaw Island yesterday. The Puritan is quite a runner, when pushed making eighteen miles per hour. She left Little Traverse Bay a little in advance of the Manitou, but the latter reached the Island eight miles ahead of her. He says that the Manitou makes three hours better time between Petoskey and Chicago than the railroad.

Northern Michigan News.

The Good Templars at Bellaire will build a hall.

Fruit in large quantities is being shipped from Traverse City.

Stron's mill at Hortons Bay will complete its seasons cut this week.

The Grand Traverse county Agricultural Society will hold no fair this year.

C. A. Nelson has been appointed postmaster at Northport in place of H. E. Gill, who was "offensively" republican.

Jackson Ingalls of Petoskey is building a store in Petoskey land we understand that his son Willie will go into business there.

The Orangemen's celebration at Central Lake on the 12th, was largely attended by the members of the Order from Northern Michigan. Arches were erected about the town and the procession was a large one. The Bellaire band furnished the music, and addresses were delivered by several prominent speakers.

In Petoskey the authorities have ordered all bicycles off the sidewalks.

Boyne City people are preparing a celebration for the time when the White railroad is completed.

Elk Rapids is having trouble with with its water, and the Progress advises people to boil it before using.

The Bellaire Breeze has got itself into a snarl on the saloon question, and informs saloon people that it will fight to a finish life or die.

Emmet county has five newspapers, two at Petoskey two at Harbor Springs and a new one, the News, was started at Alanson last week, the first number being issued on the Fourth of July.

A Traverse City paper confidingly informs its readers of a mysterious matter which it is probably willing should be investigated by as great a portion of the population of the United States and other countries as may desire to do so in the interest of science and curiosity. About once each week the water of the lay bolts up to the height of four or five feet for fourteen minutes at a time, at a point about one hundred feet from the shore. It is probable that special boilings could be arranged for excursion parties, if sufficient notice was given.

Notice.

We are informed that certain parties have represented to some of our customers that it is an adulterated Dash Green we are selling at 15 cents per pound. We guarantee our Dash Green to be as pure as any Paris Green on the market, and that it is the best that can be bought from the most reliable manufacturer. We would advise those having a disposition to invent such malicious lies about us to obtain and read a copy of the law in regard to slander, and give them notice that we will defend our business against any such misrepresentations.

We Are of the Opinion
That the following classes of people are of very little, if any, use in the world:
Those who go out of town and do their trading.
Those who oppose improvements.
Those who prefer a quiet town to one of push and energy.
Those who imagine they own the town.
Those who think business can be done slyly without advertising.
Those who deride public spirited men.
Those who oppose every movement which does not originate with themselves.
Those who seek to injure the credit of individuals.
Those who see the mote in their neighbor's eye, but do not take notice of the beam in their own.

Pensions.

The pension bureau has notified a great many pensioners throughout the entire county, who are drawing pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, known as the dependent pension act" that the payment of their pension will be suspended for sixty days during which time they will be required to show cause why they should continue to draw pensions. The testimony necessary to prevent their being dropped from the rolls is the certificate of a reputable physician attested by two witnesses, to the effect that the pensioner is precluded from active labor owing to injuries or disability not the result of his own vicious habits.

Joseph Hancock the father of the first husband of Mrs. Geho of this place and grandfather of Mrs. Archie McNeill died in Payson, Utah recently. The following we clip from the Payson Globe: Joseph Hancock one of the oldest pioneer settlers of Utah, passed away at his home here Wednesday evening about 8 o'clock. He was of a family noted for longevity and was 81 years, 7 months and 19 days old when he died, and the father of five generations. Death came without a struggle and he seemed to be only sleeping when the grim messenger summoned him to the land beyond. He was a veritable nimrod, and it was said that he could kill plenty of game where no one else could ever find it. There seemed to be a power about him to decoy game to its death. Deceased was a body guard of Joseph Smith and came to Utah with the early settlers, and used to till the soil where the Deseret National bank in Salt Lake City now stands. The remains were interred in the city cemetery yesterday at 4 p. m.

—Mrs. A. P. Perkins, of St. Louis, Mo., died at C. V. Cook's yesterday morning, of heart failure, after but a few days illness. Her husband arrived from St. Louis too late to see her living, but her four daughters were with her. Her remains left last night for St. Louis, accompanied by the bereaved family.

—Last week O. M. Allen and a party of resort people, while boating about one of the outside islands, found floating a piece of a steamboat cabin, which had been partially burned. It is quite probable that it is a part of the Champlain that has either been floating about, or that has been refloated from the beach about Little Island.

—Miss Winifred Gale will appear in Charlevoix at Lewis Grand Opera House, Wednesday evening, Aug. 2, under the auspices of the ladies of the M. E. church. The program will be so varied is to be relished by lovers of all the forms of dramatic art and expression. All who have listened to Miss Gale's recitals have enthusiastically applauded her squarely. Detroit Gazette says: "Miss Gale is wonderful, let her come again soon." Do not forget the date. Popular prices. Tickets will be for sale in due time.

—To-morrow (Thursday) will be a big day for Charlevoix. The Masons here, from far and wide, will congregate here. There are to be races at the driving park, and a grand parade headed by the bicycle club and the Petoskey band. Form on Rose St. at the Park, march down Clinton to Grant, south to Antrim, east to State north to Main, east to Bridge, south to Antrim, countermarch on Bridge St. and break ranks at hall. Immediately after the parade the bicycle races will come off at the driving Park. Where the picnic occurs seats have been erected, and a tap made on the water works main. The occasion is expected to be a great one.

—Don't forget Mason & Clayden's special sale all this week. Great bargains offered.

—Ed. Horton, the W. U. telegraph operator, is receiving a visit from his mother and sister.

—The real power of a newspaper to draw trade to its own town or direct the trade in other channels can hardly be estimated, and what is more, it is a matter that is hardly ever considered as an important factor in the town's prosperity, for the simple reason that it is not thought of by business men. He who will give the matter a moment of unselfish thought will be the last man to pooh pooh the idea. The local paper that is receiving a good living patronage from the town in which it is published, will guard well the interests of that town with jealous care, just the same as the merchant guards the interest of his individual customers.

Robbed of her honor and filled with shame, Lillian Spalter a colombermaid at the Grand Hotel Mackinac took her life. She was 18 years of age, full of life and hope and bore a spotless reputation. The brute who brought her, according to her statement written just before her death is a soldier, Will Bagley. He is in jail and unhoubtly will be protected by officers of the law from the many thousand persons who set forth in most emphatic language that the life of the villain should pay the forfeit for the life of the unfortunate girl whom he robbed of her all.

A Leisure Hour Reverie.

Time is not wasted when we turn our thoughts back to pioneer days and indulge in reveries; for only by glancing backward can we properly appreciate the present.

When from among the few remaining old settlers one drops out, the faces all come up before us—those gone and those remaining. Aunt Phoebe Thompson was the last one to join the majority, and when we think of her now, the countenance of Uncle Medad rises up, and we are carried back to the beautiful summer evenings nearly a quarter of a century ago, when we wandered down the wooded shore which is now within the boundaries of the resort grounds, to the always hospitable home of Uncle Medad and Aunt Phoebe.

Those were the days when Uncle Philo Beers was King, and we all his faithful subjects. Hugh Miller, John S. Dixon, Amos Fox, Seth F. Mason and Wm. Lalster were then here, and were the "Knights of the Round Table," in the affairs of Charlevoix, and "old man Holland" and Robert Jiedwin came down the lake in sail boats.

There are but a few of the old veterans left. Old Johnny Miller and Aunt Harriet still live on the old homestead at the head of Pine Lake. Dick Cooper is still the dean of the hotel people, Nelson Ainslie is still here to remind us of old stage days, and only the other day we met old Richard Vaughn, with the weight of 83 years upon him.

Of course there are plenty of old settlers, like Morris Stockman, Mell Thompson, Bert Brown, Ben Campbell, Jack Papineau and Robert Miller but they are young and frisky yet, and have not passed into the superannuated class.

One by one, however, the veterans are departing and a new generation is coming upon the stage of action. It does no harm to quicken our memories of these old landmarks; their day forms a contrast with the present which furnished cause for satisfaction and imparts livlier hopes for the future.

To the World's Fair by Water.

No wonder the Governor of Illinois came north and returned home by the steamer City of Charlevoix. His choice of that elegant steamer was much more sensible than his pardon of the anarchists.

The writer of this went to the World's Fair and back last week on that popular boat, whereof we are glad. It is an unmixed pleasure. To Chicago in 22 hours is quick enough, and it means 22 hours of genuine comfort. A cuisine unexcelled by that of any hotel; officers who combine vigilance in the performance of their duties with kindness and courtesy to passengers; comfortable rooms and luxurious cabin appointments, all combine to make the City of Charlevoix a home for the passenger. Capt. Billy Pinnegan is not only master of his ship, but he is master of the art of making everybody on his ship happy. If they have any happiness in their nature. Stewart Parker, Clerk Meeuwsen and Chief Engineer Dorr, make a great combination. Whether you are on the pilot-house with Capt. Billy or have your feet on the gangway of the main-deck, you are at home.

Gov. Altgeld

The distinguished Governor of Illinois has been in Charlevoix county ten days and has departed.

Ten to one the Governor goes home with a great opinion of Norwood. The newspaper men kept away from him, and he was not hung in effigy. He was fed on the good things at Sam Chase's and went fishing. Nick Shores dumped him out of the boat, and fished him out of the water.

It is quite likely Supervisor Harris and G. V. Nash applied him of the fact that Charlevoix county hasn't a Democratic official to its name, and he can never be Governor of Illinois again.

We hope the Governor will erect a cottage at Norwood, make his future summer home, do his trading in Charlevoix, and subscribe for the Sentinel, and Norwood.

SHOT DEAD ON SIGHT.

KANSAS CITY BANKER KILLS A PROMINENT LAWYER.

Mrs. Veltheim is Great Luck—Russell Sold to Be a Gay Deceiver—Gang of Gamblers Taught—Dentist Business Houses Collect—Prominent Dead.

Told in a Few Words.

—Col. Benjamin F. Johnson, one of the leading attorneys of Kansas City, Kan., was shot down and instantly killed Wednesday evening by Abraham A. W. Eisenhower, one of the most prominent citizens of the town. Great excitement prevailed and threats of lynching were indulged in. Eisenhower is president of the First National Bank of Kansas City, Kan., ex-President of the Armourdale Bank, Vice President of the McCoyl-Little-Barkley Company of Chicago, U. T., and director of the Irish National Bank, Redfield Lodge, Knights of Pythias, Scottish Rite Masons, Indianola Commandery of the Knights Templar, and Ararat Temple, has been released by some of the wealthiest men in town, in spite of the fact that he is perhaps the most hated man in town. Johnson was interested in a saloon company, which was recently organized at Kansas City, Mo. Its affairs became tangled up, and it is said that Johnson was in debt for a little losing considerable money in the venture, and little rock his revenge in this shooting.

—Mrs. Conrad Veltheim, of Tonganoxie, N. Y., has fallen heir to $8,000, the uncle dying in Germany leaving the money to be divided among his heirs.

—Judge Shinn, of Topeka, has rendered a decision in the case of $2,000 for damages for injury to a public gardener of Topeka. The plaintiff in the case, who worked in the Sage kindergarten, was, when injured, in the employ of Russell Sage. Sage claims that it is a case of charity.

—A crowd of rollers from Atlanta, Ga., investigated a Chicago and Eastern Illinois train. This gang of roughs in Tuesday night, a colored messenger almost to death, forced a waitress to jump from the train while going at a speed of from 35 to 40 miles an hour, with the alone carding and razing and rolling for blood. The railroad received a good knock out, going to the Chattanooga, Tennessee and Atlanta road, where the gang attempted to train Mr. Ca of the Eastern Illinois, due in the city at 4 o'clock.

—Obituary: At Milton, Iowa, Charles Brock, aged 85, the oldest Sunday School Pupil.—At Lenox, Mass., Colonel Edward T. Asbury, aged 70, Dennis Nelson Brown, well-known American engineer.—At Montgomery, Ala., Governor Jeremy F. Gilmer, aged 65.—At Beaumont, Ind., William Cowan, aged 80.—At Ithaca, N. Y., ex-Congressman Frederick A. Johnson, aged 65.

—The failure of the national banks at Denver has resulted in closing up a number of private concerns. Those who have been doing business with the banks are Green, Green & Nash, furniture, $15,000; Albert Sonnen, commission, $96,000; Hamlin & Harris, general merchandise, $8,000; Hamlin & Harris, Denver; McWhirter & Phipps, cassiers and cities; John Mount, cashier Cheyenne; Lodi and Ryman, furniture, $18,000; Evans-Littlefield, carpets.

—The Carnegie Steel Works have notified the Pittsburg department that they are ready to begin the shipment of the 200 tons of armor-plate ordered some time ago, and which was ready for the cars when the strike began. It was about 12 feet long, 8 inches in diameter, and weighed 200 pounds. Workers and other fireworks had been discharged and the crowd gathered around the spot where the display was being given. A bunch of extra fires was placed in the mortar and through some accident or unknowingness it prematurely exploded, turning the contents into a thousand fragments and scattering the deadly stones in all directions.

—The body of Eric Odegaard, a workman hundred of Arkansas, was found in the Arkansas River at Little Rock.

—Two robbers escaping from officers at Smithville, Tex., jumped into an outhouse on a bed of rocks and were killed.

—William Cook, of Fredonia, Kan., who literally assaulted his children, narrowly escaped being lynched by the oldest son will die.

—Going at the rate of thirty miles an hour the New York express on the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railroad struck a heavily loaded South Haland street car at 4th and South Halsted streets, Chicago, at 8:30 o'clock Monday afternoon. The car was demolished and the motorman injured seriously. Several people were hurt, but the injuries of the driver of the street car wandered about for hours crazed by the shock, and died in a hospital late in the evening. It is expected that at least one of the injured will die. The street car was crowded at the time of the accident, and a young man whose name was not learned, was killed outright. Traveling Passenger Agent Parrel was called from the city to identify the victim. Parrel's home is in Chicago. The dead man was about 25 years of age

HALTED AT THE ALTAR.

A Similar Slips a Wedding and the Bridegroom Duly Faints.

A large party assembled in San Miguel church, Buenos Ayres, the other evening to witness the marriage ceremony between Sr. Clemente Crovetto, a highly respected young merchant, and Mlle. Isidora Barraque, who, of course, had previously been married at the civil registry.

The service proceeded in the usual manner until the priest made the inquiry whether any one knew of any impediment to the marriage, in answer to which, to the consternation of all present, a middle-aged woman, poorly dressed in black, and holding by the hand a boy of 8 or 9 years of age, stepped forward and said:

"I oppose the marriage; this man is my husband and the father of this boy." Sr. Crovetto immediately exclaimed: "The woman is mad; turn her out!" The woman then made a sign to the boy, who cried out: "Papa! papa!" and tried to take Sr. Crovetto's hand, the woman exclaiming: "You cannot deny that he is yours, he is the very picture of you."

Upon hearing this the bride fainted and was carried into the vestry, where there was a very lively scene. Sr. Crovetto persisting in his assertion that he knew nothing about the woman and that she was either mad or had been employed by others to injure him, or that she meant to try to extort money from him, an inquiry which was then instituted proved that the woman was really mad and the religious marriage between the bride and bridegroom was celebrated afterward in the house of Sr. Barraque, the bride's father.

The mad woman remained in the church for an hour, exhibiting the boy and telling her story to the gaping crowd and to the reporters.

A "Write Farce."

At Wittenhampton, near Bournemouth, England, Lord Alington has an interesting farm which he calls the White farm, because only white animals are kept there. A white collie guards the entrance, and among the inmates are ravens, owls, Persian cats, white Asiatic goats, rebras, jackdaws, Java sparrows, white Aylesbury ducks, swans, cockatoos, tamins, pigeons, pigs, deer, mules, draught horses—all white, happy, and healthy. Although Lord Alington's White farm is only a hobby, there are countries where white animals are held in great respect. Every body knows the honor of the sacred white elephant of Burmah and Siam, and the honors that are paid to it. An albino bear is worshiped by the Ainos or hairy folk of Japan, and in England white horses have always played a prominent part in public pageants and joyous processions.

Mice Next of Money.

Mice starving the eagle a lot of notes lately the employes of a Pesth stylomin drug store came upon a nest of mice which proved to be a valuable find. The nest, which was neatly arranged, contained, among other things, one ten-dollar bill, two fives and three ones. All the bills were in good condition, except one five, which had the corner nibbed off. How the mice came in possession of their hidden treasure is a mystery, as the proprietor never missed any money.

History of the Dress Coat.

The present dress coat was the result of a compromise. The ordinary sentout coat being found on occasions inconvenient, it was the practice to fasten back the lapels to two buttons at the back, with the result that in time the seams were cut away altogether and the coat eventually made without them.

His Advice.

Dr. Von Bulow's criticism of a young and very pretty girl's effort on the piano is traveling the rounds again. When she had struggled through one of Liszt's fugues and asked the great master what he would advise her to do, "Grand pa! married," he answered.

HOW TO CATCH RHEUMATISM.

Sure Formula Laid Down by a Medical Authority.

Clothe as warmly as possible with flannels next to the skin and washbins underneath from November to the beginning of March. Then on the first clear, sunny day in March when the wind is in the north or northwest, take off all outer wraps, mantles, capes, sealskins, and the like; wear gowns of light and thin material, and go for a walk in the park or other open and unprotected places. Sit down full in the wind on a mossgrown seat, and sit for half an hour. Then go home and wake with a successful attack of rheumatism next morning. If perchance the rheumatism should fail, it is probable that pleurisy or pneumonia may be the reward. But if, by a miracle, neither the one nor the other repays the trouble taken, then go out and repeat the same tactics the next day and the next and the next, until success is assured. The recipe is warranted never to fail if persevered in for a sufficient length of time. A plan almost equally good is the one followed by two young ladies last spring. They had both had rheumatic fever previously; yet, because the sun happened to shine bright in at a dining-room window for a few hours they allowed the fire to go out. They sat without fire the remainder of the day and evening. The following being a bright morning they did not have fire kindled. They did not have rheumatic fever this spring.

HIS EYES CHANGE DAILY.

A Bucks County, Pennsylvania, Lad Whose Vision Alternates.

All the doctors in Pennsylvania are puzzled over the case of little 9-year-old Jonathan Stark, whose eyes seem a law unto themselves. One day the lad is cross-eyed, while the next his eyes are perfectly straight, and this curious alternation has been going on for years. The nonplussed doctors call it a case of intermittent strabismus—probably the only one on record—and, despairing of curing it, will soon give the surgeons of the Medico-Chirurgical hospital an opportunity to study the matter, as the father of the afflicted boy has decided to send him to that institution for treatment.

The boy at birth was perfect in every way, but when he had reached the age of 1 year his eyes became affected. His peculiar ailment is because to have been the result of a severe attack of convulsions, brought on by his attempt to digest pepper food. The baby was not relieved for several weeks. He cried incessantly, and it was noticed one day that his eyes were crossed.

One day the little fellow's right eye squints, on the next day both optics are perfectly straight, and the day preceding the left eye becomes affected, and so on the year round. There is another peculiar feature of the case. When the right eye looks squint the child can bring it into the correct line of vision by placing his hand over the good optic; but as soon as the hand is removed the affected one again seeks the inner corner of the eye.

THE JOCKEY'S BRIDE.

A Minister Who Was Given a Straight Tip at a Marriage.

I smile as I call to mind the day when I married a well-known jockey to an equally popular heroine's daughter. How he did make the money fly. He gave me a diamond pin, my clerk a $5 note and the rain witnesses, both sporting men, a "tenner" each. Some of the terms he made were decidedly heavy. For instance, he referred affectionately to his love as a "smart little nilly, little lot, little, little wanin careful jockeying, but a demon when she gets the bit in her mouth, and yet, the smartest in the field."

"Look at the rare style she comes to the post," he joyfully cried, as the lady walked up the room, and "now we're under starter's orders" as I commenced the ceremony.

When I asked the lady if she would "take this man," etc., and she answered in a clear voice "I will," he remarked: "Takes the prize like a dahby," and on putting the usual question to him the answer was, "It's twenty to one I will."

When all was over and they were hitched into double harness he flung his arm around her and kissed her impulsively; then turning to us all as we stood smiling, he sententiously remarked: "Entitling good finish."

As my jockey friend left the room and entered the carriage he whispered: "Back my mount for the Chester cup next week." I did; it won.

Glass Eating Fish.

There is an old negro in Florida who swears he has seen fish eating glass. His name is Mellifloous C. Chubbins, and he lives just a little distance beyond the popcorn vendor's shop. People who use the electric lights often find small holes in the glass globes, which they have to patch up with putty. This old fellow says he has seen the ordinary bass, for which often passes off for a caper with boiled onion, alight on one of these globes, cut a ridge with its serrated back fin and then with its saw-like teeth cut clear through the glass. He then goes inside to see if the light itself is not a big lump of extra clarified sugar. He says that the fish eats the glass dust and concludes that as a relish substitute for manual in removing bile from the system.

To Control Crows.

An ingenious invention, and one which is likely to supersede scarecrows and "moonshine scows troubled with breast," has recently been exhibited before the Paris "Central Society for Saving Life in Shipwrecks." When this device is put in operation, the surface of the ocean around vessels is covered with a thin cotton or silk net, which will be rendered unshakable in the language of the inventor "as to be unassailable by the bird and ever floating." by being dipped in a special chemical solution. The idea was first broached by a man who had noticed that a region covered with seaweeds was also a region of "calms."

Causing the Sick.

A singular custom is said to obtain in the Passeyr Valley, Tyrol. On the first Monday of Lent, the inhabitants of the valley meet every year at St. Leonhard, the largest of the villages of that region, for the purpose of settling, according to an ancient custom, the pending affairs of the past year. In the open field near a bridge, outstanding debts are squared, interest is paid; in short, all business obligations are discharged and new connections made. Woe to the debtor who should dare to stay away—his credit would inevitably be ruined throughout the valley.

Jocko and the Kittens.

As an example of the reasoning powers of monkeys, Mr. Darwin tells a story of one that was scratched by a pet kitten. A first Jocko was imprisoned in a cage. Recovering from his surprise, however, he set to work to discover the location of the claws. After a severe tussle he got the four feet of the kitten with his clutches, saw the nails thrust from their guards and, with the broadest grin of satisfaction, forthwith proceeded deliberately to bite off the points of each.

A Love of Plagiarism.

This story is at present making the round of the German newspaper press. When the composer Schulze was captured by brigands in the Abruzzi, they demanded one of his own compositions from him, with the result that he sang an aria from his latest opera. But before it was ended, the entire band burst into tears, and their captain, offering his hand to Schulze, released him with the words, "No, you, too, steal; never steal anything from a colleague!"

SMALLPOX IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Disbelief in and Opposition to Vaccination by Influential People.

About twenty years ago there was a severe epidemic of smallpox in England and America. In recent months the disease has been causing alarm in many parts of England and Scotland. Up to the middle of April it was prevailing—though in general the cases are of a mild type—in about fifty localities, including Liverpool, Manchester, Edinburgh and Glasgow. In the last city thirty-four new cases occurred within ten days previous to the report. No nearly improvised hospitals can be expected to stay the spread of the disease. England combinds with the best as a disadvantage. Many persons of influence do not believe in vaccination, write against it and oppose it in every way they can. The opposition has grown greatly during the long absence of the epidemic. The vaccination laws are practically in suspense. In some districts many children have never been vaccinated, and have not been touched by the lancet. Contrasted with vaccination has been with the best as a disadvantage. Many persons of influence do not believe in vaccination, write against it and oppose it in every way they can. The opposition has grown greatly during the long absence of the epidemic. The vaccination laws are practically in suspense. In some districts many children have never been vaccinated, and have not been touched by the lancet. Contrasted with vaccination has been a comparatively easy, and entirely worthy were, and their loss been an almost entire absence of concomitants. Again, the large class of unique and the many filthy lodging-houses into which they crowded at night pretty aid in the spread of the disease. If the epidemic reaches this country, we shall not expect it to spread very extensively, for the law respecting vaccination are intelligently carried out. Still, the large immigrant population will need looking after, and lodging-houses will need rigid inspection. Revaccination should be properly attended to. The authorities also should properly provide means for the isolation of patients.

A DOMESTIC EPISODE.

Didn't Think Dropping a Flat-iron on the Foot Would Hurt It.

"I called," said the lady patient, looking around in a mysterious manner, "to consult you, doctor, about my foot."

"Yes," said the doctor, stifling a yawn and looking at his watch "Have you been using it much?"

"Oh, no; but it pains constantly, and I can hardly get my shoe on."

"Too small," suggested the doctor, planting cautiously in the direction of his patient's feet, which were invisible.

"No, doctor; my shoes are twice too large for me."

"Perhaps that is the trouble" suggested the doctor, looking as if he were trying to believe it.

"It is only one foot that is affected."

"Perhaps you had better see a chiropodist," said the doctor.

"Oh, no; indeed; it's much more serious than that. I can't imagine what it is, but it's really very painful."

"And you say you have not injured it, somehow?"

"Never. You see, I've not been in a railroad accident or a runaway, or been run over by an electric car, or anything. I did drop a flat-iron on it one day when I was ironing, but it couldn't have been that—could it?"

"Well, I never," said the doctor, as he wrote out a prescription in Latin for mustard plasters; "of all sad things of life, flat-iron is the saddest, and the most fatal."

He Shared the Income.

In the old days of Chicago there was a negro barber named Hanson, who was a great favorite among the gentry, and who recently exposed the cause of the Greeks in their struggle with Turkey. His enthusiasm at last grew to such a pitch that he announced that he would devote a day to shaving for the benefit of the Greeks. The news was soon generally flocked in by scores. But when they arrived payment for the barber declined. He had given notice that he would shave for the benefit of the Greeks, he said, and "Ever since I will tile, pay when I shave for the benefit of the Greeks." he shaved all day for nothing, and probably felt comforted afterward with the thought that he had done something humanisme in aid of the Greeks.

Another New Thing in Clocks.

The latest novelties in timepieces are a watch that talks and a clock that marks the time by the consumption of a cigar—but Illuminator its translucent dial. The watch, which is ingenious, but intricate, announces the hours and quarters in a voice given to a phonographic attachment. It is the latest invention of a Swiss named Casimir Lavin. The clock is for night use. The dial can be turned by hand, and before going to bed the lovelorn placed opposite the hour of parting. As the candle burns lower and lower it pulls the hand on the dial successfully, which, illuminated in the rear by the burning light, shows the hour till daybreak.

How Town Names Originate.

The origin of some of the town names in Maine is old enough, for instance, an old settler tells us that the township north of Hartland, in the Vanceboro' valley, came by its name in this wise. One of the first settlers was named Maclaine. He settled on the south bank of the Piscataquis river, and had a splendid opening on which was known to the river rafts-men and voyageurs as "Mac's field." When the town was named it, a slight variation was retained, though not recognizable as it is now spelled "Nashfield."

A Phosphorescent Mountain.

Joe Lochinby is a singular freak of nature in the shape of a distinguished and phosphorescent mountain, near Alexandersbad, Germany. Its glowing appearance is due to the peculiar composition of rocks of which it is formed and the effect of sunlight on them.

engaging a clerk.

A recent sudden death took place at the breaking up of a well-known establishment in London, and it is stated married daughter of the house, in spite of her grief, was worldly wise enough to remember at the funeral that her father had a three yrs of a clerk which it would be well to secure. After the funeral, therefore, she sent for the chief clerk, with many regrets over his inability to attend to admin. in formed her that her young to elder had engaged him immediately after the death of "on other at ten guineas, sir, per."

THE PORCUPINE'S DIET.

The Only Thing They Shrink From Is the Foliage of the Hemlock.

"You don't have to skirmish around much for porcupine meat, as some lodge-pole porcupine can," says an old woodman. "Just spend a morning over a stack of cordwood, or a snag, for that matter, and he'll eat the whole business, and enjoy it like you would mince pie."

The chief diet of these animals, though, is hemlock browse. They make themselves a home in a hollow log, or under the roots of some old tree, and then make a trench of the hemlock. The hemlock is their pantry, and they make long trips gotten going to and fro between the trench and their house. The porcupine climbs the tree as easily as squirrel does, provided you don't slip up and eat his tail off while he is going up. Somehow or other he can't climb a tree without a tail, nor will he come down without it.

If you catch one of these porcupines climbing a tree and chop off his tail close he will stop right where he is, and will stay there until he starves to death, unless he is taken away. Once up a tree the porcupine goes out on the big limbs, and, pulling the small branches in with one paw, browses on the youngest leaves. In going through for woods you will find little piles of the fine leaves on the ground under hemlock trees. That means that a porcupine is feeding in the tree, the leaves on the ground being dropped from his feed. Sometimes a porcupine will remain in a hemlock tree a week at a time, hugging close to the trunk at night and feeding during the day. This curious little beast is the only curious little beast to be found in the world, so far as is thing that can the foliage of the hemlock.

Causing Trick at a Fair.

Cunning tricks are a feature in advertising business of a fair. A cunning lot of chickens, with a cock with wobbled mind in same, are when they are caused a little lot of attention large numbers of files. An observant and bad evidently noticed this and every day toward noon he would make his appearance in a coat, hop to a saucer, drink to cool cool over until he was covered with meat, leaving those which he had left behind. He meets. The files, enticed by the smell, soon swarmed around the scattering bacteriolus and whenever one passed within reach of the cock his nose his tongue darted out and the fly disappeared. This plan seemed so well that the man made a regular business of it.

Restaurant, the Hostel, Rendezvous of the Frontier of the Dutch school. He opposed the idea of publishing and delivering legible the representation of nature. The models he selected were generally the corporeal people. He is said to show what difficulties he could overcome, but difficulties of light and shade have never been surmounted.

HIS NAME IS COLUMBUS, TOO.

A Liberal Descendant of the Great Voyager Now Living in Poland.

For the last fifty-two years there has been a duffaint that lived on the east of Christopher Columbus, and around the house of this patriarch could be gathered today eight children, thirty grandchildren and six great grandchildren, so that there is little danger of the name of Columbus being the unknown quantity or forgotten. The name of this venerable descendant of a famous man is Adam Columbus. He is 80 years old. There is no doubt about his age or nativity, for their names were verified by his son, John Columbus, who lives in Lake, Lake county, his home, and who for that purpose made a visit to Cleveland where Alexius was born and reared. The man who is in his good health. His skin is swarthy and his hair is snow white. His eyes have the lighter complexion except one daughter, who inherits her father's dusky skin. Since the death of his last spring, at the age of 76, Alexius has been the head of his family.

Alexius Columbus was a shipbuilder by trade, as were his ancestors. He is the only one of his generation who came to the states. His sisters and brothers lived in the provinces of Posen, though it is not known that more than one of them is still surviving. An uncle of Alexius lived to the age of 114.

Anyone an Angle in France.

A little French girl's map of North America, shown in the colonial house exhibit at the world's fair, makes the thirty river rise in Canada, cross Lake Huron and serve as the lake's outlet. The Mississippi rises in Alaska, Lake Superior empties into the Mississippi river, Lake Huron reaches down to Washington and Lake Erie is still further south. No corrections are marked on the map so that it is difficult to say how the pupil's work would be marked by the teacher thought it correct or amusing.

"Take Off and Stick

The sound of gnawing, which had stopped while the officer was present, was again resumed, and Ralph Denham was on the floor, close to the place from which the sound came.

Outside the bustle and noise of boats being lowered, and the deep, gruff orders of the sailors could be heard. Captain Fox was preparing to conceal note of his treasure on shore.

Tired of his position on the floor, Captain Denham went out, and was leaning on the bulwarks with one of his men, his eyes fixed upon the cliffs, when he saw a light that almost seemed dancing after the darkness.

"Call from the spelling, as if carried by this stream of light, came Dan the cabin boy.

Rushing up to Captain Denham, the only man who is a humanist, Dan said eagerly:

"I've tossed the prank, and you can come through. Oh, I am so glad that you know your danger, for my heart has been sore for you."

"He came with a full understanding of the danger. We do not want to get on deck now, but when the time comes we desire you to be near to guide us, said Captain Denham.

"How shall I know the time?"

"When you hear a gun fired on board the Sea Hawk Blue will be close by you after daylight."

"I try, sir," said Dan, who could not help a glance of the man addressing him a ring of respect, for he was not used to associate with an ordinary sailor. Then I'll go back and take my place from the other side, and if I am not near when the signal is given, go through and turn to the right; there will be plenty of people, and I shall have to pass through the stairs-room and armory, where you can get arms if you need them. To the left are the steps leading to the deck."

"God bless you, Dan. We'll find the place, and reach the deck. Now go, lad." The Captain's voice was convulsive. Imperatively for the instance he could hear a vigorous knocking, accompanied by the call:

"Dan! Dan! What the blazes you are dawdling for when the Captain wants you?"

Dan darted through the opening, and put out the light. As he passed the sailor he whispered, "Be ready for the notable presence of a savage boy."

"Aye, aye, sir! Coming!" said the next instant the banging of a door could be heard.

As Dan ran out, a man shouted to him.

"Dan'ago's a bean a callin' for you, youngster; you'd be mighty lucky if you don't get a right good lashin' with a rope end."

Dan heard, but made no inquiry till he stood before Captain Fox on the deck, where he was ordered to go.

"Where have you been, you dogs?"

"I was should you be in, sir," replied Dan.

"Did I tell you to?"

"I thought you did, sir."

"You have no right to think. Next time you are not on hand, you young dog, I'll confound you. Do you understand me?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very well. Long lain that lout and bear a hand. Hail!" he, pointing over the side, where in the darkness the clim ing of a boat could be heard, was with a number of men in it.

Dan peered into the boat and took the post of coxswain.

All night long Lou and Ellen, who occupied the same stateroom, could hear the boats coming and going. To say they were frightened would be weakly narrow the state of their feelings. They could they have seen their own white faces reflected in the mirror, they would have seen them pale.

But they knew that Ralph Denham and his gallant men were on board, and they tried to cheer each other by rehearsing their knowledge of this fact.

Had they known Ralph Denham's actual condition they might not have drawn so much comfort from his presence.

At length the boats took their last trip to the shore, and Captain Fox, who had been superintending the concealment of the stolen cases, came into the room.

Day dawned, and the distant headlands and the island under the lee seemed to lift from the dark water in the power of light.

Two of the boats were left alongside, and now Fox and Fernandez entered the cutter and sailed in excited tones for their visitors to come out.

Lou and Ellen tried to be cheer, but they found to their horror that they were trembling.

They heard men outside, but still the boats appear outside they could not be heard.

Doctor Hodges, supposing that his daughter and Ellen Conlin had proved him, was about to descend to the boat, when an sailor glance told him they were not there.

Turning to Fernandez, who stood near, he asked:

"Where is my daughter and Ellen Conlin?"

"They will follow you. Hurry up. There is not a moment to spare. Captain Kidd is a-hungry."

A number of sailors on hearing this cruel joke a burst of laughter. The Doctor, now completely beside himself, was scarcely held by strong hands and lowered into the boat.

"Pull away, lads!" he shouted Fernandez to the man in the boat.

"Pull away, lads! Pull, for heaven, my child!" cried the Doctor. Seeing Captain Fox, he continued: "Send down my child and Ellen! I can see no sign of the pirate!"

"They will show him to you," laughed Fox. "Look well at me, my old friend."

"Lay Captain Kidd, and your daughter's in my keeping!"

Again Fernandez shouted for the men to pull away. And as they did so, Doctor Hodges fell back in the boat and looked to be dead.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE SEA HAWK COME UP, AND THE SIGNAL GUN IS FIRED.

The town of Sag Harbor was emptied to its extent by the conduct of Captain Fox.

All the families in the place were related by blood, or connected by marriage, or united by three lines of Presbyterian, equally strong, which they and inherited from their sturdy ancestors.

The people carried off all the whatever were among the very best in the place, the flower of the nobility.

No reason could be given for Fox's conduct. It was the most unlikely, the most improbable, and the one it was definite and unexplainable.

Thereupon gathered in excited groups, and their spirits rose for a while, when they saw the ship come about and try to beat up the harbor. But their relief their anxiety was only temporary, for again the Wanderer lacked and headed for the open water.

In the midst of the excitement a cutch and four, guarded by a number of internet, drew up before the inn, and from it, aided by a proportional officer, descended a stately lady in black.

She was about five and forty, and the face still retained its nobility of form, though time of care had seriously marred a countenance that must once have been of surpassing loveliness.

The landlord came out and the young officer addressing him said:

"I desire apartments for the Countess of Fallmer."

The overpowered landlord ushered his guests, lowed the lady to her room, and then, with a bow to the officer, followed the lady skipped him by asking:

"Can you tell me if Lord Fal—I mean one Colonel Graham, is clapping here?"

"He is, my lady," said the landlord.

"And a gentleman named Cupidn Ralph Denham lives here?"

"Yes, my lady, but he is not here now. He is on the Sea Hawk."

The lady looked at the landlord sharp—a, if need be, to exercise his sight, seeing her mind, she motioned for him to leave the room.

As the party entered the inn, old Hodge sauntered in, leaning on his hands above her head and crying about:

"Oh, praise on bones do Lor'. She has an big liner."

"What do you mean, Dhuh?" asked one of the bystanders.

"Conscious that she had been hasty, the old woman colored her staff, and muttered, as she turned away:

"I can't talk an hyphen and do same time.

In the coming of the coach with its cutter, the Countess had forgotten Ellen. The arrival of the Countess for Ingleby Lodge was a thing so grand that she tore a striking resemblance to the young lady who had been dressed and commented on by those who forgot, for the moment, the departure of the Wanderer.

It was now quite dark, and all the people in town were on the street, women wailing for their lost ones, men angrily and anxious to use their weapons, and frightened children, for the instance could hear a vigorous knocking, accompanied by the call:

"Dan! Dan! What the blazes you are dawdling for when the Captain wants you?"

Dan darted through the opening, and put out the light. As he passed the sailor he whispered, "Be ready for the notable presence of a savage boy."

Lou and Ellen tried to cheer, but they found to their horror that they were trembling.

They heard men outside, but still the boats appear outside they could not be heard.

Doctor Hodges, supposing that his daughter and Ellen Conlin had proved him, was about to descend to the boat, when an sailor glance told him they were not there.

Turning to Fernandez, who stood near, he asked:

"Where is my daughter and Ellen Conlin?"

"They will follow you. Hurry up. There is not a moment to spare. Captain Kidd is a-hungry."

A number of sailors on hearing this cruel joke a burst of laughter. The Doctor, now completely beside himself, was scarcely held by strong hands and lowered into the boat.

"Pull away, lads!" he shouted Fernandez to the man in the boat.

"Pull away, lads! Pull, for heaven, my child!" cried the Doctor. Seeing Captain Fox, he continued: "Send down my child and Ellen! I can see no sign of the pirate!"

"They will show him to you," laughed Fox. "Look well at me, my old friend."

"Lay Captain Kidd, and your daughter's in my keeping!"

Again Fernandez shouted for the men to pull away. And as they did so, Doctor Hodges fell back in the boat and looked to be dead.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE SEA HAWK COME UP, AND THE SIGNAL GUN IS FIRED.

The town of Sag Harbor was emptied to its extent by the conduct of Captain Fox.

All the families in the place were related by blood, or connected by marriage, or united by three lines of Presbyterian, equally strong, which they and in

WHERE OLD FRIENDS MEET AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Visitors Crowd Around the Huge Registers and Look for Acquaintances from Home—A Lottery-Drawing Exciting Interest—The Model Farm.

A Tour of the States.

Thousands upon thousands of people have gone to the World's Fair in the hope of meeting old friends, and the feeling of ownership in many ways.

A BIG MEETING.

The women drop down upon the steps and go to sleep. The men put their feet upon the railings. At every door in the day groups of lunchers are seen on the porches. And they spread their pickles and pie without any of that furtive looking and apparent apprehension of interference with some rude. The State building is the one place where the Columbian guard with his lanyer does not make himself conspicuous. After a man has traveled several hundred miles and seen a great man's town, and is expecting every hour to have some one sneeze at him and take his clothes, no one can call him a tramp. He can lie down in the lap of luxury and sleep. It gives him the peace of the town and endangered those dear to him, he was not the man to take his own sensitive into premonitions. To defeat Fox he was willing to do, and, if need be, to exercise his own life, but to know that his presence was a protection to a lady made it all the more easy for him to do.

"I'll only detain you a moment," said the Sea Hawk, as he held Lieutenant Hodge's hand. "You know, old friend, how my life and happiness are involved in the contest. On that pirate's deck are my betrothed and my daughter, and this your mess to watch for them when they come. Now, I ask you, as a man and one slain. That's all."

The Sea Hawk leads with Valentine Layton, told him to keep a brave heart, for he would preserve his life, and then left the ship as suddenly as he came.

"The wind and tide are in our favor," said Fernandez, as he stood relieving Valentine, "and they may not be if we wait for the Sea Hawk, so we have sized about down, and least about till daylight shows us the pirate."

"May I said, sir, if you will light at any rate or close quarters?" asked Valentine.

"We can't use the Montauks at long range. No, sir, we shall run alongside, grapple, and board. Do you understand? Right to board, and eye to eye. Do you understand? Hodges, ah, and you know where he is?"

"In the deck of the Wanderer," replied Valentine, entering his mess's spirit.

"I pass the anchors, and the incensed sails came down and fluttered in the wind for a time. Why did the sailors know what was wanted that they anticipated orders and were ready to obey them.

Every light on board the Sea Hawk was extinguished, and she turned in obedience to the helm and shot down the harbor, the center of a righteous vengeance.

AT THE 'PHONE.

She Was a Nervous Woman and Wanted to See Her Husband.

"Hel-lo!" said Mrs. Van Smith sweetly as she took down the telephone receiver without thinking to ring. "Hello! [A pause.] Oh, dear! Hello! Why don't they answer? [Another pause.] Oh, I forgot to ring. Hello! [Ringing.] Hello! Is this—Oh, why are they so slow Hello! Say, hello! [Ringing again.] Is that's them at last. Well, say, is this Mr. Van—— Oh, hello! [Sundry rings and pauses.] Is this Mr. Van Smith? [Another pause.] Oh, dear! Why don't you answer? Oh, hello, hello! Who—is—this? [Pause.] Oh, central office. Why, I dont want any central office. Hello! I want Van Smith Consolidated Cheese Company. I want Mr. Van Smith. Yes—s—s—. [Interruption and pause.] What number? Why, I know Van——s Directory? Telephone directory? Where? Tied to this phone? Oh! All right. Hello! Telephone directory at tight of transmitter and opens it.] Let's see! Van, Van, Van. [c, s, t, h.] Vancouss, Vanessa and w. Oh, here it's. Hello! Hello! Central—Hello! Number 4022. [Into the phone.] Say, hello! Is my good grandma? I've got to ring again. [Sundry further wild rings and subsequent pauses.] At last! Is that you? [A pause.] My, what impudence! Who is this? Well, give me Annie. [Annie, where is that telephone book? Wait a minute! [Consults directory.] Give me main number Hudson, twenty-two and twenty-two. Four, you, four, that's it.' [Long pause, during which the husband sat muttered "hello." "Say, who is this?" Is this Mr. Van Smith——? Well, say, who—what—why, I am close to the phone—as close as I can get. [Louder.] Is this Mr. Van Smith? Well, is he there? Well, say, will it be too much trouble to let him know that if he's there somebody wants to see him? Tell him I want to see him. Yes, I. It's me wants to see him.' [Saddened by the lonely quiver, coming from the phone: 'Madam, will you kindly gather together your intellectual forces to explain who you are? The supply of 'nos' is practically unlimited.' Yes, I am with nothing.' [Sotto voce musing thus: 'I'm Mrs. Van Smith.' Long pause.] Who is this? [eccentrically.] Charley? Yes, dear. Say, Charley, I just wanted to know if you were there. You are there, aren't you? Well, that's all. Good-by! Good-by!" [Goes away leaving the receiver hanging down.] —Chicago Record.

Treasure of Mont.

There is nothing like presence of mind after all. The other day, during a tremendous shower, a gentleman entered a fashionable club, bearing a splendid ivory-handled silk umbrella, which he placed in the stand. Instantly another gentleman, who was standing in the smoking-room, ran out and, with the abstraction of just such an article, jumped up. "Will you allow me to look at that?" he said sternly. "Certainly," replied the unfortunate owner. "I was just taking it to the police-station. It was left in my house last night by a burglar when we frightened off. I hope it will prove a first-rate clue." And, though the exasperated owner could plainly see where his name had been scratched off the handle, he sat down and changed the subject.

adorable accuracy. To many visitors this dwarf farm is a triumph of the Exposition. Ohio people look at the model and thing what fun farming must be. Illinois people look at the model farm and what farm was ever in such order.

In front of the North Dakota Building is a big log house and enlarged the door to him, he was not the man to take his own sensitive into premonitions. CHARLEVOIX, JULY 26, 1893.

By the time the Democrats get through with the currency problem they will not have any strength left to tackle the tariff.

Undoubtedly, the sound-money men will control both branches of Congress The silver law will be repealed without any compromises or conditions.

Experience is a costly schoolmaster The price which the nation has thus far paid for its, "subject lesson" in democratic rule is more than $1,000,000,000.

The fact that Stevenson is Vice President insures Cleveland the prayers of all good citizens for the preservation of his life to the end of his term.

The Democratic party which purchased power last November by issuing notes due after March 4, 1893, promising to pay in increased national prosperity, has defaulted on its paper.

Perhaps the Democrats are not directly to blame for the existing financial trouble, but the responsibility of providing a remedy for it rests upon them, and a mistake will be fatal to them.

Workingmen whose wages have been cut 20 per cent, and who voted the Democratic ticket last fall,are apt to construe the campaign statements of Democratic orators with the present condition of affairs, to the permanent disadvantage of the Democratic party.

The democratic demagogues promised the the people that the restoration of their party to complete control of the national government would benefit the dear laboring people. The people took the demagogues at their work, and the people have to-day One Billion Dollars less personal property than they had in March.

When President Cleveland issued his proclamation for an extra session of congress to convene next month, it was given out by his party organs that the President had already practically succeeded in securing the repeal of the Sherman law, "all by himself," and was contemptuously indebted to his own head and hand alone for what was a foregone conclusion. Since then it has developed that there is an ample field for a very certain disappointment to the president and an ample stock of highly cultivated resource. The latest information regarding the silver question as it will appear in congress shows that the struggle is likely to be a very sharp one, and with no certainty of success.

A Source of State Pride.

"The Michigan State Normal School is justly regarded as one of the leading educational institutions of the school in the United States," recently remarked a gentleman from New York, who had been officially connected with the schools of that great state for many years. "If the quality and character of its instruction, the strength and adaptability of its courses and by reason of the very successful results secured, your state Normal School at Ypsilanti easily entitled to first place in the list of Normal schools of our country." This is an intelligent estimate of the work and value of one of the educational institutions of our state which will add to the pride and pleasure of every Michigan reader.

It is a further source of satisfaction to the people of Michigan, that the State Normal School has constantly confined its efforts and ambition to the purpose for which it is established and for which it is willingly supported—the development and training of teachers for a profession which has properly come to be regarded as the highest and most important to which the life of any man or woman can be dedicated.

It is also an important fact in connection with the State Normal School, that the expenses of its students are less than at any other educational institution in the state. Good board and rooms at Ypsilanti can be obtained at prices ranging from $2.50 to $1.00 and $1.50 per week. Free admission to the State Normal is given to all students who present certificates of appointment from the legislative representatives or senator of their district, and an admission fee of but $5.00 per term is charged students not holding such a certificate.

Persons desiring further information concerning the State Normal School are requested to send for a catalogue, or address the Clerk of the school at Ypsilanti, Mich.

GEO. DEHAVEN, G. P. A.

Rev. Frederick Bagnall, of Alba, has lately discovered a serious blunder in his first naturalization papers, taken out at Jackson in 1890. The affidavit accompanying his declaration of intention reads, "I, Queen of Great Britain do hereby renounce my allegiance," etc., a "declaree lot intention of becoming a citizen of free and enlightened America. The mistake of substituting the "Queen of Great Britan" for his own name was only discovered. The instrument bears the official seal of the circuit court of Jackson county and its genuineness cannot be disputed, hence, it almost takes one's breath away to learn that so distinguished a foreign potentate as Victoria should renounce the crown she wears, and under our law, clean the rights of citizenship of this great Republic.

—The launch and fine little boat, the Joseph Gordon, Capt. L. Guard, is as regular as clock-work on the Charlevoix and East Jordan route, and is as popular as ever. She leaves Charlevoix every morning at 7, and every afternoon at 1:30; and leaves East Jordan at 10 and 4, stopping at intermediate points both ways.

—The Charlevoix park picnic grounds, lately arranged by order of the council, are the finest in Northern Michigan. Picnic parties from abroad are welcome to use them. Water is provided by calling at the pump house for the key. Picnics on a large scale or of the character of celebration will find a grand stand and ample seating facilities.

—An important question is this one providing for the destruction of noxious weeds on the public highways. Under the law it becomes the duty of overseers of highways to cause the destruction of Canada thistles or milkweeds, and any person permitting them to grow on his premises is subject to a $25 to $100. Highway officers should read up and enforce the law.

—John Williams lost a horse, and Daniel Dake has some severe scratches, as the result of a thrilling episode last Saturday evening. Mr. Dake and Miss Edie Mason were driving behind one of Williams' teams when one of the horses became frightened, reared up and fell over back, breaking his neck and wrecking things generally. Mr. Dake received some severe contusions on his forehead, and Miss Mason was slightly injured.

—Miss Winifred Gale, of Albion, who appears at Iowa Grand Opera House next Wednesday evening, is spoken of by competent critics as one of the most promising elocutionists in the state. She is the daughter of Mrs. Ada Iddings Gale, who is a well known contributor to the literary columns of the Chicago Inter Ocean, and whose beautiful poems have appeared in some of the leading magazines. Miss Gale will be assisted by local and resort musical talent, and a pleasant entertainment is promised.

—The Bearavale Boat and Canoe Co of this place have just issued a neat folder containing much information of value to those who love boating and especially those who have a taste for canoeing. This latter branch of their business is growing a success. The work turned out up to date is pronounced by connoisseurs to be superior to any exhibited at the World's Fair. Their models which have been constructed at great expense, are the finest in the country, in point of beauty of lines. The boats of all classes, made by the Bearavale Boat and Canoe Co., are of the best quality, and surpass in beauty anything afloat on these waters. Send for one of their folders.

Lindsay Park.

Lindsay Park lots are now fairly in the market, and the owners have begun advertising the new resort in Grand Rapids, Chicago, St. Louis and Detroit papers. A large blackboard plat of the Park has been erected on the grounds.

A mile and a half of sidewalk is now in process of construction, marking the principal streets, and the village is co-operating with the Park people by laying out and improving streets through the property.

There is no doubt that that Lindsay Park will become one of the most popular resort grounds in the North, possessing as it does, every advantage for which this region is famous.

The Maccabees Hold High Carnival Here Last Thursday.

Thursday last was a holiday in Charlevoix, and about everybody either celebrated or stopped work and looked on.

The day was given over to the Maccabees of Northern Michigan, and the way the "bees" swarmed was a "holy terror." They came on the trains, boats and in wagons. They came, most of them, with baskets, and at the park, which had been elegantly fixed up for them, they dined, and listened to addresses by John Carlin, of Flint, Rev. Mr. Hoyt, of Petoskey, and Rev. W. E. McLennan, of South Bend, Ind. The Petoskey band furnished music all day, and all went merry as a marriage bell. The parade at 2 p. m. was a success.

Altogether, it was a great day for the Maccabees, and the Charlevoix Tent is hugging itself for its good management of the affair, which it certainly is justified in doing.

An auxiliary feature of the celebration was the cyclers' tournament. The local club led the procession, and while it presented a fine appearance, would have been improved by the presence of Mr. Carpenter. In the afternoon occurred the races at the trotting park.

Death on Old Settler.

Andrew J. Hawkes died at his home in East Jordan on Saturday last, and another pioneer of Northern Michigan passes off the stage.

Mr. Hawkes was born in Peru, Clinton Co., N. Y., March 1st, 1825. In 1866 he removed to Bank, Antrim Co., and two years later located his homestead in South Arm township. On the death of his wife in 1885, he removed to East Jordan where he lived at the time of his death.

He leaves three children, E. S. Hawkes, formerly of this place, but now of East Jordan. Mrs. W. W. Ream, of North Manchester, Ind., and Miss Agnes.

Mr. Hawkes was the only surviving brother of Mrs. S. K. Bagley, of this place. He was a devoted Christian, and consistent member of the M. E. church.

His funeral occurred Sunday afternoon.

Lieutenant Hedges tried to follow Uutilla to go below and occupy Capitain Denham's cabin, but to his astonishment he replied:

"Why lie down when I am not weary and cannot sleep. No. I shall stand and drink in your daring with my eyes if I cannot help with my hands. Day will soon be here, and the Montauks must find me ready."

"But sandy, Utilla, you will not expose yourself to danger. We have plenty of men to do the work, and your life is precious—very precious to me."

"The Great Spirit commands, I wear the light and carry the spear of the mighty Wyandanch. Where they are with the Montauks will follow, and where could they be safer but in my keeping. To-morrow a sun will see me as now standing by your side," said the heroic princess.

"Ah, Utilla, would that it were my fate to stand by your side through all the same of my life."

Alarmed at his own boldness, and perhaps struck by the incongruity of blushing at love on such an occasion, Mr. Hedges stood and left.

The men not directly engaged in the sailing of the ship at once made preparations for the morrow's battle. All laid away their arms and bound kerchiefs about their heads, and as the night was warm, many of them stripped to the waist and tightened their belts.

The long gun was cleaned and loaded, and the broadside guns were doubly shotted.

Active, hunting plans in the ranks alarmed the guests and the guilsance which the men giddied were all examined by Mr. Dayton.

The fine muskets were filled and placed within reach, and in the cockpit the ship's surgeon and his assistants made every preparation for the reception and treatment of the wounded.

Ballons were cooled for the men, to be used on the morrow, and then the fire in the galley was extinguished.

While these preparations were going on, Lieutenant Hedges, who with Utilla stood near the helm, saw the lights on board the Wanderer of Gardner's Island.

There is the ship we are tossing for," said Utilla.

"I see her, but we shall keep on till we see the Montauks, then, then best safe and come back; by that time it will be a fine light for the Sea Hawk."

Captain Fox had boarded away, the waves hissing from her prow like the voice of a serpent and her tops gleaming like the muscles of a creature hungering for the contest that lay before her.

"Montauk light on the starboard bow," repeated the officer of the watch.

"Bear away one point to the east," said Lieutenant Hedges to the two men placed at the wheel.

Up spoke the Sea Hawk with the eager flight of the bird after whom she was named. Montauk light rose up bold and clear from the breakers, and as the eagle in wild spread steps and wheels back on the course he has come, so wheeled and turned the ship.

A gray patch of dawn lay in the east, but the Sea Hawk faced the darkness to the west, Gardner's Island was near dead ahead.

Into light fitting land and sea, and the Sea Hawk turned the point, and up to her posts ran the energy of the crew.

There at another, not a mile away lay the Wanderer, her boats alongside after landing her visitors.

In a moment Captain Fox ran forward and shouted to the coming ship.

"Lay-aboard, lay-aboard! Lay-aboard!"

A shot from the long gun of the Sea Hawk was the only reply.

The ships were now only a hundred yards apart, the Sea Hawk's sweeps and shouted to his boatswain, and then rang out the shrill whistle, which seemed alarmed the crew of the Wanderer to arms.

The Sea Hawk's boatswain, Ralph Shoe, was alongside, and he grappling irons, the prime, sinewy, manner fastened in her victim. Down went the anchors, and Hedges gave and his cheers of his men rang along the shore.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE SEA HAWK'S CREW.

It was Captain Fox's boast that he never permitted himself to be taken by surprise. But he was certainly surprised now.

He could not credit his eyes and ears when he saw the Sea Hawk grappling with the Wanderer, and heard the shot and cheers from the gallant ship ringing through the hull of his own ship.

Quick-witted, he was in the danger, and his first thought was the time of the man he had sent to board the Sea Hawk had betrayed him. In no other way, he was sure, could his personality and schemes be detected.

Ordinarily, at this time in morning, he would be for anything but to shake off the foe that had swooped down on him and fastening her sharp talons in his side in a death grip.

So well trained were his men that they threw off their jackets, tore the yokes from their shirts, and rushed to their posts while yet the shrill whistle of the boatswain was piping all hands to quarters.

The Wanderer was always ready for action; her guns were shotted at all times, and never had her crew been when the changes were drawn to clear them.

Now the great gun amidship turned her muzzle to the west of the Sea Hawk, and its fiery breath blazed through the skeleton of both masts.

The fifteen broadside guns were all on the side next the foe, and the side of the same ship; come to the water line and then the shot went tearing and crashing through her timbers, a fearful rain of splinters flying up from the deck.

Lieutenant Hedges had hoped, from the suddenness of the attack on the Wanderer wholly unprepared for resistance. He thought to board her first and overpower him before he could arrive a blow; but now, at the first wonderful alacrity with which the pirates ranged to their posts, he almost forgot, in the momentary admiration of the act, the all-important mission on which he had come.

It was agreed between him and Utilla that her people should remain out of sight till his men had gained the deck of the foe, where they expected to do fearful work. Then the Montauks were to swarm on board shouting the battle cry of Wyandanch.

To speculate with the foe, Hedges had sent Utilla to the deck, was the first man to leap to the deck of the Wanderer, Mr. Dayton remaining back to give directions to the men.

With the quick bound of tigers two score stalwart young men imitated their daring leader, and, quicker than the words fond can be uttered, they made for the long gun amidships, and drove back or killed the men who were fighting it.

With that quickness of perception and action that would have made him the foremost seaman in the world, had he been engaged in a righteous cause, Captain Fox saw his opportunity.

"Throw off the grapples!" he roared. "Leave the deck to my Frenchmen!" Hurrah for the men of the Wanderer!"

High over the shouts of the men the crashing of timbers, rang out the voice of the pirate chief, his clear head his words and seemed transferred into deeds.

Forward ran to part the ships; another instant and the tide and wind would have separated them, so far that, though they were anchored nearly head to head, boarders could not go from one to the other.

But before the axes could sever the last ropes a high, shrill cheer rose up from the deck of the Sea Hawk. It was like the exulting cries of a troubled eagles when circling in mid-heaven they see far beneath them the victim despoiling their nests, and they swoop down to defend and destroy.

"I wear the plumes of Wyandanch! Men of Montauk, follow your queen!"

We come! Our princess, we come!" shouted the Montauks.

Utilla leaped to the deck, on, when she raised the spear of Wyandanch again! was twelve than the men, blushing in the light of the rising sun, swung their axes and their cutlasses, swung their axes and their cutlasses, swung their axes on half the Montauks leaped from the bulwarks, and then between the ships had increased so much that the others were forced to remain behind.

Wondering why Captain Denham, who must have heard the signal gleam, did not response of Ralph Hedges, with a view to cheering his own men as well as the foe, the pirates were all amazed at manner, raised the cry:

"Ralph Denham! Ralph Denham!"

Fox heard him, and pressing his men to one side, he replied:

"Ralph Denham is dead, curse you!"

The men looked at each other in astonishment, and Hedges, the lieutenant Hedges.

"Murder! Murder you lie!" retorted the gallant sailor, and with a lear that would have been appropriate in the mouth of one who had lost his dear friend, and, as he spoken of lance, the red swords crashed and sparkled and rang out again, and Hedges, the stronger of the two, pressed on to the deck with his gallant. At the heel, the coolest between the two, would have been uncertain, but not one of the pirates faltered, for the cry of the men, the blows, strong, fierce, and the shouts of victory reeling and bleeding to the deck.

Utilla saw the act, and, with a cry of rage that appalled the stoutest of the men, leaped from her spear gleamed, like the lightning, and, in the flash, transfixed the man who had stricken down the Ralph Hedges.

While this was going on Capt. Denham was on the deck, and, with a single signal gun, had gathered way through the opening, and the Sea Hawk was free. But the very shot that had called her men to their posts had called them in the advance as to a finally block them.

In the dim light they worked like giants to release themselves, but before ever they lifted one timber from their front another frigate was behind.

Capt. Denham heard his name shouted on the air, and recognized the voice of Lieut. Hedges. He felt like answering back, but checked himself.

Still the Captain and his men worked, and still one and the other, the stout, the cash and about, and the shaking and arms overhead, while the ships, though no longer side by side, used their sides to rub each other with speed and effect.

To despair, Capt. Denham was about to turn back, for the purpose of finding some other way to the deck, if that were impossible, when he heard from its front cabin:

"Fire, men of the Sea Hawk! patience!"

By the dim light they could catch the gleam of an ax in the hands of the Captain, and they saw that it was well fell.

A few minutes, and there came a crash, followed by a cloud of dust. One of the men, in his place, and in the mass of rubbish came down.

The men, eager to speed to the aid of their comrades, could not restrain the cheer that leaped to their lips.

"God bless you!" was all the Captain could say, as he ran past his men to the armory, the walls of which were then with cutlasses and pistols. Then the sailors cared nothing. They saw the way before them, and, with a cheer that was truly the war shout, and then rushed after the Captain, who was on the deck of the Sea Hawk.

The sight that met Captain Denham's eyes would have sighted a brave man to roughness.

The handful of men that Lieutenant Hedges had led to the ship were cumbered on the pirate decks, and, in the hinder, fighting desperately, though against overwhelming odds, the Montauks under Utilla had just charged over the bulwarks of the Wanderer and were the gilittering blade above her head.

We come! Our princess, we come!" shouted the Montauks.

Utilla leaped to the deck, on, when she raised the spear of Wyandanch again! was twelve than the men, blushing in the light of the rising sun, swung their axes and their cutlasses, swung their axes and their cutlasses, swung their axes on half the Montauks leaped from the bulwarks, and then between the ships had increased so much that the others were forced to remain behind.

PEOPLE OF MIGHTY MUSCLE.

Men and Women Who Have Lifted Great Weights in Various Ways.

George Saptman, of Philadelphia, lifted three pounds of iron. The modern Hercules raised that enormous weight, and with this load, took a walk around the hall where he was exhibiting his powers. Saptman is a giant in muscle and structure. He stands six feet four and one-half inches in his stockings measures fifty inches round the chest, and weighs 272 pounds, scarcely an ounce of which is superfluous flesh.

In 1741 a man living in England, called Thomas Topham, raised at Derby three casks filled with water, the total weight of the three being 1,800 pounds. A stage was erected for him, and on this stage he accomplished so unparalleled feat of great strength. Topham lifted with his teeth and held out for a long time a wooden table six feet long with a hundred weight attached to one extremity. On one occasion he took a kitchen spit and bent it around a butcher's neck like a handkerchief. A German named Bachela lifted with his teeth a cannon weighing about 700 pounds and fired it off in that position.

Mons. Robert, who appeared first before the public at St. Bartholomew's Fair, London, in 1818, was a strong woman. She carried weights equal to those lifted by the celebrated Topham. Mons. Robert, who was a strong woman, lifted with her teeth a large table on which several persons were seated; supported an anvil weighing 300 pounds on her chest while a blacksmith forged a horseshoe upon it and afterward tied her long hair round the anvil and swung it about her.

A CASE OF RARE PREJUDICE.

An Irishwoman's Sensibilities Excited in a Courtroom.

An old, decrepit, ragged Irishwoman was waiting for the trial of a case in which she was to testify. The benches reserved for witnesses were partly occupied by a group of Chinamen and Italians, and there was plenty of room left for more. Nevertheless, the aged Irishwoman remained standing, and looked about her in a fatigued way as if there were no room save a seat in sight. When she was so tired that she could scarcely keep her feet any longer, she accosted a court officer and asked him if he would get a chair for her.

"A chair?" exclaimed the officer, his breath quite taken away by so extraordinary a request. "Why don't you go and sit on one of those benches yonder, where you belong?"

The tottering dame hitched up politely a huge flagon in each of the seats and the foreigners who adorned them, and replied:

"Will I sit on thim blinkers, indade! No, sure; I will not. I will not darange myself, sir, by sitting wid a lot of domnsed Epsetians."

Whether or not she made a distinction in her mind between the Italians and the Chinamen, or classified them all together as "domned Epsetians," I don't know; but, certainly, at the rest of great personal discomfort, she adhered to her determination not to go near them.

DANGEROUS ICE.

Some Points for People Who Are Purchasing in Earnestness.

A medical authority says that in view of a threatening plague people cannot be too careful in the selection of the ice they use, as all sorts of diseases may be communicated by this medium, but no directions governing the selection of ice are given.

The best ice is always cold, and sometimes a slight moisture may be observed upon the surface; it is devoid of smell and will melt when exposed to a temperature of 110 degrees Fahrenheit.

Ice made of water is most desirable; it should be transparent or nearly so and should break into fragments when given a sharp blow. Tough ice that will not break is generally adulterated. Avoid soft ice or ice that has been subjected to excessive heat while under process of manufacture. It sometimes presents a fine appearance, but is unhealthful.

Ice more than three days old should not be purchased, as it is liable to turn sour on your hands and will have to be thrown away. After having melted ice loses many of its virtues and should not be used.

It should always be kept in a cool place and at a distance from gas fixtures to avoid explosions.

DIAMONDS.

Some Are Only Good for Mechanical Purposes.

The soft natural diamonds that are sold not to be cut or pulverized are those known as glaziers' diamonds. They are very small stones, have numerous faces and bended edges, the planes of which are distinctly visible. These diamonds can cut glass, but diamonds, the edges of which are rectilinear, will only scratch it. Glaziers' diamonds are sold at from $12 to $18 the carat.

Certain diamonds, which in the natural state are in a spheroidal form, and which do not possess any "cleavage," cannot be cut and are pulverized to make diamond dust. There are also morphous diamonds that are completely opaque, and are of steel gray or slightly reddish black; and these are called carbonic diamonds, carbont or carbonado. Diamondas dust, tools are made out of them, with the aid of which rocks against which the hardest tempered steel has had the edge taken off, are split and polished.

As for black diamonds worth from $4 to $5 per carat, they are used with success in the mechanical perforation of rocks, the boring of mine pits and galleries, the up lifting of coals and stones, engraving and dressing of millstones, porcelain cylinders, etc., the sawing and piercing of marble, porphyry, granite, porcelain, glass and a whole lot of other substances and for steel engravings.

There are very few large diamonds in the world, not twenty of commerce, and certainly not 200 of any note. The Braganza of Brazil weighs as nearly as may be twelve ounces, but experts pronounce it to be not a diamond at all, simply a white topaz of more than usual size and brilliancy.

A STRANGE OLD SHIP.

A Fac-Simile of the One in Which Lief Ericsson Sailed.

Norsemen claims that the Viking carried the sons who discovered America, and regaled with scorn the conceits of Columbus. Here 12,000 Norwegians live in the city of New York and Brooklyn, and a right royal welcome was given the arrival of the ship which revives memories of the bravery of their fierce Viking ancestors.

This old vessel is of oak, seventy-five feet over all, with a keel of sixty feet, fifteen and one half feet beam, and a draught of three and one half feet. The original which served as a model was dug up at Godland, in the south of Norway, and now is Christiania. She is a clinker built, and caulked with cow's hair, spun into a sort of rope; her crew consists of thirteen men, who sailed on their voyage May 1st, and some very rough weather was encountered. An enthusiastic reception was given the craft and crew at Newport from the cottage residents, and at New York from their fellow countrymen.

After leaving the Hudson river, she traversed the quiet Erie canal unchecked, and thence dri en up the lakes to Chicago by sail an' the strong o' re of her crew, where she was sold to a highest bidder; the proceeds to be used in establishing a sailors' retreat in Norway. The cost of the boat and voyage has been about $20,000.

THE CAMEL'S REVENGE.

Finding Its Game Backed It Idles Out of Sheer Disgust.

A few years ago it chanced that valuable camel, working in an oil mill in Africa, was severely beaten by its driver, who perceiving that the animal had treasured up the injury, and was only waiting a favorable opportunity for revenge, kept a strict watch upon the animal. Time passed away, the camel, perceiving that it was watched, was quiet and obedient, and the driver began to think that the beating was forgotten.

One night after the lapse of several months, the man, who slept on a raised platform in the mill, while as is customary, the camel was stalled in a corner, happening to remain awake, observed by the bright moonlight that when all was quiet the animal looked cautiously around, rose softly, and stealing over towards a spot where a bundle of clothes and a burnous, thrown carelessly upon the ground, resembled a sleeping form, cast itself with violence upon them, rolling with all its weight and tearing them most relentlessly with its teeth.

Satisfied that its revenge was complete the camel was returning to its corner, when the driver sat up and spoke. At the sound of his voice, and perceiving the mistake it had made, the animal was so mortified at the failure and discovery of its scheme that it dashed its head against the wall and died on the spot.

A WOODEN LEG AND A DOG.

How Nearly They Altered Bismarck's Triumphant Career.

A wooden leg and a dog nearly changed European history. In 1865, just previous to the war between Prussia and Denmark, Bismarck was staying at Biarritz. One morning, accompanied by a huge dog, he was walking along a road which runs along a cliff, protected by a low wall, when he met an old French naval captain with a wooden leg, but powerfully built and of a quick temper. The dog became unduly attentive to the captain's leg, and the Frenchman struck at the animal with the butt of his fishing-rod. Bismarck used a round German oath, and the sailor followed with another emphasis. From words the two came to blows, and in a few minutes the sailor found that, strong as he was, a Frenchman was fighting him bodily upon the top of the sea wall. Another moment and he would have been in the sea below, and the whole course of history would have been changed. At the critical moment, however, by the long or fatal chance, the shape of an equerry of Napoleon, who rescued the German from his terrible opponent. If that equerry could only have known for what he had saved him!

WHITE HOUSE CARPETS.

How They A - Overcome by the Battle of a Housekeeper.

If any one proof of the presidential office is needed, it exists in the White house carpets. They look as if they could never be made to smile again. The one on the stairs leading to the office best shows what the impatient feet of the 19,000 would be government employes have accomplished. It is a heavy Axminster, held in place by long nails with big dull heads, instead of the usual nails. The nail is fully three inches long, but since the rush there is a decided scarcity of the shining heads, and the tread of the office seeker has pulled out even those great spikes, and a couple of dozen of them have been picked up and put away. The carpet looks as if a regiment of giants had been executing a double-shuffle on the stairs for the last month. An extra demand for stair carpet at the white house ought to be granted without delay, for the congressmen who have brought the office seekers along and helped sold to the rush.

FIRST STEAM WAR SHIP.

Built in Canada, as Was Also the First Steam Troop Ship.

It is generally known that the first steam-driven vessel to cross the Atlantic was built in Canada. The inference also is not so general, but ever, that this same craft was subsequently converted into a cruiser, and was the first steamship engaged in actual war.

The facts in the case are quoted from "Johnson's Alphabet of First Things in Canada." The ship was the Royal William. She was built at the Cove, Quebec, in the winter of 1831-32, and during the season of 1832-33 plied between Quebec and Halifax. In the latter season she was sent to London, and was then chartered by the Portuguese government to transport troops intended for the service of the late Don Pedro to Brazil. Returning to London, she was sold to the Spanish government, by the latter converted into a cruiser, and employed against Don Carlos in the civil war of 1835, thus being the first steamer to fire a hostile shot. This war is still another curious fact that may have been overlooked—that troops withdrawn from Canada were the chief of the Christian war of 1835-37, for the purpose of leading the army intended to crush Napoleon after his return from Elba, were transported down the St. Lawrence by a Canadian steamer. This was probably the first occasion on which a steam vessel was used for purposes of military transport. Canada, therefore, not only furnished the world with the first steam vessel, but she also contributed the first steam troop ship as well.

A NATIONAL AIR.

What the Country Yearns to Hear Some One Compose.

The necessity for a national air that has not been either borrowed or stolen was very clearly apparent during the naval rendezvous at Hampton Roads and the subsequent ceremonies in New York. In those places, if never before, the chilly exertion struck many a heart, and there was hardly emphasis enough in the cheering which greeted the Queen, a young lady visitor was detailed with what memories of the international compliment, for she imagined the bandsmen were playing "Annie Rooney." She was not alone in her error, hundreds of others then in that vicinity did not know that one greatest of patriotic hymns is sung to a stolen tune, and that time the most royalistic of all airs.

There was similar misunderstanding as to other melodies. "They're playing Columbia, but blowed if I know them," said a soldier who from the wharf was listening to the Dudley band. His guess was wrong. They were playing "Britannia, the ruler of the ocean," but no matter, one of millions who are not aware of the fact that both words and music of that song were lifted bodily across the Atlantic, and that somewhere on the way the word "Columbia" was substituted for "Britannia." Perhaps "The Star Spangled Banner" came nearer to be generally recognized as our own than any of the other tunes, but forty thousand people nothing inconvenable when they discussed among themselves the indisputable fact that the words only are American—that the air is an old English production.

A QUEER TUG.

A New Craft Which Can Go on Land or Water.

A new Canadian invention for use in the lumber districts is coming into general use in Northern Ontario. It is called a steam swaping tug. It propels itself on land as well as on water, and is used by lumbermen to have operations are carried on among small lakes connected by streams of uncertain navigation. Six of these unique craft have been built by the inventors during the past season.

They are built in square shape, with steel-shod runners for moving overland are thirty-seven feet long, ten feet beam, decked all over, and have dropping seats for four men in the bow; the bottom and up the bow is covered with steel boiler plate. An engine of twenty-five horse power strains fastens for ten hours' work, with three men in the bow to cut the wood.

In the water it moves six miles an hour, forward or backward, as required, propelled by side wheels. On land it is propelled by having a cable drum on which is coiled five-fifths of a mile of steel wire cable, which is fastened with pulleys to a tree or some object in front, the last moving as the wire is rolled up. The boiler is hung on an axle in the center and a lever arranged on the front enables the firemen to tip it forward or back and keep it level going up or down hill. It will move over an elevation of one foot in three on land and draws about twenty-eight inches in the water.

Homogenous Peaches.

At a large dinner party given in London recently the peaches placed on the table bore the monogram of their owner traced directly in the velvety bloom. Letters were cut from paper and pasted on the peaches while growing. When the fruit was ripe, on removing this the letters were found picked out in most delicate green, the rest of the fruit being rosy and deep-hued.

Hot Water From the Mot Mantlers.

A hot water fountain is now in operation in Paris. The water that feeds the fountain passes through a coil of copper tubing 300 feet long. By dropping a sou in a slot jets of gas are turned on and ignited. By this means the water is heated. For each sou one is entitled to light three. It is expected that this fountain will be a great success in the gay "Paris."

The Wrong Room.

"I think, Willie," said his father, who had been looking through the new house, "I shall give you one of the rooms at the other end of the building." "What's the matter with this one?" inquired Willie, anxiously. "The matter, my son," replied the experienced parent, his left eyelid coming down shortly over his eye, "is that the window opens out on the back porch, and that door is close to the kitchen, and this is the circus season."

An Immortal Class of People.

A little girl, aged 4 years, grown tired of play, was unusually thoughtful. "Mamma," she said, very solemnly, "you will all die some time, won't you?" "Yes, my dear," answered the mother. "Every baby will die but the back-drivers," mused the little one. "Why, what makes you say that?" questioned the mother, between amusement and wonder. "The back-drivers never die, you know." "There will have to be somebody to bury the folks, won't there?"

Almost Anything Can Be Proved.

The learned Person was laying down one time with a well-known canon of the second Jeremiah King. One day at dinner, when they had got into discussion upon questions of etymology, Person gave a derivation which King considered to be so far-fetched as to be quite ridiculous. "You might as well say," said King, "that my name is connected with cucumber." Possibly there was a cucumber on the table. "And so it is," said Person. "How so?" asked King. "Why, thus: Jeremiah King, by contraction, Jerry King; Jerry King, by contraction and metathesis, Gherkin, and gherkin, we know, is a cucumber pickled."

The Sailors' Pastor.

The eccentric Father Taylor, the sailors' pastor at Boston, was a strong partisan of Governor Briggs. On one occasion, just previous to the latter's election, he was making the usual fervent prayer, asking the Lord to give the people for governor "a man who will put a chaw in the face of God, etc." when he suddenly broke off: "Pshaw, Lord! What's the use of boxing the compass like that?—give us Governor Briggs!"

Those Children Again.

This story is about Philadelphia twins. The nurse was giving them a bath. Later, hearing the children laughing in bed, she said:

"What are you children laughing about?"

"Oh, nothing," replied Edna, "only you have given Edith two baths and haven't given me any."

FEMININITIES.

Dr. McDONALD The Specialist, FOUNTAIN CITY HOUSE, CHARLEVOIX Thursday July 27th. —until— Thursday, August 10th

Dr. McDonald, the well-known specialist, is now here. People who are afflicted should call on the doctor at once and have their disease read correctly at a glance by this learned and rationally gifted specialist without asking any questions. Dr McDonald has for years made a study and specialty of chronic lingering diseases that baffles the ordinary physician. His large experience and broad knowledge made the doctor eminently qualified to treat his specialties. Are you afflicted? Do you suffer from nervous prostration; dyspepsia; lingering backing cough; catarrh; weak eyes; blood, skin or chronic diseases of any nature? Then do not delay but call upon Dr. McDonald and if he is not curable he will earn you. He is a physician indeed who cures. Remember and treats the mind as well as the body. Call on him at once. Health is worth your millions.

A CASE OF NIP AND TUCK.

The Fight of Two Millers About the Stream.

"I know a case down in Pendleton county," said a mill man to the crowd of loafing Hoosiers at a Maine central station, "where one mill owner did his level best to keep another mill below him on the same stream from filling an important order in the dry season. It was one of the sweetest cases of nip and tuck I ever knew.

"The upper millowner had a dam at the outlet of the pond and had plenty of opportunity to throw the water back, as the reservoir had time well drawn down. Still, the season was so dry that the water was let through the upper sluice only for an eighth of an hour below, would have plenty of water. In this state of affairs my owner was given to the lower millowner, who was to be filled in a very short time, and at the time fixed he came down and shut down his gates to hold the water back, but his matched yankee knew his game and prepared it up so it was tight as a silver dollar.

"Things looked pretty blue for mill No. 2, but the owner was equal to the emergency. He rigged his gates so that the minute the saw was through a cut they shot down and the momentum ran the carriage back. He made his dam very tight, holding every drop of water, and with what leaked into the stream from one or two little front inside and the other one or two friendly sluiceways he kept running independent of the reservoir that his greedy neighbor was so carefully holding back. He delivered the lumber on time and came off with dying colors, but it was a little the closest yet I ever knew a sawmill in Maine to have."

Nervous Fidgetes.

In the 3 or 4 hours of the year during which we are awake we have something like 60,000,000 of these little pests in our sight off the coast of Brittany alone.

THE PENSION APPROPRIATIONS REACH $160,100,505.

Terrible Crimes in Darlington and Pittsburg—Lynching at Homer of the Murderer of a Veteran—Siam Is Surprised—The Fleets Aggregate.

Fears For and Near.

—The Pension Bill has been prepared on account of the division of the appropriation committee of pensioners at the last session for the support of the pension service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896. The amount of the appropriation was $160,100,505. It is thought that a deficiency appropriation may be required. The appropriation of $165,100,505 has been divided into the following payments:

Army pensions	$150,000,000
Navy pensions	2,400,000
Fees and commissions	1,700,000
Salaries of agencies	1,200,000
Medical examining boards	2,000,000
Pension attorneys	1,000,000
Paid and light pension agencies	8,000
Miscellaneous expenses, pension office	1,000,000
Total	$160,100,505

This appropriation does not include the cost of maintaining the Pension Bureau in Washington and paying the expenses of examining the bureau. That is provided for by legislative appropriation bill.

—The number of pensioners under the act of June 27, 1890, whose pensions have been suspended since the beginning of the present administration is 5,238. The whole number of pensioners dropped on the roll is 256,603, of this number 76,000 were for soldiers, sailors and marines of all wars, leaving 180,603 to be accumulated for annual appropriation. Of the number dropped, and if the same ratio is maintained in the future as has been shown, about 30,000 will have been suspended.

—Mrs. Mary Lockwood, who died early in her bed at Burlington, Iowa, Monday night, five months after her husband, the veteran Samuel Lockwood, had boarded Charles Dunning, a young man about 18-year-old and his 16-year-old sister, and had taken them into her home and adopted them by the Probate Court, the murdered woman was found by her son in the close of a neighbor's, and the charges that some strong men had broken through the window from the outside. The suspects were afterward released.

—George Simmons, a Pittsburg cyclist, killed his wife and left of his children with a hammer. Their lives were spared.

—The sensational trial of Lizzie Borden, city of Denver since the Chicago riots of 1873 crowned Wednesday night, being the Fighting of Daniel Arnis, an Italian, for the murder of Mrs. Lizzie Borden, a member of the G. A. R. Friends of the murdered woman and comrades were the leaders in the Fighting. They declare that the morality of the murderer had nothing to do with the lynching. They said simply as the Justice, which they feared could not be obtained in the ordinary way, and so they took the matter into their own hands.

—A Springfield, Ill., contract was filed in the office of the Secretary of State for the establishment of a city library maintained by the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works of Richmond, Va., Cleveland, Ohio, Chicago, Ill., Milwaukee, Wis., Schenectady, Ohio, and Dunkirk, N. Y. The company calls for the building of two wheel freight engines, to cost $202,200.

—John Gunnison, employed at the Cambridge Traction Company's power plant at Bell, Pa., by attempting to jump from a moving electric car at Jenkintown, was dragged under the wheels and run over.

—Mrs. Henry Mayhew, dat the Grand and the Home of her son, committed suicide by Chauncey Depew, N. Y. Both are dead. Mrs. Mayhew left a note saying she believed the body was dying to die and she could not live without it. Depew is three-year-old daughter.

—A war tension is in progress in Indianapolis. Rounding up Wardle's two tickets are offered at 18 a reduction of $4.50. The Indianapolis Gas Company is said to have purchased a Chicago Central and Pacific road for $15,000,000 and the stockholders have agreed to make a Wabash Pacific of one fare for the round trip, plus $1.

—The result of the fight in Congress against the Missouri Pacific by Wabash wholesalers, said has been begun by the interstate commission.

—The failure of a St. Nicholas, a citizen member of the New York Stock Exchange was announced Wednesday afternoon. The firm of Hoffman & Hoffman, Jacob H. Hoffman, Jr., and Edward H. Hoffman and Marcus Mayer. The firm is said to have made a prominent firm in such exchange circles.

—Two damaged the marriage warehouse of A. T. Stewart, Mrs. Cleveland, in the amount of $20,000.

—Twenty-one cases, cattle and three teachers sent to the Stanford, Pa., Tribune in the Mr. Wolf's Tale sent to a Pullman car to Chicago.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—In anticipation of a raid by the Sharp gang of desperadoes, the citizens of Denver, Nev., are going about heavily armed.

—Louis Washington, an aged domestic, committed suicide at Columbus, Ohio, by taking strychnine.

—Mrs. Vanderbilt, a farmer's wife at Burlington, Mich., was shot up in her bed, pounded out and robbed of $100. They are being pursued.

—Horace Bumbrake was run over at Pittsburg, Kan., by a freight train. Both legs were cut off, causing death.

—Charles Little, who killed Attorney Johnson at Kansas City, Kan., has been sentenced to be hanged on the first degree by a jury.

—Joseph Gale, of Toledo, Ohio, was found hanging to a nail in his kitchen. His wife's death caused the suicide.

—Rev. George Hocking, of Tarrytown, Ohio, who was suffering from poor health, ended his misery by cutting his throat.

—Jack Stevens, aged 60, was run over by the Niagara Falls express at Meriton.

—Frank Hall and Henry Hendricks were indicted at Shoshoboth, S. D., for the murder of Mat Wynn last fall.

CHICAGO'S CHARITIES

BRIEF REFERENCE TO THOSE MOST NOTED.

How the World's Fair City Takes Care of Its Poor, Its Vicious, Its Incompetent, and Its Sick—The Very Acme of System in Charity.

Interesting Institutions.

Chicago correspondence:

The charities form a great city form a theme well worthy of study, and there are many who find in it alone a source of even deeper interest than in surveying grand structures, stately parks and the manifold ordinary wonders of a metropolis. For such Chicago presents a truly representative list of charitable and reformatory institutions, and while these are simply prototypes of agencies found in smaller towns, their opportunities, benefits and work are on an open and magnified sense that the most superficial observer and utility may be observed, and deductions eliminated to guide and instruct. The problem of poverty and the amelioration of his misery and misfortune is well satisfactorily to every phase of thinking, but the way in which the World's Fair city takes care of its poor, its vicious, its incompetent and its sick certainly approaches very nearly to a state of perfection.

PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL.

There are so many varied institutions, for charity in Chicago that even a list of them would tire the reader. The agencies are widely diffused; they do every portion of the city, and there is shelter for the blind, the deaf, the dumb, the aged, the sick, the poor, the vicious and the incompetent. Every class is provided for, and there are no doors turn divided up, and in many instances the charities are conducted and supported by representatives of the nationalities to which they belong. But the most marking not the most interesting and easy of access of these asylums, a few may be described, which, inspected by the stranger, will afford a very fair idea of the general run of local charities. The main home for the indigent is of course the county poorhouse, and for the sick the county hospital. The latter is easy of access, being located at the corner of Harrison and Wood streets, and is noted for its prompt good work. The former, however, is some ten miles from the city, on the Northwestern, and is a place to visit. The Illinois Central has a branch line running out to the place, and while scarcely a mile of Chicago, and, while scarcely a mile of Chicago, it is in the open air, and fairly successful in its efforts to systematize the care and comfort of its inmates. The harbors mainly hopeless and chronic cases, and the place is noted for its bright side are none common among institutions of its class. The grounds are where love and devotion take the place of a necessarily rigorous rule in dealing with aggregate misery and misfortune.

Home for the Friendless.

The Home for the Friendless, at 1920 Wabash avenue, may be reached by any of the South Division cable cars, and is one of the most notable of Chicago's charitable asylums. It occupies handsome brick buildings, four stories and one story, with a basement, well ventilated, supplied with shaded and well-kept grounds, and well-kept. The interior is elaborate in its a point, and is not in the least suggestive of the charity of the Sherman law.

The institution is usually well filled. It has been the means of reclaiming many, and there is no institution in Chicago more interesting and more deserving of kind words and active sympathy.

Chestnuts Hospitals.

The charitable hospitals of the city are very numerous. Among those are the Mercy Hospital, founded in 1848, controlled by the Sisters of Mercy, and supported entirely by charitable contributions; the Michael Reese Hospital, a Hebrew charity which takes patients without a test of religious faith; St. Luke's Hospital, supported by collections taken up on St. Luke's day in all the Episcopal churches of Chicago; and scores of minor hospitals, all of which are supported in a humanitable work. The visitor desiring to thoroughly inspect a model hospital, visit the Eliot School, Marine Hospital, the office of which is in the Government Building. The institution is situated at Lake View, on the lake shore, six miles north of the City Hall, and accessible by the North Division cable cars. The grounds comprise ten acres, and the building is a model of neatness and beauty. It is served, and deductions eliminated to guide and instruct. The problem of poverty and the amelioration of his misery and misfortune is well satisfactorily to every phase of thinking, but the way in which the World's Fair city takes care of its poor, its vicious, is the Old People's Home, and this place is worth one to visited the same day. The last-named represents an investment of some $50,000, and at present houses eighty old ladies. It is intended to erect a duplicate structure for the accommodation of old men.

In the West Division the most noted charity is the Foundlings' Home, just off Madison on Wood street. It comprises two large connected brick buildings one three, the other five stories high. Its capacity is for about one hundred children, but as little surplus left at its hospitable portals is ever turned adrift. Relying almost solely on donations from the benevolent, its success has demonstrated the ability of one good man—the lamented Dr. George Shipman, the man who perform out a great enterprise when based on unfaltering faith, as also the success of heart of a community at large. The institution cannot help but be absorbed in watching the workings of a system that ensures that mothers infants from one month to several years of age, and not a few World's Fair visitors may assist and take home as a "souvenir" the little ones who are only waiting to delighted children or bereaved homes with the sunshine of their presence.

The Home of the Friendless, at the corner of Sarkel and Hill streets, a sensible and practicable asylum and refuge for women, girls, and female children, known to the law as "dependent," is a beneficent work of which is young. The institution is in charge of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, who have taken up the work and have taken up by the building, and partly rented, into five departments, isolated from each other—the pension department for women, the juvenile reformatory for young girls, the industrial school, the Magdalen asylum, and "Our Sisters' Community." There are accommodations for 400 inmates, and the Institution is constantly filled. Its work is the means of reclaiming many, and there is no institution in Chicago more interesting and more deserving of kind words and active sympathy.

Blockade of Bangkok.

There is trouble in the land of the white elephant. According to latest outside advices France has technically declared war against Siam, and, if England does not interfere, the King of the little Asiatic country will in all probability be overwhelmed by the annexation of his kingdom to French dominion.

KING OF SIAM.

The entire Siamese boundary is again the cause of the quarrel. Hitherto a line of mountains has been between the Mekong River and French Annam has been regarded as the western limit of French possession in Asia, but the French it appears have not been satisfied with this, and despite claims set up by the old kingdom of Cambodia, to which their possessions in the eastern peninsula formerly belonged, they have recently adopted of course being to make the Mekong itself their boundary, instead of the mountain range which formerly separated the two from the valley of the valley. If the Mekong was a straight line, the proposition would be fair enough, but it is not, and the French could not adopt it without taking possession also of French encroachments might be made on the left bank of the western west of the Mekong, but, considering the way France has acted in the matter proper the Mekong makes a detour of 150 miles, and, if France is right, the Siamese province lying Dutton, Ind., and Mr. Dutton, Ind., and Mr. King looks on the establishment of this river as a boundary as the practical surrender of that province to the French.

The French surveyed the territory between the Mekong and the annamite cordon, which runs parallel with the river. To frustrate this the King of Siam, supported by the Mekong and forbade the French to enter his kingdom. The French commander ignored the order and the Siamese killed a French officer and militia in the upper Mekong river die in the Siamese territory. The Mandon declares that he will grant but half of the indemnity demanded by the French minister retires after declaring the blockade of Bangkok. Advices at the time this is written say that the French gunboats have not anchored one mile from the French consulate, and are ready for the fray. Their intention is, in case the Siamese commence firing, to shell down and cow the French gunboats, and then, if France is not satisfied, attack the crews with fixed bayonets. Should France be in a fix, England, Russia and China may also become involved.

The blockade of Siam would mean an embargo on the commerce of the country and the confiscation of the territory demanded by France would extend a French British frontier in India Siam would be a French province, and the Siamese would be shut out of the Mekong forever. The French would extend their Indian empire, and the British would be isolated at its per month.

The Siamese are confidently by the act of France, and they are said to be encouraged in the treasure case, which collateral, and which, if it be true, would be a very good thing for the Siamese. Ever since the Siamese province lying Dutton, Ind., and Mr. Dutton, Ind., and Mr. King looks on the establishment of this

THE SUBJECT OF PENSIONS.

Commissioner Lochren Outlines the Administration's Policy.

Pension Commissioner Lochren has outlined the pension policy of the administration in a letter addressed to a prominent politician of Albany. The letter is in part:

I can best answer your question by reading to you the instructions I have given to the pension examiners in a letter I have just written to the editor of the Pension Bureau. I have taken the ground that the pension laws cannot prior to the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, provided for the pensioning of all persons who were disabled by reason of their own vicious habits, and that the fact that a man is a drunkard or addicted to the use of opium or morphine is not a sufficient reason for his being entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $6 per month, and that it is not incumbent on the examiners to carry a pension application through to a rejection when it appears on the face of the papers that the claimant is not Hoke Smith and the Pensioners.

Justice Long, of the Michigan supreme court, lost his arm in battle; his body is scared with bullet wounds and two running sores have to be continually bandaged, blood and pus frequently running down into his boot. His pension has been suspended, and he has been cited to appear before an examining board to prove that he has not been swindling the government.

Allen B. Morse, ex-justice of the supreme court, late democratic candidate for governor of Michigan and now U. S. Consul at Glasgow, Scotland, draws a pension and draws his salary as consul and while justice of the supreme court drew his pension and salary just as Justice Long. Why is his pension not stopped? We believe that Mr. Morse is entitled to all he receives in the way of pension, but the question is, why is Judge Long cut off from his pension and Allen B. Morse continued on the pension list.

Walter Q. Gresham draws a pension and at the same time draws a salary as a member of Cleveland's cabinet. Why is not his pension suspended?

Under the ruling of Mr. Hoke Smith, of Georgia, the burden of proof is placed upon the soldier. In other words, he is presumed to be a swindler, and compelled to prove himself innocent.

Veterans this is not a union soldier administration.

The captain of the schooner Cascade, at Cheboygan last week, stated that he was going to Cleveland to bring up a cargo of kerosene oil. He was boasting to Capt. Finucan, of the City of Charlevoix, that he could now hire all the sailors he wanted at $25 per month. This is a specimen of the good times our democratic friends promised.

It sounds oddly to read in a Washington dispatch that no ex-confederates will be appointed upon pension examining boards "except men of the broadest views." But why should ex-confederates, even of such breadth of like view as to commend them to Hoke Smith, be appointed to adjudicate the claims of of the union veterans?

An exchange say: "There is a fellow at Green Bay who every time he gets on a spree insists on paying a year's subscription to his town paper. He has already paid for his paper to 1927. An effort will be made at the next press convention to ascertain what brand of whiskey that fellow is drinking, in order that it may be more generally placed on the market."

American hay is now being shipped to Europe at freight charges of $2.62 per ton by the cargo load. The trade has only begun as yet. Cargoes will be sent at intervals through the summer on sailing vessels. One German vessel has already left New York carrying 1,500 tons of hay. It is pressed into tight bales by hydraulic force. Precaution must be taken to pack the cargo in clean, water tight holds, to prevent its spoiling. Perhaps here is a new opening for American agricultural products.

Attorney-Gen. Ellis has again been called upon to explain the workings of the new tax law, and says the certificate furnished by the auditor general or county treasurer need not be recorded by the register with the deed, but should be filed by him as an evidence of compliance with the law. The attorney-general then says: "The certificate made by you on the deed itself of the fact tha. the other certificate has been furnished should be recorded as part of the deed, and you would be entitled to additional fees for recording such certificate. Your fees would be so much per folio, as provided by section 9022 of Howell's statutes. You would also be entitled to a fee for filing the auditor-general's certificate in your office. The fee is provided by the next to the last subdivision of the section referred to."

The Hollaire saloon trouble is at last ended and county Treasurer Abbott has issued the license, Editor Abbott, however, will still remain on the war-path.

The Supervisors of Grand Traverse county have called a special election on Saturday, Aug. 26th, to vote upon the adoption of the new county road system. The reason urged for the special election was that if they waited until the Spring election it would put off the benefits hoped to be derived from the law about two years.

Elk Rapids Progress: A good many of our people will remember Milton Spencer, who grew up to manhood in Elk Rapids and Traverse City. He went to Colorado several years ago and established himself in the mercantile business fat White Pine, where he has since resided and is now postmaster.

The Antrim county fair for the Columbian year, 1893, will be winner if present arrangements are perfected. Among the features of the fair will be an address by Gov. Rich, Wednesday September 27. Political address by speakers of all parties. This feature is now under the directions of the various county committees. An old-fashioned spelling school on the last day of the fair under the management and directions of Prof. Lott, county commissioner of schools.

The third annual Indian camp meeting, under the direction of the Presiding Elder, assisted by the pastors of Grand Traverse district of the M. E. church will be held at Kewadin commencing Aug. 15th, 1893 and, continuing over Sunday, Aug. 21st. Indians from Petoskey, Charlevoix, Northport, Omena, Suttons Bay and other points in the state are expected to be in camp. Plans are being perfected for making this one of the best meeting ever held in Northern Michigan.

Manistee Herald: Wixom's circus drew a good crowd both afternoon and evening at this place last Thursday. The only complaint that can be made against this show is the fact that many of the principal features are alike each season. However despite this fact the show this year contained many new attractions that took well, and unlike the great majority of tented shows does not interfere the presence of fakirs and thieves who are generally found plying their nefarious vocations at or near the grounds, and who rope in the poor, deluded suckers without pity or mercy. Wixom's show makes a pretence towards respectability and if for no other reason, it is deserving of patronage.

A large size war cloud is looming up in the east and France and England are glaring savagely at each other over the Siam episode. France has given the powers notice that she intends blockading the Mekong river which is virtually a declaration of war, because Siam refuses what she considers the unjust demands of the French government. England is jealous and fearful that her neighbor across the channel will acquire new and valuable territory and prestige in a commercial way, she threatens to interfere in behalf of the Siamese government in case France persists in carrying out her intentions. The leading newspapers of France uphold the action of the government and threaten England with vengeance in case she attempts to take a hand in the mess. England is full of bluff and bluster but it is not generally believed that she will go far enough to involve herself in a war with so powerful an adversary as France.

People affected with chronic diseases of any form or nature should consult Dr. McDonald, the famous Specialist at the Fountain City House. The doctor remains from Thursday July 27th until Thursday Aug. 10th, Consultation free. Call early and avoid the rush, as his office parlors are crowded with patients wherever he goes.

Dr. McDonald's skill in the treatment of chronic diseases is simply marvelous. He takes patients who have been given up to die and restores them to health and happiness. Dr. McDonald is not only thoughtly educated in all the schools of medicines, but he is singularly gifted by nature, being able to read at a glance full conditions of the patients mind or body without asking any questions. He treats diseases like a open book, and has made a special study, both in this country and in Europe, of those obscure, delicate and nervous diseases of both sexes. Come and get relief and be benefitted at once. Consultation free. Office at Fountain City House Charlevoix.

—Owing to the Wixom circus, the Gale entertainment has been changed from Wednesday to Friday evening.

—Dr. Valle, of St. Louis, joined his family at the Fountain City House last week, for the balance of the month.

—The Petoskey Herald is the name of the new paper at Petoskey. It will be Democratic and Charlie is just as mad as he can be.

—Miss Ella Barnum, of Adrian, is here for a few weeks, and will take seminars in china painting. She is at the Parmelee cottage.

—Mr. Dahlmer, of Northport, has purchased the O'Neil property on the south side of Round Lake, and will remove his fishing interests here.

—The special pension examiner detailed to look up the veterans in Michigan is Major G. A. Critchfield, of Texas, the son of a rebel cavalry leader.

—A collection of Miss Hinn's Chinese paintings and floral pieces, have arrived and will be placed on exhibition in Mason & Clayden's window to-day.

—The Episcopal church people have purchased the vacant lot on the corner of State and Clinton streets, and will before long erect a church edifice thereon.

—R. P. Wilkinson, is the successor of the Northern Michigan Seed Co., and the stock and headquarters have been removed to Atwood. See ad. elsewhere.

—"The Little Star" which gleamed in the columns of the SENTINEL during the Garfield campaign, has appeared again, and shines fourth on our eighth page. Watch its twinkle.

—Sims Baker has retired from the firm of S. Baker & Son, and the firm will now be limited as J. S. Baker & Co. Of course John is the "head push" of the concern, and it is bound to do business.

—The Sunday trains taken off the C. & W. M. do not include the early Sunday morning train north, or the evening train south. Extra trains have been put on between Bay View and here Sundays. See notice elsewhere.

—Secure your seats early for the Gale entertainment Friday evening. It will not only be a rare treat to hear the readings of Miss Gale, but a good musical program is provided. Mrs. J. H. Moore, of Chicago, has kindly volunteered two songs.

—The old steamer North Star, which has been sinking in the water of Round Lake for several years, was last week sold by Albert E. Mason, to Capt. Wm. J. Hutow, of the steam barge Torrent. She is hauled out at Washburn's yard and will be rebuilt and taken to Toledo for a fishing craft.

—At the Charlevoix Summer Resort: J. W. Osborn and Judge Mills, of Kalamazoo, were up last week. Mr. Osborn has purchased the Dr. Brooks cottage, and Ed. Woodbury has bought the Page cottage on the upper terrace.

—Northern Michigan news on our inside page.

—Roswell Williams was called to Redding to-day by the serious illness of his mother.

—Stevens Bros. have purchased lot 3, block 3, of Mason's addition, and will erect a house for their father.

—The City of Charlevoix left with 115 passengers for the World's Fair. Among those from Charlevoix were Mrs. Capt. L. Gourd, Miss Jennie Stover, Mrs. Hobb, C. H. Carter, Henry Newman, C. G. Lewis, of East Jordan, J. W. Edwards and E. H. Whitworth, of Chicago resort. Agent Emrey says the $10 rate catches them all.

—William Nicholls, of Trempeleau, Wis., and Miss Honor Nicholls, of England, are at the home of M. and Mrs. John Nicholls. Mr. Richard Nicholls, who accompanied the party from England, is in Canada visiting friends, and will arrive here in with his sister have been visiting and have many friends in Charlevoix who will welcome them.

—Herman Blatike and F. Pyesle are neighbors up at Traverse Bay. Their fields join, and wanted a line fence between them and built his half. Then Blatike that if he didn't build the other half he would kill him. Pyesle came out a warrant for him and the case came off Monday, Justice Miller, who made him do his share of the work to keep the peace.

—On Frid ay F. S. Abbott, the general agent of the Buckeye binder, had one of his machines in operation on the farm of Hamilton Nowlan, of Marion, and the editor of this paper was invited to accompany the party. Notwithstanding unfavorable conditions, in uneven ground and heavy grain, the machine did its work in a rapidity and certainty that seemed almost human. There is no better evidence of agricultural progress than the fact that self-binders are rapidly displacing their way to the farms of this region.

—Mr. Nelson, from near London, England, is a guest at the Belvedere. He is in America for the first time, and is here now to visit the World's Fair. In reply to a question as to his opinion of the relative condition of English and American laboring men, he replied: "There is no question but that the American laborer is better off than the English. If the latter is happy and contented with his lot in life, it is because of his ignorance of anything better. If I had a friend whose condition I should seek to better I would advise him to come to America, and, on the other hand, if I had an enemy, I would have him remain in England. This tells the story."

The Munroe Contracts.

The two Charlevoix contracts of John Munroe, Jr. are a mile and a half apart, but the work has been pushed with such energy that both are very near completion.

A week more will complete the Ferry seed warehouse. Although a description of this structure has been given in these columns there are few possibly, who are aware of the capacity and strength of it. In another week it will be ready for the painters.

Up at the transfer dock the steam pile-driver is closing up the gap between the railroad approach and the dock proper. This immense wharf is 1,050 feet long, and, with the approach, contains 1,250 piles. The railroad track will run the whole length of it, and the amount of lumber it will contain would make a long line of figures. The further shore end will contain an office, and a residence for the man who takes care of it.

Mr. Munroe has had two of the most modern steam pile drivers at work on these contracts, and 35 men are now on his pay roll. When the county built the bridge across the head of South Arm, John Munroe, Jr., was awarded the job. He had never driven a pile, and he did not possess a dollar with which to begin the work. He ran in debt for a machine, and made good money.

From that beginning he has grown to be the most extensive contractor in that line of work in this or the region of the Straits. He has built the largest docks in the "soo" towns of the north shore, and none of them than any other contractor, handled several dredging jobs. He owns four steam pile drivers and a dredge, and, like Cæsar, is hunting for more worlds to conquer.

Mr. Munroe, at no far distant period, will make Charlevoix his permanent home.

—Those are hard times. No use denying it. Everybody needs what is due them, including the SENTINEL. Call in and settle.

Mr. Nicholls and His Wardrobe.

Hon. John Nicholls and wife, and his brother and sister arrived from England last week. The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholls are hearty in their welcome, and rejoice that they return in good health, and that their visit abroad was enjoyed.

The honorable gentleman had no sooner unpacked his trunk than the editor of the Democrat sent in his card for an interview. Of course the occasion could not be allowed to pass without turning it to account in the cause of "tariff reform" of which the catamaran is a champion, and our distinguished fellow townsman a high priest. Mr. Nicholls is quoted by the Democrat as saying:

"The tariff question? Well, I've brought home some arguments." And Mr. Nicholls stretched out an arm to display the quality of a coat he had on. "This is Scotch tweed, and I paid $15 for it, made to order. Here it would cost at least $25. Here is a suit, bought ready made, for $9, which would cost $20 in any Michigan store. This Prince Albert suit would have cost me $30 if made by any tailor who lives under the McKinley bill. I only paid $20 for it. Here is an overcoat I bought in England, very much the same goods as this one my brother bought in Wisconsin. I paid less than $9, and he paid $18, and then thought he was getting a bargain, as he was."

Mr. Nicholls adds that "the men who made the clothes were well clothed, well housed and look well fed." If this be true, (which is disputed by authoritative statistics and consular reports), why is it that so many of her British Majesty's subjects come to America to improve their condition in life? Can any tariff reformer assert that the weaver and tailor of England are as well conditioned in all that makes life happy and prosperous as those upon this side of the water? Does the man who operates the loom there own the land upon which his home stands? Do the same opportunities exist for him in the scale of social and industrial progress that there does for the American workman? The American workman can not be made to believe that $2 suit which Mr. Nicholls wears does not represent wool raised upon a landlord's estate, poorly paid labor at the loom, and ill-requited toil upon the tailor's bench. Immigration statistics prove it, and there is not an English laboring man on this side of the water who will not verify it.

When the policy of free traders becomes the law of the land which God forbid, and the pet English suit comes into competition with the $20 American apparel, the hum of the American loom will be hushed, and the American weaver will no longer have a roof which shelters him.

Even from the fear of this condition of things, we are now enjoying a foretaste of Democratic "tariff reform," and not until Democracy and free trade is hopelessly buried beneath the feed of American ballots will American industries again resume the vigor and prosperity which they have always enjoyed under a protective system.

It is the right of any American citizen to wear $9 English made suits if he so chooses, but when the American wool grower, weaver and tailor are compelled by free trade to compete with English, or any other foreign labor, they will wear blue jeans, and bid farewell to the blessings which protection has given them.

It needs no profound knowledge of political economy to discern on the horizon the setting sun of industrial prosperity. It will rise again, but not until the Democratic hope of free trade is forever blasted, and the assurance is made doubly sure that the existing tariff laws shall remain the law of the land. Already this year's crop of wool is bringing free trade prices because the Democrats threatened to open up a free trade market for the goods it is going to be manufactured into. Wool buyers understand this, and have been governing themselves accordingly.

No man in Charlevoix is more respected than John Nicholls, but this is the wrong time of the moon for him to exemplify his free trade doctrine by wearing $9 English made apparel. There are too many idle spindles in this country, silenced by the pestilent influence of free trade ballots.

—The venerable Dr. W. E. Hampton father of Mr. W. E. Hampton of the Democrat died at his home in Petoskey Monday. We extend to our neighbor our sincerest sympathy.

—Mrs. Martha Johnson, wife of George Johnston, died at Torch Lake Monday, July 31st, of Typhoid fever, aged 55 years. She was the mother of Henry Johnston, of this place East Johnston, of Traverse City, Mrs Curtis Green and Bert Johnston, of Torch Lake. The remains were brought here for burial.

DIRECTORS FINED.

IN CONTEMPT OF JUDGE STEIN'S COURT.

Eastern Factories Closed; Many Men Thrown Out of Employment—Financial Matters Decidedly Improved, Industries Increased, and Further Authorized.

Minor Mention.

—The Valley Falls Fulling Works, Woonsocket, R. I., cotton drawn-goods manufacturers, have closed their factories, employing 700 hands, for an indefinite period. The American Bobbin Company's works Boston, employing 1,700 operatives, closed for 6 weeks on account of dull business. The Methuen cotton mills and the Salisbury Manufacturing Company, Salem, will close down for a month, throwing 275 people out of employment. The operatives of the American Tube and Iron Company, Middletown, Ct., have posted circulars in the mills announcing that a portion of the works will be put on extra work, and that the entire mill equals that the salaries of officers, clerks, foremen and superintendents with a few exceptions, will be reduced 10 per cent. The reduction will take effect at once. The Lyman Manufacturing Company, Elyria, Ohio, owning the largest brass works in the country and employing 800 hands, has assigned. Liabilities $100,000, assets $150,000. W. Frew & Co., San Francisco, dry goods, have failed. Liabilities $181,000, assets $102,000. The Fitzwilliam Woolen Mill, Keene, N. H., has failed. Harvey A. Brown, St. Louis, retail, failure to learn and return goods to the shipment; the assets are estimated at $50,000.

—For discharge of court in ignoring the Chicago Inspectors' fees and mileage, directors and officials of the World's Columbian Exposition from closing the gates of the Fair on Sunday, John Sherman entered a motion in the Circuit Court that they be fined for contempt. The companies will not let the officers go to work again and the lawyers will not have them. The Sheriff of Ventura County is awaiting in a number of deputies in view of expected trouble.

—The Sioux City Savings Bank, St. Paul, closed its doors. Liabilities about $100,000, and it has a capital stock of $100,000.

—H. N. Partridge, of Portland, Me., wholesale druggist at Helena, has made an assignment. Liabilities are placed at $100,000.

—Bradstreet's and Dun's Mercantile Agency have suspended. Liabilities are placed at $400,000; liabilities, $100,000.

—A distillery in Kansas where hard liquor was produced the various religious denominations are combining to the business of destroying.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—Nanette Hoyt, a 17-year-old Shaw City girl, is in jail charged with homicide.

—Karl Fuetterer, a convict of Prague, has confessed to a murder for which an innocent man is serving a twelve-year sentence in Oregon.

—By the explosion of a point stove polish which was boiling in a kitchen at Ione, two persons were killed and three others injured.

—F. F. Bowman, an ex-convict, and "Brooklyn Jim" has been arrested at Denver as leaders of the mob that lynched Annie, the murderess.

—By a wreck on the Pennsylvania at Leechburg, Pa., 5 and nearly 25 cars loaded with iron, it was fetching on Saturday before buyers opened their mouths to offer, entire and all of the offers, September wheat sold down to 85½ cents per bushel and cash wheat was then worth only 82½ cents. There are the lowest prices for contract grade of wheat ever sold on the Chicago Board of Trade. Of course, the above for export, for the lower grades of the most facilities for the disposal of the surplus, drafts the orders had to be paid, and the wheat has to be sold and its load of life blood, like an overgorged horse, will in time eat up all its owner's substance.

—The Philadelphia merchants' officers are working their plants day and night in an effort to fill their contracts for cane oil, which are the most extensive ever made in the trade has ever known. Forty-five counts of the cane pick charbered to sell over thirty-two million gallons of oil. All this means plenty of work for hands, 3,000 in Lowell, and 15,000 in Lowell.

—In a fight between deputy marshals and a band of outlaws, near Wheat Valley, Ky., one of the former, named Ralph Holbrook of Udell, Ky., was killed and another, named Sam Bridges, of Sloan Ark., was fatally wounded.

—In a fight at Hickory Pa. Charles Bailey, a boy, knocked the skull of Joseph Hyde with a knife or hard club.

THE FIRE RECORD.

—At Chelsea, the handsome suburban residence of Jas. H. Eddy was totally destroyed by fire. Loss on building, $50,000; on $200,000, insurance not known. The fire was caused by a defective flue.

—Two persons dead and several others seriously injured is the result of a fire at Pittsburg, Pa. The fire was caused by an explosion of oil tanks which a gasoline stove was using on a stove. The fire spread rapidly to the adjoining stores and dwellings. Loss, $100,000.

—In a spirit of retaliation, Germany has decided to put an additional 50 per cent tax on Russian products imported into Germany.

—In representations made by Lord Dufferin, British minister, the question of a neutral zone between French possessions in Siam, British Burmah, and the Shan states has long settled satisfactorily. France has agreed to raise the blockade of the Siamese coast immediately.

MISCELLANEOUS

—When the guards and patrons closed and locked the gates of Jackson Park Sunday night one-half of the World's Fair attractions were closed, the closing of the machinery rendering the Electricity and Mines buildings dark. Other City will open the Sunday following. The Illinois Central will run special trains to accommodate those who may desire to visit the Fair on Sunday, and the grounds, Exposition Hall, and the Midway Plaisance will be open as usual. Many people who have missed the opportunity of seeing the Fair may be sure that it is over, but among the officers and at the gates it is known that the gates will open. With the first half of the Exposition they were crowded, for everybody was anxious to see the Exposition in all that any one could expect, and more than the city could realize, for the attendance has been adequate to make it a financial success. Many have not come to the Fair as it was expected they would come, and the city has been a wonderful message to the attendance during the remaining period the management of the big show will be troubled to pay its debts. This is about all that hope to do now, but they confidently expect to do that much. President Higinbotham says that there is not much hope of returning since subscriptions for dollar stock more than 10 return the money for which the Exposition is legally liable.

—What is the Board or Trade Monday morning? Ask the lot of lamentations practically speaking. Brokers idly offered to sell wheat, 5 cents lower than Saturday's closing quotations, and there was not a bid. Cash wheat was offered at 1st We direct your attention to a lot of SAMPLE HATS which can be sold at much less than wholesale prices. You may expect bargains and you will get them if you give us a call. This lot of samples represents the stock of a large wholesale house which with the large stock I have had in before we should be able to suit any one in Charlevoix County.

2d. Our Pantstock is very large and attractive ranging price from 50c up. We have too many, and in consequence have started to cut prices and run them off. It is early in the season, but in order to reduce our immense stock of Cotton Pants we commence now. Be sure and give us a look in"

Northern Michigan News.

A large degree of pride is enjoyed at Traverse City over the fact that little Manager Holden, who lives their can tell several days in advance when it is going to rain.

Boyne City celebrates the opening for business of the Boyne City and South Eastern Rail Road, Wednesday August 23, 1893, and Hon. W. A. Norton, of St. Johns, will deliver the oration.

Petoskey Record: Mr. W. F. Lawton has been under the weather for a week past, having had painting spells every day due to weak heart action. And by the way Mr. Lawton is one of the veterans whose pension has been suspended by Mr. Smith of Georgia.

East Jordan Enterprise: The county Agricultural Society at their meeting Monday decided not to hold a Fair this fall under their supervision but to hold one in 1894. It is not in order for our people to get themselves together and see what they can do at holding a fair or let the matter drop.

Boyne Citizen: East Jordan people pineth not over their failure to get the Ward road. They live in hopes that by another year they will have a rail road and it will be a continuation of the B. C. & S. E. from Boyne City by way of Advance, then following the valley to Dwight's and following up the South Arm shore to East Jordan.

Isaac Wright, of St. James, writes the Petoskey Record concerning Hon. Father Gallagher as follows: Bigotry does not cherish much here. Take my case for instance. I am a Republican and a protestant. When Governor Winans was elected in 18-90 I supposed I would lose my office of deputy oil inspector, but Father Gallagher and many other Democrats signed a petition for my reappointment by John O'Brien state oil inspector and I was reappointed. Last Spring I was elected supervisor of Chandler township without opposition. I have been acquainted with Father Gallagher for many years, had business relations with him, and found him a gentleman both at home and abroad, which is more than can be said of many of his critics.

One of the most horrible murders that has ever been committed in Michigan occurred last week near Manton Alexander Abley, a farmer about sixty years old, without any seeming provocation suddenly picked up his little year old son, and swinging him by the heels dashed out his brains against a stump. Abley's brother just came in from Manton in an intoxicated condition, and he and his wife charged him with the murder, but when arrested they both broke down and told the true story.

More Trains to Petoskey & Bay View.

Commencing Aug. 5th, a train will leave Bay View on Saturday at 6.20 p. m. for Charlevoix and Belvedere, returning leaving Belvedere at 7.15 p. m.

On Sunday a train will leave Bay View at 8.40 a. m. for Belvedere, and leave Belvedere returning, at 9.30 a. m. Another train will leave Bay View at 6.30 p. m. and leave Belvedere returning, at 7.15 p. m.

This increased service will enable residence of Belvedere and Charlevoix to leave home at a convenient hour, spend Sunday at Petoskey or Bay View and return home in the evening. It is hoped that the service will be sufficiently well patronized to warrant its continuance during the balance of the season. Round-trip rate is 50 cents. GEO. DEHAVES.

Low Rates to Chicago via the "St. Joe" Route.

On Aug. 20th and 15th the C. & W. M. and D. L. & N. lines will again sell tickets to Chicago and return at one fare rate via St. Joseph and steamer, and tickets will be sold for rains leaving Charlevoix at 6.45 and arriving at Chicago at 8.30 p. m. and 2.00 a. m. Berths on night boat cost a 50c. to $1.50. Rates from Charlevoix will up $8.85 good until Aug. 17 & 24.

A BRITON'S OPINIONS.

He Has the Merriest Time Where He Talks About the Wooly West.

"It is only in the far West, probably," writes an English correspondent at Chicago, "that the old race of spitters kept up the best practice the cities, at any rate, are seldom met men who tilt back in their chairs, put their knees on the dinner table and take the fire-irons at forty paces. Civilization is progressing so very fast not only about spittoons, but demand that stencil under the name of 'cuspidor.' Still, the most prominent bottle in the woman's building is 'its not spit on the floor.'

A man stood beside me as I read this He wore a sloucb hat, to which Buffalo Bill's would be just a fashionable bonnet in size; trickles of rich tobac-o juice wattled his mouth like a barber's his boots were models for a coffin-maker. Noticing, I dare say, a twinkle in the corner of my eye, he said slowly, and with that grim, soulless humor is fitting a slabsided lean from Indiana way: 'Say, now, do you think that we must take a shot at those pictures?' There is certainly a suspicion of local option suggested in that sentence. Better to have gone on the principle of some other notions which, without waste of printer's ink (and composition), meet your eye everywhere: 'Nonintoxicating.' Good."

Women's Progressive.

Even the washerwomen of Japan are inspired by the example of their American and European sisters. Several of these humble laborers in Yokohama have been studying the English language, and for the benefit of English tourists they issue the following neat circular: "Ladies and gentlemen: We the washer of every kind of clothes, blankets, and so on, newly established the company and engaged the laundress. Contrary to our opposite company, we will most cleanly and carefully wash our customers with good-like cheap prices. With your wages we will work the business."

POLAR BEARS KEEP COOL.

Tropical Animals in Captivity Suffer Shoeing, the Ringed Tree.

"It will surprise most people," said Superintendent G. Brown, of the Philadelphia zoological garden, "to learn that the polar bear shows the hot weather of the dog days in this locality better than the African lion. The polar bear has will put on his feed; the polar bear will not. The tropical animals in the house, confined the superintendent, "are the most sensibly affected by the excessive heat of midsummer, strange as it may appear. I suppose the reason it is that the heat here is more moist than that of the tropics, and, as it were, of a different character. No unusual mortality occurs among our animals during a heated term in nearly every the tropical animals, especially the Africans. In hot weather I have watched the polar bear go into his tank, and then, instead of lying in the shade, extended himself in the direct rays of the sun, where the water on his skin would evaporate. He found out for himself, I suppose, that evaporation causes a lower temperature. Again, it somewhat astonishing, as first that our polar bear should suffer sometimes as he does from the severe cold of the winter. I have seen him shivering on one of these bitterly cold days, when the sky was overhead and the air full of moisture. The moisture was evidently what affected him. In the arctic regions it is so cold that the moisture is frozen out of the air. Birds do not like to heat. It makes them perch with drooped wings. Heat affects not only the animals in the garden, but the flowers of the garden itself. A difference of two degrees in the temperature may if it is ninety-five instead of eighty-five, mean a loss of several hundred dollars in our gate receipts for the day."

OCEANS IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Several varieties of precious stones are found in New Hampshire, but the most attracting the most attention are those found in Grafton and Coos. Ackworth, says the Jeweler's Circular, has become famous on account of the many large and valuable specimens that have been sold to gem fanciers in all parts of the world. Tiers is one eight inches in diameter in the royal cabinet in Vienna, represented as coming from Acworth, and its cost was enormous. The stones exported to have been sold in New York for $15,000.

Modest Mr. Crump.

Charles H. Crump, the shipbuilder, unlike some men who have an ax to grind, is not given to hold forth on heavy lung. Still it complained with the conditions of the contract," but he was with the faintest suggestion of a lowering look, "if the vessel turns out to be a member it will simply be because we have done our best."

SPOILED A CAT CONCERT.

Electricity Employed With Signal Fuses on a Fence.

A Brooklyn electrician has been annoyed for several years by the concerts in his back yard. He lives in Bushwick street, and every night the cats ranged themselves on the back fence and mewed in chorus. The leading tenor in the company was a monster with a falsetto voice of great range and power, and was particularly strong in roulade and cadenza, and some of his lyrics were of a character models in expression.

But the concerts became monotonous after awhile, and the electrician determined to stop them. He placed a thin steel plate on the top of the fence and connected it with a motor Pa. Gas Machine. He persuaded the plate to remain on the fence for three nights until the long tom concerts had become accustomed to sitting on it. The plate was a great improvement as a seat over the ragged edge of the fence. But one moonlight night Jack took the Matinee tenor perched on the cherry-colored mezzo, and the bewildered tenor commenced to wave singing a Chinese arrangement of "Marta, Where Art Thou?"

The tenor had reached a sustained passage unchanged with love and had piles on his blind legs to give free expression to it when the current was turned on. The sustained passage was cut in two as it with a cleaver. It ended in a most discordant squawk as the tenor fell off the fence upon his back, only to bound into the air like a ball and disappear over the fence and down the street like a black comet.

A Famous Book's Mission.

It is modestly acknowledged by the publishers of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup which she earned from the publication and her best friends, that the Help of Redtiffs" was used to furnish the Southern Cross, the vessel wherein her comic, Hinks Coleridge Pattison, made his voyages among the South Sea Islands.

Dear Sirs: Office Written 1-2 Mrs. Alin E. Hurd; at Lenox, S. 14., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles it has cured me and thank God I am now a well and hearty woman. Trial bottles free at F. C. Hines & Co.'s Regular size, 50 cents and $1.00.

Good Looks.

Good looks are more than skin deep, depending upon a healthy condition of all the vital organs. If the Liver be inactive, you have a bilious look, if your stomach be disordered, you have a Dyspeptic look and if your Kidneys be affected you have a Pinched look. Screens, good teeth and good health are good looks. Electric Bitters are the great alterative and Tonic acts directly on these vital organs. Comes Complexion, Health and Good looks. Only 50 cents at F. C. Hines & Co.'s Drugstore. Sole per bottle.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Neither age nor sex is strongly to a prostrate condition by the ravages of Consumption, Bronchitis, Throat Diseases, or any Lung Affection, if Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is used. Many have been cured by this wonderful medicine who have given up all other remedies and given themselves over to the dreadful disease, and yet have been cured by this wonderful medicine. Mrs. Ida B. Hoxsie, of Mt. Morris, writes: "My daughter was given up by her physicians as a victim of Consumption. Her cough was incessant and her strength was wasted to a mere shadow. I was persuaded to give her your New Discovery and she took in all six bottles and is now in the full enjoyment of health. Her cough has left her, her strength has returned and she is now a healthy girl." Trial bottles free at F. C. Hines & Co.'s Drugstore. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

WHY ARE WHEELER & WILSON'S No. 9 SEWING MACHINES POPULAR? BECAUSE LADIES BUY THEM LIKE THEM AND TELL THEIR FRIENDS.

Many ladies have used our machines twenty to thirty years in their family work, and are still using the original machines we furnished them a generation ago. Many of our machines have run more than twenty years without repairs, other than needles. With proper care they never wear out, and are the lightest running and most durable of all sewing machines. We have built sewing machines for more than forty years and have constantly improved them. We believe the No. 9 to be our highest achievement, and we are recognized everywhere as the most accurately fitted and finely finished sewing machines in the world. Our sewing, the "No. 9," is the result of our long experience. In competition with the leading machines of the world, it received the Grand Prize at the Paris Exposition of 1889. Ask for the best, other machines, receiving only complimentary medals and good, silver and bronze. The Grand Prize was what all sought for, and our machine was awarded it.

In Sheep's Clothing.

CHAPTER XXVIII.—Continued.

It was not a time for formality. The moment to bind Elliot, was caught in his grasp and bound, and then he folded Leo to his breast.

"Oh, Ralph," said Leo, "we have passed a night of horror. But we care not now for that. How has gone the battle?"

"God has prospered the right," replied the captain.

"And you have won?" asked both eagerly.

"My gallant men have won, and I'm sitting a fool with the dirty rags the flag of our proclaimed stolen our prize, the pirates' ship."

The girls gave thanks to God, and then asked for their little ones.

"My Dayton is safe, half Hedges, galloping Hedges, he wounded, not seriously I hope, for I want the world to know him to be a hero, and then they are one under heaven, we one our splendid revenge."

While the captain was speaking, the corresponding with Lieutenant Dayton of Dahlia, Valentine Dayton and the four prisoners, the boat bearing Lieutenant Hedges.

They laid him on a lounge, and when torn and rumpled much trodden arm and took his hands, he said, with a sweet smile in his heavenly eyes:

"It is only the loss of blood, my angels. Bless your noble hearts, I shall soon be ready for sea again. But what matters it, we have won, we have beaten Captain Kidd, the pirate, and our country will be proud of the day of such success. Hurrah! Hurrah!"

The sailors joined in the high hand, shewing that the lift of a broken sword still hung to it, and he would have gone on with his cheering and not the bugeyed sailor, who had spoken positively forbidden it.

"I tell you, Val—I mean Mr. Dayton," said the lieutenant, when Lydia had taken the hands from his wise, and he gave his nephew its hand, "you did well, very well, for a boy, but I'm a big boy, and I'm a man, and I know how well. But was, couldn't have been even with Captain Kidd, if I hadn't been for Lydia. I'm sure I was King Lear, and my daughters were not."

"But you are a king, uncle, and if, at the right time the offer is made, who knows," laughed Valentine.

Both ships were lightly shattered, and Captain Dinham, with the eyes of a true sailor, saw the necessity of getting them to the quiet waters while the wind and tide were favorable.

He gave the order to clear the decks, the guns were spiked, the prisoners in chains, and dropped over board, and the ships were moved out of the sea with the tide of ebb.

In ten minutes more, Valentine Dayton, to whom Lydia Hedges explained the command of the sea fleet, would have collapsed under the shock of a sudden dead doze on the hatchcover, but not the remnant of a hero arrived to take him from the shoe.

Through his purpose, Ralph Dinham saw Hunter Hedges and his company prisoners, Hunter Hedges, the Gardener's island, and he took in the situation.

Hunter Hedges had witnessed the fight between Hedges and Kidd, he felt was that Leo was killed at the first fire, and he, felt, to the end of his life, would be saw Fox making for the shore and he, felt, that the pirates.

He and his friends were soon after taken on board the two ships.

Dr. Hedges was crushed. After enquiring about his daughter, which did not affect—as that was strong and genuine—he was taken to the cabin of the captain Dinham as he came in and went out.

At Dinham's request, Hunter, was, retaining his hand, he said, in tender accents:

"Captain Ralph Dinham, sir—"

"Yes, Hunter, I know you well," said Ralph.

"I know you, sir, Captain, but, sir, I do not deserve such a friend. I am ungrateful, I am a coward, I am, I know, should never speak to me again. I am ashamed to—"

"Not at all, Doctor. This fellow Kidd deceived us all."

"Will he get away?"

He said, I have sent a messenger to Mr. Gardner, and he will soon be captured. Sir, sir, Doctor, we are engaged, like Sam Harbor again, and from the towards people we must have a honeymoon."

The Captain turned away to direct his ship.

CHAPTER XXIX.

LOVE AND WAR.

Captain Dinham's first duty, after he got clear of the delighted crowds that honor him, was to dispatch a well-manned boat to New York with the news of his success. This rider was the man Fox, who arbitrarily arrested and imprisoned on board the Wanderer, where the Sam Harbor, he was, and, it may be said that in this meantime Hunter Dudd had captured Kidd, and had held him to await the action of the authorities, who summarily punished him with the pirates, many of whom were hanged in New York harbor.

Lieutenant Hedges was carried ashore in the same boat come from the Wanderer and Dibble from the Sea Lark, and, the latter, in the, two months had played in the struggle became sound, and, they, limited and made the most of, they, that would have received ordinary wounds.

The Wounded Messrs. and Dr. Hedges signal reason, were taken to, his house. It may be that his brother, the lieutenant, suggested this, for, being alive in the island wilderness, that he care to see a great deal of Lydia, and, certainly, the, care of.

The wounded men of the Sea Hawk, in response to the proper, were placed, sent to their own homes, where all suitable comfort, was, at, hand.

But while the ships were coming in anchor and the people and the sailors were cheering on ship and shore, a different scene was taking place in the main room of the King's arms Inn.

There were assembled, Col. Graham, Lady Pallton, the young provincial officer who had schemed for her, and old Dinah, and for a part of the time, Squire Cuddle.

They had been some time in consultation, and Dinah, Dinah had got delivered her strange story when Graham said, with a scowl:

"If Lady Pallton chooses to believe the wild story of a crazy old negress to that of her dead husband's brother, well and good. She is a free agent."

"A free agent," repeated the lady, starting to her feet, and, with a look of the long black veil that on far and partly covered her pale face. "Show me the day of my husband's death he has prevented my being a free agent."

"How so, madam?"

"How so, sir. Shall I repeat the substance of those years of cruelty, the stigma of your spies, your attempts on my life, and your efforts to prove me insane, because—"

"Because, madam, you persisted in claiming that your son, my nephew, was not drowned at the same time as your husband, my brother. Mere than that, madam, you persisted in assuring the world that I conspired against the lives of both."

"Do do truly was right," cried Dinah, "Kill 'em kinned it, no I knowed it, no I fetched de cable bar, to die long Island, no I knowed what I knowed."

Graham's face colour raised his hand to his side as if to draw a sword, and, with a, trembling the slightest motion of Dinah, he said:

"Of course, you believe that—"

"I do, sir, and you will learn before the day passes that others believe it, too."

Turning to the young provincial officer who had accompanied her from New York, Lady Pallton said

"He pleased to call Squire Cuddle." The quiet, white man was waiting, made a bow, and, in obedience to the lady's request, he told of the early days of Dinah's in his house twenty-one years behind.

And you remember the song who brought him to you?" asked Lady Pallton.

"I do, madam. It was this man, Col. Graham, and every year since then he has sent me money for the care of the lad, not one penny of which have I spent, but, saving it, I have added to the pay to some a dear to my heart as if he were my own, and God will bless winners that Ralph Dinham is a young man and a king, and I am so pleased to make a lodge for his son."

"Hurrah! Hurrah!" said the lady, "Dinah, may cry?"

"I have no objection. You have no right to control—no, and I could not be order to honor the matter, which is, I know, a secret, also an evil spirit for years," said Graham.

Aira fetch it the outside, for the ships were anchor, Lydia, Dinah, Dinah, Dinah, Dinah, Up to this time remains firmly believed that Lydia Hedges, and, Dinah about Ralph Dinham, and that the lady, Dinah, Dinah, Dinah, Dinah, have reason to know that the pirate had not a relative living, and, the expense to his wife, he heard a man shouting in a street.

"Hurrah! hurrah! the pirate Kidd is dead and Ralph Dinham is king!"

"Kidd would never surrender," thought Graham, and he, a moment he thought the letter were sitting with him.

"He is dead," said Dinah, going to the window, "and Dinah, going to the window, "and Dinah, Dinah, Dinah, Dinah,

—A daughter at the home of H. A. Emrey.

—S. M. See & Sons will have a new ad next week.

—Miss Eva Aldrich, of Chicago, is a guest at D. H. Pierce's.

—Nick Shores, of Norwood, went to the World's Fair Tuesday.

—The town needs more hose, and it needs it handier than the town hall.

—Judge A. J. Strond and wife leave for the World's fair next Monday.

—We must have copy for changes of advertisements Monday to insure a change.

—The son of Dwight L. Moody, the famous evangelist, is at the south side resort.

—Everybody attend divine service at the park next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

—Hon. Mr. Babcock, wife and daughter, of Council Bluff, Iowa, are guests of Mr. Blanchard.

—The steamer Dahlia was in port Monday. Commander Brice, inspector of lighthouses, was on board.

—Ex-Marshall Merritt Scott, of this place, is lying very low at his home, and cannot live the week out.

—About twenty of the young people went on a picnic excursion on the yacht Marion to Holy Island yesterday.

—Weather permitting, the Congregational and Methodist congregations will unite in service at the park at 4 p. m. next Sabbath.

—Gen. R. M. Cutcheon, of Grand Rapids, was in town to-day on legal business. The general is still a member of the fortification board.

—Miss Hattie Phillips, of East Jordan, is attending the soda fountain and confectionery trade at Chapel's drug store for a few weeks.

—The suit of John C. Miller vs the railroad company, which was tried before Justice Miller Thursday, resulted in a judgment in favor of Miller of $150.

—E. N. Faulkner and family arrived from Chicago last week, and Mr. Faulkner has a force at work painting his new house. They will remain about a month.

—Last Friday Sheriff Myers left his home in Hope Falls at 5.30 a. m., and at 6.35 a. m., a trifle over an hour, he was in Charlevoix. He came all the way by rail.

—A party consisting of Wm. Coulter, Neill Flanagin and Will Byers, of Attwood, and Hon. Wm. Harris, of Norwood left by the City of Charlevoix for the World's Fair yesterday.

—Misses Edith Lewis and Ella Reed gave a very pleasant dancing party at the Opera House Monday evening in honor of Messrs. James Hinde and Geo. Smith, of Portland, Ind.

—Prof. S. Maurette, the celebrated pianist and vocal instructor, is at Traverse City and if 12 to 15 pupils can be secured here, he will come. Please confer with the SENTINEL.

—Under the auspices of the young people of the Congregational church Mrs. Annie Ward Foster will give an an interesting entertainment in the Lewis Opera House Wednesday evening, Aug. 24.

—The statement last week that the Northern Michigan Seed Co. had been removed to Atwood was incorrect. Mr. Hoagley's agency there is an independent enterprise, and has nothing to do with the N. M. Seed Co.

—Do not fail to see the display of hand painted china in A. T. Washburn's window. It is the work of Miss Ella M. Barnum, of Adrian, who is in town and will take a limited number of pupils. For particulars inquire at A. T. Washburn's store.

—Miss Winifred Cole was greeted by a large audience last Friday evening, and the greeting was cordial and appreciative. Mrs. Gale's readings are commented upon as remarkable. The young lady has an already large presence, and a grace that is charming. Her ability as a dramatic reader is of a high order, in one so young, and with the ambition which she undoubtedly has in her art, will grow into a histrionic artist, or a reader of the Sidney order. We have heard "The Bells" many times, but we never heard it rendered more beautifully than by Miss Gale.

—Lost—a watch charm. Leave at this office.

—The steam yacht Gryphon was in port Saturday.

—Watch for J. S. Baker & Co.'s new ad. next week.

—Geo. Downer left for his home in Geneva Lake, Wis., Friday.

—Rev. Mr. Haynes baptized 23 persons at McGeagh's last Sunday afternoon.

—Chapel, the druggist, will have something to say of interest next week.

—Prof. Enos went to Northport Saturday. He held a teacher's institute there Monday.

—Chapel has a new show globe, of an altogether new design and the finest and most costly in Northern Michigan. Notice it.

—The ladies of the W. R. C. will hold an ice-cream social in Egbert Carpenter's lawn Friday evening of this week. Bill 15 cents.

—The SENTINEL is authorized to state that the celebration of the opening for business of the Boyne City & Southeastern R. R. announce for Aug. 23rd is indefinitely postponed.

—The Wixon circus, which held forth here last Wednesday, had a crowded tent afternoon and evening. It was a good, clean 25 cent show, and pleased everybody who attended.

—There is no disguising the fact that the number of summer visitors to Charlevoix this season falls short of expectations, and is not nearly up to last season. The causes are obvious.

—Commissioner Nettleton is putting in iron rods to anchor back the south bridge approach. The affair has been a source of expense, annoyance and danger for years, and it will continue to be until it is entirely torn out and substantially rebuilt from the bottom up.

—Bell's Gift Carnival and Concert Co., will open a three nights engagement in the Opera House, Commencing Thursday, Aug 17th. They give a long, refined and highly amusing performance each night, with change, and also give away a large number of costly and useful presents.

—Your family doctor is seldom a specialist. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was discovered by a specialist in the treatment of nervous diseases. His advice, free, to any one who ask it, with stamp, of Dr. J. W. Head, Co., Albion, Mich., or 42 Dey St., N. Y. This great remedy is sold at Hesman's pharmacy.

—Charlevoix needs a white cap organization. There are some cases of depravity which the law does not reach, sometimes, cases which call for a hanging or a drowning bee, or near enough to it to do the town of wretches who should be in state prison, but on whom it is too bad to spend the peoples' money. There is a case in Charlevoix which calls for attention, and white caps, under proper restraint, would do a good work to society.

Death of C. Barnes.

Mr. C. C. Barnes, formerly of Manitowoc, Wis., who for some months has been lying very sick at the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. H. Green, in this village, died at an early hour yesterday morning, aged 70 years.

The funeral will occur at 10 o'clock to-morrow from the residence, Hev. S. W. Fralick, of Detroit, son-in-law of deceased, officiating. The interment will be here.

Mr. Barnes was a member of the G. A. R. and a Knight Templar. The former organization will supply an escort, while six Sir Knights will act as bearers.

Our respected neighbor, Mrs. Green, and the other bereaved families have the sincere sympathy of this community.

Robscoch's Well to Have Company.

Mr. F. P. Hoak, of the Hoak Well Co., of Buffalo, and a force of men arrived Monday, and began preparations for sinking the water-works well, under the contract made last spring.

There is a very marked contrast between this outfit and the balloon combination. The machinery is first class, and the work is begun as if they understood their business.

They expect to be digging this week, and will keep at it night and day until they get a flow. The well will be located about 20 feet west of the balloon well.

Religious Items.

Rev. Dr. Kendall Brooks, of Alma college, will occupy the pulpit in the morning.

Weather permitting, the Congregational and Methodist congregations will unite in service at the park at 4 p. m. next Sabbath.

The Lake Shore Park.

When about ten years ago, Charlevoix voted to bond itself for $900 to purchase of Amos Fox the 19 acres lying along the bluff to the west of the village, there were many who ridiculed the project, and for some years after, "the park" had only to be mentioned to cause a smile.

It was declared unsuitable for park purposes, and she ones said the money was squandered. A few were bold enough to declare it a "job." Not a few declared that it was not worth expending a dollar upon for park purposes.

To-day, if it were possible, under the terms of the purchase, to place it upon the market, it would bring as many thousands as it cost the people hundreds. With only what improvement has been made upon it by volunteer labor, and one small appropriation, the Charlevoix park is the finest public property of its kind in Northern Michigan. Stretching along the beach for nearly half a mile, it forms a vale of surpassing beauty, shaded by evergreen and leafy foliage, flanked shoreward by a terrace, covered with a heavy growth of sun-conquering shrubbery, and ascending gradually to where the white sand of the beach meets the leaf-carpeted dell, into which only stray sun-beams can steal their way. The view lakeward is enchanting, and as you sit under the shade of an evergreen, and hear the surf gently beating upon the shore just a few feet away, you want to linger until the sun hides Fox Island in the red glare of its setting.

It is a beautiful place, and not a day passes but noon-day lunches are spread in the shade of its beautiful valley, and hammocks are swinging on the limbs. Last Sunday it was alive, with not only resorters, but our own people, who are just beginning to discover that they have an elegant public resort.

More than half of the grounds are yet comparatively unaccessible by reason of the dead trees and rubbish which lie about. It is a most romantic stretch of natural beauty from near the piers to the Austin Newman farm, and our people should make common cause to clean it out, improve it, and preserve its natural adornments.

It has, thanks to the Council and the Maccabees, been provided with facilities for holding large meetings, and no better outdoor auditorium could be conceived than the one provided. Baskets should be hung on trees about the park in which to deposit paper, as already the relies of many lunch baskets are beginning to mar the beauty of the park.

We are proud of our park. It can be made the loveliest place in the state. Let us do it.

A Tally for the Water-Works.

There are very few people in Charlevoix who do not believe that the water-works saved the town from a disastrous conflagration last Thursday afternoon.

The wind was blowing "half a gale" from the south when the fire broke out at the extreme south end of the Enterprise factory, was discovered to be on fire. By the time it took to get an alarm in the flames were bursting out both sides and up through the ventilator flue of the dry-kiln adjoining.

In one minute and a half from the first tap of the bell, two streams of water were playing on the fire, and inside of three minutes more a third was added. The engine was running with no governor belt, and escaping steam from the boiler sounded to the boys like impending disaster, but they stood their ground, and the flames were confined to the engine house and kiln, and even the walls of those were left standing.

It looked for a time as if the whole factory must go; and if it had, nothing could have prevented a spread of the flames to the other side of the street, to stop, perhaps, at the river.

Among those who witnessed the work of the fire department, it is the general opinion that it was a splendid piece of work, and that the water works paid for themselves on that day. Superintendent Gourd had one hundred pounds pressure to less time than it takes to tell it, and was in his glory as the pumps sent in the liquid.

The damage to the plant will amount to about $400, no insurance. The runaway engine tore out and twisted out of shape the main shaft, and the engine is somewhat damaged. The fire caught in some dry fuel from a spark from the furnace, in the temporary absence of the engineer.

Mr. Nicholls and His English-Made Clothing

To the Editor.

I being a man who seldom laughs, and never unless something very ridicrous stirs my risibility, must confess that I had a hearty laugh on reading the Democrat interview with Hon. John Nicholls. I laughed not only at the exuberance of the interviewer, but at the carefully chosen statements of the interviewed.

In the first place, he consoles the editor, and through him the readers of his non-partisan sheet, that there is no panicy feeling in England such as seems to prevail here, and that manufacturing industries are not closing down! No, they are not, for the very good reason that the great cotton-weavers' strike, which involved tens of thousands of operatives, has been so recently compromised that many of the great establishments have not yet fully resumed work. He says "the working classes seem well satisfied with their condition, and were well clothed, better, in fact, than the American working classes, (now comes a statement that the poorer classes in this country should carefully consider,) though they are doubtless more economical in the matter of food, and do not live nearly as well, so far as table delicacies are concerned!"

The correct answer is, and none know it better than Hon. John Nicholls, that their wages are so small that they cannot afford to live "nearly so well" as do the American working classes. I notice that he did not inform the editor as to how many of those contented working people owned the houses in which they live; nor does he refer to the great jubilee in token of their "happy condition" that took place just about the time his honor was on his way to his native Devonshire, in which tens of thousands took part, and at which Burns, the great labor reformer, and others of his associates, besides one or two members of parliament, made addresses. The burden of the addresses and resolutions was that there must be something done by the government to better the condition of the oppressed and starving working people.

And yet, with the record of such demonstrations before us, and just at the close of the vast coal-miners', and cotton-weavers', and spinners' strikes, we are complacently told that these very working people are content with their condition. Verily he who does not read may believe. Mr. Nicholls stretches out an arm to demolish the nefarious McKinley bill, and by the time he has demonstrated the evils of protection he has introduced evidence which, in the minds of many, will well nigh convict the gentleman of the crime of smuggling.

But here, in his reference to English politics, we find the key to the situation. He says "it is impossible to form an honest opinion of English politics, for both sides make such exaggerated statements." I am free to confess that I have long thought that exaggeration was a leading English characteristic, and now I am fully convinced, for have we not Mr. Nicholls' statements in proof

He saw everywhere signs of improvement, and attributes it all to free trade. "Boys of my time are now retired merchants and manufacturers, living at peace with the world, enjoying a competency fully equal to those who have worked as hard here in America." Now if all this is true, to what is the American laborers' prosperity due? Perhaps the prospect of free trade in the near future. That prospect seems to be retiring a good many of our business men, whether they have secured a competency or not. The fear of it is paralyzing our financial and manufacturing interests to such a degree as to threaten ruin to the nation.

The cloud that contains the threatening cyclone first loomed into view on the night when it became known that the Chicago platform had been endorsed by the architects and roughs of the great cities. And now, as the cloud approaches, and the darkness grows denser, and the heavy drops begin to patter, the cry is for a scapegoat upon which to lay the sins of the Democracy. The silver goat is brought forward, and Grover, the high-priest, will send him forth into the wilderness bearing his load of guilt. It is doubtful whether the goat herds from the western mountains will let him go. We shall see.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Fishermen and their wives are thick. The following were here last week and caught lots of fish. Dr. Duffield, Dr. Manton, Dr. Smart, Com. Hare and party and about 67 others who failed to leave their names. A party of 24 Bellaireites are camped upon St. Clair's point and we just want to say while we are about it that Ellsworth is the point to head for, for fine fishing and picnic parties.

The receipts from the school concert last week were six dollars and fifty cents and will be applied on the organ debt.

The town board met here last Friday and decided an appeal on a road matter by raising the road commissioner's appraisal twenty dollars.

The job for opening the new road through the woods north from here has been let to W. A. Boak.

The Sunday school have elected W. C. Mears Supt., and are getting up a concert to come off in a couple of weeks.

Peter Hoyer has put down several wells in town and strikes excellent water at forty feet.

Haulage from Hayes.

Mrs. Sarah Compton, who has been visiting in New York the past year, returned home last week accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Bell.

Mrs. W. H. Vaughn has been making a visit to the Upper Peninsula.

The correspondent from Norwood gives us to understand that when it comes to raising corn Hayes cannot compete with Norwood. We will submit the matter to Graves and wait until "shucking" time.

Frank Brown, John Young, William Walker, Amos Stauffer and wife visited Traverse City last Sunday.

M. K. Chew went to Elk Rapids with the excursion Sunday.

Surveyor Swift, of Petoskey, was surveying and leveling the drain near Day Shore last week.

The Pioneer store at Hay Shore is always awake to the interests of its customers and invites you to come and compare stock and prices.

Three Beaver Island Bonds.

Capt. Hoddy, of St. James, Treasurer of Manitou County, was in town Monday. When the much talked of Manitou County bond case was mentioned, Capt Hoddy waxed wroth.

"Those bonds," said the Captain, "were issued to liquidate certain outstanding orders. The orders are yet outstanding, as there is no record of their having been destroyed. We will pay the debt once, but we shall not pay it twice. Manitou county is abundantly able to pay its debts. Our delinquent tax list, returned to the State last year, amounts to $6,000.

"What we want on the island is home rule. We want to manage our own affairs, and we want editor Roscoe and everybody else to keep their noses out of them. Tricksters and money sharks are trying to pay on our substance, but they will find that we are enough for them.

"There is no hard times on the island. Fishing is good, fish bring a good price, and crops are good all over the island, and there is no community in the state where stricter honesty prevails than on Beaver Island. Tell Mr. Dunleavy for me that we want him to mind his own business."

Given away at Linton & Dentin's—a nice piece of silverware.

CAPTURED THE GANG.

A KANSAS ROBBERS' ROOST RAIDED.

Noted Diamond Thief Comes to Grief—Fly Mag by Hundreds of Cholera—Five May Make Trouble—Mississippi Mint Is Found Unclean.

Told in a Few Words.

—For a long time Cherokee, both sides of the Kansas River near Topeka have been unfortunate from depredations which they attributed to tramps, so many of whom are in the vicinity of the bluffs. It was accidentally discovered that a gang of white and colored men had a rendezvous on one of the islands west of the city, where they have been living quietly. They had a well-worn shanty completely infested by the dense undergrowth and recovered three boats which they used to carry their plunder. When the raid was made ten were captured, several escaped on boats floating down the Kansas, and others crawled were arrested. It is supposed that nearly all their plunder, which will amount in value to thousands of dollars, was disposed of in Topeka.

—James Burke, with several aliases, is under arrest at Leadville for robbing a Pullman of a package of diamonds on a train between Omaha and Denver.

—The latest official statistics in the eighteen provinces affected by cholera in European Russia show that 407 cases and 186 deaths occurred in one week. In the provinces of Nijni Novgorod 336 cases and 162 deaths occurred in a fortnight. Unofficial reports declare that 1,000 persons were attacked and 500 died in Saratov in less than a fortnight.

—Two men having their reservation in large abutment and are becoming troublesome, plundering as they go and wilfully destroying the game. Twenty-five pioneers from Iowa left Tuesday for Jackson, Ark., and the authorities will at once make efforts to get the Indians back on the reservation. The military may be called out.

A LONG SERMON.

On a Train That Covered Eighty Miles During its Delivery.

The Rev. George N. Howard, D. D., of Lowell, had a unique experience two years ago, when he was a delegate from the state to the National Convention of the Sons of Veterans. New England sent a large delegation to Minneapolis. The delegates traveled in two special cars and made a very jolly party. Sunday found the party on the road, and it was suggested by some one that it would be a proper thing to hold some kind of a religious service. The matter was brought to Mr Howard's notice, and he honestly said he would do it. An extemporaneous choir was organized, and one of the musicians of the party took his station at the piano in one of the cars. The occupants of the other cars were notified of what was about to take place, and by the time that everything was in readiness the car that had been opened was a staged was filled to the doors. The train hands and even the porters took their places among the rest. The service was an interesting one and Mr. Howard preached an eloquent sermon.

From the time that he began to speak till he had finished the train had made a run of over eighty miles. From that day to the present Mr. Howard has claimed to be the only living clergyman who has preached a sermon that was heard for eighty miles, and his friends are fond of referring to him as the "champion long-distance preacher of America."

CHAPTER I.

THE VENGEANCE OF A RIVAL.

A young Chinaman was taking a lengthy stroll one the afternoon a few miles from the capital of the Hawaiian Islands.

Suddenly he heard a sharp bend in the road, which was bordered by rocks and trees, he came upon a scene which at once fixed his attention.

Not ten rods ahead two persons mounted upon horses, were approaching at a walk—the one a comely-looking man of Dream-thirty years, in a sailor's holiday suit; the other a girl of rare beauty and grace, whose years could have hardly numbered eighteen. They were flushed and excited, and engaged in a spirited conversation. The man had even seized the girl's bridle to prevent her from flying.

"Is this your final decision?" he was asking.

"It is," was the quick answer.

"But why do you refuse me? Are you in love with the young fellow who called? Has he proposed—and she paved your life in the surf—that Ralph Kempfle?"

The question was unanswered, save by a look of indignant contempt

Political prosperity: It is reported that the banks of the country are fast going democratic.

• • •

With one section of the democratic party clamoring for rag-baby currency, another howling as vigorously for free silver coinage, another shrieking for the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law, and another for an unrestricted issue of currency based on government bonds, the outcome of the extra congressional session is a sort of lottery affair that suggests "chance come again." An influx of gold will doubtless come up the national treasury and enliven stock deals; but it will have no great effect in setting the wheels of industry humming so long as the governmental policy of the dominant party remains in doubt. The factories of the country that have already closed will remain closed until, in the language of Mr. Cobb, they learn "where we are at."

• • •

It cannot be truthfully claimed that the present paralysis in the iron trade is due to over-production, as is feebly attempted by some of the advocates of free trade. More iron was produced in the first half of 1892 than in the first six months of the present year, and the existing demand was so great as to cause an increase in the last half of the past year. The slowing down of the engines at the iron furnaces here, the discharge of workmen and the prevalence of distrust and discouragement began about the time the iron makers of Sheffield, England, were enthusiastically applauding the free trade paragraphs of the democratic platform and joyously congratulating themselves that for the first time in a third of a century the democratic party was in complete possession of the government of the United States.

• • •

Democratic politicians and economists tell us of various causes for this desperate condition of industrial affairs. One faction (and that is the presidential party) persistently asserts that our troubles are due to the Sherman silver-purchasing law; that it is alone responsible, and must be repealed, as it has driven the gold out of the country and contracted the currency until there is not enough for business purposes. Another faction of democracy ascribes the industrial crash to restriction of silver-coinage. "Give us free coinage of the white metal," say they, "and business will revive at once." Still another faction insists that there must be a return to state bank currency, and so on, ad libitum, but none will frankly admit the real facts, which are that there is, and has been, during all the period of this panic, money enough for supporting every legitimate business in the country, but it has been withdrawn from circulation and hoarded all because capital believes that an administration and a congress, elected to carry out the Chicago platform, intend to fulfil the commission entrusted to them.

FROM TIDE WATER.

In a Shell From the Ocean to the Big World's Fair.

Eleven weeks ago three members of the Pawtucket Boat Club, of Providence, R. I., started in their shell boats for the World's Columbian Exposition. Two of them did not reach fresh water, but Mr. F. C. Appley had more nerve than the rest, and kept on.

Last Sunday noon he arrived at Charlevoix, lifting his boat out at Beauvais' landing, and registered at the Noble House. Mr. Appley related to our reporter some incidents of the journey, which is one of the most remarkable in history. He carries nothing with him, not even a blanket or a cracker; but where a town or a fishing settlement could not be reached, he laid upon the beach. He knows no night or day, but rows whenever the water is calm. He has traversed the great lakes thus far, following the beach the entire distance, even the long contour of Saginaw Bay. His hand are blistered and he looks tough.

The boat with which Mr. Appley is performing this wonderful feat is an ordinary racing shell, 31 feet 8 inches long. It is built of aluminum, the bottom being 0-64th of an inch thick, and it weighs 28 pounds. Only an expert can sit in the thing and keep it right side up, and a sea was big as a broom handle" will swamp it."

Sunday evening about seven o'clock he started out again, but, although a score of row-boats and canoes were off she piers, he was compelled by the swell to return. Early Monday morning he started out, and expected to follow the beach of Grand Traverse bay. He is confident of reaching Chicago in a week.

Mr. Appley is making the trip for a record, but will receive $5,000 for his shell when he reaches Jackson Park, and will undoubtedly realize good "side money."

Hastings from Hayes.

Harvey Webster had between nine and ten dollars taken from his pocket last Thursday night, at his boarding house at Bayshore. He followed the supposed culprit to Harbor Springs next day and caught him there. He denied the theft, but gave Harvey his note to cover the loss.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gibson and grand daughter, of Louisville, Ky., are visiting friends here.

It is remarkable how easy some people sign petitions. There is an effort on foot, and has been for a year, to force a highway through John Fish's premises. The petition has been kicked out by the town boards of Hayes and Bay twice, and now it bobs up again with a fresh list of Hayes signatures. The petitions have cost Hayes nearly one hundred dollars, and the road will never be granted.

Isaac Stauffer is an old highway commissioner, and has the highway law by heart, but he finds the locating of drains requires more red tape than the appointment of a minister plenipotentiary to the court of St. James.

Alex Brown, of Charlevoix, has taken charge of the Bayshore railroad section and will occupy John Feicha's residence.

James Hooper will turnpike nearly 80 rods of the State road near G. W. VanSchaicks.

Martin Whalen has been as drunk as a whale for the past two or three weeks and was relieved of his section by the railroad company.

The Pioneer store is headquarters for bargains to everybody. Come and see how far a dollar goes.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

The great big bear, the middle sized bear, and the little wee bear, made this town a visit the other day, and delighted all the children, big and little, with their antics.

The Ellsworth Lumber Co.'s mill closed down this week, having finished the season's cut of about two and a half million feet of logs.

Chas. Gotham has commenced work on the school house. The ground is all cleared and the location is a very sightly and pleasant one.

Mr. Dunlap's father and mother have been visiting him for a few days. They live at Hastings.

Tramps call for meals quite often now-a-days. There were put off the train Tuesday morning. They were "working" their way to Petoskey to see their aunt.

R. T. Sleeper has been quite ill the past few days.

Tuesday, Mr. Pliny Genett, of Norwood, came to our town and captured one of our fair maidens, Miss Jennie Supernaw. They took the train for Harbor Springs, where they were married by the priest, returning to Norwood, where a reception was held at Maxim Genett's on Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. William Miller and Mr. Will Driggett, of New Boston, Mich., came last week, and are stopping at Daniel Driggetts.

Miss Flavia Smith came from Grand Rapids Thursday, and will stay this winter with her sister, Mrs. Wallace Whitford.

Mrs. Capt. Peterson and neice, of Sheboygan, Wis., are visiting at Undine.

Grant Whitford & Sons are getting their last boom of logs this week and will be through sawing in about four weeks. They have about 250,000 feet in the yard yet.

Our silver dollar weighs 412-5 grains and one-tenth of that is alloy, leaving 371-25 grains of fine silver in a dollar. There are 480 grains in an ounce, and an ounce costs the government 76-3 cents. If silver was at par with gold an ounce would be worth $1.29. The subsidiary coins or fractions of a dollar contain 385-8 grains to the dollar.

Under the Sherman law the government purchases 4,500,000 ounces a month, and pays for it in treasury notes, which are redeemable in coin either gold or silver. There has been so great an over-production under the Sherman law that the silver dollar would not pass in commercial marts outside of the United States for more than fifty-seven cents, gold being the standard of value for all nations.

A Matter That Must Soon Be Considered.

Charlevoix must soon begin to consider this matter of sewerage. It is a matter that cannot be much longer put off. It is contrary to the laws of health that a town of this size should be destitute of any means to dispose of surface accumulations of filth. Bad results must follow, sooner or later.

There are alleys in Charlevoix, especially that from Main street to the river, where accretions of filth and accumulation of garbage are unavoidable, and are a menace to the public health. A remedy should be provided.

There are more than a dozen points in the village, to say nothing of the vaults throughout the town, which offend the nostrils and threaten disease.

And disease will come, as surely as darkness follows daylight. Let us cease this talk about electric lights, and provide for sewerage. It will not only be a sanitary measure, but will be a valuable auxiliary to our water works, by providing conveniences and comforts which it is now impossible to enjoy.

We are of the opinion that the council should pass a sewer ordinance, and do it at once. We boast of our natural beauty, of our lakes and rivers, of our scenery and pure air, yet our soil is a nest of filth, breeding disease and pestilence.

Jails and the Jail of Charlevoix County.

To the Editor:

The Chairman and Secretary have lately visited the jail in this place. It is difficult to tell which is the county jail, with at least two jails, in this town yesterday.

The jail here is no exception to the ordinary jail, with its limited accommodations allowing no proper place for women or boys, the cells dark and ill ventilated. It is probably true that the use is infrequent and the occupants rarely more than one or two; yet any prisoner, certainly if awaiting trial, is entitled to better quarters than this jail would afford. Even as a city lock-up it should be improved.

The jail is the worst feature of our criminal law. The writer has lately visited a jail where five prostitutes were confined in two small rooms and a corridor with two beds and the men's cell was covered with foul pictures from the Police Gazette. What moral result can be expected from such imprisonment. These women were as well left in their dens, the only result that could be expected, and was so noted, to drive them from the place and alight in some other spot.

The reformation of the jail system should be the establishment in different parts of the State, of workhouses for those convicted and serving sentence, leaving the jail for those awaiting trial. The provision in larger towns of lock-ups for "vagrants" and "disorderlies," commonly fined and released. The selection by Sheriff of men who will command the respect of their prisoners, who will enforce discipline, and who will not be influenced in their treatment of prisoners is important. Where such men are found, and they are often found, the jail is best in its condition and the conduct of its inmates.

Charlevoix Sentinel.
Established 1869.
WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
CHARLEVOIX, AUGUST 16, 1893.

Political prospects: it is reported that the banks of the country are fast going democratic.

With one section of the democratic party clamoring for reg-laly currency, another howling as vigorously for free silver coinage, another shrieking for the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law, and another for an unrestricted issue of currency based on government bonds, the outcome of the extra congressional session is a sort of lottery affair that suggests "chaos come again." An influx of gold will doubtless ease up the national treasury and enliven stock deals; but it will have no great effect in setting the wheels of industry humming so long as the governmental policy of the dominant party remains in doubt. The factories of the country that have already closed will remain closed until, in the language of Mr. Cobb, they learn "where we are at."

It cannot be truthfully claimed that the present paralysis in the iron trade is due to over-production, as is feebly attempted by some of the advocates of free trade. More iron was produced in the first half of 1892 than in the first six months of the present year, and the existing demand was so great as to cause an increase in the last half of the past year. The slowing down of the engines at the iron furnaces here, the discharge of workmen and the prevalence of distrust and discouragement began about the time the iron makers of Sheffield, England, were enthusiastically applauding the free trade paragraphs of the democratic platform and joyously congratulating themselves that for the first time in a third of a century the democratic party was in complete possession of the government of the United States.

Democratic politicians and economists tell us of various causes for this desperate condition of industrial affairs. One faction (and that is the presidential party) persistently asserts that our troubles are due to the Sherman silver-purchasing law; that it is alone responsible, and must be repealed, as it has driven the gold out of the country and contracted the currency until there is not enough for business purposes. Another faction of democracy ascribes the industrial crash to restriction of silver-coinage. "Give us free coinage of the white metal," say they, "and business will revive at once." Still another faction insists that there must be a return to state bank currency, and so on, ad libitum, but none will frankly admit the real facts, which are that there is, and has been, during all the period of this panic, money enough for supporting every legitimate business in the country, but it has been withdrawn from circulation and hoarded all because capital believes that an administration and a congress, elected to carry out the Chicago platform, intend to fulfil the commission entrusted to them.

FROM TIDE WATER.

In a Shell From the Ocean to the Big World's Fair.

Eleven weeks ago three members of the Pawtucket Boat Club, of Providence, R. I., started in their shell boats for the World's Columbian Exposition. Two of them did not reach fresh water, but Mr. F. C. Appley had more nerve than the rest, and kept on.

Last Sunday noon he arrived at Charlevoix, lifting his boat out at Beauvais' landing, and registered at the Noble House. Mr. Appley related to our reporter some incidents of the journey, which is one of the most remarkable in history. He carries nothing with him, not even a blanket or a cracker; but where a town or a fishing settlement could not be reached, he laid upon the beach. He knows no night or day, but rows whenever the water is calm. He has traversed the great lakes thus far, following the beach the entire distance, even the long contour of Saginaw Bay. His hand are blistered and he looks tough.

The boat with which Mr. Appley is performing this wonderful feat is en ordinary racing shell, 31 feet 8 inches long. It is built of aluminum, the bottom being 1-64th of an inch thick, and it weighs 18 pounds. Only an expert can sit in the thing and keep it right side up, and a sea "as big as a broomhandle" will swamp it.

Sunday evening about seven o'clock he started out again, but, although a score of row-boats and canoes were off she piers, he was compelled by the swell to return. Early Monday morning he started out, and expected to follow the beach of Grand Traverse bay. He is confident of reaching Chicago in a week.

Mr. Appley is making the trip for a record, but will receive $5,000 for his shell when he reaches Jackson Park, and will undoubtedly realize good "side money."

Hastings from Hayes.

Harvey Webster had between nine and ten dollars taken from his pocket last Thursday night, at his boarding house at Bayshore. He followed the supposed culprit to Harbor Springs next day and caught him there. He denied the theft, but gave Harvey his note to cover the loss.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gibson and grand-daughter, of Louisville, Ky., are visiting friends here.

It is remarkable how easy some people sign petitions. There is an effort on foot, and has been for a year, to force a highway through John Fish's premises. The petition has been kicked out by the town boards of Hayes and Bay twice, and now it bobs up again with a fresh list of Hayes signatures. The petitions have cost Hayes nearly one hundred dollars, and the road will never be granted.

Isaac Stauffer is an old highway commissioner, and has the highway law by heart, but he finds the locating of drains requires more red tape than the appointment of a minister plenipotentiary to the court of St. James.

Martin Whalen has been as drunk as a whale for the past two or three weeks and was relieved of his section by the railroad company.

The Pioneer store is headquarters for bargains to everybody. Come and see how far a dollar goes.

Echoes From Ellsworth.

The great big bear, the middle sized bear, and the little wee bear, made this town a visit the other day, and delighted all the children, big and little, with their antics.

The Ellsworth Lumber Co.'s mill closed down this week, having finished the season's cut of about two and a half million feet of logs.

Chas. Gotham has commenced work on the school house. The ground is all cleared and the location is a very sightly and pleasant one.

Mr. Dunlap's father and mother have been visiting him for a few days. They live at Hastings.

Tramps call for meals quite often now-a-days. Three were put off the train Tuesday morning. They were "working" their way to Petoskey to see their aunt.

R. T. Sleeper has been quite ill the past few days.

Tuesday, Mr. Pliny Genett, of Norwood, came to our town and captured one of our fair maidens, Miss Jennie Supernaw. They took the train for Harbor Springs, where they were married by the priest, returning to Norwood, where a reception was held at Maxim Genett's on Wednesday evening.

Undine Items.

Mr. and Mrs. William Miller and Mr. Will Driggett, of New Boston, Mich., came last week, and are stopping at Daniel Driggett's.

Miss Flavia Smith came from Grand Rapids Thursday, and will stay this winter with her sister, Mrs. Wallace Whitford.

Mrs. Capt. Peterson and neice, of Sheboygan, Wis., are visiting at Undine.

Cram Whitford & Sons are getting their last boom of logs this week and will be through sawing in about four weeks. They have about 250,000 feet in the yard yet.

—Rev. Dr. Hank, of St. Louis, a Belvedere guest, caught a fine lot of bass at 26 lake one day last week. We have forgotten the number and weight, but the Doctor is proud of his catch. Judge Wagner, a guest at the Fountain City House, and a neighbor of the Doctor in St. Louis, remarked to the Doctor yesterday that he would willingly furnish him an affidavit in the matter, but it might have been well for him to have had the fish photographed, to avoid any question of veracity that might arise in St. Louis. The Judge was apparently serious, and the veterinarian Doctor owned up that it might have been well.

The Republican "goose that laid the golden egg" is now in the hands of Democrats, and they are trying to stick her in the oven. They will find that the old bird left a large brood, which will be heard from in 1896, if not before.

Mrs. Harry Sayers and child are visiting at W. B. Sayers.

Herman Sterzic and family were the guests of G. W. Ford on Sunday.

Our silver dollar weighs 412.5 grains and one-tenth of that is alloy, leaving 371.25 grains of fine silver in a dollar. There are 480 grains in an ounce, and an ounce costs the government 79.3 cents. If silver was at par with gold an ounce would be worth $1.29. The subsidiary coins or fractions of a dollar contain 345.6 grains to the dollar.

Under the Sherman law the government purchases 4,500,000 ounces a month, and pays for it in treasury notes, which are redeemable in coin either gold or silver. There has been so great an over-production under the Sherman law that the silver dollar would not pass in commercial marts outside of the United States for more than fifty-seven cents, gold being the standard of value for all nations.

A Matter That Must Soon Be Considered.

Charlevoix must soon begin to consider this matter of sewerage. It is a matter that cannot be much longer put off. It is contrary to the laws of health that a town of this size should be destitute of any means to dispose of surface accumulations of filth. Bad results must follow, sooner or later.

There are alleys in Charlevoix, especially that from Main street to the river, where accretions of filth and accumulation of garbage are unavoidable, and are a menace to the public health. A remedy should be provided.

There are more than a dozen potats in the village, to say nothing of the vaults throughout the town, which offend the nostrils and threaten disease.

And disease will come, as surely as darkness follows daylight. Let us cease this talk about electric lights, and provide for sewerage. It will not only be a sanitary measure, but will be a valuable auxiliary to our water works, by providing conveniences and comforts which it is now impossible to enjoy.

We are of the opinion that the council should pass a sewer ordinance, and do it at once. We boast of our natural beauty, of our lakes and rivers, of our scenery and pure air, yet our soil is a nest of filth, breeding disease and pestilence.

Jails and the Jail of Charlevoix County.

To the Editor:

The Chairman and Secretary have lately visited the jail in this place. It is difficult to tell which is the county jail, with at least two jails, and neither at the county seat.

The jail here is no exception to the ordinary jail, with its limited accommodations allowing no proper place for women or boys, the cells dark and ill ventilated. It is probably true that the one is infrequent and the occupants rarely more than one or two; yet any prisoner, certainly if awaiting trial, is entitled to better quarters than this jail would afford. Even as a city lock-up it should be improved.

The jail is the worst feature of our criminal law. The writer has lately visited a jail where five prostitutes were confined in two small rooms and a corridor with two beds and the men's cell was covered with foul pictures from the Police Gazette. What moral result can be expected from such imprisonment. These women were as well left in their dens, the only result that could be expected, and was expected, to drive them from the place and slight in some other spot.

The reformation of the jail system should be the establishment in different parts of the State, of workhouses for those convicted and serving sentence, leaving the jail for those awaiting trial. The provision in larger towns of lock-ups for "drunks" and "disorderlies," commonly fined and released. The selection for Sheriff of men who will command the respect of their prisoners, who will enforce discipline, and who will not be influenced in their treatment of prisoners is important. Where such men are found, and they are often found, the jail is best in its condition and the conduct of its inmates.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

BY LEON LEWIS.

He glanced swiftly around, adding, "Yes, here are the traces of half a dozen men. You are suffering from a fever, sir, that has nearly cost you your life!

"Do you think so?" queried Ralph.

"Pooey! no, doubt about it. But what's the use of talking to you on the subject? Much good, remember who waylaid you? Don't you remember anything about the fight?"

"Fight? fight? Has there been a fight?"

"Pshaw! Haven't you some papers you can show that will tell who you are?"

"Papers?"

"Here, let me search your pockets!" proposed the Kanaka impatiently.

So spoken, so done. Prompt to this proposal, the Kanaka at once carried it into execution. The result of his search was a considerable number of letters, receipts, bills of exchange, and other documents in which the identity of your humble servant was perfectly manifest.

"Here, read these," cried the Kanaka, in a fever of impatience. "Then will you tell who and what you are. Read those letters first, I guess, because I know nothing of our people dd until after the arrival of the Rhododendron. Read them!"

He opened one of the letters and held it under Ralph's gaze, continuing to remark in impatient, but—our honesty lacks parallel, again, and stared blankly at the book-chirography before him.

"I—I am just like you," he declared. "I never learned to read, either."

Now a second time the Kanaka looked disappointed—mortified—but he then shrugged his shoulders, gazed on the boat with an air of reviving hopes and spirits.

"I have it," he cried. "I'll take you to Mr. Bullet!"

He gathered the various papers of our nurse into a package, thrust them into one of his own pockets, and passed his arm through Ralph's, leading him away into the interior of the island, telling the general direction of Kroween, at the head of the Pearl Lake.

"Mr. Bullet! I know that I work for," explained the Kanaka, as he walked toward. "I don't know as you will ever understand what that means, but it means a heap. He has lived among me the fact. Mr. Bullet has quite a good farm up here, is a pleasant although rather retired valley. He has had great experience in all sorts of business, and he will feel as he is a minute "at all times papers have to say about you."

At the end of a weary walk of about three miles the couple reached the street of a little village, which they pushed down into a beautiful and fertile valley of small extent immediately in front of them, and which was on all sides well shaded, save a little stream of water found through it on the way from one of the high plateaus of the Kaluhanapo range of hills.

"Mr. Bullet lives in the house you see yonder," announced the Kanaka, halting out a small four-rowened cottage of a story and a half that occupied a prominence at one side of the valley. "As I say, he is still in the American style. Mr. Bullet is an American by birth, and was a whaling captain's mate."

Our hero did not respond to these observations any more than he had responded to the various other observations of his companion since setting out for the residence of Mr. Bullet. The cause of this silence was, evidently, that his eyes were entirely occupied, as were his sensations, with the varieties of scenery and landscape constantly presenting themselves to his notice.

"Here where," muttered the Kanaka, a few moments later, as he turned off from the main road to a still cruder path that led across or through the garden of the Bullet cottage, "and here is Mr. Bullet himself."

He waved his hand toward a person age who stood under the edge of a little shed at one end of the house, apparently in the modest occupation of splitting a stick of wood into kindling, and of a stone water for his tea.

"Mr. Bullet, I presume?" said Ralph.

He was a tall, well-built fellow, of a man of about the consistence of a great deal of strength and vigor. He was at least 60 years of age, and had not the most vestige of a tooth in his head, but this circumstance did not prevent him from extracting a tolerable share of energy that he juice ran continually from each corner of his mouth like elder from a press.

Hearing his name pronounced by the Kanaka, he accepted the face as a sort of introduction to our hero, to whom he bowed with sufficient affability. Ralph gravely and slight mechanically, and then resumed his staring and wondering survey of things around him in a way that at once fixed the old sailor's attention.

"Who is he, Kuhi?" he asked in a low tone as the Kanaka, withdrawing his arm from Ralph's, advanced to his employer's side.

"I don't know who he is," replied Kuhi. "He has been in a fever, or somebody has waylaid him. There is a awful wound on the head."

"Where did you find him?" demanded Bullet, in a low tone.

"In a lonely spot at Kalihi Bay—not far from the water. He is a very young man, as you can see, but he don't know who he is. Look at his papers from me how he got into this awful fix."

At this point of Kuhi's exciting statement Bullet straightened his arm.

"Hush!" he enjoined, stepping about cautiously, as if the ground were burning the soles of his feet. "I compromise! An Kamaka, I know you wants a job for the back, a case of assault with intent to kill. Charlie!" And he raised his head wearingly. "You don't know who this young man is, Charlie?"

"No, but those papers I found in his pocket will probably tell us."

He handed out the bundle of documents he had secured.

He's not able to read them himself. His memory is gone entirely, like that of the man in Honolulu—

"A man with a cry from Bullet interrupted the history of "the man in Honolulu."

"Hush!" said the old sailor, pouring over and over papers to which he had directed his attention was stolen vile—"Hush! hush! hush!"

"What is it?" asked Kuhi.

The question recalled Mr. Bullet to himself. He coughed the cough peculiar to folks of his description, and uttered another. The whole fetch was soon passed in review, and during this time the old man had gradually recovered from his first emotions. He had even forced himself to be outwardly as cool as ever.

"Well?"

"These papers don't amount to anything," he said, as he put them all together and put them into his own pocket. "They don't tell us who the young man is, nor anything about him. Part of them are in a language unknown to me. Have you met anybody since you saw the young man?"

"No, sir."

"Then of course you have said nothing to any one about him, nor has he been seen by anyone else to-day?"

"That is well, Kuhi. Don't mention the affair to any one. Don't let any one know that there is such a person in existence. I will take charge of the poor young man myself, and try to bring the offenders to justice. But you must not say a word to any human being about meeting him. If you do it will not only cloud the ends of justice but you will lose your place in my service.

"Oh, I understand," returned Kuhi. "I know exactly what to offend his employer, whatever else he knows or sees. He very generally mentions that he is an I concerned. My meeting with the young man is a secret. I have been. You can depend upon my silence."

"Then all will be well with him and with us. You can leave me, Kuhi, but come and see me in the morning and I'll tell you what light I can add to the dark subject. It is to be hoped that I may find in my library some one who will know how to read the language of the young man. They must be off, I think the young man is dead."

Kuhi again pounded secretly and with his hatchet, and Ralph, as he lay calm, a quarter of a mile farther in the shadow of the lofty cottage.

"Please walk in—walk in, my young friend," said Bullet to our hero, as soon as Kuhi was gone.

Ralph complied mechanically and was soon seated in the little sitting-room of the house.

"A terrible misfortune, sir," mutterings Bullet, as he sat down, stroking the young man's wounds, "but I dare say you'll soon be as right as ever."

He spent nearly half an hour in dressing the sufferer's wounds—which were many and serious, in addition to the injury on his head—and during all this time he gave his patient several glass of strong, but a pleasant although rather retired valley. He has had great experience in all sorts of business, and he will feel as he is a minute "at all times papers have to say about you."

"Do you think so?" queried Ralph.

"Pooey! no, doubt about it. But what's the use of talking to you on the subject? Much good, remember who waylaid you? Don't you remember anything about the fight?"

"Fight? fight? Has there been a fight?"

"Pshaw! Haven't you some papers you can show that will tell who you are?"

"Papers?"

So spoken, so done. Prompt to this proposal, the Kanaka at once carried it into execution. The result of his search was a considerable number of letters, receipts, bills of exchange, and other documents in which the identity of your humble servant was perfectly manifest.

"Here, read these," cried the Kanaka, in a fever of impatience. "Then will you tell who and what you are. Read those letters first, I guess, because I know nothing of our people dd until after the arrival of the Rhododendron. Read them!"

He opened one of the letters and held it under Ralph's gaze, continuing to remark in impatient, but—our honesty lacks parallel, again, and stared blankly at the book-chirography before him.

"I—I am just like you," he declared. "I never learned to read, either."

Now a second time the Kanaka looked disappointed—mortified—but he then shrugged his shoulders, gazed on the boat with an air of reviving hopes and spirits.

"I have it," he cried. "I'll take you to Mr. Bullet!"

He gathered the various papers of our nurse into a package, thrust them into one of his own pockets, and passed his arm through Ralph's, leading him away into the interior of the island, telling the general direction of Kroween, at the head of the Pearl Lake.

"Mr. Bullet! I know that I work for," explained the Kanaka, as he walked onward. "I don't know as you will ever understand what that means, but it means a heap. He has lived among me the fact. Mr. Bullet has quite a good farm up here, is

JOHN CHINAMAN.

His Favorite Soda or Beverage is Iced Coffee Soda.

A Boston man was enjoying a cooling phosphate in a down-town drug store the other day—not far from Chinatown when a child from the flowery kingdom entered. The soda raiser prepared for business.

"Coffee?" inquired the Chinaman.

"No, the coffee is just out," said the soda fountain tender. "We've got vanilla, chocolate, sarsaparilla and—"

But before he had finished, the Chinaman shook his head, turned on his heel and walked out, "groaning working a fan."

Then the soda man turned to the writer and said: "It's the funniest thing in the world. I have a lot of Chinamen come in here and they invariably ask for coffee soda. If I happen to be out of that flavor they won't take anything else. It seems to be a regular fad with them. It would do your eyes good to see Chinamen in here by the half dozen at a time, all drinking coffee soda. I have never sold a soda with any other flavor to a Chinaman since I have been here; and you know that's been a good numb. of cents."

A SERIOUS CASE.

The Patient Was Willing to Leave His Arm as a Souvenir.

Once I was assistant to an elderly doctor in Ontario, who also ran a drug store. He was as pepper as a cayenne pod, and from time to time continuous and pulsate spring jokes on him, just for the fun of hearing him blow off, on one occasion a sailor dressed fellow called at the shop and asked the doctor to prescribe for a breaking out and a rash on his left arm. The doctor examined the limb and pronounced it to be a bad case of psoriasis and eczema.

"I suppose, doctor, you can cure it?" said the patient.

"Why, certainly," replied the doctor.

"How long will it take to get well?"

"Oh, I guess about two months," says the doctor.

"Quite sure, sir—is it a bad case?"

Positively the worst I've seen.

"Then I will leave it with you and call for it again when cured," accordingly said the patient, slowly unfastening his arm, which was an artificial one and painted for the occasion.

Written in Prison.

ANOTHER BIG SALE!

HATS AND PANTS!

1st We direct your attention to a lot of SAMPLE HATS which can be sold at much less than wholesale prices. You may expect bargains and you will get them if you give us a call. This lot of samples represents the stock of a large wholesale house which with the large stock I have had in before we should be able to suit any one in Charlevoix County.

2d. Our Pantstock is very large and attractive ranging price from 50c up. We have too many, and in consequence have started to cut prices and run them off. It is early in the season, but in order to reduce our immense stock of Cotton Pants we commence now. Be sure and give us a "look in"

J. H. Mullen.

MR. D'AUBIGNE.

How He Was Enclosed Out of Plain Old Dublin.

"I am looking," said the dusty, travel-stained man with the valise, "for an old friend of mine who used to live on this street."

"What's his name?" inquired the policeman leaning against the lamp post.

"Dobbin."

"No man of that name living along here."

"No, I reckon not," said the dusty traveler, looking in a perplexed way at a memorandum in his hand and then at the row of stately dwellings in front of him: "but he used to live in a one-story cottage right where that big stone front stands."

"Was he a short, heavy man with a bald head and one leg a little shorter than the other?"

"Yes, that's the man. Where is he now?"

"Always walked with his hands behind him and wore chin whiskers?"

"That describes him exactly."

"Why, he got a street-paving contract three or four years ago, and he's worth $100,000."

"Good for Dobbin! What business of his? Is he in Europe?"

"No," answered the policeman, pointing at the big stone front. "He lives right there and his name is D'Aubigne."

WITH OTHELLO'S KINSMEN.

In the Moorish Palace Are Wonders Great and Small From Every Land.

In the Moorish palace at the world's fair there are packed as many wonders as a man can well use in a day. At the very entrance the visitor is transported at once to sunny Spain, and finds himself amidst a grove of real palm trees gazing at the far-famed Alhambra, with its rich hued arches and portico, while groups of Arabs pace and there lend realism to the scene.

But he need not stay there long. On one side the horror of the victim is seen; on another the monster kaleidoscope, in which a few spectators are multiplied into millions. Then there are the galleries of seaweeds, wherein may be found many excellent likenesses of the world's greatest heroes and villains.

The dioramas, representing the execution of Marie Antoinette, possess remarkable realism, which is enhanced by the fact that the scaffold and guillotine are those actually used in the tragedy. The optical illusion, illustrating the story of Ugolino da Gulatas, is also a clever device.

Men of the Quality.

As a magnificent steamer, the property of the Peninsular and Oriental company, was steaming into South Kingston harbor, a gray coal-lighter floated immediately in front of it. An officer on board the vessel, observing this, shouted "Clear out of the way with that barge." The lighter, a native of the Emerald Isle, shouted in reply, "Are ye the captain of that vessel?" "Yes," answered the officer. "Then space to ye yourself," said Pat. "I'm the captain of this."

SMALLEST BIRDS ALIVE.

Two Diminutive Bee Lively Specimens Breathlessly Captured in Cuba.

Two of the smallest birds in the world, and the only two known to be in captivity, have been attracting a great deal of attention in the window of F. H. Underhill, 1438 Broadway, New York. They are known as the pajara mosca, or "fly eaters," and were brought to this country from Cuba some days ago by Senor Fabilli-tores. He controls the circus privileges of the island and is familiarly known as the "Little Barnum."

The birds are best described smaller than the mocking birds of this country, to which family they belong. Being so diminutive and flying with remarkable swiftness, it is almost impossible to catch them, and it was only by an accident that these specimens were captured. A laborer discovered the nest while the birds were fledglings, and he placed a bottomless cage over the nest, and kept it there until the birds were strong enough to fly.

They are fed on honey diluted with water, and in order to reach this the little creatures keep themselves stationary in the air by the lightning-like motion of their wings and plunge their long narrow bills repeatedly into the vessels. Jimmy Wakeley's office of 840 for the pair has been refused.

Character in Eyebrows.

Highly-arched eyebrows are said to denote vivacity and brilliancy; level brows, strength of intellect; regularly curved eyebrows express cheerfulness; square ones, deep thought; irregular fickleness, versatility, excitability; raised at the inner corner, melancholy; joined over the nose, an unsettled mind. Thick and bushy eyebrows denote physical energy.

Bulgarian Bill-Posters.

The largest use of placards on record was prior to the Paris election in 1889. General Boulanger had 10,000 bill-stickers, who put up 40,000 daily, in all 900,000. In some places, when posters were torn down after the election, there were found sixty layers of bills alternating with those of Boulanger's rival candidate.

Hoodlums of New Orleans.

The hoodlums of New Orleans who for a time were held in check by the police and the courts, are again indulging in frequent outbreaks of violence, and it appears that they are now using the street cars as areas in which to have their fights. So numerous have been these outrages during the past month or two that the ladies and children are becoming afraid to ride in the street cars, and the failure of the police to arrest the roughs is making them bolder and more vicious.

THEY FOUGHT WITH CABS.

Willie Wilde's Novel Duel With Marquis de Leuville.

Oscar Wilde's duels with pistols and with broadswords, and with pipes and with stilettos, and with tarantulas and with banking houses, he says, it has remained for Willie Wilde and the marquis de Leuville to fight a duel with hansom cabs and cab horses. This is the only reasonable explanation of the lamentable event upon the streets of London recently. These two men have been more or less intimate with a well-known woman. One of them, in fact, has been her husband for a few months. Their relations to each other became so strained that home demanded that blood should be shed. So the duel was arranged.

To avoid police interference hansom cabs were selected and each man was to drive in the adversary to the duelling ground. The marquis entered Willie's cab, and he wisely had the kinsman of the new flower prophet chosen to drive him. He was soon thrown to the pavements. The stones broke the bridge of his nose and the horse kicked him in the side and broke one of his ribs. Willie escaped unharmed. This incident illustrates again the ingenuity of the English. Duels in France never end except with the best of feeling on both sides. There is no desire to hurt anyone. If we must have duels let us follow the example of the Parisians. The hansom cab is too dangerous and erratic a weapon to be handled carelessly.

ADVANTAGEOUS SLOW TRAVEL.

The One-Hoss Transatlantic Journey and Tour of the Boston Liner.

The slower-going steamer, say Sinbad, makes a day, has decided advantages over the racer. To attain a high speed enormous motive power is required and the ocean greyhound is like a great magic shop, the pulsations of the machinery jarring every portion of the boat. To double the speed of a vessel it sets the power must be cubed. The vessel to plow through the water at twenty-four miles per hour must displace twice as much water in an hour as it does when going at twelve miles per hour. But water resists twice the power. But in addition to this the water must be displaced in half the time, and that requires the power to be doubled again. So that a vessel which would consume five tons power in an hour going at a rate of twelve miles, would need, to go twenty miles, thus being equal, twenty tons per hour if the speed is increased to twenty-four miles. After all there are attractions in the old style of going to sea, with its leisurely gait, its perfect rest, its absolute change from all the conditions of life on land, which are superior, in the judgment of many people, to the free or no-free of land life between New York and Liverpool on one of the "lines."

HAS HIS MONEY'S WORTH

A Man Who Took Ad He Could Get for a Ten-Cent Fee.

"It is curious," said the manager of a cheap restaurant in New York, "to see how far some men will go to get what they consider to be the worth of their money. Look at that fellow, for instance."

The reporter saw a well-dressed old man enter one of those hot cakes which answer variously dyspepsia. These, with a cup of coffee, cost ten cents. In order to enter the old man must pay eighty of a pound of butter at thirty-five cents per pound, the equal dose of tomato catsup, several spoonfuls of which he poured on his pancakes. There was very little of any sausage to spoil on his trade when he had finished. As he walked out of the restaurant with a satisfied air the manager said:

"It is curious how little attention some of our customers give the refreshing signs on the walls. But it seems to me that the one author which he was sitting is peculiarly fitting in his case."

The sign read: "Thou Shalt Not Steal."

Absolute Wanted.

The woman stood in the aisle of the passenger coach gazing at the man who occupied twice as much space in the seat as he had a right to when every other seat was full, but she didn't say anything. Neither did the man at first, but as the woman stood there looking at him he began to grow nervous and to squirm, but he didn't slide over. The woman leaned up against the arm of the seat and then he showed a passenger or two down on the other side and cross for her. "Sit down," he said, gruffly. "I'm no hog."

"Thanks," she said, moving over to a place essentially vacated on the other side of the aisle. "Have you an affidavit to that effect?" the man inquired and four men gave a loud snicker each.

—Aviator Sommer impossible builds that aeroplane in passing, seven should hereafter be allowed a fee of $2 in foreign claims under the act of June 27, 1902. It was ordered by the attorneys in interest that fees under the act of June 27, 1902, should be governed in the amount by the act of April 11, 1904, which allows fees of $10 where no contract for a greater fee is signed, or, where no contract for fee has been filed. The assistant secretary, however, holds to the contrary and allows a fee of $2.

—Bitter personal disparaging say that Dunlap is in possession of a note and that he treats as a joke. Every member has been destroyed, and many persons have been accused of Europeans participation. Troops are now protecting the public buildings. The disorder has appealed for help, owing for insurrections. The trouble began on May 15 when a number of carousers took place between fascists and Socialists on the streets. To-day was one of religious observance of both sides and all business and work were stopped in order to avoid bloodshed. A dispatch was sent to the Governor General of Turin from Genoa Vittorio, to the effect that he expressing severe displeasure at the negligence of the local authorities in not using adequate means to put down the disorders. It was published on the 15th that two religious processions should not have been allowed to pass through the streets of the same day. Early in the morning, the bank houses are fortified and barricaded for fear of being looted by the mobs. Those who know the force view hatred between the Socialists and Fascists say both may fall fight to the death. The situation is uncertain, city guards are in readiness for ordering all the available troops in the zone the sth of Sicily to be of not guilty in bar to be allowed to load surface and camps to all of a number of the exercises.

GUNS AT THE BIG FAIR

TOOLS OF WAR ONE OF THE MOST POPULAR EXHIBITS.

Even Apostles of Peace Front Visit Eros on the Twelfth Group Gives Trophies in American Ordnance—We Are Behind in Small Arms.

They Catch the Crowd.

World's Fair correspondence.

The great Exposition was conceived and is being carried forward with the view to show the development of the world's inhabitants in the arts of peace. It is essentially an exposition of the industries, the arts and literature, the mechanics and all other fields of exponents in human endeavor. Its whole scope and purpose is to glorify the peace, prosperity and welfare of mankind.

And yet there are no more popular or eagerly sought for exhibits in the whole Exposition grounds than those which illustrate the development of the science of war and the implements made in the last quarter of a century in all the implements and appliances of death and destruction. Men who have never heard more than the discharge of a fowling-piece will stand by the hour and look at the huge steel monsters which represent the development in the science of ordnance of the past twenty-five years, and women who would shriek at the sound of a pistol will pass carelessly into the muzzle of their mouths and with a shudder turn away. All these people are apathetic to peace, yet their best appreciation and greatest curiosity is expended upon implements of war. It is a strange paradox, but it is emminently characteristic of the race. We are in a fighting race of people, of battles, of the fathers and of sons, of bloody flag-waving mothers, and to be suppressed by simple emblems of peace and prosperity, which are the

are so great, that the rate of development so varied, that it one tries to enter the field of invention, he is lost in himself in a maze. In the American exhibit there is every kind of weapon from the earliest musket to the latest magazine rifle. But in all small arms the foreign governments are ahead of the American exhibit. We can boast the development in the science of ordnance in the past twenty-five years, and women who would shriek at the sound of a pistol will pass carelessly into the muzzle of their mouths and with a shudder turn away. All these people are apathetic to peace, yet their best appreciation and greatest curiosity is expended upon implements of war. wonder what would be the effect of the explosion of 1,700 pounds of the most high-power powder, the instantaneous explosion of a ton of metal starting on its journey of twelve miles, and, wondering, they are almost involuntarily shudder and clap their hands to their ears. The biggest gun in the American exhibit is the 12-inch breech-loading rifle, shown in the made at the Watervliet arsenal for coast defense. This gun is not mounted for the reason that no carriage has yet been made for it, but it has tremendous interest for the engineers at the Fair. The people gazed at it, they crowd around it, they pat it with their gloved hands, they take the interest in its mechanism and then they turn away with gratified looks, take a glance or two at the stars and stripes and mentally observe, "Let Uncle Sam's shooting come on, and let them come all at once."

Tiger Tamers and New Death Dealers.

Tiger in charge of the military exhibit made a happy hit when they placed side by side an ordinary six-pound brass cannon, used in the Mexican war, and a modern thirty-two-pounder rapid fire gun of the Hotchkiss type. The old Mexican war gun could throw a shot about 1,200 feet and could the first once in five minutes if the crew was active. The new thirty-two-pounder Hotchkiss fires thirty-two pounds of shot and shells in the fifteen in a place of death and destruction. Thousands of from two to four million. These rapid fire guns are of all calibers, the lighter ones are for field service, and the heavier calibers are for siege and fortification purposes. In some cases of siege, the gun is used in the navy and is then mounted on a turntable or pivot, and is so arranged that it can be fired in any direction.

In the center of the field of small arms the exhibit is illustrative. The varieties opportunity right we like to look at the things people do fight with when they get a chance, and from it in the war department exhibition in the Government Building the battle-ship containing the naval exhibit, the Government Building which contains exhibits the Manufactures Building, the Electricity Building and the agriculture ordnance which they exhibit in the Transportation Building, the Spanish, Italian and Austrian military exhibits, and finally the great Krupp gun pavilion, are to thousands of people the chief points of interest on the Fair grounds.

Naturally the American exhibit is the most interesting, though the Krupp exhibit is the most startling to the public. Imagine a gun of the gigantic proportions and one conceive of it. WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.

CHARLEVOIX, AUGUST 23, 1893.

Crop prospects are excellent, not only in Michigan but throughout the country. With a splendid harvest in all the great staple productions, the stringency of the times will be very much mitigated.

A conservative estimate places the loss to the farmers of the United States, by reason of the fall in the price of wool, since Cleveland was elected, at over $25,000,000. A great many farmers who were hankering after "a change," one year ago, are now hankering just as intensely for another change.

A Cleveland organette declares that "Nothing short of the fact that the people have confidence in president Cleveland and counselors prevents a general panic and upsetting of things." It is really a good thing that the people have confidence, etc. But somehow they worried along pretty well before Cleveland took the helm, and there was no prospects that "things" would be upset until after the election of Cleveland became a assured fact.

One hundred thousand wage-earners out of employment in New York city alone is the direct result of five months of Democratic administration with "tariff reform" in prospect. During the campaign last year Democratic newspapers and orators promised the workingmen of the county greatly increased prosperity under a free trade administration. Now they tell them to have patience; that after they have been starved for a few years while the re-adjustment is taking place good times will come again with everything "cheap." The prospect is not a comforting one.

The speech of the democrat consul created joyful applause in Sheffield, England, a few days ago, not because he told the English manufacturers that the McKinley bill has been repealed, but because he read to them the democrat platform and then told them that the party was in power in the United States which had endorsed that platform. And that which to the business competitors of the American m's and factories seemed good cause gaud rejoicing, to the owners and operators and employes of the American mill is as good cause for discouragement and business apprehension. And distrust and discouragement and business apprehensions are the causes of the present business troubles in the United States.

Last fall the democratic journals ascribed the labor troubles at Homestead, Pa., to the tariff, which they claimed excessively stimulated manufacturing enterprise and caused overproduction. They worked for a change of administration along such lines as this, and won through the votes of workingmen. We are now experiencing a trying period of business depression which most Republican papers ascribe in part to uncertainty among manufacturers as to the action of the Democratic on the tariff question. The Democratic press as a whole has remained remarkably silent about the tariff and over-stimulation since the depression in business began, but occasionally a Democratic editor puts on his "thinking cap" and tries to fit the old theory to present circumstances. The editor of the Boston Herald is one of these. He says high tariffs are to industry in manufacturing what hot-beds are to agriculture they cause unnatural growth and oversupply the market. First business is lively, and things seem to boom, then comes a time when there are goods in great quantity for which there is no market. The editor of the New Orleans Picayune takes this same view, and advances the old argument of last fall that the tariff is responsible for the present business troubles.

The fallacy of such argument is quickly shown by citing the depressed conditions of things in free trade England. Perhaps the British markets and industries would brighten if we were to remove our tariffs; but what about our own industries? The Democrats evidently believe that our people would be better off with wages at the pauper European level through competition with foreign manufacturers. But workingmen think differently, despite their error in voting for a change last fall.

Hope Falls News: An incident befell Sheriff Myers recently that illustrates perfectly the proverb, "Everything comes to him who waits." About five o'clock one morning he was driving along the country road, when he suddenly came upon a tree that had fallen in such a position as to render it impossible to pass, and it so happened that it was in a locality where he could not retrace his steps and complete his journey by any other road, and he had no ax, and there was no house in a long distance. If he waited another team might not pass that way in a half a day, but he concluded to wait just a hour and if no one came at the end of that time he'd give it up and return home. The minutes began to lengthen, the sun was just glinting the tops of the tall trees, the night dews were glistening on the leaves, the horse munched the brush and stamped flies; Frank nodded and was presently adding a healthy snore to the morning notes; a squirrel ran chattering up a tree near by and winked down from a limb at the big man in the buggy; a blue-jay balanced on a bush near the roadside, scratching his bill with one claw as he eyed curiously the snoring figure in the buggy. The minutes were speeding away; five more and the hour would be up, and just then there was the rattle of a wagon and a hearty voice: "Hello, there! What's the matter?" The new comer had an ax, and in half an hour the road was clear. "Everything comes to him who waits," though Frank as he resumed his drive.

An Old Restriction.

At a recent exhibition of modern paintings in Germany the subjoined announcement was posted up:

"TAKE NOTICE!

"In order that the effect of the pictures may not be totally lost, or at least partially impaired, by the loud and glaring colors of ladies' dresses, the managers have decided to issue the following regulations:

"The galleries are only opened to visitors dressed in white, black, or violet. Gray has the privilege of being admitted at a reduced entrance fee. Violet is admitted free of charge. Persons wearing the national colours are refused admission.

"The public are requested to observe the above rules in the interest of art and artists, and be particular to appear in violet. THE MANAGERS."

A Brutal Cart Driver.

A deaf and dumb boy who was playing with a companion in Berlin got pushed off the pavement into the road and ran over by a cart, which broke his arm. The driver pulled up, and the boy lay between the front and hind wheels almost unconscious with pain and unable to get up, and of course could not hear the man call to him to rise. The brutal driver did not wait till the boy could be helped from under the wheels, but calling out, "Well, then, stop where you are, you offal," drove on, the back wheel passing over the child's legs. The driver escaped, and the poor child had to be carried to the hospital, where it was found that his right arm and thigh were broken.

Woman's Work.

It is well to call attention to the fact that in surgery the peaceful arts, such as home-making, tailoring, gleaning, milling, cooking, spinning, weaving and the like, belong to women. Many of the stone implements and pottery vessels recovered from the mounds and graves are found with skeletons of females. In the study of culture, therefore, the work of women cannot be overlooked.

Tricks of Trade.

Gibraltar is a free port; and, as one might suppose, a good deal of smuggling goes on across the Spanish lines. It was suspected somehow that a good deal of lace was being brought across duty free. There was a lady who was in the habit of driving to and fro with an invalid husband in a carriage; and she seemed to devote the utmost attention to her wifely duties. Her conduct was greatly admired, until one some suspicion falling on this exemplary person, her carriage was stopped and searched. The poor sufferer proved to be a dummy, made up of nothing but bundles of lace.

In South Africa it is the Kaffir girls who demand references from the women who desire to engage them as domestics. Curing Rheumatism by Bodily Electricity

For years I was a sufferer from rheumatism. I tried every known remedy. At last I received some relief from an application of electricity. This gave me an idea and I resolved to utilize the electricity that is in every man's body and give it a chance to get out. I had my boots made with a copper wire running the length of the sole and drawn through the center of the heel, so that its end is exposed to the ground or pavement, thus making a ground wire to carry off the surplus fluid in the body, and since that day I have never had a twinge of rheumatism, nor has any person whom I have induced to try this simple if scientific remedy.

American Pearls.

It is a rare thing to find a really lustrous pearl in an American oyster, but a great many such pearls are found in the common fresh water mussel. The pearl-bearing mussel is distributed over a wide area in the United States, and extremely valuable mussel pearls have been found in New Jersey, Ohio, Tennessee and several other states. An occasional black pearl of some value is found in the native oyster.

—Jas. B. Parsons left yesterday for Chicago and the East for the winter.

—Dr. A. N. Stone Elgin Ill.,—hay fever—Pontaluna City House,—old sweetser—nice fellow.

—E. W. Coulter, in charge of the Ferry seed business here, has brought his family, and occupies a residence near the warehouse.

—The City of Charlevoix with her $10 round trip rate and quick time to Chicago, is getting crowds of World's Fair visitors.

—Mrs. Geo. E. Bond, of Chicago, is the guest of Mrs. Capt. Duncan. Mrs. H. Carpenter, Mrs. Ida Emrey and the rest of the girls.

—At Concert hall Chicago resort, Monday evening Mrs. Carpenter, of Grand Rapids, delivered a highly interesting lecture on "Wagner."

—Yesterday the Congregational Sunday school had a picnic at the park, and four omnibus loads of them took a ride in the country.

—Your Uncle Richard Knight don't have to be street commissioner but he likes to be busy, and he takes a pride in Charlevoix, which makes him just the man for the place.

—The well contractors are progressing with their work. The pipe is down about 150 feet, and begins to move slowly. It is the general opinion that the work is in the right hands.

—Your Uncle Richard Knight don't have to be street commissioner but he likes to be busy, and he takes a pride in Charlevoix, which makes him just the man for the place.

—Andrew Dougherty, late a clerk in the interior department at Washington, was in town last week, calling on his many friends. He goes to Oklahoma to settle down in the practice of law.

—Hugh Vaughn and Arthur Milwent to Harbor Springs Monday to undergo final examination before the State board of pharmacy. Mr. Vaughn has been employed by Dower & Barber, of Petoskey.

—The U. S. steamer Hancock was in port Friday, with Col. Ludlow on board. The Colonel was making an inspection of the harbor, and we may soon expect improvements to be made on the dilapidated revetment.

—Dr. Duncan McLeod, a brother of A. J. McLeod, of this place, has been elected health officer of the City of Detroit, at a salary of $4,000. The SENTINEL personally knows that Dr. "Dune" is worthy of the appointment.

—The "Consumas," under the direction of Mrs. Foster, last Wednesday evening, was one of the most pleasing home entertainments ever staged in Charlevoix. Every feature of it was most entertaining, and bespoke for the directress abundant praise. There was very little of music, but those effect forces of grace and beauty touched chords of melody in this soul that are ringing still. It was a continuous series of stage pictures of living figures and bright colors, brought to a perfection of grace by a skilled Detroitian hand. Where there was so much excellence it is difficult to review properly the many features of the program. Probably the most classic feature was the series of groupings in which Mrs. Foster personally participated with several young ladies of the resort. That which was the most pleasing to the average eye was the fan drill, in which graces of form was beautifully blended with cunning of movements. Our own young ladies did themselves great credit in this number. But the "Lullaby" number, given under the direction of Mrs. Inlow, with a bevy of bright little chicks, comforted the heart as did no other part of the entertainment, and brought a silent wind blown the little ones" from more than one pair of lips. The beautiful nursery song and chorus by Mrs. Inlow's three little children was the sweetest and cutest thing ever produced by professional or amateur on Lewis' stage, and the Mexilliemys' Kindergarten has charmed a Charlevoix audience more than once. The entertainment was given under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church and was financially a success.

What Has the Railroad Done for Charlevoix?

A retrospect of the first year of the history of Charlevoix as a railroad town, furnishes a very satisfactory showing.

For those who expected a boom to arrive on the first train, and boomlets to follow by the car-load, there may be a tinge of disappointment. There are such.

But to the reasonably conservative mind, the benefits that have accrued to us by reason of the railroad, have been satisfactory.

It is true, that, so far as direct fruits are concerned, the harvest has but just begun. But the tangible benefits are here, and they are here to stay. They are cumulative and augmentive.

Lindsay Park is a direct result of the railroad. Its influence upon the growth of Charlevoix, or rather, its potency as a part of it, may easily be seen. The influence behind it means growth and enterprise.

The Pine Lake transfer dock brings to our waters the bulk of the hardwood cut of the Intermediate Valley, and means busy tugs and employment for men.

The Ferry seed warehouse means the marketing here of one of the most profitable and prolific of Northern Michigan crops.

The advantages offered fishermen for quick shipment means, and already shows, the enlargement of that industry here.

The Williams bowl factory, now practically in process of construction, means a market for hardwood timber and employment for laborers.

It is the observation of not a few that Charlevoix has thus far realized more and greater permanent benefit from the railroad extension than has any other town on its line. We are enjoying steady and substantial growth.

Why should it not be so? Charlevoix has natural advantages far superior to those of any other Northern Michigan town. It has a fine harbor, and is the outlet of a navigable interior. Its facilities for shipping are vastly superior to any town where there is but one method of shipment.

Charlevoix only requires the awakening of citizens to the importance of a greater degree of public spirit, and the future of Charlevoix is assured.

The Ferry Seed Warehouse.

The big Ferry seed warehouse is about completed, and the pea crop is coming in rapidly.

Perhaps you have not thought of it, but this enterprise, although it did not come heralded by a brass band, is one of great importance to Charlevoix. A grain elevator or a working mill of the same capacity would not be more potent in its effect than will this plant.

The present season has been unfavorable to the pea crop, but Mr. Coulter tells us that he expects to handle 15,000 bushels. With favorable conditions he expects to handle from 25,000 bushels upward each season.

These peas have to be cleaned, sorted, re-sacked and re-shipped. The establishment of the plant not only means a large sum of money paid out to the farmers, but it means the use of dinner pails.

—Wm. Tooley goes to Traverse City to live.

—John Williams swears that Dan Duke is a white man. The runaway incident in which one of Williams' horses was killed is familiar to our readers. Last week Mr. Duke called at the barn, unsolicited, and paid for the horse.

—The Democrat pleads ignorance of the SENTINEL's meaning in the recent whitewash item. The editor can easily ascertain its meaning by a little inquiry. The case still exists, and waits for attention as much as ever. Tramps, vagr and loons are but enough, but a wife beater in a civilized community should not be tolerated.

—Somebody has started a cock-and-bull story about Trustee Harris being disqualified for office because his bounds outside the corporation. Mr. Harris will continue to act on the Common Council, and he will not change his boarding place. Let somebody make a test case of it, and then it is time to talk about disqualification.

—Why not have a roaring good Fourth of July celebration at the park during the Indian summer days, and make it the occasion of a tree to clean out the grounds? It could be made a most enjoyable occasion, and our beautiful resort would be greatly improved and increased in value and usefulness. We propose a good old fashioned picnic for some day in the Autumn

A Hellish Crime.

The foulest offense in the criminal annals of Charlevoix county was committed near East Jordan last Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. McGonegal a lady about 80 years of age, who, with her husband lives a short distance from town, was alone and about her household work. A stranger appeared in the house, and in a very arrogant manner compelled the old lady to cook him a meal, meantime ascertaining that she was alone.

After eating, he followed Mrs. McGonegal to the yard and there brutally outraged her. The tramp then started toward East Jordan. James McGonegal, the old lady's son, soon returned, and, learning the facts, went to East Jordan and swore out a warrant. The scoundrell was found and lodged in jail. He gave his name as Charles E. Warner.

Talk of lynching was so freely indulged in that deputy sheriffs went to East Jordan to meet the emergency should it arise. On Monday morning, on motion of the prisoner's counsel, Mr. Clink, the examination was adjourned to Sept. 15th.

Those Contounded Bicycles Again.

The Charlevoix Bicycle Club, which embraces in its membership some of our best and handsomest young men, as well as some who are further along in years and old enough to know better, is doing what no other organization of its kind in the State, outside of Detroit, has done.

It has leased the "Crouter 40," just outside the corporation, on the north side, and have let a contract to Geo. Burns to build a ½-mile track, the same to be completed by Sept. 10th. Considerable work has already been done.

The track will be eliptical in shape, and will be about 20 feet wide. The soil is said to be of a good hard track, and the boys expect to have some fun on it during the coming fall.

A Question of Title.

A suit is now pending in the circuit court which will settle the long disputed ownership of the 40-acre lot in this township which lies just across the corporation line on the north side.

Dr. Crouter claims to have ironclad quit-claim deeds from the Indian heirs, and therefore perfect title. It seems that antecedent claims have bobbed up to disturb the equilibrium of the Doctor.

Messrs. Cruickshank and Eaton have been retained as counsel by the alleged new-y discovered heirs, and interesting disclosures are impending.

The Bowl Factory.

Last week, Mr. G. G. Williams, of Griffith, Ind., our bowl factory man, arrived here and purchased the site selected by him last spring for his wooden-ware factory. It lies just south of the Ferry warehouse, and consists of about six acres.

Mrs. Williams is already taking up her machinery in Indiana, and they will be shipped here and put up immediately. The building is 60x60, and three stories high. The plant manufactures bowls and chair stuff, and will employ about 75 men.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids tomorrow resumes her old run on the Traverse City and Gladstone route. Men have been at work for the past few days tearing out the work that was put in for World's Fair excursion purposes.

There has been lying here windrotted since last Sunday a curious looking craft for these waters. It was the steamer Valley City of Grand Rapids, a stern paddle-wheel craft of the Ohio river style. She was built about a year ago for the river route between Grand Rapids and Grand Haven, but did not pay. She is being taken to Toledo.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.

CHARLEVOIX, AUGUST 23, 1893.

Crop prospects are excellent, not only in Michigan but throughout the country. With a splendid harvest in all the great staple productions, the stringency of the times will be very much mitigated.

A conservative estimate places the loss to the farmers of the United States, by reason of the fall in the price of wool, since Cleveland was elected, at over $25,000,000. A great many farmers who were hankering after "a change," one year ago, are now hankering just as intensely for another change.

A Cleveland organette declares that "Nothing short of the fact that the people have confidence in president Cleveland and counselors prevents a general panic and upsetting of things." It is really a good thing that the people have confidence, etc. But somehow they worried along pretty well before Cleveland took the helm, and there was no prospects that "things" would be upset until after the election of Cleveland became a assured fact.

One hundred thousand wage-earners out of employment in New York city alone is the direct result of five months of Democratic administration with "tariff reform" in prospect. During the campaign last year Democratic newspapers and orators promised the workingmen of the county greatly increased prosperity under a free trade administration. Now they tell them to have patience; that after they have been starved for a few years while the re-adjustment is taking place good times will come again with everything "cheap." The prospect is not a comforting one.

The speech of the democrat consul created joyful applause in Sheffield, England, a few days ago, not because he told the English manufacturers that the McKinley bill has been repealed, but because he read to them the democratic platform and then told them that the party was in power in the United States which had endorsed that platform. And that which to the business competitors of the American mills and factories seemed good cause glad rejoicing, to the owners and operators and employes of the American mill is as good cause for discouragement and business apprehension. And distrust and discouragement and business apprehension are the causes of the present business troubles in the United States.

Last fall the democratic journals ascribed the labor troubles at Homestead, Pa., to the tariff, which they claimed excessively stimulated manufacturing enterprise and caused overproduction. They worked for a change of administration along such lines as this, and won through the votes of workingmen. We are now experiencing a trying period of business depression which most Republican papers ascribe in part to uncertainty among manufacturers as to the action of the Democratic on the tariff question. The Democratic press as a whole has remained remarkably silent about the tariff and over-stimulation since the depression in business began, but occasionally a Democratic editor puts on his "thinking cap" and tries to fit the old theory to present circumstances. The editor of the Union Herald is one of these. He says high tariffs are to industry in manufacturing what hot-beds are to agriculture they cause unnatural growth and oversupply the market. First business is lively, and things seem to boom; then comes a time when there are goods in great quantity for which there is no market. The editor of the New Orleans Picayune takes this same view, and advances the old argument of last fall that the tariff is responsible for the present business troubles.

The fallacy of such argument is quickly shown by citing the depressed conditions of things in free trade England. Perhaps the British markets and industries would brighten if we were to remove our tariffs, but what about our own industries? The Democrats evidently believe that our people would be better off with wages at the pauper European level through competition with foreign manufactories. But workingmen think differently, despite their error in voting for a change last fall.

Hayes Falls News: An incident befell Sheriff Myers recently that illustrates perfectly the proverb, "Everything comes to him who waits." About five o'clock one morning he was driving along the country road, when he suddenly came upon a tree that had fallen in such a position as to render it impossible to pass, and it so happened that it was in a locality where he could not retrace his steps and complete his journey by any other road, and he had no ax, and there was no house in a long distance. If he waited another team might not pass that way in a half a day, but he concluded to wait just a hour and if no one came at the end of that time he'd give it up and return home. The minutes began to lengthen, the sun was just glinting the tops of the tall trees, the night dews were glistening on the leaves the horse munched the brush and stamped tires; Frank nodded and was presently adding a healthy snore to the morning notes; a squirrel was chattering up a tree near by and winked down from a limb at the big man in the buggy; a blue-jay balanced on a bush near the roadside, scratching his bill with one claw as he eyed curiously the snoring figure in the buggy. The minutes were speeding away; five more and the hour would be up, and just then there was the rattle of a wagon and a hearty voice: "Hello, there! What's the matter?" The new comer had an ax, and in half an hour the road was clear. "Everything comes to him who waits," through Frank as he resumed his drive.

An Odd Restriction.

At a recent exhibition of modern paintings in Germany the subjoined announcement was posted up:

"TAKE NOTICE!

"In order that the effect of the pictures may not be totally lost, or at least partially impaired, by the loud and glaring colors of ladies' dresses the managers have decided to issue the following regulations:

"The galleries are only opened to visitors dressed in white, black, or violet. Gray has the privilege of being admitted at a reduced entrance fee. Violet is admitted free of charge. Persons wearing the national costumes are refused admission.

"The public are requested to observe the above rules in the interest of art and artists, and be particular to appear in violet. THE MANAGERS."

A Brutal Cart Driver.

A deaf and dumb boy who was playing with a companion in Berlin got pushed off the pavement into the road and run over by a cart which broke his arm. The driver pulled up and the boy lay between the front and hind wheels almost unconscious with pain and unable to get up, and of course could not hear the man call to him to rise. The brutal driver did not wait till the boy could be helped from under the wheels, but calling out, "Well, then, stop where you are, you offal," drove on, the back wheel passing over the child's legs. The driver escaped, and the poor child had to be carried to the hospital, where it was found that his right arm and thigh were broken.

Woman's Work.

It is well to call attention to the fact that in savagery the peaceful arts, such as house-making, tailoring, gleaning, milling, cooking, spinning, weaving and the like, belong to women. Many of the stone implements and pottery vessels recovered from the mounds and graves are found with skeletons of females. In the study of nature, therefore, the work of women cannot be over-looked.

Tricks of Trade.

Gibraltar is a free port, and, as one might suppose, a good deal of smuggling goes on across the Spanish lines. It was suspected somehow that a good deal of lace was being brought across duty free. There was a lady who was in the habit of driving to and fro with an invalid husband in a carriage and she seemed to devote the utmost attention to her wifely duties. Her conduct was greatly admired, until on some suspicion falling on this examplary person, her carriage was stopped and searched. The poor sufferer proved to be a dummy, made up of nothing but bundles of lace.

Servant Girls in South Africa.

In South Africa it is the Kaffir girls who demand references from the women who look to engage them as domestics. It is not unusual to see some such advertisement as this in the papers: "Noble Mount of Gin-shop is willing to do very light housework in a family where no English servants are kept. Those who desire her assistance must be ready to furnish testimonials of good character. No others need apply."

Curing Rheumatism by Bodily Electricity

For years I was a sufferer from rheumatism. I tried every known remedy. At last I received some relief from an application of electricity. This gave me an idea and I resolved to utilize the electricity that is in every man's body and give it a chance to get out. I had my boots made with a copper wire running the length of the sole and drawn through the center of the heel, so that its end is exposed to the ground or pavement, thus making a ground wire to carry off the surplus fluid in the body, and since that day I have never had a twinge of rheumatism, nor has any person whom I have induced to try this simple if scientific remedy.

American Pearls.

It is a rare thing to find a really lustrous pearl in an American oyster, but a great many such pearls are found in the common fresh water mussel. The pearl-bearing mussel is distributed over a wide area in the United States, and extensive beds of mussel pearls have been found in New Jersey, Ohio, Tennessee and several other states. An occasional black pearl of some value is found in the native oyster.

—Mrs. M. J. Stockman returned from the East Friday.

—A. T. Washburne has a change of advertisement this week.

—Frank M. Sears went to Chicago on the schooner Sea Gem last week.

—Jas. B. Parsons left yesterday for Chicago and the East for the winter.

—Dr. A. N. Stone Elgin Ill.—hay fever—Fountain City House.—old sinner—nice fellow.

—Mrs. Geo. E. Bond, of Chicago, is the guest of Mrs. Capt. Finucan, Mrs. E. Carpenter, Mrs. Ida Emrey and the rest of the girls.

—At Concert hall Chicago resort, Monday evening Mrs. Carpenter, of Grand Rapids, delivered a highly interesting lecture on "Wagner."

—Yesterday the Congregational Sunday school had a picnic at the park, and four omnibus loads of them took a ride in the country.

—Your Uncle Richard Kolight don't have to be street commissioner but he likes to be busy, and he takes a pride in Charlevoix, which makes him just the man for the place.

—The well contractors are progressing with their work. The pipe is down about 150 feet, and expect to move slowly. It is the general opinion that the work is in the right hands.

—Andrew Dougherty, late a clerk in the Interior Department at Washington, was in town last week, visiting on his many friends. He goes to Oklahoma to settle down in the practice of law.

—Hugh Vaughn and Arthur Miller went to Marquette Saturday to undergo final examination before the State Board of Pharmacy. Mr. Vaughn has been employed by Bower & Barber, of Petoskey.

—The U. S. steamer Hancock was in port Friday, with Col. Lindlow on board. The Colonel was making an inspection of the harbor, and we may soon expect improvements to be made on the dilapidated revetment.

—Dr. Duncan McLeod, a brother of A. J. McLeod, of this place, has been elected house officer of the City of Detroit, at a salary of $1,000. The SENTINEL personally knows that Dr. McLeod is worthy of the appointment.

—The "Consordants," under the direction of Mrs. Foster, last Wednesday evening, was one of the most pleasing home entertainments ever staged in Charlevoix. Every feature of it was most entertaining, and bespoke for the directress abundant praise. There was very little of music, but it an almost forced grace and beauty touched echoes of melody in the soul that are ringing still. It was a continual series of stage pictures of living figures and bright colors, brought to a perfection of grace by a skilled Dettarian hand. Where there was so much excellence it is difficult to review properly the many features of the program. Probably the most classic feature was the series of groupings in which Mrs. Foster personally participated, with several young ladies of the resort. That which was the most pleasing to the average eye was the fan drill, in which grace of pose was beautifully blended with evidence of movement. Our own young ladies did themselves great credit in this number. But the "Lullaby" number, given under the direction of Mrs. Salsw, with a bevy of bright little chicks, touched the heart as did no other part of the entertainment, and brought a silent "God bless the little ones" from more than one pair of lips. The beautiful nursery song and chorus by Mrs. Bartlow's three little children was the sweetest and cutest thing ever produced by professional or amateur on Lewis' stage, and the Mickilinsky kindergarten has charmed a Charlevoix audience more than once. The entertainment was given under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church and was financially a success.

What Has the Railroad Done for Charlevoix?

A retrospect of the first year of the history of Charlevoix as a railroad town, furnishes a very satisfactory showing.

For those who expected a boom to arrive on the first train, and hoodoos to follow by the car-load, there may be a tinge of disappointment. There are such.

But to the reasonably conservative mind, the benefits that have accrued to us by reason of the railroad, have been satisfactory.

It is true, that, so far as direct freits are concerned, the harvest has but just begun. But the tangible benefits are here, and they are here to stay. They are cumulative and augmentive.

Lindsay Park is a direct result of the railroad. Its influence upon the growth of Charlevoix, or rather, its potency as a part of it, may easily be seen. The influence behind it means growth and enterprise.

The Pine Lake transfer dock brings to our waters the bulk of the hardwood cut of the Intermediate Valley, and means busy tugs and employment for men.

The Ferry seed warehouse means the marketing here of one of the most profitable and prolific of Northern Michigan crops.

The Williams bowl factory, now practically in process of construction, means a market for hardwood timber and employment for laborers.

It is the observation of not a few that Charlevoix has thus far realized more and greater permanent benefit from the railroad extension than has any other town on its line. We are enjoying steady and substantial growth.

Why should it not be so? Charlevoix has natural advantages far superior to those of any other Northern Michigan town. It has a fine harbor, and is the outlet of a large interior. Its facilities for manufacturing are vastly superior to any town where there is but one method of shipment.

Charlevoix only requires the awakening of its citizens to the importance of a greater degree of public spirit and the future of Charlevoix is assured.

The Ferry Seed Warehouse.

The big Ferry seed warehouse is being completed, and the pea crop is coming in rapidly.

Perhaps you have not thought of it, but this enterprise, although it did not come heralded by a brass band, is one of great importance to Charlevoix. A gain element of a thriving mill of the same capacity would not be more potent in its effect than will this plant.

The present season has been unfavorable to the pea crop, but Mr. Coulter tells us that he expects to handle 15,000 bushels. With favorable conditions he expects to handle from 50,000 bushels annually each season.

These peas have to be cleaned, sorted, re-sacked and reshipped. The establishment of the plant not only means a large amount of money paid out to the farmers, but it means the use of dinner pails.

—Wm. Tooey goes to Traverse City to live.

—John Williams swears that Dan Duke is a white man. The runaway incident in which one of Williams' horses was killed is familiar to our readers. Last week Mr. Duke called at the barn, unsolicited, and paid for the horse.

—The Democrat pleads ignorance of the SENTINEL's meaning in the recent whitewash item. The editor can easily ascertain its meaning by a little inquiry. The case still exists, and calls for attention as much as ever. Tramps, wage and tramp as they may, enough, but a wife beater in a civilized community should not be tolerated.

—Somebody has started a cock and bull story about Trustee Harris being disqualified for office because he boards outside the corporation. Mr. Harris will continue to act on the Common Council, and he will not change his boarding place. Let somebody make a test case of it, and then it is time to talk about disqualification.

—Why not have a running big corporation picnic in the park during the Indian summer days, and make it the occasion of a line to clean out the grounds? It could be made a most enjoyable occasion, and our beautiful resort would be greatly improved and improved in various and unfortunate ways. We propose a good old fashioned picnic for some day in the Autumn.

A Hellish Crime.

The foulest offense in the criminal annals of Charlevoix county was committed near East Jordan last Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. McGonegal a lady about 80 years of age, who, with her husband lives a short distance from town, was alone and about her household work. A stranger appeared in the house, and in a very arrogant manner compelled the old lady to cook him a meal, meantime ascertaining that she was alone.

After eating, he followed Mrs. McGonegal to the yard and there brutally outraged her. The tramp then started toward East Jordan. James McGonegal, the old lady's son, soon returned, and, learning the facts, went to East Jordan and swore out a warrant. The scoundrell was found and lodged in jail. He gave his name as Charles E. Warner.

Talk of lynching was so freely indulged in that deputy sheriffs went to East Jordan to meet the emergency should it arise. On Monday morning, on motion of the prisoner's counsel, Mr. Clink, the examination was adjourned to Sept. 15th.

Those Confounded Bicycles Again.

The Charlevoix Bicycle Club, which embraces in its membership some of our best and handsomest young men, as well as some who are further along in years and old enough to know better, is doing what no other organization of its kind in the State, outside of Detroit, has done.

It has leased the "Crouter 40," just outside the corporation, on the north side, and have let a contract to Geo. Burns to build a ⅝-mile track, the same to be completed by Sept. 15th. Considerable work has already been done.

The track will be eliptical in shape, and will be about 20 feet wide. The soil is suitable for a good hard track, and the boys expect to have some fun on it during the coming fall.

A Question of Title.

A suit is now pending in the circuit court which will settle the long disputed ownership of the 40-acre lot in this Township which lies just across the corporation line on the north side.

Dr. Crouter claims to have ironclad title to the property, in the Indian heirs, and therefore perfect title. It seems that antecedent heirs have lobbied up to disturb the equilibrium of title.

Messrs. Groeckbank and Eaton have been retained as counsel by the alleged newly discovered heirs, and sensational disclosures are impending.

The Bowl Factory.

Last week, Mr. G. G. Williams, of Griffith, Ind., our bowl factory man, arrived here and purchased the site selected by him last spring for his wooden-ware factory. It lies just south of the Ferry warehouse, and consists of about six acres.

Mrs. Williams is already taking down the machinery in Indiana, and they will arrive here and set up immediately. The building is 60x80, and three stories high. The plant manufactures bowls and chairs, and will employ about 75 men.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids to-morrow resumes her old run on the Traverse City and Gladstone route. Men have been at work for the past few days tearing out the work that was put in for World's Fair excursion purposes.

There has been lying here windbound since last Sunday a curious looking craft for these waters. It was the steamer Valley City, of Grand Rapids, a stern paddle-wheel craft of the Ohio river style. She was built about a year ago for the river route between Grand Rapids and Grand Haven, but did not pay. She is being taken to Toledo.

FIGHTING FISHERMEN

CANUCKS AND AMERICANS SHOW BAD BLOOD.

Iowa Democrats Again Choose Boies and Boston—Arkansas Sheriff Short—Shooting the Immigrants—Punished the Man Overboard—Cleveland Not Ill.

Told in a Few Words.

—Senator W. E. Chandler for American and Canadian commissioners, and a very bitter tirade pro and con against some of the negotiators. The other night a fierce fight took place in the streets in which Patrick Marr, of the Gloucester schooner Edna Parkman, was stabbed in the arm and back and probably fatally wounded, and another sailor was struck on the head with a hammer and still not recover for months. These outrages greatly embittered the feeling between the rival fishermen, and the Americans made open threats of retaliation, in consequence of which the long-idle military was called out and patrolled the streets. The feeling is very bitter and serious trouble is anticipated.

—The Iowa Democratic State Convention made the following nominations:

Governor, HORACE BOIES
Lieutenant Governor, E. H. HEACOCK
Judge Supreme Court, JOHN H. ROTHROCK
Railway Commissioner, J. P. KNOEFLER

For the third successive time Horace Boies, of Waterloo, was Wednesday nominated by the Democrats of Iowa for Governor, and for the third time, also, General E. Stevens, of Clinton, was chosen for the second place on the ticket. The platform, which three years ago had declared for a sound and stable currency, local option, and advocated the reform of State institutions, this Boies had published an open letter declaring he could take no part in a resolution, in Iowa, so strong that by many he was supposed to be one of the possibilities. But he couldn't stand the pressure brought to bear. And when it became generally known among the delegates Boies had signified that Boies had announced that he would not decline if it was the will of the majority that he should run, all talk of other candidates subsided, and the man who was the only one who was making a fight for the nomination, pulled out of the race when he saw the drift of things. When the delegates assembled to order there was not a vacant seat in the 1,114 occupied seats on the floor and there were hundreds of people crowded behind the executive chair. He was nominated by acclamation. Ex-Lieutenant Governor George E. Bulah, Mayor of Oskaloosa, was the only contestant with Mr. E. Boston, but the latter was on the first ballot by 662 to 449.

—Colquitt & Ft. Hipps, Sheriff of Miller County, Ark., has been found short in his accounts to the amount of $2,000. He turned over his bondsmen all his property and it is believed the money will be realized to pay off the amount due the county.

—A Kansas City dispatch from Hugoton says that Stan has paid the $5,000 fine imposed on him by Judge Foster in the Indictment Proceedings by trains in the city station. The French, the dispatch says, have violated the Fox-Hanover treaty by occupying the town of Chantilion.

—Charles Leonck, of Fredericksburg, Va., mate of the schooner John T. Ferguson, of Boston, was the result of a quarrel on that vessel. Joseph H. Spraitle, of Kingston, N. C., a colored deckhand, is under arrest. He admits that he pushed Leonck overboard. Spraitle discharged cotton while the schooner was coaling up the bay, and left works for the journey.

—The safe in Hays Brothers' store, at Hillsboro, Ill., was blown open by burglars and $10,000 in cash taken.

—By a vote of 35 to 8 the senate decided Lee Mantle was not entitled to a seat as a representative of Montana.

—C. D. Lyon, prosecuting attorney of Young County, Tex., is in jail for ordering his father, committed suicide.

—In her trip from Cuba the bark Lottie Marr encountered an earthquake, a field of lockerpa and has terrible scenes.

—The contents of 2,400 bottles of beer poured into a sewer in Omaha, Neb., by northwestern Kansas.

—George Ehl, twenty years of age, son of a prominent resident of Logansport, Ind., was drowned near Burdette's, on a lake Minnehaha, Minn. He was cut by a rowlock, which he injured in the body and.

—The creditors of Henry A. Hartley & Co., Boston, carpets, clothing, etc., met and could take no action on the firm on account of their inability to be present. The liabilities are stated to be $171,000 and the assets $100,000.

—The Countess of Thun, Princess of Schwarzenberg, has written a letter to the prominent women of great beauty and intellectual culture in Vienna, who have taken the lead in Vienna. Disappointment in love was the motive in every case of the three cases.

—The Chamberlain, committee of state of the Order of Chosen Friends, will be assessed at the Schwarzenberg mountain in Tyrol decided against the overtures of a charter and disappointed. Success is impossible.

—The Argentine rebels have captured the town of Corrientes without a blow, the garrison retiring to Join Colonel Arcana's forces. The rebels afterward left the town and attacked and defeated Argos after six hours' battle.

—A special from Wellington, Mr., says Mrs. Mary Landrum, living a mile and a half from Wellington, died of sporadic cholera. The attending physician, who passed through two epidemics, says enough sporadic cholera passed death.

—Private Secretary Thurber, when asked regarding the report that the President was suffering from Bright's disease, unhesitatingly stated that there was absolutely no truth in the report, and when asked if the big guest at health stated there was nothing organic the matter with the President.

—The Chicago & Railway, N. J. has been left $1,000,000 by a gentleman whose name can be assumed through a severe illness.

—Seven persons, including Herbert Ingalls, Marion Superintendent for the Canada Company, were drowned in the Niagara River.

—William Goss, of Bowrie Spring, Pa., got drunk at the Lutherans reunion held at Harrisburg, and was placed in the lock-up. He then fell from the lock-up and he was crushed, and was fatally burned before rescued. The lodge was entirely destroyed.

CRIME AND CASUALTY.

—A beast tried robbing Colonel Pawnee, per Agent Pond, of the Wisconsin Central, near Oconto, Wis., and he's charging over.

—Charles Wallace, a negro who cut a white boy's throat in order to secure $5 was tracked near Mt. Sterling, Ky.

He committed the act while in a fit of mental aberration, but a decision to end his life, but could not stand the mental strain and financial distress.

—A New York sub wrecked the saloon of Charles Mazza, who had refused all to buy liquor from an early morning fire.

—William Myles, a Cincinnati banker, was drowned near Thousand Island Park, in the St. Lawrence River, his yacht being run down by a steamboat.

—New York City was visibly wa., visited by a terrific storm.

—Receiving officers say that the prevailing hard times are driving a large number of men to enlist in the army. There are now only 154 vacancies, while usually the army is about three thousand short of the maximum limit of 25,000.

—William Hinkford, one of the white caps who brutally whipped William Hayth and his wife at Jasper, Ind., has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $10.

THE FIRE RECORD.

—At Atlantic City, N. J., fire destroyed the school Opera House, city hall, and 200 feet of the Pennsylvania Railroad depot and platform. The loss is estimated at about $75,000, with not over $5,000 insurance.

—A block of tenement houses in Brooklyn was destroyed. Several persons were injured by jumping from windows.

—Harry Sun & Morrow's business stable building at Nashua, N. H., was destroyed by fire Monday morning. The contagious epidemic among the horses in the city and in the vicinity, occasion was saved the buildings and threatening the big horse into Indianapolis. Several firemen were injured or overcome by the heat. The unroofed line falls on Sister Ann & Morrow whose hard-water-house block cost $15,000, and Hartwell's drug store, fully insured, fire destroyed a large part of the business houses in Troy, Mo. Among the buildings burned were Westfall's Hardware, Hartwell's drug store, Smith's saloon, Wood's saloon, Key's grocery, Tribble's saloon, the city calaboose and barber shop, together with several vacant buildings. The loss is over $25,000, partly covered by insurance.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—John Logan Chipman, member of Congress for the first District of Michigan, died at Harper's Hotel, at Detroit, Thursday morning, aged 49 years. He had been ill with pneumonia for three weeks. J. Logan Chipman was born in Detroit in 1846. He was graduated from the University of Michigan, Judge of the Superior court of Detroit in 1877 and held that position until he resigned to take his seat in the Fifth Congress, and has served in the latter position ever since.

—John W. Gardner, the painter, a member of the National Academy of Design, died and an associate since 1859, in Iowa.

FROM WASHINGTON.

—The following report bill was introduced in the senate Thursday by Senator Voorhees: Bill to amend by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, that so much of the act approved July 31, 1894, entitled "An act for the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," as directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase from the producers of domestic silver bullion the amount of 4,500,000 ounces, or so much thereof as may be offered in each month at the market price thereof, not exceeding fifty cents for ninety ounces of fine silver, in payment for such purchase. Treasury notes of the United States, be and the same is hereby repealed; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the policy of the United States shall be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States in the markets and in the payment of debts.

—Speaker Crisp has announced his committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Springer is expected to succeed Mr. Chairman of the Ways and Means committee, vice Mr. Wilson, of West Virginia, who is defeated for renomination. Mr. Springer is the ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means, next to Mr. Wilson, and is the author of the Springer bill, which passed the house last session, providing for the issue of bonds to the amount of the current deficit of the Treasury, and which failed to have the support of the senate. Mr. Springer is a very popular man with his colleagues, and his appointment to the place is regarded as a fitting recognition of his long and faithful service in the house. Mr. Springer is a Democrat, and a strong protectionist, and is a very popular man with his colleagues, and his appointment to the place is regarded as a fitting recognition of his long and faithful service in the house. The new chairman of the Ways and Means committee is a man of great ability, and is the very choice of protection men as evidence that demand for the protection of American industries has not been yet overcome. Which proves of decrease in visible supplies, and of increase in receipts are not large, stock on hand is far beyond the power of speculators to carry with paper market in their present condition. The movement of corn is slow, and the trade, with crop prospects improving.

THEY DEMAND WORK.

GREAT MASS MEETING OF UNEMPLOYED IN CHICAGO.

Nearly Five Thousand Men Out of Employment Gather About an Express Wagon, Near the Statue of Columbus, and Listen to Speeches from Their Leaders.

Labor Blamers Capital.

There was a great mass meeting of the unemployed on the Lake Front, in Chicago, the other day. The men decided to march to the City Hall, carrying the banners of their various unions, and demand work of the city. This was agreed upon in the form of a resolution, and was adopted amid ringing cheers. The unemployed assembled near the Columbus statue in response to a call from the Allied Woodworkers' Trades Council. E. O. Cochran, president and president of the council, rising an express wagon as a speaker's stand, stated the object of the assembly to be to consider what the unemployed workmen of Chicago should do in the present crisis. Mr. Cochran said there were of different nationalities were introduced, by Mr. Cochran, as follows:

A resolution was adopted demanding the remedy of the law, the enactment, so they consider it a relic of one of the worst judicial notions that ever disgraced the history of civilization. Resolutions were also adopted denouncing the capitalistic class and demanding relief from the present Congress.

DROPPED TO DEATH.

Terrible Accident on the Atlantic and Dunkirk Road Near Niles, Ills.

A Danville, Va., dispatch tells of an awful accident which occurred at the 250 o'clock in the morning, by which two people were killed and one sleeper were precipitated into the Dan River. The train was a long one, killing seven persons outright and injuring a number of others. The train bound for Portsmouth left Danville at 1:30 o'clock, and at 2:30 o'clock in the morning, by some means the rear sleeper was precipitated into the Dan River

A GEORGIA STORY.

Seven Hungry Men and Lady Lunch at a Barbecue.

At a recent barbecue in Southwest Georgia one strange and hungry-looking man were seen huddled together in a corner of the woods remote from the big crowd.

But now and then, while the "veracasses" were roasting in the pits, one of the men would come forward, get a whiff of the savory meats and return to his disconsolate companions.

No one seemed to know the men—they were strangers to all, and yet they had the appearance of farmers who had raised a big crop of cotton at six cents.

But everybody knew them after tax horn blew for dinner.

With a mad rush those hungry-looking men made for the table and with wild eyes and open mouths they went to work.

Shoulder after shoulder of beef disappeared, the men devouring everything in sight.

The crowd stood amazed and forgot that it was hungry, too. Those savvy lank men were the attraction, and it was not until they could eat no more, and had crawled off to rest—or die, the people were remembered where they were—and that they had appetites.

The chief of the barbecue approached the men, and in a faint voice asked:

"Where did you fellers come from, and when did you eat before you struck this neighborhood?"

One of the men answered:

"We come from th'is county, but we've been a-ridin' an' hungry. We jes heard that the war was over, an' that Sherman was givin' out rations, an' so we thought we'd git some."

The chief of the barbecue fainted, and they carried him from the field more dead than alive.

AN INDIAN'S REVENGE.

He Forced the Joker to Eat Dirty Maple Sugar.

A Wisconsin lumberman told an amusing story the other day. In one of the lumber camps of that state there was a cook who was much bothered by a certain Indian, who was always "homesick," or hungry. One day the cook determined that he would fix him. He came around and brought his appetite as usual. That night the cook had soup—gallons of soup. The buck happened in after supper and there was plenty of soup left. The buck was given a large basin full, which he quickly devoured. The cook filled him up again and said "Eat." The Indian looked surprised, but he continued the soup. The cook filled the basin again. The buck shook his head. The cook seized a huge carving knife and leaning toward his guest, again commanding him to eat. The Indian again went to the bottom of the basin. He was so full of soup that he was nearly ready to burst. He left shortly after and never came again. This was the cook's inning—the Indian's came later.

One spring day, two years later, the same cook took a friend with him to an Indian camp to witness the process of making maple sugar. All at once the Indian who had been so liberally supplied with soup appeared. He seemed very glad to see his old friend, the cook. He presented him with a huge piece of maple sugar. The cook tasted it, dirty though it was, out of courtesy, and handed it back. Now came the Indian's inning. He forced that cook to eat so much maple sugar that he was sick for a week, and has had a prejudice against it ever since.

TWIN SOULS.

If a scholar has little money for books he should expend it mostly for works of reference, and so get a lasting return for his outgo. So seems to have thought a young man of whom an exchange tells a story. The agent for a new encyclopedia called upon the aforesaid young man, and began to set forth the great merits of the work. "No," said the young man, "I don't need it. I have an encyclopedia already." "Which one is it?" inquired the canvasser. The young man could not remember. Neither could he tell who published it; but it was a fine work, in many large and uncut volumes. "Do you ever use them?" asked the agent. "Certainly—almost every day. "In what line?" "Oh, I press my trousers with them. They are solid-ful for that."

TWO DUCAL OCULISTS.

Carl Theodor, of Bavaria, is Only Associated by His Daughter.

Duke Carl Theodor of Bavaria, is a most charitable man and an extremely clever oculist. He has established three hospitals for persons suffering from diseases of the eyes—one at Merano, one at the Tegernsee, and one at Munich. He makes no charges for poor patients, but at the door there is a box into which those who can afford it are expected to place contributions for the good of the poor of the place.

The duke, who is a general in the Bavarian army, was born in 1816, and is a brother of the empress of Austria. In 1874 he married as his second wife the Princess Maria Joseph of Braganza, who assists him in his charitable work. His oldest daughter by his second marriage is the Duchess Sophie, who was born in February, 1875. She has inherited her father's skill, and is his principal assistant in his work as an oculist.

The duke always enters his consulting room by 7 o'clock in the morning and the young duchess takes by share in soothing the sufferers, and enters with enthusiasm into the charitable work.

As an example of the duke's skill, he recently removed a splinter of iron from the eye of an iron-turner, an operation which has defied the skill of several other oculists. The duke is the heir presumptive to the throne of the palatinate of Bavaria, as his elder brother, Ludwig, who married a commoner, has renounced his right.

STANFORD'S HORSES.

How He Revolutionized the Horse-Breeding of the Country.

In employing men to work at Palo Alto, Senator Stanford gave them the most strict orders. They were told never to strike, kick, or whip a horse, and his instructions to his men were: "Always do a thing a little better than anybody else, and you will succeed. When you handle a horse, treat him a little better than any one else. When you breed a horse, breed him to a little better stock each time."

It was in this way that Stanford revolutionized the horse-breeding of the country. He never allowed one of his men to ill-use a horse, and they knew it. There are never noise or blows around the Palo Alto stables and the horses are never frightened. To show his feeling toward his horses, the late Henry Vroman once told of an occurrence when he was dining with Senator Stanford. Just after dinner one of the drivers insisted that he must see the senator. He was ushered in, with blood over his face, which was badly cut. "John knocked me down," explained the man, referring to one of the trainers.

"What did you do?" asked the senator.

"Nothing," replied the man.

"But you must have done something; I want the truth," persisted the senator.

"I kicked a horse and John knocked me down," said the man.

"Those were John's instructions, and I think he did just right," said the senator.

A Madagascar Wedding.

A splendid wedding was celebrated at the Madagascar capital recently, the parties to which were the son of the prime minister and the favorite niece of an ex-foreign minister. One hundred slaves owned by the bridegroom attended, dressed in picturesque livery of white and blue. The bride, a coal-black negress, was arrayed in a Paris robe of great magnificence. The wedding took place in the royal chapel and was followed by a banquet and ball in a large tent on the king's grounds. The day following, in accordance with an ancient custom, the bride and bridegroom visited the queen and presented her with a plaster. The festivities continued for several days.

AGAINST A BREAKER.

The Ambitious Brewer Who Couldn't Follow at That Hole.

Dmitry Yawoff, the head and front of the imperial Russian troupe of singers and dancers from St. Petersburg, is a man of impressible spirit and exceedingly adaptable to temperament. When he arrived in Chicago he had been only two days in America, yet he was already engaged in a game of billiards, or rather world-to-world, with a man who is the champion billiard player of the English language.

Like all Russians Yawoff balked on the learning of the language as a mere bagatelle, and before his first week in Chicago was over he felt that the English language had been taken captive by his—phrase, idiom and syllable. One evening he was standing in the rear part of the Trocadero auditorium, talking to Dr. Zegfeld, in the same little group with Mr. Robinson of the Tycoons board of directors, and Mr. Kirke La Shelle, press representative. Presently Dr. Zegfeld was called away for a moment, and Mr. Robinson, feeling that omnipotency was due to say something, turned to Yawoff and inquired:

"Getting so you understand and English pretty well?"

Yawoff caught the words "understand" and "English," and replied with lofty superiority and a magnificent flourish:

"Shoot! Shoot!"

Wherewith La Shelle took aim by the arm confident ally and said:

"Do you believe the molecular hypothesis reducible to ordinary comprehension by means of the differential calculus?"

"Ha!" said Yawoff, somewhat staggered.

The question was repeated.

"Oh!" said Yawoff, smiling blandly, perfectly satisfied with this explanation. "You spoke quick!"

The Secret of Old Age.

M. Jules Simon has discovered the secret of old age, and he has formulated the recipe in two words—intellectual work. Nothing, he declares, helps so materially to conserve physical strength, as mental employment, and in proof of this theory he points out that the French Institute is a perfect congregation of hale and hearty octogenarians. In the history of Moral Sciences alone there are Barthelemy Saint Hilaire, Vacherot, Franck, Dareau, Lacombe, Bavaisson and Beaisse, all living their eighth decade through laborious and productive days.

CALLING UP TRAVELERS.

A Dream of Odd Experiences in Western Texas.

Every traveling man has had his experience with the intelligent bell boy who "calls" for the early train.

"I was pounding my ear pretty lustily one night in a Texarkana hotel," said a Texas man, "when a big thumping on my door brought me up sitting on bed.

"'What is it?' I asked.

"'Road' said the darky. 'Is you de man what wants to go on de 5 o'clock train to Big Sandy?'

"I had left no call and I made that darky understand so in a few short words. He tackled the next door, and I heard him ask again:

"'Is you de man what wants to go on de 5 o'clock train to Big Sandy?'

"The answer was terrific. The darky was a-road. For about five minutes he was still, as, if absorbed in thought. Then I heard him say to himself in an argumentative tone:

"'Dat's some 'un in dis hall who wants to go on de 5 o'clock train to Big Sandy. I don forget de number.'

"He went down the line repeating the performance at seven doors before he reached the man who wanted to go on the 5 o'clock train to Big Sandy."

An Illinois man thought he could parallel this evidence of sagacity. He said:

"I stopped one night in the hotel at Shawneetown, and left a call for the boat, which was reported along about 4 a. m. I went to bed and slept peacefully until the racket at the door aroused me.

"'All right,' I said.

"'Mr. Jones! Mr. Jones!' sang out the darky. 'You wanted to catch de Padooky boat?' Well, dey ain't no use of you getting up. De boat's don gone, sah.'"

An American race.

Archbishop Ireland has presented the national museum at the City of Mexico with a stone head of an idol which, until its discovery by some Catholic missionaries a short time ago, was still being worshiped by the Indians in the state of Morelos. The stone is a relic of immense size, covered with a crocodile's hide.

BLACKENED SILVER.

It is Generally Found in Rubber Goods Money Drawers.

A gentleman in Boston dropped into a rubber goods store to make a purchase was offered some very black-looking silver quarters and half dollars in change for the bill he threw down in payment. He looked at the change for such a dubious way that the cashier of the establishment laughed and remarked: "You have an idea, like many others, who come in here, that the money may be bad. Don't you know that contact upon all silver money in a place like this is to turn it black? Even silver watches become so tarnished and pay little or no time there. When you see black-looking money it's even chances that it has been passed in a store like this."

The gentleman was astonished, but which was not so funny to a friend of mine who had a store up in the country. His grocery and dry goods goods are sold, from dry goods and groceries, to manufacturer and farmer. Well, my friend got a lot of coffee packed in a brown paper sack with his stock of silverware, and in a few days thereafter he found that the second handed that he couldn't sell it for fifty cents on the dollar. He didn't know what was the matter until a drummer came along and gave him some advice, which was well heeded after that. If you have any new silver money you want to give an antique appearance to, just leave it here for a while."

KISSING FESTIVAL.

Queer Annual Fair at Heimagen and the Strange Origin Alleged.

Heimagen, a Bavarian country town of 1,700 inhabitants, holds its annual fair on the front of its Theatre. On this occasion the place swarms with newly married brides from sixty or eighty miles round the district; widows who have taken fresh husbands—widowers, too, and young women in festive attire, and generally attended by their mothers-in-law carry jugs of wine unwoundled with flowers in their hands. Young men everyone they meet, and after-ward present the jug to his lips for a "sip." The individual kiss is a very common and gift on the fair Cybele. Not to partake of the proffered wine is regarded as an insult to the young wife and her family. Some say that it dates back to the time when the Turks made frequent raids in Transylvania, and carried away the young women they could lay hands on. Such of them as got free to escape from captivity, returned to Heimagen at the time of the fair, blessed their friends and relatives, and even strangers who congratulated them on their wonderful deliverance.

Order of Hearing, Final Account.

State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate office in the Village of Boyne City, on the 7th day of August, A. D. 1893. Present, Hon. Jas. Bennett, Judge of Probate.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

BY LEON LEWIS.

"I will now tell you who the young man is," said Helen, creasing his chair closer to his daughter. "His name is Ralph Hamilton."

"Ralph Hamilton! Any relation to the Hamiltons whose ship you sailed in?"

"Yes, the only son of that Hamilton. I am that I have not talked to you in vain about my and your wrongs and his family. This youth is now on his way around the world, hoping he is a great bonnie of papers by which his identity is perfectly established. I do not know exactly how he got into his present fix, but I am going to town soon to make inquiries, and in the meantime I can guess about how it was.

"In what kind of a fix is he?"

"He has been waylaid—probably with me as to robbery, as his pocket-book is gone, his watch, and we are and in the struggle he has received a blow on the head that has utterly destroyed his memory. You've heard of similar cases, where the madness of blows have fall of them. He don't know anything about himself and his history. He is all a blank to him—his past, who he is and where he is. He don't even know his own name.

Alma looked shocked.

"He's an idiot, then!" she murmured.

"No, nothing of the kind. He has sense, but he memory, forgetting how to read, forgetting his friends—even his sweetheart. If he imagine he is crazy. He has the same tastes and judgments as before his injury. He is fine, he is in fact the same man as before, except in so far as regards memory and its various offices and connections."

"How sad!" exclaimed Alma. "He must be a noble fellow."

"The very thing!" returned Dollie. "That expression describes him perfectly. Yet he still has the airs and manners of a cultivated gentleman, doing from habit and instinct what he has been accustomed to do from boyhood.

He unrooted briefly how Dollie had fallen in with Ralph, and all the circumstances so far as known, and of which the sufferer had come into his keeping.

"And, now he is here," concluded Dollie, "we will do what we can to repay him for his kindness to us. Three or four days the poor fellow will be physically well, but his mind probability his past will continue a blank to him. He will know his own name, and you must teach him his history, and all his relations to living again, and study geography and history with him.

"In a word, make a name for him in his new basis. And, while you are thus engaged, I am sure you will find it pleasant to do, you will at least win the young man's gratitude, and most likely his affection, and so become his wife. And once you are his wife, I will soon fly make a pretense of discovering who and where is the man who robbed them to each other. As you and your husband will be the chief sufferers by the merchant's vast wealth, you have a right to do so. Now, what do you say?"

"I think it can be carried out," answer Alma, as a look of energy and resolution mantled her face. "At least, I will do all I can to make it so."

A few details established a full understanding and harmony between the father and daughter, and they settled with impatience the moment of Ralph's awakening to enter upon their perfidious conspiracy.

At the end of two or three hours a stir in the little bedroom announced that the sufferer was awake, and in an instant Dollie was hovering over him.

"You feel better now, sir?"

"Yes, so much better."

"Do you feel well enough to see my daughter? She's to help me take care of you."

Ralph assented, and Alma at once entered. Ralph, recognizing in the pallid, wan face of the young man his benefactor, who grasped her with mechanical pleasure.

"You can't recall your name yet, can you?" asked Dollie.

"We shall have to give you a new name, sir," pursued Dollie. "Suppose we call you Ashley Banning, after an old friend of mine?

Ralph pondered a nearly moment.

"Ashley Banning it is, then."

A few minutes the father and daughter conversed with their patient, during which they produced a large Bible, intent upon making him a nice broth and a nice cup of tea.

"You see that he is a gentleman," remarked Dollie, rubbing his hands gleefully, as they left the room of Ralph to prepare the broth. "I was acquainted with Ashley Banning, and his family, in the present. He is in fact, an entirely new creation. All we have to do is to be good and practice, and keep all knowledge of him from everybody until you are his wife, and we shall then find ourselves on the very pinnacle of happiness and fortune. The first great step is taken!"

It was, indeed, it only remained to be seen what would come of it.

CHAPTER IV.

RALPH IN HIS NEW CHARACTER.

Beneath a cocoanut tree, upon the sandy beach, sat Ralph, reclining upon the little valley in which the Hulbert bungalow was situated, and Dollie Kemplin in an attitude of dejection, indicative of the sad reflections of one of these dreamy and beautiful days by which the neighborhood of Honolulu is distinguished.

"Ashley Banning!" was the sighing ejaculation that at brief intervals broke from him.

The sound of light footsteps, accompanied by the rustling of a woman's dress, at last aroused him from his sad and profound musings, and he gathered himself up into a sitting posture in time to receive the laughter of the vivacious Miss Alma Bullet.

The girl was dressed coquettishly, and it could have been seen at a glance that she had acquired a great away now charms and graces since her acquaintance with Ralph, just as many things are polished by contact with

"Ah, here you are, Mr. Bennington, she cried, in a fashionable and an equally forced assumption of light heartedness. "I wonder what that poor boy would do if I was afraid you might have wandered off in your sleep."

"Oh, I know the spot for safety of Cornel Ralph, with a letter cutting of his lips. "I have been taking a long walk and thinking."

"And you look as if you had been unan you to go so far upon three lonely rambles," interrupted Alma, with a look of keen anxiety.

"Well, why not?"

"Because—because there may be natives looking for you, and they know these lonely ravines," declared the girl, with the air of having been forced to say something she would have preferred to keep secret. "I once saw some of the native young men may be jealous of you."

"Jealous of me! Impossible! They know that I am only a poor soft thing whom your father and you have kindly taken pity. They know that I am only a pensioner upon your bounty and not a suitor for your hand, Miss Dollie."

The girl sighed, as she rose in places a bunch of wild flowers she had gathered.

"They may not know all this—those native young men who used to try to pay me attention," she murmured, and some of them. I know, are very spiteful and malicious, and that is another reason why I have asked you to be so far as possible, not to go far from home, and always on your guard, I suppose."

"Yes—or more, I suppose." "Yes—or more. How can I help saying? I am so worried and excited to remain motionless. Suppose you should be seen my return from this long round, I dropped into this dense jungle and lost?"

"Why, I would be a little more to-day?" asked Alma, after waiting a few moments for his hesitancy to continue his account of himself.

"Why, I think you! I am tired of geography, tired of history, tired of everything, and I am tired of myself."

"Poor Ralph, you don't wish me to remain here at all?" breathed the girl, with a look of reproach, and a pitiful inflection of voice.

"Why, of course, of course," returned Ralph, quickly, looking as if he would spring to his feet, but for a moment could not entirely side her question.

"Well, of course, of course," returned Ralph, quickly, looking as if he would spring to his feet, but for a moment could not entirely side her question.

"Such a—of course, of course, no! Ashley Banning

"The Lounger"

One of the phases of journalism into which our esteemed friend of the Charlevoix Democrat occasionally lapses, is that of "The Lounger."

Under that guise he covers a variety of subjects, from the crops to Sliby & McCrakenism, and it is a poor week when "The Lounger" is not heard from in some way.

Last week "The Lounger" interviewed a schooner captain, who bemoaned his sad condition in view of the prevailing low freights, and "The Lounger" remarks that "the vessel owner happened to be a man who couldn't see where all the good times were the fellows promised us when the McKinley bill was passed."

There may be a few of the readers of the Democrat who are so deplorably ignorant that such talk as this will find logment as logic, but to most readers, who are observers of cause and effect, and have any knowledge of cotemporary events, it will be judged as the most despicable demagoglism.

During the nearly two years that the McKinley bill has been in force the country has been in a condition of industrial prosperity which would have continued to the present time had not the party of free trade come into possession of every branch of the government.

If the McKinley bill is responsible for the present condition of affairs, how is it that within thirty hours after President Cleveland's message to the fifty-second Congress, stocks in the New York market fell fifteen per cent?

If it is the McKinley bill that is the cause of our financial troubles, why is it that the manufacturing industries of the country did not show its disastrous effect a year ago?

The fact is, the statement is a lie; the Democrat knows it is a lie; and there is not a Democrat who possesses the brains of a frog who does not know it is a lie.

The platform of the party in power is a menace to our industrial system, and a standing threat against the prosperity of the nation. It is the expectation of legislation in keeping with that platform which now disrupts and wrecks the business interests of the country.

If the present tariff laws are repealed, disaster will follow disaster, and week will follow wreck, until Democracy will finally revel in the work of ruin and disruption. If this be not so, history lies; for the history of free trade in this country is a story of disaster whenever it has forced into our political system.

If the McKinley bill is the cause of the trouble, why does not Congress repeal it at once, and let the silver question alone? Time is precious. Mr. Cleveland does not in his last message attribute the difficulty to the tariff, but to the Sherman Silver law. Who is right; the "stuffed prophet," or Mr. Hampton?

The Silver Act Repealed.

On Monday the House repealed the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, by a vote of 240 to 110.

Now, if Mr. Cleveland is right, everything will "hamp." Banks will all resume; the busy wheels of industry will resume their operations, and the idle men will find employment. We hope so.

J. Logan Chipman, congress man from the First district of Michigan, died last Friday morning. The deceased was one of the ablest Democrats in the house in which he had served three terms and was elected to the fourth, but his sickness prevented his taking his seat at the special session.

Money is worth comparatively more under free trade and labor worth less than under and other possible policy, yet thousand of voters support free trade candidates at the polls in November last who now insist that some temporary action should be be taken at once in order to cheapen and add to the value of labor and its products. They would not be howling in terror not if they had voted sensibly and patriotically a few months ago.

Statistics show that the average wages paid in the Clyde ship yards is only seven cents per hour. This is a specimen of the wages our Democratic free trade friends are anxious to inaugurate in this country. At such wages is it any wonder that British ship yards can build vessels cheaper than the ship yards of the United States. The Democratic policy demands that labor in this country shall be on a par with labor in foreign countries. Already the Democratic victory of last fall has demoralized labor. Manufactory after manufactory has either closed down or reduced the number of the labors employed. Mills after mills has been closed adding vastly to the great army of the unemployed. This is a specimen of the times promised by Democrats.

So will our beautiful summer months pass away and the cold blasts of winter, blowing through our whiskers, will undoubtedly make us think

"Where are our Summer's Wages Gone!"

STOP

Do not throw your money away by buying expensive tailor made clothing only to be cast aside when winter comes, but purchase one of our nobby, durable middle weight suits, prices ranging from $4.50 to $20 and you will save money, live happily, and die contentedly owing no one.

"GEORGE" The Clothier.

Come, gentlemen Congressmen. A million of skilled workmen out of jobs are waiting for you. They want to know, and to know soon, how much "smashing of the tariff" is to be done. In view of the terrors in sight, can you not rise above party platforms and say—go to work; your business will not be wrecked by our hands. That would be manly, humane and statesmanlike. But, unfortunately, it would not be Democratic.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

It was positively brutal in the New York Sun to send to Washington the full text to the Chicago platform just as Congress was opening, and to print in italics the demands for the repeal of unconstitutional protection, "sham reciprocity" and "the tax on State banks;" for "just and liberal pensions for the soldiers," "the honest enforcement of all laws for the reform of the civil service," etc. The Sun should have broken things more gently during these dogs days of Democratic politics.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Boyne Citizen: When returing from the plains east of here, last Saturday, R. L. Corbett and David Kahns came onto a large flock of wild turkeys feeding or watering at the edge of a marsh. The birds, Dave informs us were of very large size, none of them being of this year's hatch, and although he has killed dozens of turkeys, the old Tom was the largest he ever saw. Mr. Corbett as Judge and David as Justice would not have cut any figure had they had their guns with them.

Hon. Wm. Mears drove his own horse at the Cadillac races and won the free-for-all stakes of $50.

"Jack" Musser, a well known Cadillac contractor made an assignment and the next thing heard from him was a letter and his valise, arriving from Niagara Falls. The letter stated that he was about to commit suicide.

The Michigan Methodist conference of which this district is a part will hold its fifty-eighth annual session at Grand Rapids week after next, commencing on Monday, September 5th. A proposition which has been several times before the Michigan Conference to form a new Northern Michigan Conference, cutting off the Big Elk Rapids and Traverse City districts from the Michigan Conference and the northern section of the Detroit Conference, will be presented again at Grand Rapids, but the chances seem against its adoption.

Hastings from Hayes.

Last Friday night a mob of Chippewas got off the train at Bay Shore loaded with fire-water and retreated with oar paint, and proceeded at once to clean out the depot. Agent Long mopped the floor with two or three of them, and belted one of them over the snout a time or two for a change and they concluded to bury the hatchet. The next morning they came back to do up Frank Brown at the store, supposing he was the man who whipped them, and they scared him out of a year's growth, almost, before they could be induced to smoke the pipe of peace. "No, no," they said, "it was not Long who struck us, he pretty good feller, but that Frank."

John Reynolds was seriously hurt at the lime kilns last Tuesday morning. The elevators, when a considerable distance in the air, dumped a load of limestone on his head, crushing him to the earth and inflicting several serious scalp wounds, but strange to say, no bones were broken. He was picked up in an unconscious condition, a surgeon telephoned for and in three hours his wounds were dressed. He is not out of danger but is doing as well as could be expected.

—To the World's Fair by the City of Charlevoix yesterday: County Treasurer Hipp and wife, Register of Deeds Ward, Wm. Chamberlain, of Banks, and Sanford Reed and bride, of Marion.

—Capt. John Beattie is now a permanent resident of Charlevoix. He arrived from Chicago last week, and has a force of men at work on his county road residence. With him, to remain a few weeks are his two nephews, Mr. White, of the firm of Wm. White & Co., painters and decorators, and Mr. John Cowper, of Chicago.

—The elder Elliot, of Jackson, be of well notoriety, dropped into town last week.— not from the balloon—he just slid in and just as quickly slid out. He came to pick up the leavings of the well digging outfit, but whether, after liquidating the board bill, he had enough left to hire another well, we are not informed. He states that Rebecah is at Jackson but just what our friend is doing he did not state.

—Hiram B. Hipp, of South arm, marketed his pea crop at the Ferry warehouse last week. From four acres he harvested 81 bushels, or something over 20 bushels per acre. This is a light yield, owing to an unfavorable season, but for the crop he received $1.10 per bushel. Even this is better than wheat, with a 40 bushel yield. The price of seed peas fluctuates very little, and is the safest and most profitable crop that our farmers can raise.

—Forty young people take part in the Merchants Karnival given by the ladies of Baptist church, Monday and Tuesday evenings next, at the Opera House. Prices 25 and 35 cents.

—Mr. Hiram DeHart, a druggist of Vernon, Mich., is visiting his nephew, F. N. Chapel, for a couple of weeks. He has visited various northern resorts for ten years to escape hay fever, but this is his first visit to Charlevoix, and he pronounces our little city the prettiest place he has yet seen.

—The M. E. lawn social at the beautiful grounds of Hon. A. Butters last Wednesday evening was the most successful and enjoyable of its kind ever held here. The ladies netted $72. Mrs. Jaccard, of St. Louis, and Mrs. Tanner, of Saginaw, are the ladies to whom the society is mainly indebted for the success of the occasion.

—Ezra Meech, the rotund bonifacer of the Ingleside hotel, strides the streets with the air of a burgomaster. And why should he not. He has been entertaining a genuine German Count, in the person of Henry, Count Adelmann, of Adelmannsfelden, Lord High Chamberlain to His Royal Highness, the Prince of Hohenzollern. The Count registered as "H. Ct. Adelmann." He dined and went north. He is a World's Fair Commissioner out on a lark, and is accompanied by an interpreter. He wants to hire a robust, and could, as State Game Warden Hampton to secure the privilege. He is willing to pay the fine, but a deer he must have.

Public Schools of Charlevoix.

To the Patrons:

The schools of Charlevoix will this year have an experience which they have not had before for a number of years. The entire corps of teachers is changed. We believe that the schools need not suffer because of this change, but we also believe that great care must be exercised in the administration of the schools, that all interests may be harmoniously adjusted. It is the desire of the Superintendent and teachers to maintain the present high standard of the schools, and at the same time to make such improvement as may be deemed necessary for the onward progress of the schools.

The patrons and friends of the school are asked to co-operate with the Superintendent and teachers. We hope that parents will continue to give the hearty support which has been so potent a factor in the success of the schools. We trust that patrons will see the necessity of regular and punctual attendance. Pupils should begin the very first day of the year, and should be found in their places every day possible. Those who are thus regular and punctual will find no difficulty in accomplishing the work of the courses of the school.

Non-resident pupils are invited, with the assurance that they will be heartily welcomed, and that every effort will be put forth to make their stay with us pleasant and profitable. We shall be glad to confer with any who may contemplate entering this term.

A class in book-keeping will be started in the High school early in the fall term, and will be conducted upon an "actual business" plan. The student will buy and sell, making the necessary records in the proper books. We hope there will be a large class in this very important subject.

We trust that there will be a large attendance from the first day of the year, and that the interest will continue to the end.

Very truly,
D. F. WILSON, Supt.

Where Is He At?

Our editorial neighbor of the Inland Notes—Charlie's little brother—thinks the editor of this paper is a fit subject for the Dahomey village, in the midway plaisance. Perhaps so; but we will leave it to the crowd if Mr. Hampton's article is not the most complete running-overful measure of drivel that ever emanated from the pen of a "moulder of public opinion." It is absolutely unanswerable, because it is illotic. It may be Democratic, but it is hard to tell. It certainly is not crudite.

The editor insists that the McKinley tariff is responsible for our troubles, right in the face of the decree of that great man, Grover Cleveland, that it is the Sherman silver law. It is also poor politics for Mr. Hampton to acknowledge that the factories are starting up again.

If the editor could afford to be more cosmopolitan in his deductions, he would also have stated that the McKinley tariff was responsible, last week, for the discharge of 10,000 tin operatives in Wales.

We read in the Democrat that it is the McKinley law that is biting us; then we read that it is the gold bugs; next it is the Republican Sherman law. The trouble is, Charlie and his little brother do not compare notes. Willie should read the Petoskey side of his paper before he prints the two pages of the Charlevoix edition.

When our erratic friend settles down on his diagnosis perhaps the President and Congress will be able to successfully apply the remedy. But the Hamptonian gun shoots very scattering.

Some Old Settlers.

Elijah Holton, of South Arm, made the SENTINEL a call one day last week. Mr. Holton was the first settler on South Arm, having located on his present farm 32 years ago. He has been a SENTINEL subscriber since its first issue, nearly 25 years, and says he could not keep house without it.

And while we are speaking of old settlers, we are reminded that a faded letter from our sanctum Monday that we had not seen in over twenty years. Mr. John Shaw, for the past two years a resident of Horton's bay, worked for Amos Fox on the wood scows 30 years ago, when the old dock was built. He has been in other parts for about twenty years.

And still another pleasant visit is to be recorded. On Friday evening we were rung up and pulled out of bed to meet another old settler, Rev. Mark Brownell, who twenty-two years ago was the M. E. pastor at Norwood, and supplied the Charlevoix charge two years during his ministry there. He is now farming in Jackson county.

And yet another. Yesterday John Althouse and wife, of Grand Ledge, arrived here and are visiting friends. Mr. Althouse located here about 20 years ago, and erected the building that was owned later by the Chaloupkas, and destroyed by fire last winter. Mr. Althouse left here about twenty years ago.

The Annual School Meeting.

At the Annual school meeting last Monday evening, Hon. A. Butters was elected a trustee for three years to succeed Hon. John Nicholls; and Horace S. Harsha was re-elected for the same term.

The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $1,466 08. The estimates for the year were $4,000, which was voted. Treasurer Harsha reported a loss of $156 in the bank of Charlevoix.

Nine months school was voted. The deficient ventilation of the school building was discussed at length, and the Moderator was instructed to appoint a committee to investigate the matter.

Attention Charlevoixians.

CHAPTER V.

THE KANAKA GIRL.

A look of marked aversion mantled the face of Miss Bullet, as the intruder emerged more distinctly from the evening shadows. It was such a look as only a woman can bestow after she has off with an old love and on with a new one.

The newcomer was a Kanaka, as we have said, although only half native. His father had been one of the many runaway sailors domiciled upon the island, but as is often the case with the lower races, the blood of civilization had been assimilated and obliterated by the blood of the savage. Keoni had, in fact, inherited so completely from his mother that it would have been hard to distinct any difference of color or form between him and his full-blooded relatives.

He was tall and muscular, with keen, dark eyes, long black hair, a well-shaped nose, a wide mouth and roguish but manly chin, and with a complexion that was brightly brown, if he which a person had been so bigoted as to rigorous prejudice. Aside from the passions of the moment, which were sufficiently violent, there was nothing rough or repulsive in his aspect, and there was even a certain dignity in his bearing and a rare intelligence in his glances.

"Oh, I'm glad you've come," said the sailor's daughter, in a voice of insolent indifference that assumed her rejected suitor immediately.

"Yes, I've come," was the rejoinder, as Keoni planted himself squarely before her.

"Did I not tell you to keep away from you, blind and obstinate as you are? I wouldn't have anything more to say to you, blind I was tired of having you hanging around here eternally."

"Yes, you said so," resented Keoni, with quiet emphasis.

"Then why are you here?"

"To have it in black and white as I have already stated."

"I do not want anything to do with you," declared Alma, looking sullenly around in search of her father, who was not within hearing. "You must go away from here immediately, and I don't you several weeks ago that it was impossible and absurd for us to marry, and it is impossible for me to marry you in your walk of life, and that I would rather quietly be as much for your peace of mind as for mine, if you would spare me your attentions upon some other occasion. Did I not tell you so?"

Keoni nodded gravely.

"Well, I am sorry I can say on that occasion," resumed Alma. "My visions are not the same as they were then, and I will be. You must go away immediately, Keoni."

It was clear that this repeated injunction had not been pleasant to the man coming with it. Keoni frowned and his dark face grew dark, the cold sails to freezing rattle seat under the flowering trees seemed to shed disowning of the cottage.

"Well, then," said he, "I comments I Alma, as she began tearing the nearest flowers to pieces, "I am very sorry that I ever fancied you have for me. You gave me encouragement, you know, you gave me encouragement, Alma, with an angular smile. "But I was foolish, as usual, I will have nothing to do with you!" cried Alma, stamping her foot. "What good could I expect from you, anyhow? Do you think I would be as happy as a Kanaka, as my husband, as I am now? Do you think I would be happier if I had been such a fool as to accept your proposal of marriage?"

Keoni was not affected at all by this sarcasm and bitterness. He, his countenance only became more adamant.

"I did not, of course, expect you to assume to your stereotype complexion than the reverse, as I supposed you resided Alma, with increased vehemence. "I didn't want to be the inspiration of your tuneless lyrics. If you insist on trying to make me happy, I shall be compelled to say that I am happy, and decidedly unpleasant."

Keoni fumbled in one of his pockets, drew out a pipe and tobacco, and was soon smoking like a furnace.

"Say them," he muttered.

Alma's face reddened suddenly. She looked around twice in quick succession, first to see if her father was visible, secondly, to see if Ralph were still lurking.

"This is too much for human endurance," she exclaimed, stamping her foot. "If you do not go away immediately I will call my father!"

In one cool kiss a long time before, Keoni had taken a Spanish knife from a belted sheath, and, smoke as a smoking smile curled his lips, he began to pare his finger nails with it, as he leaned a overhanged him riding his high horse under Kalib's shed as I came along the road."

"Is you prepared to marry me quarreling with Kalib?" demanded Alma, her manner changing their object, her rather widening."

"Yes, they were quarreling about."

"You are not the kind of man to come away without quarreling." What is they were quarreling about?"

Keoni took a still more vigorous pull at his pipe, and puffed the bowl with an air of mystery toward the interior of the cottage.

"They were quarreling about the way thing that you and I are going to quarrel about," he muttered. "They were quarreling about him!"

The girl started, her looks attesting that she comprehended the matter exactly, that turned and closed the door, and turned around herself upon a stately bench opposite that so freely appropriated by her repeated invitations.

"They were talking about Mr. Bunning" she asked shortly.

"They were not only talking about him," remonstrated Keoni, in a tone of rolling. Mr. Bullet has heard some things that he been feeling that does you please him—some rumors as to this Mr. Bunning, who he is, how he came here, what he is staying here for, or who he friends are, or what is the secret of all this mystery in which Mr. Bunning seems to be being involved, and he has talking about it so fast, now that his tongue was loosened, that it made Alma breathless to listen.

"And it seemed to me that Ralph Kalo for are having kept the secret sufficiently close whatever the secret may be," said Keoni, continuing to make himself at home, "that Mr. Kalo responded that no wind or blast of the real state of affairs ever blew round his lips, from the time when he first discovered Mr. Bunning until now I must do the dog the justice of saying that he seemed to be as reticent as silence and honest in all he was saying. Very naturally I should have been glad to witness the conclusion of the quarrel, but I was a big fool not to improve your father's absence, and here I am accordingly."

"Well, you can go back as quick as you came, sir," said Alma, with an angry smile. "I was foolish, as usual, unconscious. "I will have nothing to do with you!" "not as speech with you whatever."

"Then the proposed talk will be a little one-sided, for I have quite a number of things to say to you, Miss Bullet, and I now have to say them. I won't leave this place until I have understood myself, or until I have made an awful row with your Mr. Bunning. My dividend impression is that you had better hear me."

The manner of Keoni, no less than his declamation, impressed Alma strongly. She saw that he was in one of those moods and only moods which can be inspired only by a bitter jealousy. Her decision was promptly taken.

"If you can possibly have anything to say to me, after what I have already said to you," she murmured, in a voice of scorn, with a look of defiance, "why, I suppose I must hear it."

Keoni laid his pipe from his mouth, and his air became the attentive and deferential.

"When you sent me adrift the other day, he began, "but you ever sent this Mr. Bunning?"

The girl's features contracted and she blushed in scarlet. The question, in the way it was put, was a grossness to her. But she controlled her emotions and answered with an accent of calm calmness.

"Yes, I had never seen him. I rejected you because I did not love you; because you were a half-blood, because you were poor, because you have no home to take me to, because my life seems to be entirely in a grudge and a nobody, and because I have other hopes for me than for myself all good and substantial reasons, I tell you, and I stand by them."

The Kanaka's countenance brightened in the sunset rays that one would have thought would be dark. "Indeedly saw in all this series of declarations only one of importance, and that it was not because of the stranger that I was rejected, but because of my poverty."

"There is no reason why you should object to your former decision, Alma," said Keoni, with a smile and a look of mingled love and admiration picking in his eyes. "I have not for a moment accepted it. I love you to my before than ever, for you are prettiest and best girl in all these islands. As to the disinclination to have me referred from mentioning, I have not been thinking of them, and have sought and found a remedy for each of the obstacles which you have spoken of. I have, I can now offer you a home all ready to move into, and a song little fortune bequeathed to me by an uncle, which is not large, but which is now mine. As to my complaining that I have been rejected because having both brains and heart. With this fortune I shall become able to be able to move in the first society of the capital, and to marry and shall acquire polish and all the marks of a gentleman. So that I shall become in fact good a husband as you deserve, at the time when I am able to do what I can afford. Let me hope, therefore, in consideration of the change that will mind in my favor and marry me.

STRUGGLE WITH A PANTHER.

Prof. Dyche's Bare-Handed Combat Over New Guinea Has Its Side.

"That fellow over there came near taking my life once," said Prof. Dyche, the taxidermist of the Sanger exhibit to a Chicago Times man, pointing to a mounted panther, one of the products of his skill.

"The way of it was this: In '87 I was hunting with an Indian guide in the wilds of northern New Mexico. We generally kept pretty close together and almost always slept in the same tent. On the night in question, however, for some reason which I have forgotten, we thought best to sleep about a mile apart. At dusk the Indian helped me pitch my tent and departed with his rifle on his shoulder. I closed the tent as usual, fastening the opening by means of large canvas-covered buttons. About this time I noticed that the side directly opposite the door had been torn in some way during the day so that an aperture was made large enough for a man to crawl through. But I was too sleepy to mend the rent then, and didn't feel worried over it anyhow.

"I opened my blankets, lay down, and was soon fast asleep. I always sleep soundly for a few hours, and am wakeful during the remainder of the night. To this habit I attribute the fact that I did not long ago become food for that animal's digestion. I awakened several times after midnight. Each time all was perfectly still, and I quickly dozed off again. But the last time I awoke, although no sound could be heard, I was immediately conscious of the presence, to the tent of some other living thing than myself.

"I turned over to see in the dim light of the moonlight what it was that had startled me. At the same moment a heavy body lighted upon me. Yonder panther had crept stealthily in at the hole in the tent wall and had leaped upon my prone form. My turning, however, had cause him to overshoot his mark somewhat, and I was thus enabled to rise upon my knees before he came at me again. Then we grappled. I held his throat with both hands, trying to keep him at arm's length and prevent him from rending my body with his sharp claws. It required all my strength to do this, and I was plainly that I should soon give out and that the panther's great endurance would triumph. Unable to reach any weapon, I began to despair of saving my life.

"I shouted. But what good could shouting do with the Indian fully a mile away? With strength born of despair I struggled fiercely with the infuriated beast, who had by this time torn my shirt to tatters and inflicted several wounds on my chest and arms. I was being pushed down, and I thought that in a few moments more I should feel the panther's jaws on my throat.

"At this juncture a singular thing happened. I hung my long-barreled Colt's revolver on a nail driven in the center post of the tent. It was my custom to do this, for I considered that I should always have time to reach it there. But the suddenness of the panther's attack and the necessity of at once grappling with him had rendered it impossible for me to get my weapon. At last however, I was pushed over, and as luck would have it I fell against the center pole, jarring it to such an extent that the pistol dropped to the ground. Exhausted and bleeding, I yet had strength enough to snatch it up. The next instant my assailant lay lifeless at my feet. If you measure him you will find that he is 8 feet 2 inches from nose to tip of tail."

Charles Reade is credited with starting the scrap-book fad, but many such famous Americans as Chauncey M. Depew, Dr. O. W. Holmes, Joseph Jefferson, Edwin Booth, Bret T. De Witt Talmage and Roswell P. Flower are said to have large compilations of that kind long before the British novelist made it the vogue.

PLAYED WITH SWORDS.

An Actor's Experience in New Caledonia With Convicts for Scenery.

Willet Cubbon of Melbourne, Austra lia, related a tale at William's hotel at Washington the other evening illustrative of the extent to which stage realism may be carried.

"I very frequently visited the adjacent islands on matters of business, and on one occasion made a trip to New Caledonia. A passing invitation was given me to visit the only theater of the settlement, so there was to be an entirely new program for that week entitled "Hexamion; or the Missionary's Mission," in which several thoroughbred savages from a cannibal island had been secured to participate. On the evening of the first performance I went to the theater. The first scene represented a desert isle on which a lone mortal had been cast by a wrecked vessel. Night was supposed to come on and he lay his down to sleep on the stage when a wild yell was heard, then a chorus of yells, and on the stage in full view of the audience bounded half a dozen male savages. The actor lay still as death, the audience, too, were, hushed into silence. The cannibals pounced down on the apparently sleeping man and began their part in good earnest. One big fellow hit him ferociously in the leg, while two others began to twist his neck as if he were a chicken. Meanwhile the victim was not long in discovering that there was a mistake somewhere, and began to shout 'Help! Murder!' at the top of his lungs. Then followed a scene of confusion. The audience beat a hasty retreat through the exits, while the remainder of the troupe dragged the wild man from their substitute prey. The latter was taken home sadder, but wiser, and the worse for wear.

MIDDLE-AGED ENGLISHMEN.

Their Complaints Due to a Lack of Proper Exercise.

The average middle-aged Englishman of the professional and business classes grows fatter, wheezier, more pompous and more dull and uninteresting every year of his life. Forty is apt to be a very unpleasant age for most of him is impossible; to crack a joke at his expense is to commit the unpardonable sin. "Poor old portly pillar," as somebody has called him.

His innocent pleasures have vanished with his youth, and he has nothing now left to live for but his respectability, his solemn respectability, and his money bags. The contrast between the youthful Englishman and his middle-aged parent is sometimes startling. The former is all life and fun. The latter is a moving mountain of ponderosity and fat. It is all for want of out-door exercise and recreation. Twenty-five years ago the solemn father of to-day was the frolicking son of a middle-aged father.

If anybody had shown him in a prophetic mirror the figure he would cut at the end of a quarter of a century he would have committed suicide in sheer vexation and disgust.

But all this rotundity, wheezliness, irritability of temper, inaptitude for work, and general disgust with life and things in them be cured, cured easily, and cured forever, and the cure for the vast majority of cases is one or two hours' daily exercise and recreation in the open air.

THE GOSSIP LAND.

Celestials Love to Talk and There Is no Stopping Them.

Woe be unto the inhabitant of China who seek to exclude the rest of the world from the inner secrets of his house. Woe be unto him who imagines he can have secrets. Such a thing as a "private house" in China is unknown. Anyone can go anywhere. The foolish ones shut their doors to shut the gossips out.

"What is going on now?" the old women and even the men demand. "What has he to hide from his fellow townsfolk?" As there are no newspapers to furnish the materials for conversation neighbors must afford the subjects of speculation, and so the gossip flourishes.

These are not, of course, put upon walking boots—but on those for carriage, reception, or house wear, when the hose is of velvet, satin or brocade. A HORSE IN A TRANCE.

Remarkable Experience of an Aged Man and Startled Twin.

Felix Hubbard is a tiller of the soil, says the Baltimore Herald. The tile patch of mother earth he calls his own is located in the east of the city, almost one mile beyond Harwood station, and a half mile south of Eastern avenue. Access is gained to the place by a road which makes off from Eastern avenue and winds about near the Hubbard farmhouse. Year in one year out Farmer Hubbard has worked away and sore his seed. The earth has yielded him a comfortable income.

His only assistant in his honest occupation has been a faithful old mare, Bess by name. For over fifteen years the animal has been in the possession of Farmer Hubbard, and ever when he purchased her she was not as young as she used to be. However, the investment was a good one, and when Farmer Hubbard went to the stable one Sunday morning and found old Bess about the "colush the golden stalks," or make her entrance to the place where all food issues, he remarked, though her glowing days were over, she never kicked at work and had earned her long rest.

The old mare was certainly in a bad way. It was only after great difficulty that the beast got upon her feet, and when once upright had to be packed up with ropes. Thinking a little exercise would do her good, Mr. Hubbard led the faltering mare out into the barnyard, but no sooner had she got out into the open air than Bess fell once as if exhausted to the inevitable. Shortly after 3 o'clock in the afternoon Bess kicked the bucket.

The body of the faithful mare lay in the yard all night, and the next morning Mr. Hubbard borrowed a mule from a relative named Crowwell, and, roping fast a rope to the hind legs of the dead horse, the body was dragged over a field and deposited alongside a small stream about an eighth of a mile from the barn. The next day, Tuesday, Mr. Hubbard noticed a big bird perch and spread the dead animal enjoyly.

Friday afternoon the farmer noticed a horse grazing in the vicinity of the stream, and without delay went over to investigate how the beast of burden got into his place, and to see whose horse it was. There was something familiar about the animal. He wondered where he had seen it before.

When he got alongside the beast he was nearly paralyzed. It was old Bess—alive. Slightly disfigured she was, to be sure, but alive, very much alive. When the farmer recovered from his surprise and had reassured himself that the animal was not a spirit from the horse heaven, he secured the old mare by the forelock. She walked meekly with him to the stable.

Mr. Hubbard called his sister to the stable so that she might identify the animal as his horse, but she was not dreaming. Leaving the stable he hurried farmer trotted off to pay a visit to the "last resting place" of his faithful equine. Off the spot where he had left the body had been heaped upon the body was another animal. Then he felt convinced that Bess had surely risen from the dead.

Mr. Hubbard, on returning to the barn, found the same horse standing, as of old, in her stall. Since here return to life she has been given no symptoms of leaving us for the land future. It is the supposition that the mare was in a trance for five days. To all appearances Bess is as sound as an old dollar, but is as homely as the general run of aged horses. She is a dark bay with a white forehead and white socks at her hind heels.

A DOG IN A PULLMAN.

The First That Ever Secured Permission to Ride Unmolested.

Mr. William Parsons, for many years a resident of Chicago, but now living at Seattle, is a big hand among posterity as the first man to secure a permit to carry a dog with him in a Pullman car. It seems that an Oriental friend gave Mr. Parsons a beautiful Japanese pug, to which he very properly became devotedly attached in a very few days. When he came East Mr. Parsons brought his canine pet with him, and rather than intrust that treasure to the merciless of the baggage-master, Mr. Parsons chose to bribe the conductor and porter of the Pullman car into a condition whereby they were blind to the presence of the interlicited dog. This involved so heavy an expenditure that Mr. Parsons made up his mind to try other tactics on the return trip. Accordingly, when he reached Chicago he set about securing a permit to take the pet pug home in the Pullman car without money and without price. Mr. Lyman J. Gage became interested in the enterprise, for he, too, likes a dog, although he can't tell the difference between Siberian bloodhounds and Parisian poodles.

"We will go straight to the head of the concern," said Mr. Gage. I will give you a letter to Mr. Pullman himself."

Fortified with this letter, written in Mr. Gage's flowing italics, and coached in Mr. Gage's most persuasive rhetoric, Mr. Parsons invaded Mr. Pullman's private office. Having read the missive, Mr. Pullman scratched his head reflectively and looked at his beard as much as to say, "Well, now, I am in for it."

"Hilfen," said Mr. Pullman, presently, "touch bell No. 34."

Mr. Hilfen is Mr. Pullman's private secretary. No. 3, he touched bell No. 34, and almost instantly Mr. Ketcham appeared. Mr. Ketcham is keeper of the seals, records, rules and regulations.

"Mr. Ketcham," asked Mr. Pullman, "what is our rule with reference to carrying dogs in our cars?"

"We have never carried a dog, sir," answered Mr. Ketcham promptly. "Rule 187 specifies that under no circumstances whatever shall dogs be admitted to our cars. Shall I fetch the book of rules, sir?"

"No, that isn't necessary, said Mr. Pullman. "I am sure that the rule specifies dogs."

"That is the very word, sir," answered Mr. Ketcham.

"That is all—you may go," and Mr. Ketcham vanished.

"The rule discriminates against dogs," said Mr. Pullman, half aloud. "There is no rule against a dog." He will get around in this way.

So, having compounded in this wise with his conscience, Mr. Pullman ordered Hilfen to touch bell No. 21, and presently another underling came in with an enormous black which Mr. Pullman proceeded to fill out in different colored inks. This document proved to be a general order to all employes of the Pullman company, and it commanded them to admit without question to the cars of the company "one dog, described as a Japanese pug, answering to the name of Coco, and described by his owner in this wise—to wit," etc. It was an exhaustive document. Mr. Parsons had to sign it and, last of all, Mr. Pullman put his name and seal to it.

"I have been conducting this business for more than a quarter of a century," said Mr. Pullman, as he finally handed the official paper to Mr. Parsons, "and this is the first permit that has been issued entitling a dog to admission to and transportation in our cars."

"Original" Black Quarried in America.

Anyone who knows a little about black comes from would say, "Why, from Belgium, of course, but this is far from the truth. Great quarries at a point forty miles above Sedalia, Black county, known as the "Rocks," supply most of the blocks used in this city. A great piece of rock was recently blasted there from which were cut 35,000 Belgian blocks of regulation size. The rock was thirty-five feet wide, twelve and one-half feet deep and sixty-five feet long. The blocks cut up will realize nearly $1,000 for the quarryman.—Philadelphia Record.

A Legend of Montone.

Apropos of the bronze statue of Montone on the Mediterranean the people are fond of repeating the following legend: When Adam and Eve were driven from paradise, it is said that Eve, running under Adam's coat, picked a lemon, one of the fairest of fruits, intending to keep it during her exile in rags until she should reach a spot which most reminded her of her old home. For many years the fruit remained in her possession. One day the pair arrived at that place where Montone now stands. Eve hesitated long before she could resign the little spot which most resembled her of paradise; and for a long time the lemon trees have thriven and prospered here at Montone than at any other place.

Wonderful Bird Cage.

A curious bird cage was made last year by an exhibitor lately in the Queens county court house, in Long Island. It has attracted a great deal of attention. The cage is in the shape of a two-story house, with handsome roof. It stands about eight feet high to the bell tower on it, and is made of tin. There are four towers, one at each corner, windows and an observatory with a clock, the bell of which peals forth the hours. The house is painted in imitation of brick, with sliding doors and all modern improvements. The interior and exterior of the cage are painted in different colors. The twenty-four bird cupboards are of glass of various colors. It is the product of two years' work.

Where the News.

Don't forget the editor when you have a news item. If your wife whips you and you don't like it tell your friends right before the public. If you have company, tell us who it is, if you are not ashamed of your visitors. If a neighbor should quirke and requires food and raiment, let us know so we may write a long article about it. If you have a cash subscriber we will furnish a name for him or her as circumstances may warrant. If you have a social gathering of a few friends, bring around a big cake, six pies and a basketful of tea, and we will be a guest and good faith. We mention these things that we may get the news.—Exchange.

The Old Man Knew the Town.

A Portland man who was interested at a Cincinnati hotel the other day in a practical joke played on a fellow tourist exhibited at the world's fair, when he was registering the handy porter took his valise, and was about to store it away in the clerk room. "Here, there," called out the stranger, "give that back to me. My grub is in that." And so it was, for he quickly detected the fact that the old man had inserted one of the grub's sides with two weeks' "grub" in his valise. He had a whole loaf, two cooked beef tongues, cakes, crackers, a jar of butter and various and sundry other articles from his farm in Tompkins.

Circumstantial Evidence.

Was the strongest of circumstantial evidence may be is proved by an authenticated recent story of a rare and valuable old coin being produced by a passenger on board an ocean steamer, of it being passed around for inspection, and of its disappearance. All the passengers, with one exception, agreed to have their pockets searched. The man who refused to do so, he posited for the rest of the voyage as being the guilty party. When the steamer got into port the coin was found with a corner of it bent, and it then transpired that the man who the passenger decoyed to be searched was that he had a coin in his pocket exactly similar to the one mislaid, and that the coin produced by him was then regarded absolutely conclusive as circumstantial evidence of his guilt.

Old Pals.

In the "Animal's Rights" we read of a wise sage who cared a great king by a description with which he sanctified the handle of a stick with which the king was in the habit of playing a game at ball, to the end that when the royal hand perspired in the vigor of the play the sage might receive the medicinal. The translator says that he has seen the same "in statis" (sic), but it is plain from the context that the game was played on horseback. It was, in fact, polo. Indeed, the illustration of the very same edition show the said king playing the game on horseback.

Absent Bigamy.

At a recent dinner in New York City a prominent Southern woman was seated at the same table with a conversation touching upon the fascinations that it "was quite as wicked in Charles Sumner to have married two wives at one time as with himself," she continued, "that his marriage was little short of bigamy."

MISSOURI'S BIG DAY.

ELABORATE CELEBRATION AT THE FAIR.

Death of Judge Kettelle, of Chicago—Impeached Gang of Burglars Sending Pictures—Mr. McNeill Moves the Opening—Prominent Labor Orators.

Told in a Few Words.

—Wednesday was Missouri Day at the Fair. It was a great occasion, and brought the governor and hundreds of his fellow-citizens to the Exposition. Extensive plans for a celebration ranging from morning until late at night had been made, and were successfully executed. The formal program began at noon at the Stock Pavilion with a parade of Missouri stock, among the finest in the World's Fair barns. Two hours later the regular exercises, including music and speaking, took place in the Music Building, after which the Governor held a reception to visiting Missourians, and then reviewed the various troops under his command encamped at Jackson Park. During the evening there was a special pyrotechnical display on the lake front in honor of the day. The Music Building had been prepared for the occasion of the Missouri day. The columns were decorated with flowers and cut flowers, while from every balcony and window floated the national and State colors.

—Judge Arthur H. Kettelle, of the Superior Court, of Chicago, died Wednesday morning of consumption of the bowels. His death was not unexpected, for the Judge's condition had been considered to be hopeless since lifting for months. His end was like his life, peaceful in the one and quiet and unobtrusive in the last. Judge Kettelle was a leader at the bar by reason of his ability, and was universally respected. The formal proceedings in the Supreme "Great bodies move slowly," but that will not excuse slowness in the Senate, as at present constituted.

"What is the house of representatives doing now?" asks a "constant reader." Working at the same old job—pounding the atmosphere.

With Altgeld as governor of Illinois and Carter Harrison as mayor of Chicago, it is not wonderful that the turbulent element feels encouraged to swagger and howl.

Under a law passed by the last legislature, sewing machines used by the owner or owners—not exceeding one to each family—are exempt from levy and sale on execution, and chattel mortgages are void unless signed by the wife.

Hudson, N. Y., has adopted a wide tire ordinance to preserve its paved streets. For a load exceeding 4,000 pounds a three inch tire is called for, and for over 5,000 pounds four inch. Cities, villages, and counties all over the country would save money and have better roads if they would adopt and enforce a similar regulation.

It is hard to tell which is the greater ass, the man who sits back on his haunches, as it were, and howls calamity without intermission, or the ninny who assures us, in his frisky and chipper manner, that everything is lovely, that business is prosperous, money plenty, and that there's really nothing the matter with the affairs of the country.

A Democratic journal of New York remarks that "the average republican would rejoice if the business depression became worse, provided it helped his party." This assertion, of course is driveling idiocy. Republicans generally desire the prosperity of the country, from patriotic no less than from personal motives; for adversity touches every man's business, whether he be a democrat or a republican. The almost solid vote of the republicans in congress, in support of the repeal of the silver purchasing act, as recommended by the president, is a sufficient answer to the whining falsehood above quoted. But while Republicans are earnestly desirous that the country should prosper, they are not so short of memory, nor so outside of understanding as to forget that the Democratic party is responsible for the causes which have brought about the present depression. Republicans would be lacking in ordinary perception if they did not recognize this fact; and they would be more than human if they forbore to remind their opponents, occasionally, of their responsibility for the present crisis.

The recent riots in Chicago have been instigated and carried on almost exclusively by foreigners. Without exception, the persons arrested for rioting bear foreign names, and few of them can speak the English language. It is this element—the foreign agitator—which is responsible for ninety-nine hundredths of the disorder which has disgraced the United States during the past few years. Americans, generally speaking, are peaceful and law-abiding. They have no sympathy with anarchy, and are opposed to brute violence in any form as a means of redressing real or imaginary wrongs. These riotous foreigners have no adequate conception of American institutions, which place the powers of government absolutely in the hands of the governed. They have exceedingly no capacity to understand or appreciate the blessings of a free government—a government by and of the people. They have, however, an infinite capacity for mischief, which they delight to exercise on all possible occasions. The authorities should deal firmly but severely with these foreign anarchists whenever they come within the clutches of the law.

Northern Michigan News.

The Boyne Citizen warns "kids" to keep off the railroad track.

There is a proposition to put an iron bridge over the Jordan, near Mr. Kocher's place.

Mr. Ellis has sold the apple and pear crop from his Old Mission farm to A. Ryder & Co., of Chicago, for $4,000 cash.

We are informed that parties from York State are contemplating the building of a creamery and cheese factory near Bay View. They will be there in the near future looking over the location.

The Boyne Falls grist mill has been leased to Mr. G. L. Parsons, of Manistique, whom we learn is a practical miller of years experience. The mill will undergo general repairs and be put in first class shape.

"GEORGE" The Clothier.

From reports it looks as though Cheboygan would soon be over run with idle men. There are rumors that they are coming from all quarters headed for that city.

Some of the most public spirited business men of Petoskey are raising a fund for the purpose of leasing suitable land and fitting up a base ball, bicycle and tennis park.

Prof. and Mrs. M. O. Graves, of Petoskey, were among the speakers at the riotous assemblage in Chicago lately, and a report of the speeches appears in the Chicago papers.

Record: Few Petoskey people realize the magnitude and importance of Hankey & Foreman's new hardwood flooring factory, which when it gets to operating to its full capacity will be the largest one of its kind in the United States.

The decision of the Circuit Court in the facts in the case of the East Jordan Lumber Co. vs. Village of East Jordan in the old water works contest case was in favor of the Company. It now goes to the Supreme Court and the attorneys will try to have it brought on at the October term of the Court.

The Boyne Citizen says that fine trout of the rainbow and speckled varieties have been taken the past week in Rainbow Lake. One string of eight weighed six pounds; another of ten weighed eight and one quarter pounds, while George Fuller landed one rainbow trout which weighed four pounds eleven ounces.

Mr. White commenced Monday to carry mail, passengers and express on his railroad from Boyne Falls to Boyne City. He has leased the small combination coach of the G. R. & I. formerly run between Harbor Springs and Petoskey which makes a very comfortable conveyance. He will make two round trips daily connecting with the north and south passenger trains here.

A Chicago dispatch says: "The seymour line of steamers will build a boat the coming winter to be ready for service next season. The line enjoyed a prosperous business until the advent of the junction of the Lake Superior line last July. The Manitou has absorbed nearly all the business to Petoskey and Mackinac Island and it is found that if the other lines are to compete with her they must have modern boats of large capacity."

Echoes From Ellsworth.

Chas. Gotham with a force of men are at work on the schoolhouse.

Painters, carpenters and masons keep right at work although times are hard and Ellsworth will be in good shape for a hard winter.

Bears have been disturbing the corn fields around here, and the boys went out the other night and got one. It had porcupine quill on it.

The mighty hunters of Ellsworth already begin to talk of their fall campaign at Canada Creek.

Fred Gillett, painter, is at work on the Vettaw boys hotel building and it will soon be ready for the proprietor, Mr. Fred LeDuc, of Atwood, who will run a first class house.

The new school house looms up and is a very sightly building.

Several of our residents are on the sick list and of course our doctor wears a smile.

Mrs. Orrin Harvey is enjoying a visit from her mother, sister and family of Van Buren county, Mich.

Everybody goes duck shooting now-a-days, but we have not seen many large bags as yet.

Capt. Fred Smith, of the steamer Bellaire, has removed here from Bellaire and will make this place his home in the future.

Hastings from Hayes.

Misses Elsie and Bertha Lemasters, Luman C. Lemasters, and C. A W. Chew, of Postland, Ind., are visiting friends in Hayes.

Lafayette Whitmore, of Hastings, is visiting his sister, Mrs. L. H. Scott.

Walter Ostrum returned from St. Joseph last Thursday.

The Bayside drain was let last Saturday to Petoskey parties at prices averaging $1.69 per rod.

It is a settled fact that farmers will have to make arrangements another year to take care of their cattle. A great deal of ill feeling and many quarrels could be averted if owners of cattle would take care of them and not turn them into the highways to eat up the crops of their neighbors. The owners of land own to the center of the highway, pay taxes upon the same, and there is no law compelling a land owner to fence out the highway for the purpose of furnishing pasture ground for his neighbor's cattle.

Mrs. J. E. Chew, of East Jordan, is visiting at A. W. Chew's.

Several young ladies from Lansing are visiting Miss Fannie Sly and Miss Grace Cowley.

Mrs. Belle Carter, of Detroit, was in town over Sunday, visiting friends.

It is very dry again, and late potatoes will suffer in consequence.

School will commence next Monday with H. S. Babcock for teacher.

Prof. Hansley, of Williamburg, gave a magic lantern exhibition of the World's Fair at this place on Saturday evening.

The Michigan exhibit at the World's Fair is a disgrace—not to the State, but to the management having it in charge, and should be closed up. It has one thing in its favor, however; it is so utterly bad that all will know that the exhibit does not in any way represent the great fruit interests of the State, but the mismanagement of parties in charge. In fruit, agricultural products, minerals and forestry, ought to have been second to none. She is beaten by a number of States that rank far beneath her. But, of course, all know the reason.

To World's Fair Visitors.

You can obtain good rooms for 50 cents a day at the Michigan House 5170 Indiana avenue. Meals 25 cents. Only two blocks from the elevated road. Write for rooms.

—Dr. S. H. Smart, the distinguished President of Wedne University, Lafayette, Ind., is lying quite sick with fever at the Belvedere Hotel. Dr. Wetherill, his family physician, was up from Lafayette last week.

—Mr. E. N. Selling, a prominent Manistee lumberman, was in town this week. Mr. Selling pronounces Charlevoix the finest of all resort towns, and possessed of natural advantages that should make it a metropolis.

—The Charlevoix Lumber Co. recently purchased, near Elk Rapids, 450,000 feet of pine logs. They were rafted here under the management of Andrew Ross with the tug Mary McLane, last week and not a log was lost.

—The annual race-meet of the Charlevoix Cycle Club occurs to-morrow at the new racing grounds of the Club on the north side. The track is in fine shape, and a large number of prizes are offered. The meet promises to be a big one, as the club have spent much time and labor on the arrangements. A number of clubs from abroad are expected.

—Harvey Wilson, of Marion, O., who has been a summer guest here for some weeks, returned Sunday from a trip to the Soo. Mr. Wilson brought back a string of the finest trout ever seen here. Two of them weighed three pounds each, and several weighed from 1½ to two pounds each. They were caught in Canadian waters, and Mr. Wilson has filed the necessary affidavits that he caught them himself.

—By some unaccountable means the report obtained credence at the Chicago Resort last week that the city water in use there was impure, and several families left on that account. Certain sinuet rivens individuals started the report that Round Lake water was being pumped into the mains. There is not a word of truth in it: The water is absolutely pure, comes from 200 feet below the surface of the earth, and comes in sufficient quantity for ordinary use. The person who is responsible for this report should have the hose turned on him.

—Yes, the hard times are felt by everybody; but, notwithstanding the business depression, Charlevoix has gone right along growing this summer, and is growing yet. Carpenters, painters and masons are all busy, and, while the outlook for winter is uncertain, there is good reason to believe that labor will be in fairly good demand. The transfer dock is in operation, and several million feet of lumber will have to be handled here; the Ferry seed warehouse is in full operation, and the machinery for the Williams's bowl factory is being moved here. Charlevoix may congratulate itself that things are no worse. There is considerable sunshine glimmering through the clouds.

BURGLARY.

The Charlevoix Postoffice "Touched" Last Monday Evening.

The Charlevoix postoffice was entered by burglars last Monday night.

When Postmaster Berdan came down to the office at 6.30 yesterday morning he found the safe open, and its contents rifled. The burglars had blown or pounded the lock out, and the pieces lay strewn about the floor. The thieves had taken about $200 in money, and $300 in stamps. The Captain's revolver, which lay upon a shelf, was taken, and an agent belonging to one of the young lady clerks was utilized to carry away the plunder.

Entrance was effected through a rear door. No clue.

—All my new fall underwear just received. Prices lower than the lowest.

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS

A Foul Vessel Captain Who Should Be Made to Pay a Round Bill of Costs.

The captain of the schooner Blackhawk was the cause, Saturday afternoon, of a series of accidents that should cause him to be remembered at this port for some years to come.

The Blackhawk, bark-laden, was being towed out. The big forerunner of the vessel was squared and braced athwart-ship, and the vessel was rounded into the channel at a lively speed. As she reached the bridge the end of the yard caught the telephone pole standing just outside the restaurant, breaking it off about twenty feet up, and bringing the the top part, with its arm, to the sidewalk fronting the bridge house. This brought all the wires running into the cable into the street in a tangled mass. Two or three teams standing near started to run, but were caught, and the crowd which quickly assembled at the bridge, supposing the worst had passed, were viewing the ruins, and began to clear the wires from the street. But the worst was to come.

Mrs. Geo. Bates and Miss Baggs, with a horse and buggy, drove across the bridge, and in crossing the wires the horse became tangled in them and started to run. Gaining the sidewalk, which was crowded, the horse narrowly escaped going through Mason & Clayden's windows; turned about and made just as close a call on the SENTINEL front. The ladies, fortunately, were thrown out without injury.

When the horse became tangled in the wires, the first accident occurred. The section of the telephone pole, with its arm was "yanked" violently toward the crowd at the bridge house, knocking down a man or two, and a boy. Meantime, the horse, loose from the buggy, was running toward the bridge. The crowd very sensibly parted to let him by, but old Uncle James Martin standing on the south end of the bridge, attempted to stay his flight and was knocked down and run over. He was picked up unconscious, the blood trickling down his face, and carried to his home where he remained unconscious for nearly an hour. Dr. Lewis was at hand, and after an examination expressed the opinion that, although seriously hurt there no apparent internal injuries. The old man is badly hurt and is confined to his bed, but will probably recover.

After the excitement attending Mr. Martin's injury had somewhat abated, a twelve year old boy of Mr. Compton, of Hayes was found crying and evidently in great pain. An examination showed that the boys leg was broken by the shifting of the top of the pole, when the horse was in the wires. He was taken to Dr. Bartlett's office and the fracture reduced.

The whole series of occurrences were forced into the space of five minutes. It was confusion worse confounded.

The Transfer Dock.

All the section hands between Traverse City and Petoskey have laid the track to the Pine Lake transfer dock, and next week lumber shipments will begin.

The Cameron Lumber Co. at Central Lake have 1,000,000 feet of lumber in their yard to come, and their regular mill cut will send ten car-loads per day.

When we consider that the Ellsworth Lumber Co., joint owners, will nearly if not quite duplicate these figures, the extent and importance of the transfer dock will be apparent. When once in full operation about thirty men will be employed.

A meeting of the Chautauqua Circle will be held next Friday evening Sept. 15th, at the home of Miss Blanche Bartholomew. All who are interested in the work are invited to be present. Those intending to join the Circle are requested to come prepared to send for necessary supplies.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

BY LEON LEWIS.

"And now for a serious word with you," said Bullet, as he drew his chair close to Alonzo. "Has Dunking proposed yet?"

"Not yet, father."

"Why don't you fetch him to the point?"

"I'm doing all I can."

"Well, you need do a little more," said Bullet, with unwonted gravity. "If this marriage does not soon take place, it will never take place at all. There seems to be a little leak somewhere. There are two or three sallows hanging around Honolulu who have seen the young man here, and who seem to know all about him. At least, they have a great deal to say, especially when they are in their cups, and I begin to fear that the secret may in some way reach Bennington. It would be a great lark for some one who will comprehend the situation and come here and claim him. As the case stands, something must be done immediately. Here are two courses to give him a shock—an impetus in the right direction—as we understand it.

"I don't know, I'm sure," replied Alonzo, "unless I pretend to kill myself."

"Hush! What! Be shot-hole hero? Try to think of something practical. By the way, can you account for his coldness?"

"Certainly. He's bound up in a desire to have and hold a wife, as he says, who are his relations, and how he came here, and so forth."

The old sailor bent his head in a reflective way, as if trying to a very critical point. "Lo!" he whispered. "I think of something over night that will cement the matter, I'm sure."

"The 'awakener' suddenly dawned in Bullet and his daughter's minds at about that it was expected.

Impelled by his sense, our hero again pumbled off into the hills early in the forenoon subsequent to the conversation we have just recorded, and was absent long enough to give Bullet and Alma again word to look for him.

Following a trail which also suggested to be Ralph's also advanced into the heart of one of those great gulches which characterize so much of the interior of the island, when the plaguing of a twig at her side caused her to stare and look around.

Keerl was again beside her.

"The Kanaka was sulking now, but it was a grim sort of sulks—one that somehow made her feel uneasy, and at once turn down an old model from a peg and started for the Creoles place to tell any one there know anything of these mysterious ways.

To his great surprise he found the premises in question utterly deserted.

This third absence was significant in the highest degree, and it was in a perfect whirlwind of apprehension that Bullet began securing the adjacent hills and forests.

He had not gone far, however, when he beheld a sight that brought him to an abrupt halt—Ralph Kemplin lounging against a tree and engaged in such a professional way as to be entirely unconscious of everything around him.

"Still thinking and in a brown study, I suppose," thought Bullet. "Wonder I can, and he not know the mischief in Alma?"

"No case being at once stated to the young Chicagoan, he became as agitated as the old sailor had been before him. The girl had not only been very kind to him, but had rendered him some services, especially in the matter of his last adventure—services for which he designed, as he had often assured him, to always treat her as a sister.

"Yes, that cursed Kanaka has carried her off to the mountains, I'm sure," was the sentence with which Bullet concluded his harrowing tale, "and all because she has refused his offer of marriage, and because she prefers her friend engaged to you.

"This was certainly putting the case upon a footing that touched our hero closely, and the deal with which he joined Bullet in a search for the missing girl can be imagined.

During the remainder of the day and all the subsequent forenoon, the couple scoured the great solitudes of the interior for some trace of the missing girl and Keerl, but all in vain. It was all the same at the end of the afternoon of their search that a shot from Bullet's rifle, as he was passing out of a gulch, brought the game down, and they were about to retreat from a pass they rushed into which they had descended, they saw a man emerge from a cave and look cautiously around. This man was Keerl, and the ourselves at once comprehended the situation. They had trailed the Kanaka to his lair.

CHAPTER VII.

MARRIAGE BEFORE ONCE RESTORED.

At sight of Keerl, so plainly revealed and so unsuspicious of any hostile presence, the old sailor uttered a sigh from his whole frame shook with a convulsion of joy and relief.

"Landsharc" was his warning whisper. "As last as you know, shoot, or he's inside as cleverly as we have begun."

"His presence here is a fair illustration of his business," returned Ralph. "He's not much, I believe, to leave as Miss Bullet's jailer."

"Of course—of course. The minion you see goes on him you know that Alonzo is a prisoner. He's probably some murder the poor child than anything else."

By this time the Kanaka had finished his long survey of his surroundings, without detecting the presence of the two foes, and commenced taking his way down an abrupt declivity toward a small clump of trees that lay some one valley. A pail he carried in his right hand indicated clearly enough that he was seeking a supply of water for himself or for his captive.

"We have him!" breathed Bullet in Ralph's ear, as his grim smile gave place to a look of concern, resolve.

"You see the point for which he is making? From our present position we can almost drop ourselves upon him at the instant he is filling his pail. Do not hurt him any more than is necessary. He's almost crazy, you know, with his love for Alma—and it's little to be wondered at, for she's a girl of a million."

The oneness of the old sailor's countenance showed that this suggestion was more designed to influence Ralph than to spare the Kanaka.

"It just as you see to do, my dear Bunting," added Bullet, when Keerl had fairly reached the brook. "And we shall have him safe and snug in less than a minute."

The event proved the justness of the old man's calculations. At the top-breakneck speed allowable the stream the hillsides, pail in hand, Ralph was astonished that followed, however, to see descriptive as it was short, Bullet supple Kanaka encircled himself so the body than Ralph and Bullet had he set themselves earlessly to work before he was aware of what was in the wind.

"So you're going to keeping house in the hills, have you?" sneered Bullet, when at last the Kanaka lay panting and exhausted at their feet. "Is your daughter?"

"Hah! you wish yet know, old man!" was the spiteful answer.

"We shall have to extract the desired information from him, I think," suggested Ralph, with a look of consulting in the nearest pool will probably loosen his tongue."

"I dare say. Let's try it."

The two men had laid of the Kanaka immediately, with an air which showed that carelessly they were in quest of information.

"If the water don't fetch him, we'll be him up by the thumbs, sailor fashion," remarked Bullet, as he and Ralph bore their prisoner toward a conspicuous peak, which had formed as a bend in the stream. "The most hell-to-where Kanaka ever was born, I reckon, and we look upon him."

"Of course—of course. The minion you see goes on him you know that Alonzo is a prisoner. He's probably some murder the poor child than anything else. Take care that the different Kanaka does not see or hear us. He's probably sooner murder the poor child than anything else."

"Safe and well?"

"Yes, safe and well."

The old sailor drew a long sigh of relief, as this Ralph, he scrupled only a few moments to find the key of the door in Keerl's pocket and he was in, thus bringing the captive and her business here to bear.

The scene that followed was sufficiently sensational, the girl, in her joy, singing wildly, and then suddenly breaking out into a flood of tears, sobbing herself impulsively into the arms of Ralph, with joyous cries and tears. And it was not without an answering emotion that he received those grateful effusions for his share in the rescue. As he had long been sidelining of even Malbis Stepa's efforts, he was in no memory preserved him from the full effect of Alma's unexpected gratitude. He did not love the silly girl, but he was grateful to her for all the interested kindnesses she had shown him, and he was neither so crazy nor so wicked as to receive her demonstrations unnerved. To the contrary, as he found her arms thrown tightly around his neck, at that moment of joyous enthusiasm, he became conscious of a deeper interest in her than he had ever before experienced. Even Keerl perceived that he had lost some by his violence thus he had gained.

"How has the Kanaka treated you?" asked Bullet, as soon as Alma, with well-acted confusion, had withdrawn from the arms of the young Chicagoan.

"Oh, very well," replied Alma. "He has gone on a close by pioneer and has tried to coax and scare me into marrying him, but he has not been particularly intrusive or dangerous.

"Well, shall he be punished?

"I think he'll be punished enough if we can keep that Kanaka that he does not get hold of me again," returned the young girl, with a shudder, glance at Ralph.

"We make good cages for that—with bars that even the cunning Bullet, "this also serious place the rascal fitted up for you. You be shaded, waving his torch around him and marking the hills, have you? answer Bullet, "and all because she has refused his offer of marriage, and because she prefers her friend engaged to you.

WILL APPEAL TO THE COURTS AGAINST SMITH'S POLICY.

Cleveland's Secretary of the Interior Reversed His Predecessor's Decision—Commissioner of Pensions Lincoln Will Bring Suit—Raid on Pensioners Likely to Stop.

Suspensions Not Legal.

The announcement that Col. Charles F. Lincoln, ex-Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, was yesterday in Washington, would bring to a test in the courts the legality of the action of Secretary Hoke Smith in his wholesale suspension of pensions granted by his predecessor, under the act of June 27, 1890, has attracted no little attention. Being an old soldier himself and prominent in the Grand Army, Mr. Lincoln is devoted to the interests of his comrades, and his position at the bar makes his opinions of expert value.

Mr. Lincoln shows conclusively that the Secretary of the Interior has no right whatever to undo the act of his predecessor except for fraud alleged or mistake which can be proved to be clerical in the pensioner. In this he is strictly following the law in the matter of the Interior not only ignores the exclusive right of the Interior, and the legal right of the pensioner, and deprives him of the protection the law affords.

In suspending these cases the Secretary has never claimed the action was taken because of the perpetration of fraud, though some irresponsible Democratic organs have at times, in the heat of the campaign, hinted at it. But it is not conceivable that the Secretary of the Interior could not have found out the fact if it had been true, and that he would have suspended the cases for that reason. The fact is, as alleged, but because he thought he had the power to do so. Even Keerl perceived that he had lost some by his violence thus he had gained.

"How has the Kanaka treated you?" asked Bullet, as soon as Alma, with well-acted confusion, had withdrawn from the arms of the young Chicagoan.

"Oh, very well," replied Alma. "He has gone on a close by pioneer and has tried to coax and scare me into marrying him, but he has not been particularly intrusive or dangerous.

"Well, shall he be punished?

"I think he'll be punished enough if we can keep that Kanaka that he does not get hold of me again," returned the young girl, with a shudder, glance at Ralph.

"We make good cages for that—with bars that even the cunning Bullet, "this also serious place the rascal fitted up for you. You be shaded, waving his torch around him and marking the hills, have you? answer Bullet, "and all because she has refused his offer of marriage, and because she prefers her friend engaged to you.

"This was certainly putting the case upon a footing that touched our hero closely, and the deal with which he joined Bullet in a search for the missing girl can be imagined.

During the remainder of the day and all the subsequent forenoon, the couple scoured the great solitudes of the interior for some trace of the missing girl and Keerl, but all in vain. It was all the same at the end of the afternoon of their search that a shot from Bullet's rifle, as he was passing out of a gulch, brought the game down, and they were about to retreat from a pass they rushed into which they had descended, they saw a man emerge from a cave and look cautiously around. This man was Keerl, and the ourselves at once comprehended the situation. They had trailed the Kanaka to his lair.

CHAPTER VII.

MARRIAGE BEFORE ONCE RESTORED.

At sight of Keerl, so plainly revealed and so unsuspicious of any hostile presence, the old sailor uttered a sigh from his whole frame shook with a convulsion of joy and relief.

"Landsharc" was his warning whisper. "As last as you know, shoot, or he's inside as cleverly as we have begun."

"His presence here is a fair illustration of his business," returned Ralph. "He's not much, I believe, to leave as Miss Bullet's jailer."

"Of course—of course. The minion you see goes on him you know that Alonzo is a prisoner. He's probably some murder the poor child than anything else. Take care that the different Kanaka does not see or hear us. He's probably sooner murder the poor child than anything else."

By this time the Kanaka had finished his long survey of his surroundings, without detecting the presence of the two foes, and commenced taking his way down an abrupt declivity toward a small clump of trees that lay some one valley. A pail he carried in his

PRAYER IS THE LESSON.

Paul has just been saying, "Pray on the Lord Jesus Christ." The present of Christ-likeness here appreciated is charity, considerate, conscientious.

The apostle begins this chapter with an appeal for the weak brother. He—who is he? Not an outcast, not a degraded character, but a weak brother. He is a man of 45 years of age, and has a railroad running through his farm on the back door. He was born in Allentown, but when he reached his 20th year moved to his present place of residence. He has a large family of children, of whom all have enjoyed trips through the country, but he has always stayed away from the railroads, and been complimented by his friends for these years he has never been more than ten miles away from home. Being a man of some intelligence, he is considerable of a reader, and he has read many times that he will be judged for his deeds, and he has been taught that he must be judged by his brother-in-law to accompany him around, that he may be a witness to take the trip. After it was all over Mr. Thoroughgood said that his heart was "in his mouth" from the time he entered his brother-in-law's house to get home, and never during the balance of his life was he so near to the gates of hell as he was on that railroad train. He was a perfect wreck of nervous energy, and the effect was felt for years afterward. He was a perfect wreck of nervous energy, and the effect was felt for years afterward. THE ETIQUET OF SMOKING.

If the Cuban Cigar Is Authority Here's a New Point Settled.

The requirements of etiquet as regards the obligation of one smoker to give a light to another from his cigar, are rather dimly understood in this country, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. The man who is asked for a light usually gives it rather than take the trouble of refusing, on the same principle as paying fare for hanging to a car platform, or going to a theater to obtain a rear view of an extensive variety of feminine headgear. In Havana the traditions of Spanish formality combine with the universality of smoking to form a clear and well defined code on the subject.

The request of one smoker to another for a light must always be honored in Cuba. Your well-bred Havana smoker would as soon think of refusing another the privilege of breathing the same air with him as of refusing a light. To meet the requirements of full courtesy also the light must be given from the end of the cigar, no matter how wide the difference of rank in the cigars thus brought into contact. To save a Conclas Especiale from the pungent flavor of a Whooping twoder by proffering a match, as is often done here, would in Havana be regarded as a snub too serious to its significance for upon resenting but at the same time too crushing for any future amicable relations. To give the club of a cigar to serve as a lighter and tell the applicant to throw it away when he has used it is a deadly insult and calls for blood. What would be done in Cuba if the request light should be refused is not known, for the reason that no such case has ever arisen.

This is unfortunate, for it leaves us without precedents to judge of exactly that case in this country. One smoker in New York, inspired by Havana customs, requested a light from another and was refused, whereupon the aggrieved person smote the other with such force that he was knocked out. We must decline to regard this as coming with the spirit of his American code. It has too much the flavor of a desire to be insulted by others to which we have referred. These refined principles would not dream of overcoming such a slight by any more violent method than cutting the offender out and sticking a sleeper rapier into him strictly according to the code.

Still since the penalties of refusing a light seem to be very decided if both smoothies, smokers may as well make up their minds to grant the favor. Gentlemen who have fastidious about lighting their cigars hand but may avoid the difficulty by smoking only in their own houses or offices, and appearing on the streets without the much-desired spark.

A TENDER-HEARTED DOG.

His Keen Perception Made Him an Unwelcome Visitor.

"Look here," said an excited man, rushing into the office of a busy man, "I want you to send up to the house and take away that dog you sent me yesterday."

"What's the matter with the dog?"

"There's everything the matter with him. He howled like a lost soul half the night, and half the folks in the neighborhood are dead and buried in their beds."

"That's very strange. He never acted that way with me. Did you chain him up?"

"Not a chain."

"Oh, by the way. What did you have for breakfast this morning?"

"What has that got to do with the dog's howling?"

"It may be we had a great deal to do with it. Did you have lamb chops or beef steak?"

"Neither. We had summer sausage."

"Exactly. I've hit the nail on the head the first time."

"I'd rather you'd hit the dog on the head. Spose he wasn't fed last night."

"Oh, no, but he knew by occult vision, instinct, that you were going to have sausage for breakfast. He is as I said, very tender-hearted, and blood is thicker than water. He discovered the presence of a play fellow."

But the silver clamoring of the door tremblantet the visit and the dog legion.

QUEER PETS.

Some of the Horrid Things Which a Naturalist Carried Around.

E. W. Dunn, the eminent Pacific coast naturalist, has been collecting rare plants, animals and insects for about forty-five years and knows the country from British Columbia to La Paz. Though he is 70 years old, he camped out in the wilds all the time, or what was next thing to it, prosecuted some of the deserted cabins of occasional frontiersmen. Outdoor life has done great things for him. His hard is white and partial bald, but that is the only way that age has marked him.

Mr. Dunn made a large and curious collection. He got 8,000 insects, 25,000 balboas plants, such as lilacs, calchorbur, etc., and 100 different kinds of trees, shrubs, besides seeds of flowers innumerable. In addition he got an aggregation of lizards, rattlesnakes, scorpions and coleopterous insects enough to start a small museum. They are for Yale Alto, Berkeley and various American and European universities.

The veteran naturalist had some queer experiences with his rattlesnakes. Near the old stage road to Yuma he one day caught a curiously mottled and very lively rattler with his butterfly net. He put the queer snake in a box along with a lot more he had got to be forwarded by Wells, Fargo & Co. When he finally got to San Diego he shipped a stock of the rattlesnakes, boring holes in the sides of the cigar boxes in which he had placed them to give them air. They were small holes, but the clerks in the express office were afraid the reptiles would crawl out and wreak destruction on the force. The naturalist was therefore obliged to get other boxes and puncture the second pin-holes in their sides. It was in this way that he got his quarter's stock off.

The strangely mottled rattlesnake, however, he took with him to his hotel, not dealing to treat him in the way of the others. To give him additional freedom he turned him loose in his brown drawer. The snake thrived and grew in this way, but one day the landlord heard his frequent rattlings, and was sonlarmed at it that Mr. Dunn was forced to vacate the place. He says the rattlesnake had grown to be a pet, and the landlord was unnecessarily afraid.

ATTRACTION OF THE ABYSS.

Why People Long to Throw Themselves From High Places.

Chevreul's well-known experiments with the exploratory pendulum and the divining rod show that it we represent to ourselves a motion in any direction the hand will unconsciously realize it and communicate it to the pendulum, says a writer in the Popular Science Monthly. The tipping table realizes a movement we are anticipating, through the intervention of a real movement of the hands, of which we are not conscious. Mind reading, by those who divine by taking your hand where you have hidden anything is a reading of imperceptible motions by which your thought is translated without your being conscious of them. In cases of fascination and vertigo, which are more visible among children than among adults, a movement is begun the suspension of which is prevented by a paroxysm of the will, and it carries us to suffering and death. When a child I was navigating a plank on the river without a thought that I might fall. All at once the idea came like a diverging force, projecting itself across the rectilinear thought which had alone previously directed my action. It was as if an invisible arm seized me and drew me down. I cried out and continued staggering over the whirling waters till help came to me. The mere thought of vertigo provoked it. The board lying on the ground suggests no thought of a fall when you walk over it; but when it is over a precipice and the eye takes the measure of the distance to the bottom, the representation of a falling motion becomes intense, and the impulse to fall correspondingly so. Even if you are safe, there may still be what is called the attraction of the abyss. The vision of the gulf as a level plan, having produced an "inhibition" on all your limbs to focus, nothing is left but the image of the gulf, which, with the intoxication of the rapid movement that begins in your brain and tends to turn the scales of the mental balance. Temptation, which is continual in children because everything is new to them, is nothing else than the force of sudden and the motive impulse that accompanies it.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa.

The famous leaning tower of Pisa is a campanile, or bell tower. It was begun in 1174 by the two famous architects—Bonano of Pisa and Will ham Innspruck. The tower, which is cylindrical in form, is 179 feet high and 52½ feet in diameter, made entirely of white marble. It has eight stories, each with an outside gallery projecting several feet from the building, and each decorated with columns and arcades. In the center of the tower a flight of 293 steps passes up to the summit. It is called the leaning tower from the fact that it inclines some thirty feet from the perpendicular, and it is not generally known that this inclination, which gives the tower such a remarkable appearance, was not intentional. At the time it was about half done the error in measurement was perceived, and it was guarded against by the use of extra braces in the further construction of the building and adaption of the stone in the highest portion. There are seven bells on the top of the tower, the largest of which weighs 12,000 pounds, and three are so placed as to counterpoi, so far as possible, the leaning of the tower itself.

TAKEN FROM A MUMMY.

The Strange Relation Created by a Seattle Man.

A well-known gentleman of Seattle recently handed to a reporter a curious looking scarfpin, the head of it being the size of a small marble, such as is used by boys. In color it was of a peculiar reddish amber, and seemed to contain a strange life-like heart, from which a drop of blood appeared ready to fall.

"A heart of fire bedimmed with hate."

"What is it?" asked the reporter.

"It is an eye taken from a mummy," was the reply.

"Where was it taken from?" was asked.

"I was at Arica, Peru, in 1882, and took it from a mummy myself," was the reply. "A number of young men and myself one day were out for sport and dug up half a dozen mummies for the sake of seeing what they had been buried with. We found money, pieces of pottery, etc., but did not strike a gold mine. Nearly all the better class of mummies seemed to have these eyes in them, and I took this from one of them. I could not learn what it was. Some people in Peru contend that it is the natural eye preserved and hardened in some manner, while others think it is a fish's eye. They do not know that there is such a thing it does there, however. The fact that these eyes are found in mummies is sufficient for them. I have never heard of any tradition connected with them.

"I took the eye to a jewelry store in San Francisco and tried to get it polished, but could not, although half a dozen men worked on it. The powder arising from it while they were at work would make them healthy sick, and also get in their eyes and blind them temporarily. You see that it has sealed of its place. I finally had it set in this pin as you see it."

AN IRON JAW.

Big Jim Carter Apologizes for Sitting Down on a Man's Face.

"Big Jim" Carter, the famous Nevada fighter, died the other day. Mark Twain in "Roughing It," tells a story of his prowess. Twain's account illustrates the quiet but deep determination of the man. One evening Carter entered a restaurant and unceremoniously sat down on the hat of a tall and athletic bookkeeper. The young gentleman, who was with two or three equally athletic companions, rose.

When Carter reamed what he had done he apologized, straightened the hat out to the best of his ability, and gave his assurance on his honor as a gentleman that it was not an intentional affront, and in a few modest words endeavored to assume the wrath of the young man, who was, in fact, a worthy citizen, though a trifle inexperienced. The man with the broken hat insisted that it was an outrage that could not be forgiven, and taking off his coat, challenged the stranger to combat.

"If we must fight we must, I suppose," said Carter, slowly, as if he decided wait to do. "I won't like the idea, though, for I don't believe the whole lot of you would have any chance with me. Let me show you something."

Quietly sitting down at the big table he took hold of it with his teeth and bracing his knees against the lower part of the table raised it and its contents, a big dinner for four, roast and all, and with his teeth held it aloft erect.

When he put the table to the floor without spilling a drop from the well-filled glasses, there was an oppressive silence, which he broke by saying:

"I may be a bad apologized. My name is Carter. Let's all take a drink."

Nobody refused.

How We Were Our Relations.

Something Choice.

As American who has lived for several years in Chiua has this to say about our national extravagance: "What the American family throws away would keep a European family from starving and would feed a Chinese or Japanese family. "Look at this," and he produced a cylinder of bronze as large as a 'plug' hat. "Here is a Chinese stove, or oven. With four or five pieces of charcoal a Mongolian will cook tea and cook rice and eggs over that, while an American domestic would use at least a bod of coal in the same operation

RUBBED AN EAGLE'S NEST.

The Dangerous Feat Performed by Two Lads in California.

Albert Farrell's two young sons, Frank and Fred, were recently out hunting near Alameda, Cal., when they espied a nest in the top of a big pine tree, says the Record. Frank climbed up to investigate the discovery of what they concluded was an owl's nest. It was fully a hundred feet up there, but the venturesome lad reached the nest. About this time a monster bird sailed out of the nest and, after circling around made a dive at Frank, but the lad succeeded in dodging the bird, which swept the boy from being struck and dashed to the ground. The edge of the big bird just brushed his hat. Fred was posted down below with his gun, and realizing that his brother was in danger he got a sight on the enemy and let drive with all the charge he had, which was small shot. Fred's aim must have been true, for the bird immediately showed signs of distress and wandered off a short distance with one wing somewhat out of gear. Fred kept plugging away at her bewildered whenever she came around. In the meantime Frank rellieved the nest of two owlish looking bunches of feathers and an egg about the dimensions of a bargard turkey's product, and after considerable difficulty conveyed his booty to the ground. The boys then proceeded home, followed by the parent bird, which could only be kept at a safe distance by discharging the gun. Upon informing the father of the escapade the boys were slightly frightened at learning that their sup posed owl goose was a bald eagle, which had frequentlied that neighborhood for fifteen years past. Mr. Farrell had to pay him his ranch lately and exhibited the young eagles. He informed the Record that the parent bird must be fully ten feet from tip to tip. The boys, the school of which the latter is a pupil, are modest little fellows, who don't seem to consider that they have performed any wonderful feat. However, they are regarded as conquered heroes by their playmates.

FANNIE ELSSLER'S CHALK.

Excitement of an Excited Dancer Before Her Appearance.

When I first knew Paris, Taglioni had left the opera and Fannie Elssler reigned supreme; the triumphant success, however, obtained by her in the "Diable Boiteux," financially advantageous as it proved to the management, was by no means relished by her lady colleagues, who, finding themselves during the long run of the ballet completely shelved, unscrupulously profited by any mode of annoyance and endeavored to mar their obnoxious rival. One evening Hurst de Gargy, author of the Diavolo, knocked at the door of the changing dancer's dressing room and found her in a great state of excitement.

"My dear M. Hurst," she exclaimed, "I go in a minute on the stage. I have scarcely time to dress, and some one has stolen my chalk!"

"Your chalk!" began Hurst.

"Yes, a piece of it. I have never ever, will you not help me?"

"But my dear lady, I don't know where to find chalk."

"Make haste," insisted Fanny. "I might fall. All at once the idea came like a diverging force, projecting itself across the rectilinear thought which had alone previously directed my action. It was as if an invisible arm seized me and drew me down. I cried out and continued staggering over the whirling waters till help came to me. The mere thought of vertigo provoked it. A financier of doubtful reputation gave a grand ball. Dancing was still going on at 5 in the morning. As one of the guests was about to retire, the man in charge of the cloak room handed him the first top coat that came in his way. "But this is not mine." "Not yours? I am very sorry. It is the best one left." "But mine was new; perhaps some one who has new ones have all gone since 12:30."

NELSON'S SHIP.

Just Placed to the Victory to the Butcher.

The Victory was designed to fit pig pens consisting of enlarged, twenty-four and twelve pounders ranged on her upper, main, middle and lower decks, the latter being armed with a few sixty-pounder carronades, and a long pivot gun. The weight of her one broadside of single shotted guns was 1,152 pounds, which was considered prodigious in the days of the wooden ships of the battle of Trafalgar, in which action this ship played a prominent part, but it will be seen that this pen fire of the French Decemvirate is described as terrific, destroying all before her adversary's guns and killing and wounding no less than 711 of the officers and men.

Compared with our guns of the present day, when a single gun of the Nile or Victory would be a projectile 100 pounds heavier than the whole broadside of the Victory, while one of the 110-ton gun the Canonicus is described as a projectile weighing no less than 1,000 pounds, the weight of powder is consumed in firing the broadside of the Victory or the Sun Fire, would be a mere trifle, comparatively.

From the time she was first commissioned the Victory was constantly engaged, under various flag officers, in active warfare against the enemies of England, frequently sustaining the honor and glory of the flag which proudly she from her mizzen peak. These services culminated in that great and glorious sea fight of the Sun Fire, fought on the 21st of October, 1805.

Not a Tiny Kite and Tail.

The Japanese, or Mascaries, were a body of Turkish soldiers, first raised by Orchan, Sultan of A. D., by Sultan Orcan from the young Christian prisoners. The mascaries from the Turkish point of view, were a great dissonance, formed the earlier Christian army of Europe. They were at first highly prized, and were considered a great power both in war and in politics. In 1512 they raised Selim to the throne, and caused the death of the famous Bajazet, and they subjected to the organization of any army than their own body and guaranteed all the new troops they could, in 1826 Mahmoud II suppressed them. In new troops remaining being the successor eighteen years before, which he suppressed the obnoxious troops. This put an end to the body. The mascaries lasted three days, June 14, 15 and 16 When they were crushed Mahmoud had his new armies in commutative peace.—Gay Vera Cruzacz.

She Knew Why.

A tall girl and a short girl were seated in the rear of an elevated car. Both were pretty. Both were tastefully dressed. Another tall girl and a short and very fat girl boarded the car and took seats opposite the other girls. The fresh arrivals were pretty, but their style was hard-faced and assertive. "That's a nice well she's got," said the short fat girl, referring to the tall girl on her side. The other girl sniffed. A few minutes further the first two girls rose to leave the car. The taller reached for her fare and leaned against it to brace herself for the stopping. It came. The companion was thrown against her, stepped on her dress and said, disconsolately: "Why doesn't she pick up her tails?" asked the short, fat girl of her friend. The friend merely sniffed. As the train moved away the short, fat girl said: "Why, she's going down the steps, and she hasn't picked it up yet. I wonder why?" "Because," replied the tall girl, with a sniff, "because she's a fool." "Because a number seven since. I saw it."

"Certainly not, Billiger," replied Mrs. Medwat, "I am glad they please you."

"Now, then," muttered Mr. Medwat, savagely, as he walked down town with his hand in his right overcoat pocket, "I'd just like to see what everlasting evoklesgod, sauk sood dog in the world will come up out and snap at me unless!"—Troy Budget.

IMPOSING CEREMONY AT THE CATHOLIC CONGRESS.

From Far and Near.

—The Catholic Columbian Congress was inaugurated at Chicago with solemn pontifical mass in St. Mary's church. The exercises elsewhere were held in the Hall of Columbus, at the Auditorium. Hundreds of archbishops, prelates, priests and laymen participated, including Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Redwood of New Zealand, and Archbishop Ireland. Delegates and visitors filling every hotel in Chicago. This was followed by addresses by President Bonney of the World's Congress Auxiliary and by Thomas B. Bryan of the Columbian Exposition. The opening address in the congress was delivered by Cardinal Gibbons.

—Signed proxy of the Republican Indianapolis elected Capt. J. H. Adams, of Massachusetts, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army, Commander Walker of Illinois was chosen with enthusiasm. Department Commander Walker of Illinois was also commander and J. C. Bigger of Texas was elected junior vice-commander. Nearly 400 regimental reunions were ordered at the next place of meeting.

—The Treasury Bureau, which is now inclosing the gold reserve, was ordered to be opened. The gold reserve is now $107,960,000, but has decreased $1,000,000 since the resolution is ended in custom receipts which during this month foot up $1,827,000 while internal revenue receipts exceed expenditures $1,000,000, and aggregate $1,878,000. For the fiscal year ends Wednesday the receipts from internal revenue are only $5,300,000 less than customs receipts. Internal liquors and tobacco contribute the largest single item of expense continuing to be pensions, the payments on this account this month so far being $5,400,000.

—Tuesday afternoon at Hope Cemetery, thirty miles north of Texarkana, Ark., died Miss Annie W. F. Crow and a neighbor named J. H. Burke had a conflict resulting in the wounding of a church deacon which ended in Burke's shooting Crow through the body, killing him, then taking one of the old sixes, then shot Burke fatally winding him. The latter then ran and killed Clint Crow and died five minutes later.

—Capt. Eastman, the Milwaukee bailiwick, was picked up from the lake Sunday night by the schooner Ellen Williams, nearly dead, and safely landed at Manitowoc, Mich., Wednesday morning.

—Mrs. Young and daughter, Mrs. Jackson, Texas, were probably fatally injured in a runaway accident.

—Two engineers assaulted and robbed Sarah Jacobs, an octogenarian, on the Boston and Albany Road by which fourteen persons had their lives.

—S. G. Humphreys, for ten years town-clerk, treasurer of Mount Vernon, Ohio, is said to be a defaulter for $16,000.

—James Haywood, of Berlin (Mass.) coachman, was held up by three Chicago highwaymen, one of whom exchanged clothing with him.

—The big Italian reached Savannah, Ga., with the remainder of the passengers of the wrecked steamer City of Savannah.

—Arrested for misdemeanor at Sedalia, Charles Hill was found to be wanted in Kansas for cattle stealing.

—Thomas Wagner Wade, of the burned steamer San Juan, is under arrest at San Francisco for manslaughter.

—Harry M. Walcover, a restaurant proprietor at Saginaw, Mich., was unfortunately murdered in his own yard.

—Bandits took possession of the Tilson train at Mound Valley, Kan., robbed the passengers and killed the messenger.

FROM WASHINGTON.

—Commissioner Lochren of the Pension Bureau, has issued an order modifying the practice of the office as to suspension of pensions. The most important change is that which directs that hereafter there will be no suspension, except in cases where the record shows on its face that the soldier was not entitled to any pension whatever.

—Thus far in the special session of Congress the President has sent 200 messages to the Senate—Confirmations, 116.

—Secretary Lamont has ordered the same weather signal service that is now furnished to the navy.

—A decrease of $604,728 in the public debt is shown by the monthly statement. The net cash balance is $18,374,747.

—The treasury, which has been disbursing gold coin, resumed the issue of currency. National banks are rapidly increasing their circulation.

FOREIGN.

—Rev. John Cosmo Gunn, D. D., LL. D., Queen's chaplain and divinity in St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, Scotland, is dead.

—Emperor William is making the greatest military display in celebration of the German victories over the French.

—The Prussian Princess, which is a boy, broken the back at Monte Carlo. She was picked up in a coma.

—Cincinnatus and Flagner were both defeated in the contest for the Grand Prix, the second ballooning in France.

—Mr. Gladstone's Home-rule Bill in the British House of Commons is due. The bill was passed on a late hour Friday night by 350 to 287. It was hurried by the House of Lords, which gave the final reading and adjourned. There was no national anthem sung at the close. Mr. Gladstone's residence in the House of Commons and the treasury building were crowded with people who wished to see the aged champion of Irish home rule, and cheered him when he appeared. Outside the Prince Minister was cheered throughout the streets. At Mr. Gladstone's residence two policemen had time enough to kill a man who had fired a cannon ball that parked the sidewalks and escort Mr. Gladstone to the house, and an enormous force of policemen was on duty along the streets to protect the people from interference with traffic.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Zibah Sullivan, 5 years old, was abducted from her home in Jeffersonville, Ind., and recovered from her captor.

—Lucien Adams will be hanged in Maine, for conviction has been the cause of his insanity.

—Father Barabino, of Baltimore, was arrested for his swearing chorus by disgusted Poles. The police rescued him.

—Lodgin, Ala., has a child 3 ft. 6 inches in sobbing. He was the village barber, Editor and Judge.

—Quite possible by two champions to show to the world that Jeffersonville gives a vote of thanks for a speech on the Chicago Fair.

—The clubs of the National League hold the pennant, which is the race for the pennant.

WAS A RIDE TO DEATH

FIFTEEN PERSONS KILLED ON THE BOSTON & ALBANY R. R.

Chester, Mass., the Scene of a Frightful Accident—Thirty Injured, Some Fatally—Western Express, East Bound, Crashes Through a Bridge.

Many Are Mangled.

The Chicago and Colorado, adjourned the Senate Thursday, depreciation the repeal of the Sherman law. Senator Hoar and Mr. Dalzell, in Congress, the death of Senator Wilson, of Pennsylvania, were laid before the Senate and resolutions expressive of the sorrow of the Senate were offered by Mr. Cameron and moved by and Senator Hoar. The House was not in session. The House was occupied all the day in Committee of the Whole.

Friday, after some twenty minutes spent in the reading of the journal, the bill to repeal the purchase clause of the Sherman act (commonly the House bill) was taken up. The House resumed the consideration of the new code of rules, the pending question being on the amendment offered Thursday by Mr. Dockery, to strike out the clause which provides that the Speaker may count the power of any member who is in chamber of any proposition to the floor to be present at any time that he thinks it advisable to do so. The amendment was adopted by a vote of 127 to 120.

By the House the debate on rules was resumed. In the House the House the Sherman act was repealed and passed with the Senate amendment. The bill was introduced by Mr. Dalzell appropriating $100,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to undertake the Chinese exhibition at Chicago. The bill was passed. The House then took up the bill to repeal the Sherman act, which it finally did.

Monday the Senate continued discussion of the Chinese exhibition bill. The House was occupied with the consideration of the rules. The Senate was in session two hours, but the House was in session for the entire day.

Saturday the entire day, in the Senate, Tuesday, was occupied by Mr. Stanford in a speech against the repeal of the Sherman act. The House was not in session. The Senate—35 yeas, 34 nays—passed a bill for the alteration of executive business was taken up and passed. The House was occupied with the consideration of the rules.

Thursday, in the Senate, the Chinese bill was taken up and passed. The House, under the supervision of a secretary of the treasury, the Chinese exhibition at Chicago, and the House passed the bill for the passage of the bill shall cease to be the property of the United States and shall be Business conditions have perceptibly improved during the past few days. May the good work go on—for there is much need for further improvement.

As if the country had not already had enough of "Democratic prosperity," the statesmen of the dominant party are now planning to enter upon the work of "tariff reform." There will be no permanent revival of prosperity until these experimenters get done tinkering.

President Cleveland's health was never better than it is now. He has returned to Washington to "dedicate" a part of his surplus vigor to training the recalcitrant senators into line on the silver question. "No vote against repeal, no pap for your suffering constituents" is the way he will put it to the southern bushwhackers. It caught the congressman as securely as sticky paper captures the housefly.

The commercial agencies note some improvement in the monetary and industrial situation during the past week. Consumption is overtaking the manufacture in many lines of industry which have been prostrated, and this will lead to a resumption of operations in many establishments which have been temporarily shut down. The country will pull itself safely through this crisis if the Democracy doesn't prevent it by adverse legislation.

State Game Warden Hampton's deputies are being everlastingly roasted in the upper peninsula.

Gov. Rich has appointed J. McLaughlin, of Elk Rapids, county agent of the State Board of Corrections and Charities for Antrim Co.

It is rumored that the fort at Mackinac Island will be abandoned this winter for good and the troops now stationed there removed to Fort Brady.

At the Cross Village pioneer picnic of last week Judge G. J. Dalthorp was chosen president, M. V. Barnes, of Harbor Springs, secretary, and A. L. Deisel, treasurer. H. O. Rose was elected vice-president.

The Traverse Bay Eagle has taken a census of Traverse City, showing the total population of the city to be 5,624, not including the inmates of the asylum. The number of children of school age is 1,675, a gain during the year of 121.

The Northern Michigan hardwood lumbermen's association held a meeting last week in Traverse City, with about fifteen members present. Plans were discussed for the coming winter, and it was decided, if possible, to retain lumber at the present price and pay the same for logs.

The flowing well of Mr. Hanson noticed last week by the Traverse City papers, and which was then giving out about 1,200 barrels per day, has constantly increased the flow until now it is gushing out at a rate of over 3,000 barrels a day through a two inch pipe.

The semi-annual meeting of the North Central Congregational Association will be held in Cadillac Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 19, 20 and 21. The meeting will be attended by the pastors and representatives of the Congregational churches of this section of the State, many of whom have been assigned places on the program of exercises which will make the sessions of the three days interesting and instructive.

Ellsworth Echoes.

We forgot to say last week that Henry Runyan has got a new girl at his house, the first one, and of course has been setting 'em up to the boys every opportunity.

Mrs. P. L. Wood leaves this week on a visit to her mother in Canada, whom she has not seen in twenty years.

The Pine Lake Iron Co. shipped twenty carloads of bark to Ironton last Saturday.

There are more guns and revolvers to the square yard in Ellsworth than in any other town of the same size in the state. Every boy has one and sometimes three and the bang, bang, goes on night and day. Why not organize the Ellsworth Gun Club and have a good time of it.

To the World's Fair and back for less than $9, but where's the $9?

This week the Ellsworth Lumber bought at East Jordan the machinery in the Mitchell building, which includes a large planer, matcher, machine for making mouldings, siding machine, turning lathe, etc., also a feed run that will grind twenty-five bushels an hour. The machinery will at once be set up and ready for business in a short time.

Fred Ledue is moved into the Yetaw Bros. hotel building.

Nick Shores and wife, of Norwood, were over Sunday.

Dynamite cartridges are being used on the stumps on the north end of Main St.

Arthur Meech and E. H. Harris are putting new furnaces into their residences.

We hope everyone attended the entertainment Wednesday evening gotten up by Mrs. Mears with the assistance of Charlevoix talent. Particulars next week.

We should think the East Jordan druymen would interest themselves in the road between here and there and get the worst places fixed before winter. East Jordan will probably use this road a good deal this winter.

Say! you don't hear the old Democrats around here say anything about the times unless they are spoken to about it and then they say "O gosh."

Everybody went over to Eddy Yetaw's to a wood bee.

Next week will tell you all about the entertainment.

—A. H. Lobdell and wife have gone to Holly to be gone several weeks visiting friends.

—Fifty parcels of land belonging to the Fox estate will be sold at public auction next Monday.

—Thos. Armstrong and wife, of Avonbion, Ont., are visiting Mrs. Armstrong's father, John Slaughton, of Marion.

—Mr. Joseph Hinckley, 212 Main street was a passenger on the steamer City of Charlevoix Friday for the World's Fair.

—Lumber is moving to the transfer dock from up the road rapidly. Thirty flat cars were ordered here for that work last week.

—Frank Myers vouchers for the story that Bob Crawford, who lives near Boyne City, had 2½ acres of potatoes dug and stolen last week.

—Rev. W. H. Macpherson left Monday for Cadillac to attend the semi annual session of the Northern Michigan Congregational Association.

—W. H. Miller, has taken a contract to build a fine cottage for Mayor James W. Osborn, of Kalamazoo, on the south side resort, and will do the job this fall.

—If "Harold" will send us his name, we will be pleased to publish his communications. We do not want the name for publication, but as an evidence of good faith.

—Mr. Conkle thumped the daylights out of Mr. Velker up in Bay township. Sheriff Myers brought Conkle before Squire Miller last Thursday, and he got it in the neck strong.

—Rev. J. W. Hallenbeck is the new M. E. pastor of the Charlevoix charge. He will arrive this week. Mr. Hallenbeck is a brother of Mrs. A. B. Upright, formerly of this place, and is man of ability.

—Attorney General Hills has rendered an opinion that Township Treasurers cannot be held for money lost in bank failures. It is presumable that this opinion covers school district treasurers, and is of interest here.

—Mr. James Meggison and Miss Hattie Thompson were married the 13th inst at the residence of David Hawkins, Marion Township. Forty-five guests were present, bountiful tables were spread and a good time enjoyed.

—School opened Monday morning with the following corps of teachers: H. F. Wilson, Supt.; Mary B. Chapin, principal; Alice Waters, 7th and 8th grades; Josie Peterson, 5th and 6th; Emma E. Smith, 4th; Beulah Moore, 3d; Mary Potter, 2d; Winnie Chapel, 1st.

—By the steamer City of Charlevoix to Chicago Friday: James Arnold, Robert Trimble, H. Bedford and wife, F. G. Hines and wife, Wm. Dougherty and daughter, A. Hickards, L. Smith, Mrs. E. Carpenter, Forrest Blanchard, R. N. Faulkner, wife and son, Mrs. F. A. Smith, Mrs. Morgan.

—There should be some means adopted for choke off street faktirs such as the one, who has been operating on our streets the past few days. There is very little difference between them and these card monte operators. They take good money from a town, and leave only a cheap lot of trash. Probably thirty brass watches were sold on the street Monday, at from $5 to $10 each, which cost $2 by the dozen. The council should shut down on the granting of licenses to such swindlers.

—R. W. Kane and wife went to Chicago Monday by C. & W. M.

—The SENTINEL office has just printed a 14 page pamphlet catalogue of the Charlevoix schools.

—Arrived last night from Chicago: M. J. Steckman and wife, H. L. Iddings and wife, Mrs. G. A. Sherwood and Miss Kate Smith.

—Mr. Williams, the bowl factory man, and his son, arrived to-day to stay. Three car-loads of the plant are here, and four more are on the way.

—The tenth annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of the Eleventh district occurs in Traverse City this week. The following delegates are in attendance from Charlevoix: Mrs. J. M. Lilliar, Mrs. K. Joslin, and Mrs L. E. Mudge.

—The seventh Michigan Crusade Band has been working in the M. E. church at Ironton four weeks. During that time about fifty persons were converted and twenty baptized. Capt. Mayhew and band wish to extend their thanks to the people of Ironton and surrounding country for the helping hand lent them while there.

—R. N. Faulkner, who went to Chicago Friday, goes to purchase glass and doors for his new residence. He will return within a month to complete the house. Last week Mr. Faulkner purchased 1,000 fruit trees of different varieties from Quincy Thacker, for his 40 acre farm just north of the village. Dolph proposes to raise fruit for a living when he gets old.

—The water works well is down 250 feet feet, and yet no water. The drill went through over 100 feet of rock and came to a stratum of about 20 feet of a peculiar clay which caves, and no progress has been made the past three days. They hope to overcome the difficulty, but it is possible that the hole will have to be cased with six-inch pipe before further progress can be made.

—No positive clue has yet been secured in the postoffice burglary case although two persons who were in this vicinity that night, were searched. The Detroit papers report the arrest, last Thursday, in Muskegon, of Samuel Carson, who has been in Charlevoix this summer, and who left here Tuesday morning of last week for Muskegon. As nothing was found on his possession, he was discharged. A sledge hammer, belonging to a blacksmith shop in town has been found in Geo. W. Miller's yard in the rear of the postoffice, where it was thrown by the burglar. Sheriff Myers is following every clue that shows up.

—There are a good many stumps in Grand Traverse region and some of them are in Antrim county. For the benefit of the owners and those who desire to be rid of them we publish the following: With one-and-a-quarter inch auger bore a hole in the middle of the stump, making it eighteen inches deep; put in twenty ounces of saltpeter, fill the hole with water and plug it tightly. In the spring take out the plug, pour into the hole a half pint of crude petroleum and set it on fire. In such a way the actual working time consumed in destroying twenty-five stumps will be only two or three days.

—The bicycle races last Thursday marked the successful opening of the fine new third-mile track just completed by the local club. The occasion was one of interest, the races were hotly contested, and the track was pronounced a success by every contestant. Archie Buttars, Jr. took the one mile club championship; McCutcheon, of Minneola carried off the prize in the mile novice race; W. E. Hampton captured the third-mile prize, McCutcheon again won the mile handicap, Harrison Bedford won, Forrest Bartholomew took the boy's prize; McCutcheon came in for another victory in the mile open; Alex Rose took the prize in the three mile handicap. The races were well patronized.

Norwood Notes.

E. S. Noble and wife are visiting at S. S. Spaulding's for a few days.

Mrs. Henry Wagner of Traverse City is home on a visit at her mother, Mrs. Moore.

Mrs. McIntyre, Mrs. Nash, Mrs. Jennie Kight, Miss Carrie Mae Angle Wood and Miss Bertha Harris are all at Chicago taking in the sights at the World's Fair.

On Saturday Dr. LeFevre, A. J. Shound, Fred Mayne, under the protection of our portly sheriff, Frank Myers, made out town a professional call for an examination of Mrs. Muirhead, who was judged to be insane and will be taken to the asylum at Traverse City in a few days. Mrs. Muirhead is over eighty years old and began to show signs of insanity a year ago. It comes from old age and softening of the brain.

THIS IS THE PLACE.

There are two up-lake saw-mills whose owners are talking seriously of removing their plants to Charlevoix and have already spoken to persons here regarding proper sites for them.

They have reached the conclusion that Charlevoix is the place for that as well as other classes of manufacturing and they have reached it after mature reflection and careful observation of the advantages which Charlevoix possesses over up-lake points.

They observe that the cost of floatage is not alone determined by the number of miles, more or less, that a log is moved; that the Pine Lake supply may be boomed at the foot of Pine Lake at a cost very little in excess of that at any midway location. This determined, the question occurs, what additional advantages does Charlevoix possess as inducements? There are several weighty ones. Charlevoix being a port of entry, and situated near the great lake thoroughfare, is a more convenient location for shipment by water, and offers greater convenience for charters.

The C. & M. R. railway passing through the choicest timber of the hardwood belt of northern Michigan affords facilities for supply almost unlimited in extent. The hardwood cut of the Intermediate valley must come to charlevoix for shipment. That fact is already established, and already provision has been made for it by two of the largest concerns in that locality. If it pays lumber manufacturers on the line of the railroad to transport their cut to these waters for shipment, it does not require the understanding of a philosopher to grasp the idea that it will pay better to transport the raw material here for manufacture.

These facts apply with equal force to other industries in which hardwood timber is the chief factor. Indeed we may say they apply with greater force to certain classes of manufactured wares, by reason of the double means of shipment—rail and water, afforded.

The various classes of material that could be manufactured here with profit are too numerous to name. The first of this class of industries is now being established here, and there is no reason why more should not follow.

There are many available sites at the foot of Pine Lake for the establishment of these industries. They possess rail and water frontage, and our people will gladly correspond with those having a desire to locate here. The railroad company has already shown its willingness to afford ample facilities in the way of sidings.

Charlevoix wishes to be understood as desiring the establishment of manufacturing industries, and all correspondence addressed to this paper will receive prompt attention, or be referred to those having the matter in charge.

This is the place.

DEATH OF L. A. WEST.

Mr. L. A. West died at his home on the north side on Monday evening last, after a protracted illness, of consumption.

Mr. West and his family removed to this place from Lake Geneva, Wis., about two years ago, Mr. West coming to accept the position of superintendent of the Rifenburg flooring mill.

The sterling and upright qualities of Mr. West at once impressed themselves upon our people, and up to the time of his death he enjoyed the high regard of all who knew him.

The deceased leaves a wife and one daughter, who are the recipients of the warmest sympathy of this community.

The funeral occurs this afternoon from the house, Rev. David Engle officiating.

—A Norwood farmer, who brought a load of plums here last week and sold them for $1.50 per bushel, remarked, "I have voted the Democratic ticket since I was of age, but I quit. I was one of them who wanted a change, but this is to much of a change. I want to see it changed back, and it will be."

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

BY LEON LEWIS.

The following day Ralph made a long visit to Honolulu, but could unusually serious and dejected, having failed again to find any clue to the secrets by which he was continually baffled—his real place in the world, his name, his kindred and his history.

"I may as well make up my mind to remain contentedly in my present station," he said to Alma Bullet, after he had briefly sketched the day's pilgrimage. "It seems that I am never to learn anything about myself, and that you and your father are the only friends I am likely to encounter."

"Well, what other friends do you want?" demanded Bullet, smilingly, he having drawn near the couple in time to hear Ralph's gloomy observation. "Its doing what we could for you have we not made you a pleasant home, and provided you with every necessary of existence, just as you in return have filled our hearts with happiness we never should have experienced without you? It seems to me—"

The snapping of a dry twig in some bushes near the cottage startled an intruder in that quarter, and the speaker paused to listen.

"Eavesdropping!" he whispered. "Some one is hidden there. Probably Keoel."

He bounded in the direction indicated, but soon returned flushed and panting.

"It was Keoel," he reported. "Alma will never be rid of the danger and annoyance of that fellow until she is married. I must look after him further."

And he again vanished.

"Your father is right," said Ralph with a sigh. "In marriage is your only protection from Keoel's persecution. I owe you a great debt, Alma, and the least I can do is to become your brother. Will you marry me?"

The abruptness of the long wished for proposal prevented Alma from replying instantly, but her face was in his delight that she crept into Ralph's arms and nestled her head in his bosom.

CHAPTER VIII.

ROMANCE OF THE FUTURE.

The silence was soon broken by Ralph.

"You will name an early day?" he ventured, in the same voice in which he would have asked the price of a bunch of bananas.

"Yes—of course," simpered Alma as she raised herself up and looked shyly around to see if her father were sharing her joyous triumph, or if the growling Kanaka were threatening to disturb it. "We island girls, you know, are simple in our tastes, and what just suits a good man is what we get ready. My wardrobe will be ready in fifty feet of coral time, and I shall endeavor to make it worthy of a man like you," and she dropped her head upon Ralph's breast, and nestled her forefingers into her mouth, "suppose we say two weeks from tomorrow?"

"Just as you choose, love."

"Then it is settled," breathed Alma, more simperingly than before. "Then we will be married two weeks from tomorrow. Would you prefer to be married in the morning or evening? I shall manage to arrange all that just as you choose, love."

"Then will we be married in the morning; at eight o'clock—no, at ten o'clock, I think, that will be better—married at home, or shall we go at the missionary rooms or the church at Honolulu?"

"It's all for you to decide, dearest."

"Then perhaps the church is the best place," mused Ralph, aloud. "It is so public on some accounts, to be sure; but then my sense of spirit likes to be married in as out-of-the-way corner, I know that very few have ever been married at our church in Honolulu, and I know I have a decided preference for them. I want all the girls to envy me, you see, and have a being married at home—at the opposition. But you don't seem to be interested—indifferent!"

"Oh, yes, I am—perfectly charmed," murmured Bullet, with a sigh that was of a force-pump. "I was merely thinking—taking leave of my bachelorship, you know," and he smiled gloomily and bravely. "Of course I am delighted at our wedding, it is your privilege to anticipate that with so much zest, and in case of any doubt upon any point you can refer to your fiancée."

"It is all settled, then," cried Alma, rapturously. "Two weeks from tomorrow in our church at Honolulu, at 10 o'clock in the morning."

Here Bullet popped upon the scene suddenly as he had left it, a glass at the finished and jubilant features of his daughter informed him, as he stepped out of his cottage.

"Well, brother-in-law?" he demanded, jocularly, as he approached.

"Why, my marriage with Ashley."

"Marriage!" Ashley!" repeated Bullet, simulating the greatest astonishment. "I don't understand you.

"No, of course not—it is all so sudden, so unexpected," returned Alma. "But the fact is, Ashley and I have just finished considering the whole affair—subject, of course, to your approval."

The two seemed all hurry to get through Bullet's head, and he lost no time in entering upon an elaborate display of his approval and blessing.

"I'm so glad to have Ralph—he declared, after he had signified the general tenor of his sentiments—I am so glad to have Ralph, and has long been to me as a son, and he the second and most charming of girls, Alma, and have always been the most affectionate of brighters. I am sure that you will both be happy. But let us go into the house and talk over the matter at our leisure. I have nothing of Keoel to be afraid with a final sweeping glance into the jungle behind the cottage. He knows that I keep him, but he seems to have gone."

The old man led the way into the house, and the lovers followed, Alma stealthily throw over her shoulder a glance of triumph at the door-yard where had intruded upon the interview while the business concerned the entrance. His face would have been a study for a painter, it was so full of baseless love, revenge, suspicion and rage, all heaving in silence in one mightily convulsed.

Keoel could indeed make one stupid mistake he had made by creeping to the cottage, and listening at the door, he had gleaned after the couple that to himself they were strangers to their betrothal.

"I should have knocked him on the head and let the girl alone" he said, "but I thought he had a chance and tried to peer into one of the windows of the little sitting-room. He even saw there is a way of setting things to rights. If I can only get at it. There are two weeks, if I heard aright, in which to think and act. Alma, I must, is a poor fool, indeed. If in two weeks I allow her to marry Ralph, that just as cannot invent a plan of separating these forever."

Unable to see or hear anything further, the enamoured rival took his departure.

In the meantime the old sailor had given a general review of the situation.

"We are all of us poor enough," said he, by way of conclusion, that we are alike rich enough to go through the world with every necessary comfort. Our little household here will not only afford us a good home but a good living. Ashley can assist me in his management during the remainder of my days, and afterwards work it upon his own account. The program is simple, you see, but it is enough for a reasonable ambition. And, after all, it is the wealth that makes our happiness, but affection and contentment.

"By the way," he added abruptly, "Mr. Benning should—but Ashley knows, and can tell you how matters stand.

"Why, of course," replied Bullet. "Then I can at least continue keeping this name permanently," continued Ralph. "It will matter little, in fact, if I should never discover the name to which I am really entitled."

"Of course not. If you marry Alma you will be just as legally her husband as if you had married her under your former name—the name you have forgotten and she, whatever it may be. Even if your real name should be discovered after your marriage, and it is to be hoped, of course, that it will remain unknown, why, even then she would not be the least flaw in your marriage with Alma—not the least."

The conversation was prolonged to an unusual hour, for Ralph could be a wilderness to his own pains, and the Bullets and Ashley had much to discuss concerning the coming marriage.

Ashley, who attended the evening, it must have a few words with you privately." Ashley had really caught his "you, thanks to Keoel."

"He seems called to be the evil genius of the future."

"He is cold—just like a stone." He refused himself to me entirely from a sense of duty, or gratitude, or something of the kind, and not from affection. But what do I care for the sake of the whole? I am prepared to be enough for me that he is engaged to Alma."

"Of course he is enough," assented Bullet. "The whole situation is lovely. It does take good care that there's no slip between the cup and the lip, and that Alma is married to Ralph as soon as you duly married to him—that is, within a few days thereafter. I shall suddenly discover that his real name is Ralph Keoeli, that he is not only son of the great merchant of Liverpool, but the heir of untold wealth—in short, that he is the very ideal of a husband for Alma. I have thrown into our keeping. And then the sooner we begin the better the sooner we can put the finishing touches to our plans for the future.

"Are you going to abandon us?" demanded the old sailor, with blown-out, reproachful surprise. "Are you going to suspend the economy upon the mere verbal statements of a stranger as Keoeli?"

The stranger nodded assent.

"Will it not be enough if my daughter and I expressly declare that there is not the least basis for the presumption of this man?"

"No, that will not be enough," said the quiet, reply. "Let me be frank with you, Mr. Bullet. It is out of consideration for you and your daughter that I have suspended judgment so promptly. My object is to clear a scandal at the very commencement."

"What do you mean, sir? Scandal? What scandal can there be in these matters?"

"A great one, if I am rightly informed," said the prince. "In ordinary circumstances, I should pay little heed to an intruder of this kind, beyond demanding of him the instant declaration of all his charges and the equally prompt production of all his proofs. But Keoel is mine, so I am reliably informed, not merely to assume you and your daughter of a want of faith in myself, but also to assume you of a want of faith toward Mr. Benning. In a word, Keoel says that you and your daughter know where the young stranger really is, how he came here, who his friends are and where they are, and that it is a conspiracy between you and Miss Bullet to invalid this unfortunate young man into this marriage."

The consternation of the old sailor at this exposition of affairs was so great that he could neither move nor speak.

"Now let these charges be true or false," resumed the stranger, "and they can come here, as I have been warned beforehand, to throw dust in your eyes, face and all. Such deceptions would necessarily provoke a great scandal and injury. It has seemed to me—I am not a Christian pastor and a man of peace as well as of a true friend to slip the whole project of this Keoeli in the bud by the course I have taken."

The old sailor had never seen lightning clearer than he now saw that the prince's action had forestalled by the last of good judgment and friendship.

"I appreciate, sir, the kindness of your action," he said, hurriedly, as he seized the stranger's hand and shook it heartily. "I will return home immediately and discharge Keoeli, and the whole project of her marriage with Mr. Benning is entirely and absolutely unknown to you hear from me further on the subject."

COURTESY TO WOMEN.

The Demand for Equal Rights May Lead to Trouble.

The courteous deference paid to women in all ranks from the highest claim to be considered as gentlemen is, in the opinion of many persons, likely to be modified by the demands for equal rights and responsibilities made of the advanced strong female section of the sex. The story of the lady who, on getting into a full carriage, was met by the question from the only male occupant as to whether or not she was an advocate for the equality of the sexes, and on replying in the affirmative was informed she might stand during the remainder of the journey, is scarcely an exaggerated illustration of the feelings of not a few lord.

In some instances women appear to recognize their increasing responsibilities, and a value comes to us from Newport, respecting a grand dinner organized by ladies at an expensive restaurant, where the viands were partaken of to the music of a band, ladies alone being present, the gentlemen being detained in the city by the inescapable claims of business or pleasure. Perhaps it was the novel experience of paying for herself (with her husband's money), the feeling of being what is known as a "Dutch treat," which prompted a lady present that the whole proceeding was a success, and that, even at the end of the day, "when the feast was o'er," and the reckoning had arrived, when each paid his share, there was no more, there were no defaulters, and no lady had to wait for her husband to leave the house.

Seriously considered, the change in the relative positions of men and women, which is now in progress, is one of the smaller curtesies of life. The man whose place in the drawing-room or on the hustings he expected to be treated with his inapproachable and his high-soaring title of "The Palace of Sweetness," Tooth, Tooth, and Nail, and elegant structure in every sense of the word. According to the Chronicle of India, the goal who formerly owing the tooth pulling to the barber, the barber is now the proprietor of a household of the Lord Mayor of London, and the tooth pulling is now done by a man who is the head of the office with hope and satisfaction. A Civil Wa-Commissioner's march through Georgia and the Carolinas showed the real weakness of the confederacy. In his inauguration address, March 4, 1865, Mr. Lincoln spoke with hope, and when Christ and Philippi brought the conflict to an end the clouds went up from the battle-fields, and Lincoln had appointed his Cabinet and started on a new term of office with hope and satisfaction. The Democratic party takes a pride in the fact that "the lower classes are all Democrats." Its National measures are such as to increase "the lower classes." Poorly paid labor quickly brings about such results.

That many a man who was earning good wages a year ago, but who was promised roast beef and pie three times a day if he would vote the Democratic ticket, would now be mighty thankful for a job of work, that he might be sure of salt pork, potatoes and pie bread.

Conductor Cleveland, ringing the bell, calls to Engineer Hoke Smith to "slow up a little." Later on he may have just as pertinent advice to give to Mr. Crisp's free trade ways and means committee, who are proposing to run their train over the bodies of the millions of workingmen of the land.

The financial and industrial depression has caused so great a reduction in the revenues of the government that the expenditures now exceed the receipts by fully $300,000 per day. Rigid economy will not help matters much, as most of the expenditures are fixed by law and cannot be reduced.

Some people never will be satisfied with anything. Half of those who voted for "a change" last fall are not yet satisfied and would vote for another change this fall if they had a chance. They should try to be reconciled, for it will be three long years before they get another chance to vote for "a change."

WAR ON VANDAL ADVERTISERS

Artistic, Literary and Social Leaders Taking a Cycling Toll in Blood.

A determined attack on what is defined as the "advertising horror" has begun in great Britain, under the leadership of many people of eminent artistic, literary and social repute. A society has been formed, whose members are to work individually and co-operatively to combat and check the evil of disfiguring advertisements, the end being "the protecting and promoting of the picturesque simplicity of rural and river scenes and the dignity and propriety of our large towns." The society's aims, according to the New York Sun, are not extravagant. Its entirety advocates a sort of local option in the matter of ugly posters. No person joining the society is committed to every feature of the general scheme but all work together to promote general loveliness and to conserve the beauties of nature and art. The disfiguring effect of certain forms of advertising and the rapid growth of the evil have been much discussed in British newspapers of late. The patent medicine advertisement fiend has become a pest throughout the land, and the meadows, cliffs, dales and river banks of England, the rocky glens of Scotland and Wales and even the lake sides of Ireland, are bespattered with horrible prints and daubs and worded announcements of medicines and mustards, corn plasters and corsets. Scenery the most romantic and famous is made an eyesore and a heartsaddy by disfiguring advertisements. America is familiar with this sort of thing, and illustrations of the evil for which a remedy is sought is needless.

The society recognizes the wide range of legitimate advertising, and it does not seek the abolition of the pictorial poster; rather believes that in its place it is an excellent and not unlovely thing. It seeks to abolish the atrocious posters and paintings, and to educate the public mind to abhor them; but especially it seeks to preserve natural and architectural beauties, to keep pill placards from St. Paul's dome and floating signboards from Loch Lomond. Its programme is to secure legislation conferring on local representative bodies effective control over all forms of painted or printed announcements visible from the thoroughfares or public places, and directing them to frame reasonable regulations, relief to be obtainable on complaint of aggrieved persons. "It is impossible," say the promoters, "to lay down beforehand any hard and fast rule as to the degree of prohibition. But, no doubt, it will be easy in many localities to ban a variety of sky signs, advertisements on chimneys and towers of objects, hoardings and boards for posters, straggling posters and tablets on walls, gigantic hoardings, and on gaping defacements on [illegible] of particular historical or national interest, or at picturesque spots; the sort of [illegible] which even the [illegible] pronounces offensive. The invasion of the country by the nuisance is felt by nearly all people to be an outrage, and to avoid it would involve the minimum of trouble and the maximum of results."

The society will also endeavor to [illegible] the exercise in all bills giving [illegible] authority for the acquisition of land or construction of works, to insert a clause prohibiting or, as the case may require, subjecting to appropriate legislation the use of any portion of the fabrics for advertising purposes. Further, it is considering the policy of imposing a special tax on all posters as a form of revenue. The society is to be the chief individual weapon of the members of the society, who will, each at his own discretion, abstain as far as possible from using commodities which, he personally feels are advertised in an offensive way or patronize establishments which he regards as exceptionally unscrupulous in advertising display. Because of its reasonableness and more especially, perhaps, from the character of its leading supporters, the society is receiving much commendation from the press and support from the public. It is not promoted by a spasm of crusade against advertising, but a fair fight against the too militant zeal and the vandalism of the advertiser's agents. It has a wide field and most people would wish that similar societies should be established and to work in other countries than Great Britain, not least, perhaps, in the United States.

MUSIC OF THE AZTECS.

How The Ancient Inhabitants of Mexico Practiced the Art.

The music of the Aztecs was subordinated entirely to the sentiment which existed. That is, with them instrumental music was but a collection of sounds, used to throw into relief or emphasize the intention of the singing the poetry of the occasion. Their songs were a spontaneous expression of sentiment or emotion, rather than melodic rhythm. As the metric character was mechanically, so with the music. In death songs or elegies, so say their contemporaries who wrote upon these ancients, the singing "was like a shower of tears." Again, the swaggy, turbulent, warlike tribes had for their martial music instruments whose sinews would drive fire and fury into the soul of even the chicken-hearted.

They had great delight in vocal music, says H. H. Bancroft in the San Francisco Chronicle, which entered largely into their functions, social and religious. Time and unbelief are said to have been perfectly manicured, and the unanimous voices of the boys' choirs, trained by the priests, impressed as palatable the conquering Spaniards, who certainly were not too partial to their vanquished opponents.

The Aztec songs, unless of religious character, were mostly of love, or women, or of hunting, although they sang also the deeds of their ancestors, laments for and elegies of the dead, of the gracious, the riches and the victories of their monarchs. The songs at sacred festivals varied according to the season, each month having its own peculiar hymnal.

Their accompaniments were played on wind instruments, horns of cattle, reed, shell trumpets, whistles, flutes, and flies of bone, of reeds, or of pottery, drums and rattles and gourds of copper. They knew the stringed music, their chief instruments were the tepemazili, the teponaztli, and the teponazzatli, the first two being held sacred.

The pipes dated representation of a deity of music known to be of Nahoan origin is represented as playing on the teponaztli. This figure is on a small one relief in serpentine in the national museum. The teponaztli was a hollow, wooden cylinder, usually wrought from the trunk of a hardwood tree; it was three to five feet long, by twelve to twenty inches in diameter. On the upper surface were two long, narrow, parallel slits, perhaps eight inches apart, with a transverse cut connecting them in the middle, like a long Roman H, thus forming two tongues of this wood. The sound was produced by striking them with implements like drumsticks, covered at the knobby ends with rubber or some other elastic gum to soften the sound, while different tones were produced also by striking at different distances from the division opening. Besides the teponaztlis designed for assemblages, some were made so small as to be worn hung about the neck of the owner. Their sound was singularly mournful and thrilling. The largest were of tone so resonant as to be heard at a distance of more than two miles. The teponaztli in the national museum of Mexico is of one piece, carving, with the head of a god and the arms extending along the other side, a snake's head being the other end. Another has carved upon it a warrior's head, adorned with shells and plumes, then a pair of jaws, an ax, and at the other extremity the carved figure of a coiled serpent.

The huehuetl also was cylindrical, and made of wood, too, but this was an upright instrument, while the teponaztli had its long axis horizontal. The huehuetl stood about three feet high, with a well-dressed deerskin stretched across its head drum fashion, not loosely, nor tighter, as the sound was desired deeper or higher. It was played upon by fingers, and to play it required great skill. The great huehuetl (God's drum), kept in the main temcalli of the city of the capital, was sounded only on a few occasions, on high religious festivals. Its note at any other time than in those stated occasions was understood to be a voice of anger, and the faithful to rally and give aid in some supreme emergency. It was either a war cry or a warning of public disaster; and the Aztec, hearing now for the first time the Indians flying to the city from far across the borders of the valley and assembled within the capital in a pandemonium of voices, awaiting the word to fall out and the hive of big man subjects, but suffering on the opposite horrid chorus in the screams of eagles, the yells of vultures and jaguars, the growls of beasts, the sneeches of jackals, and all the motley of wild beasts excited to frenzy, in at once caged or chained in the gardens of Montezuma's palace.

A Week Mon.

A dessert excluding little man approached the haughty clerk in a grocery store and meekly asked if he had any coffee to sell.

"Corn?" said the young man. "We have ground corn."

"No other kind?"

"Nope. This is the best ground coffee on the market.

"But I don't want it," and the little man braced up. "I got some eggs here the other day with seed in it, and I don't want coffee with ground in it. You must think I want pigeon."

A Fit of Laughter.

"May I kiss your lips?" said he.

"You may not," said she.

"Why not?" he pleaded.

"Because—ah—you to are not made to be joined."

Then he looked highly and kissed her in the right place.—Truth.

Seen in a Dream.

Affable Stranger—I can't help thinking I have seen your picture somewhere in the newspapers. The Hon. Sir Greenmount Ironclad, Gladstone—That is more probable, sir, than not. Stranger—Then I was not mistaken. What were you caught for?—New York Weekly.

No Wonder.

Grammy—Miss Kittie looks tired. Gladstone—That is because she smiles so often.—Tr[illegible]

SCHEME AT CHURCH FAIRS.

You Hire a Pretty Girl to Talk With You at so Much per Hour.

Among the schemes for making money at church fairs and other charitable entertainments is one which its originators term "The Living Library," says Harper's Young People. A certain number of books are selected, mostly fiction, and are represented by some young woman who is dressed appropriately to indicate the title of the book and the sense leading character therein. Each impersonator must also be thoroughly acquainted with the volume she represents, and her conversation and behavior must be in accord with the character she has had a little time with her husband, or with the manager, or with the committee, a telegram is dispatched to a trusty "library"—Telegram—to the effect that all the nobility of the place are expecting the diva at the station with presents of flowers and that a torchlight procession in her honor is arranged." Of course the diva goes and is very gracious in her demeanor to the nobility, who are expected at so much a head for the undertaking. One at Newport had Sarah Bernhardt, being confronted with a real nobleman, positively refused to play in the last piece, Coppee's "La Dousset," as she was supposed to do. Nor did she venture to suggest how her absence might be accounted for at the audience. This is what the manager said—"Ladies and gentlemen, Mme Sa—, Bernhardt, who has overtaxed herself lately is ill. She has literally succumbed at her bank. My opinion, in which I am sure you will agree, is that the superhuman effort which she has just been making is more than a sufficient reason for the dose she have paid." "Evelyn Sarah," cried the audience, and the night's receipts were saved.

TRIALS OF A MANAGER.

Singers and Actresses Often Refuse to Appear on the Stage.

M. Schermann, a Hungarian gentleman who has had the honor of introducing Mme. Patti, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, M. Coquelin and other celebrities of song and the drama to most European people, tells in Cassell's Family Magazine the story of his managerial vicissitudes. Thy the surveyed a poor impressario is the burden of his lay. Many are the trials and vexations to which he is reduced in order to keep his artists to their engagements and thus keep faith with his patrons, the public. Does a singer refuse to sing because she has had a little tiff with her husband, or with the manager, or with the committee, a telegram is dispatched to a trusty "library"—Telegram—to the effect that all the nobility of the place are expecting the diva at the station with presents of flowers and that a torchlight procession in her honor is arranged." Of course the diva goes and is very gracious in her demeanor to the nobility, who are expected at so much a head for the undertaking. WORK FOR IDLE MEN.

EASTERN FACTORIES FAST RESUMING OPERATIONS.

Sugar Smoke—Horrible Murder at Detroit—New Process of Making Glass—Big Big Fire Losses at Several Points—Waterloo Celebrate.

(From Tue and Sun).

—The final initiative of a revival in the plate glass industry since the closing of the factories last spring is evinced in the partial resumption of the Diamond Plate Glass Works of Pittsburg, by which one half or forty pots have been fired and six of the 500 men given employment. The amount of work furnished will be divided, however, among the employes as nearly equal as possible. The coke producers have voluntarily reduced the price of coke 30 cents per ton. This reduction will not affect the wages of the coke workers and will enable manufactures and factories to resume, giving employment to thousands of idle men. At Cleveland, the Otis Steel Company started one furnace in the large earthquake shaft of the twelve gangs employed in the large resumed work. It is expected that more men will be put to work before the week is out. The Cleveland Rolling Mills at New Haven, Conn., employing 1,100 hands, which started on about half time will now run on three-quarters time for the place hands.

—There is a scarcity of sugar in St. Louis and in all parts of the country supplied by the American Sugar Refining Company, or refiner trust, which accounts for the situation. Retail grocers are looking anxiously towards as the refiners for supplies of sugar. All orders are now being taken by the wholesale dealers with the distinct understanding that they are for future delivery, which future is to be as near as circumstances admit.

—A horrible murder was committed Tuesday night at the dock at the foot of Randolph street, Detroit. The body of a boy of the victim are hacked and battered, shows brown complexion, although the red rubbed hard during the night traces of the bloody crime were everywhere. A big pool of blood lay near the head and the surrounding stones were spattered with bloodstains. Pieces of clotted hair adhered to a block of stone, as if the unfortunate head had been jammed against it to make his death sure. The man was dressed in yellow garb. There is no clue to the murderer.

—At a meeting at New York of trust certificate holders the new Standard Oil Trust was formally dissolved. Hereafter, it is said, the companies that were in the trust will act independently. There is given no reason, however, for abandoning the competition. The change was made, counsel for the company declares, because of the popular prejudice against trusts.

—At West Bay City, Mich., the sawmill in John Welch's lumber docks, and before it was put under control, it had consumed 2,500,000 feet of lumber. The fire was of incendiary origin.

—Forest fires are consider great damage in the vicinity of Wayland, Mich. A Wayland, who started at noon for the train-dispatcher's office at the depot, where a special train was being made up for the officials of the railroad. At 9 o'clock this train left the Twelfth street depot to make a quick trip on Kendallville, Ind., the scene of the collision.

—The body of F. S. Burdick, an Omaha baloon-man, was found in Big Lake. It is believed he was robbed and murdered.

TWELVE LIVES LOST.

BAD WRECK ON THE FT. WAYNE RAILWAY.

Two Train Collide on the "Y" Near Columbia—Twelve People Killed and Numerous Others Nefiously Hurt—Passenger Train Runs Into a Mine Train.

Disaster and Death.

In a collision the other morning between a milk train of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis and an east-bound passenger train out of Chicago on the Panhandle, at Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railway, twelve persons were killed outright and nineteen others were injured. The collision occurred on the "Y" running from the main line just south of Colchour to East Hammond, Ind., at the point of a curve, and in a sparsely settled locality. The baggage car of the east-bound passenger train was ground into pieces, and from this most of the killed and injured were taken.

The scene of the wreck being far removed from immediate police and surgical aid made the calamity a most distressing one, and it was more than an hour before the first of those wounded maimed and bleeding, could be carried to Colchour and South Chicago for treatment. Physicians were summoned from the latter place in engines and unused cars were hastily prepared and used to convey the injured to the hospital.

Terrible Force of the Collision.

The trains met on the single track of the "Y," or Indiana Hammond branch, just where there is a binoy curve. The contact of the moving masses of cars was tremendous and hardly a sinuding portion was left on the wreck-strewn bagge car. The twisted and torn pieces of this car were piled promiscuously in collection by the jagged iron pieces of the milk train locomotive, and among the residents of Colchour came hurrying to the scene they found the fruit farm gold born to a President in the White House. Gossip has already named her Dorothy.

—Among other nominations sent to the Senate was that of ex-congressman. Willis to be Minister to Hawaii.

—Hiltman's body was buried under the laundry floor of the Washington jail, and it will there, according to Deputy Warden Ross. It was supposed to be in a museum.

ROBBERS' BIG HAUL.

ASTOUNDING RAID ON A LAKE SHORE TRAIN.

The Bandits Get $200,000, Shoot the Engineer, and Make Their Escape Undisturbed—Enough Offered by the Road—They Were Professionals.

Story of the Deed.

When the train reached the Ohio line at 7:45 o'clock Monday evening for New York and Boston, reached Conder, Ind., at 12:40 o'clock, it was stopped by an unknown man who climbed up and boarded the train, shot Engineer Edward Kimpel, and blew open the United States Express Company's safe with dynamite, stealing the contents. It is believed that there amounted to nearly $200,000, including a shipment of $250,000 from a Chicago to a New York bank. The robbery was a bold one, though it was probably the work of a gang of trained, experienced men, the leader of the best-known thief collectors, who have been denied the chance of a big haul for years, and who, therefore, are in the mood of the killed and injured were taken.

The scene of the wreck being far removed from immediate police and surgical aid made the calamity a most distressing one, and it was more than an hour before the first of those wounded maimed and bleeding, could be carried to Colchour and South Chicago for treatment. Physicians were summoned from the latter place in engines and unused cars were hastily prepared and used to convey the injured to the hospital.

The crisis of these use yet dead and the injured yet buried beneath the dumb form toil plaints the story of a great loss of life. The first news of details of a railway collision were present in the shape of the wreck of the milk cars, the Sorfragments of iron, and the wreck of the baggage car. The latter could not down the means of the wreck, and the injured passenger and those of the milk train. The latter, the latter made preparations for their relief.

A special train was made to Chicago, South Chicago, the police filled the profession of the works with by just to operation sent Monday. Two thousand men in the Chicago Dominion and in Indiana Area. A reduction of 10 per cent. in all wages of employes of other employes are paid 15 cents per hour, in which case a reduction of 10 cents per hour is made, and except, also, in case of salaried men who have recently had a reduction.

—The assignee's statement of the affairs of Hassell, of Hassell, shows liabilities, $622,440; appraised value, $414,200; liabilities, $256,000.

—Two conductors on street cars in Indianapolis were discharged, and thereupon all the employes went on strike.

—The nominal situation continues in Dupont. Commercial paper is no-view Street and the business is usual in size. Brodstreet's and Dun's weekly report of trade gives only meager evidence of improvement in the business and financial situation.

—G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade.

Improvement has extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the movement is indeed to be distinctly notable, though still seriously depressed. More important than any one fact to stand in the first that more works have resumed during the past week than have stopped operation, so that the producing force of the country is now larger than it was a month ago. Nearly twenty-eight thousand and thirty metal forge which have resumed, some only with part force, while twenty-five textile and twenty-three other works have stopped, and that not all the full River mills will start soon, the reduction in wages being generally accepted. The money market is more healthy, the premium on currency has almost vanished, the embarrassment in domestic exchanges have well-nigh disappeared, and the gold which seems to be available for commercial or industrial uses there is some relief in that respect also.

NO VOTE FOR WEEKS.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND REJECTS A COMPROMISE.

Silver Senators Will Delay the Vote as Long as Possible—Majority of the Democrats Will Not Attempt to Limit Debate—Senators Seek Rest.

Will Be No Caucus.

Washington correspondence:

ALL hopes of the friends of the original bill in the Senate during the next two weeks seem to have vanished. The situation is less satisfactory than it has been for some time. The President for the second time has been called upon to deal with the Senate, and has turned for this service. The President has communicated to the Senate his views, depicting the morning of the world's deliverance. The bill which the senate was, "The Battle Ours," the text being Ezekiel xxxvii, 9, and the chief of the bill, "Let before them like a great army."

With three exceptions there is no content this chapter opens. They were alive sitting for the overturner of the Lord's Israel. You know that if a line over a brick of kids will allow and huddle together. One line could conquer a thousand kids. The battle opens. There are a great multitude of the slain. Some are in the dust, and others carries a half million dollars in their pocketbooks. The battle is over. Some have fallen to the robbers, so they were prostrate. Others have been knocked. The robbers numbered eighteen; or twenty, and seven of them were killed. Desperate work. At the fall of the dispatch, the robbers, in the Old Bible, which needed the boundaries from the Lord's Israel, the Lord's Israel, the Lord's Israel,

Ellsworth Echoes.

R. M. Cherry was in town Friday and Saturday.

Charlevoix officers were down here Saturday after their post-office burglars. They searched five men and boys, but failed to get a stamp. Too bad.

Four or five of the boys went to Charlevoix Monday to work on the transfer dock.

We want to say right now that not many places in the state the size of Ellsworth will be favored with such an entertainment as was placed on the boards at the new school house last Wednesday evening. Mrs. Foster's cosmorama was a fine thing. It was first class, and the children, as an Irishman with a beaming countenance j at behind me said, "Shure, an' its a happy man that's the father of all thim childers." And the Charlevoix young ladies—we never admitted it before—with Ellsworth surroundings, are really a fine lot of girls. We hope they will come again. To Mrs. Mears is due much credit in so well arranging and conducting the affair. The East Jordan orchestra were in attendance and nice music was the result. Incidents and accidents were numerous. Two of the young ladies got lost getting to the opera house and had to be hunted with a lantern, after delaying the troupe a half hour. A large box filled with tableaux scenes, etc. fell off the stage onto the audience, Mrs. Foster nearly sprained her ankle, and—well, it wound up with Tom Fulton's getting as pretty a bride as you ever saw, excepting mine, of course.

John Van has a new house nearly completed.

Mr. Parks' new addition to his house is nearly done.

Rev. Mr. Seibert went to Grand Rapids last week as a delegate to the Grand Camp of the Maccabees.

We want a blacksmith to locate here right away; also a wagon maker; a stave and heading mill (lots of timber here); a brick machine (got lots of nice clay); and lots of other industries that will help the "Oxbow City" to become a busy and bustling city.

Will Credo fell thirty feet with a scaffold Monday and is a badly badly bruised fellow. Luckily no bones were broken.

In town this week: Mr. Beardslee, of the land department of the G. R. & I. R. R.; D. R. Corey, agent of the Capitol Investment Co., of Lansing; Geo. Sherwood, of Charlevoix visiting at W. C. Mears. OXBOW.

Hastings from Hayes.

Mrs. Jennie Murry is visiting in Berrien Co.

Kiln No. 2 at the Bay Shore Lime Works is ready to fire and will be in operation this week.

W. J. Shanks started his handle factory on Monday after a two or three weeks' shut down.

A Mr. Hawley has rented the Burgess shingle mill and will run it to its full capacity.

Moses Cooper and wife were in East Jordan last week.

Geo. Weaver, Sunday school missionary from Petoskey, was at Bay Shore on Sunday.

There will be a larger acreage of fall wheat town in Hayes than if the price of wheat is low.

School commenced at Maple Grove on Monday, Miss Lenna Cooper, teacher.

The reorganization of the Chautauqua Circle for the ensuing year has been completed, with the following officers: Prof. D. F. Wilson, President; Miss Blanche Bartholomew, Vice President, Miss Pearle Dorth, Secretary. A second meeting of this Circle will be held next Friday evening, Sept. 22d, to which all who are interested in the work are cordially invited.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The tug Mary McLane laid up for the season.

D. A. Blodgett's steam yacht Adele, en route from Mackinac to Muskegon, laid here Sunday night.

The schooner America is ashore on Point Au Barques.

The schooner Adirondac, bark Aden for Harker went ashore on South Manitou Island in the fog early last week. The cargo was insured.

The captains of the schooners Seaman, Fearless and Charlotte Raab, have been rigging themselves for two days, that they were in out of the wet last Saturday.

The schooner L. M. Mason, bound from Chicago to Charlevoix to load for Carpenter Bartholomew & Co., was caught in the late gale, and lost all her sails. She was towaged to reach Harbor Springs, where she telegraphed to Chicago for new sails.

The big steamship Manitou had a hard experience Saturday in the gale. When off Muskegon she rolled her smokestack off, breaking a steampipe, leaving the steamer at the mercy of the sea. There were 250 passengers on board, and they put on life preservers. She was picked up and towed into Chicago.

The severest gale of the season prevailed throughout Friday night, Saturday and well into Saturday night. The steamer Charlevoix with a large Charlevoix party on board, was caught in it just after leaving here Friday evening, and ran into Northport harbor, where she laid until early Sunday morning.

Mr. Clark will be greatly missed by all Masonic lodges, as he is an efficient officer, an earnest worker and a general favorite.

—An eastern editor remarked that a man got into a serious trouble by two wives. A western editor added they sometimes get into trouble by marrying one. Another editor said he had known instances where a man got into trouble by simply promising to marry and going no further. A half-headed editor said he had notified that occasionally a man got in to trouble by only being seen with another man's wife.

—The following from an exchange is worth taking in the memory: "Very often we read of some one who has stuck a rusty nail into his foot, knee, or some other portion of his person and took jaw has resulted therefrom, of which the patient died. Yet all such wounds, it said can be healed without such fatal consequences as often follow them. Smoke such wounds, or any wound or broken skin is infused, with burning wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool will take the pain out of the worst wound, and repeated once or twice it will allay the worst case of inoculation, arresting fever, wound.

—My request we publish the law concerning stray animals. It could be with profit cut out and saved for reference: If you take up a stray animal, you must within ten days give notice to your township clerk, who must take an entry of the same; then you advertise the animal in your local paper and sixty days after such advertisement has appeared, you apply to a justice of the peace to sell the animal. He issues a warrant to the constable who gives ten days notice by posters and you get all your expenses. The penalty of taking a stray animal and not giving notice is $5, and besides the owner can come upon your place and take it away without paying you anything.

Cherrie street, from the depot to Dixon avenue, will be covered the entire width. It is the intention of the company to use this material on all the streets of Lindsay Park.

The Postoffice Robbery.

Ever since the $2,000 Mackinac postoffice robbery last week, excitement has been high around the straits.

One morning last week a party of citizens and officers left Mackinac on the tug Joker in pursuit of a sailboat containing four men, which was overtaken near Naubinway. The robbers opened fire upon the tug with Winchesters, wounding James Murray. The fire was returned by the officers and one of the robbers was wounded. After a little skirmish the tug was driven off and returned to Mackinac island for reinforcements.

The robbers were later discovered camped in the woods on the north shore and word sent to Mackinac, but when the party arrived, the thieves had made good their escape again.

There is very little doubt that this is the same gang that did the Charlevoix job, as a boat and three men were seen at Little Island by some fishermen on the day of the robbery.

CURRENT MARINE NOTES.

The Schooner Mary Ann was over from Beaver Island with a load of wheat this week.

Steam barges are taking lumber from the transfer dock about as fast as the cars bring it there.

The propeller Faxton arrived from the straits last night and is hauling out at Washburn's yard to receive a new wheel.

The schooner Jay Gem on her last trip over lost her foresail and jibs, and had to go into Manitowoc. She was patched up and taken to Milwaukee, where she received new sails.

The schooner Starke came into port Sunday minus her big anchor. She was bound for Torch Lake, and came to anchor under the lee of Cathead. The wind shifted and the captain was compelled to slip his cable and run for this port.

The great passenger whaleback Columbus has made more money than all the excursion boats put together. It is now thought she will be retained in Chicago and run either between Chicago and Milwaukee, or on the Benton Harbor and St. Joe route.

On Thursday last the scow Flick arrived in port in a leaking condition, and hauled out at Washburn's yard for repairs. Capt. Harris was also in a badly used up condition. When off the Manitous the Captain fell into the hold, discharging his shoulder and cutting his head badly.

The Manistique Tribune says $20 a month will be the going wages in the woods this winter.

Pike Lake is a fever of excitement over the discovery of an oil well on the farm of W. W. Lewis located within a mile of the town. Mr. Lewis for several years has had a celery garden in the center of which is a noisome spring. For the last two weeks the water has been highly impregnated with crude petroleum which oozes from the spring and leaves a sediment on the sides. Experts claim that oil can be produced in good quantities.

WATER AT THE WELL.

Yesterday afternoon, at a depth of 590 feet, the drill struck water at the water works well, and this morning we have a "gusher."

Pure, clear and cool water comes up at the rate of 80 gallons a minute, 4,800 gallons an hour, or 115,200 gallons in 24 hours.

The Charlevoix water works are now supplied from two six-inch wells, with a supply of fully 7,500 gallons an hour.

Death of E. B. Marshall, of Banks.

The township of Banks, Antrim county mourns the loss of one of its chief citizens. Mr. E. B. Marshall died at his home in that township last Sunday, aged 45 years.

Several months ago Mr. Marshall was kicked in the back by a horse. While the injury was accidentally not a serious one, it was thought that he would recover, until about two weeks ago, it was discovered that internal hemorage and intestinal lesions had resulted, and sorrowfully his relatives and friends awaited the end, surely approaching.

Mr. Marshall was a pioneer of Banks, having located there in 1866, coming from Ohio. In these 27 years he has occupied many positions of trust in the township, and the name of E. B. Marshall has been synonymous with integrity. He was one of the founders, and all there years a loyal working member of the Atwood Congregational church, and lived a consistent Christian. Banks contains many good men, and E. B. Marshall was one of the best of them.

He leaves a wife and four children. He was a brother of Mrs. Dr. L. M. Kanagy, of this place, and Mrs. E. P. Wilkinson, of Banks. The funeral occurred Tuesday afternoon.

The homestead act was passed almost as soon as the Republican party came into power in 1861. It was a party measure. The Democrats always looked upon the public domain as a source of direct revenue. To their way of thinking, it was as un-business like for a nation to give away its good land as it would be for an individual. They were incapable of rising to a statesmanship's view of the subject. The Republicans, on the other hand, always claimed that the government simply held the land in trust for the people who would actually cultivate it. Under the Democratic policy men of wealth bought large tracts of land at the government price, and held the same for speculation. The State of Michigan was long kept back from its normal development by the curse of non-resident and speculative ownership of a great deal of its best land. Pioneers pushed out beyond it, going westward until they found quite as good land, which they could take under the homestead act. In time the evil corrected itself largely, just as in time the public domain was narrowed down to a point which rendered it impossible up of a new strip the signal for a desperate scramble.

BY LEON LEWIS.

That Keeri had foreseen about how the matter would turn, was sufficiently evinced by his conduct. Again, his observations we have recorded, not a word escaped him that could be taken by any colony spaniel on the door of a pen. In the pleasure of a man who considers himself out of danger.

As to Alisa and Ralph, they had taken very little notice of the intruder, the prompt action of Hollet having secured them that he would do all that could be done in his own interest and that of the bridal couple. Alisa, I is true, could not refrain from darting sunny glances of concern and affliction at the rejected suitor, and Ralph was only restrained by a sense of dignity from the instant chastisement of the intruder, but both of the contrabbing parties may be said to have rather enjoyed than resented the intrusion.

"Well, what is decided?" whispered Alisa to her father, as skilled referee, husband and cuckold, to her side.

"We must go home immediately, we the answer, in a correspondingly low voice. "Ralph's carriage is still waiting. "I'll explain all as soon as we are by ourselves."

This conclusion was so different from that anticipated by Alisa that she could neither restrain her tears nor her anger.

"Is that tawny rascal, then, so high and mighty that we must be his humble victims?" she demanded, excitedly.

"Hush! Let us have no further words here, cajoined Hollet, nervously. "Nothing is particularly amiss—if you do as I tell you. The priest has given me instructions. We must leave at once.

The gravity of her father's tone impressed Alisa, and she no longer delayed the departure. Keeri waited in his servous attitude until the bridal couple and chaperon had passed to their carriage and then he stalked quietly away, paying little heed to the surprised gaze and reproaches of which he was the object from the remaining portion of the guests, whose pleasure he had thus troubled.

In three minutes more the little church was deserted, and the bridal party were leaving the town behind them.

"To go home in our first step, of course," whispered Ralph, indignantly, by a nod an unwelcome listener in the person of the driver of the carriage. "It's only at home that I sh.. be able to talk with you freely."

Hardly a word passed until the ride was over, although it was one, it will be remembered, of nearly an hour's duration.

"You may wait," said Hollet to the driver, when the party had alighted, "I shall probably require your services further."

The bridal couple were soon seated with Hollet in the parlor of their little sitting room, and then the bold and still angry cousin of Alisa turned impatiently to her father.

"Can now you tell me, all," said she, a little in a whisper, after looking nervously around the room, as though she had the basement of the church full of sailors from the dock and Kanaka from all points of the compass. "He must have had, the jailer thinks, fifty or fifty armed men at his beck and he could have three inten upon an unheard of disturbance. To kill Mr. Benning outright, and to carry you off again to the hills. Alisa, were two well-defined points of his plan; and my own life, of course, was the accounted of the valued a feather. To save not only our own lives but those of our blind guests, the pastor explained me by everything sacred to the church, I have taken—"

"Yep have done well in heeding the pastor's advice, of course," said Ralph. "But it is not necessary that Alisa and I should slaughter our idea of getting married. We can all slip off quietly to some near village of the interior, and there have the marriage ceremony performed, and the whole affair ended. I should say, within two or three hours."

"The very course I was intending to take—the very course, in fact, advised by the pastor," cried Hollet, eagerly. "It was in this view that I had kept my secret from Alisa. Ah, Ralph, you have taken the words completely upon Keeri; for after you are once married, of course, all his schemes and machinations will fall to the ground, for the simple reason that there will be liberty force.

"Let us be off at once," proposed Alisa, arising. "There's the little chapel on the other side of Pearl Harbor. Mr. Hapgood's—scarcely five miles distant, and that is probably as good a place for us as any other.

"At any rate, it is the place I have mentally selected," said Hollet, giving his daughter a look of secret intelligence. "You and Alisa and Hollet look to your toilets, and we'll be off for Mr. Hapgood's in a few moments.

"I second the motion that Hollet was anxious to say a few words in private to Alisa, as he accordingly availed himself of the suggestion about his toilet and retired to his own apartment. Alisa, in like manner, was about retiring to her room when her father interjected her on the stairs.

"Let me entreat, lest a very important one," he whispered. "All Pele said about Keeri's plot to kidnap Alisa is to be made up under the spur of the moment. The real difficulty is, he acquainted me, that Keeri came to the church with the intention of interfering with Ashley is, and with the further intention of carrying off your blind guests to the hills."

"But how could Keeri have learned Ashley's identity? Alisa cried, in a low tone, for she knew that people, perhaps, from the thousands of whom I have spoken—the three who have been hanging about Honolulu all these weeks, and who have shown clearly enough, in one way and another, that they are in the secret of Ashley's identity—you, perhaps, Ralph, I was very considerate of the pastor not to force Keeri to tell us all, he knows about Ashley, and you also see that it was equally incumbent upon me to keep a reticent.

"Exactly!" breathed Alisa, with a fervor look of resolve upon her countenance that Hollet feared was before soon upon it. "I see! I see. No time is to be lost, I am to be off for Mr. Hapgood's at once. By this movement we shall baan the Kanaka and make a success of our project."

In five minutes more the trio were on their way in the carriage around Pearl Bay to the little chapel of Mr. Hapgood. Not a soul had been seen approaching from the town, and the hearts of Hollet and his daughter beat high, with the hope that their ruse-ruse would be crowned with success.

But Keeri was not to be so readily beaten.

The carriage had reached a lonely point of the road, in one of the valleys bordering Pearl Bay, when three Kanakas, looking most unlikely to emerge from a place of concealment, leapt out of the bushes and laid hands on Ralph and his companion, while the driver of the carriage turned like a tiger upon Alisa, thus showing that he was in Keeri's service.

That Ralph fought with as much ability as courage will be taken as a matter of course, but what could he do against such odds and at such a disadvantage? The old sailor fell insensible at the first onslaught, and a crushing blow upon our hero's skull, which stretched him beside Hollet. Of what further them was done he could not know nothing.

At least two or three hours must have passed subsequent to this furious assault, before Ralph recovered his senses, but he finally gathered himself up into a sitting posture, after some preliminaries, and beat a keen glance to every direction around him.

"The villains!" he ejaculated. "They've fled, of course. They've not only given me the compliments of Hawaii Nei, as they said, but they've doubtless robbed me!"

He felt hastily in his pocket.

"Yes, they have taken purse and papers," he added. "A Kanaka's hoo-hoo! Can it be that he has snuggled himself into my place. He had driven these desperados stakes?"

Writing his bruised hand, he arose to his feet and bent his steps in the direction of Honolulu.

He had gone scarcely a hundred rods, however, when he met Hollet and other Kanaka of our acquaintance, the second of whom, it will be found, it will be remembered, who "did" Ralph in Honolulu, who "did" the most memorable injuries, as he wrote afterward, which had laid Ralph of his senses.

"Why! be of any use to you, Mr. Benning?" asked Keeri, after Hollet had wonder he felt at seeing him in such a plight.

Ralph halted with an inquiring glance.

"Are you speaking to me, sir?" he inquired.

Keeri nodded.

"Then I beg to inform you that my name is not Benning, but Kemplin," Ralph exclaimed.

"Oh, indeed!"

The Kanaka was silent a moment, resulting in his amazement, and then he cried:

"You are aware, of course, that Mr. Hollet has been seriously injured, taken home in an insensible condition, dangerous condition?"

"Indeed! Ralph's turn to recoil in astonishment, he replied.

"Yes, I have seen the doctor."

"Never heard the name," said Ralph, wonderingly. "Never heard the name of Hollet, I mean, in connection with parties. What are they to me? Are you acquainted with the man, sir?"

The Kanaka was reasonably brave, as we have asserted in a former page, his things were not going too well for his comprehension, and he turned to his companion.

"Well, let him go," muttered Ralph. "He probably thinks he feels guilty in being one. Let's—let me think a minute. The business with Hollet and ruffians has really confused me. Ah, I have it! Let the ruffians go! Let Malia—has just called in the Nor'wester from the Arctic ocean. The Yankee is to sail for China tomorrow. Feeling lonely and gloomy I came out here to look at the fish ponds and other curiosities, and I have been nearly murdered; at Hank Hipple's suggestion, by these three remaining rascals of the wester! Well, well, he added, with a sigh, as he arose to his feet after several hours at my disposal, and it will be strange if I ever cease to be a fool. I have to justice before I leave the island.

"With the resolute uppermost in his mind, he turned his steps toward Malia's.

"And Malia! How can I reach her? How save her from that vile Hank Hipple?

"Its tolerably by the early, the recent blow upon Ralph's head had counteracted his faculties to a degree, and from a former one from the same assailant. All that had passed in that memorable day was now in its sure utterly insignificant, to a sense sedousness, while his old memory had been restored. He no longer knew anything about Benning, Alisa, or Hollet. In a word, he was himself again.

CHAPTER X.

THE SITUATION CLEARING.

As Ralph Kemplin, "clothed and in his right mind," although bruised in body, continued his brisk walk towards the capital, he was conscious of the gaze of the rude.

"Seems to me I ought to have reached home before now," said he at last to himself, aloud. "Queer enough! I'm thinking I must have taken a wrong turn. Ah, the dizziness, the weakness induced by the injuries and the heat of the afternoon, set at length came out upon the road of the Nuuanu Valley, and I saw the scene. It will be remembered, by those of the fists assault in had experienced at the hands of Hipple's three ruffians who knew where I was.

"From this point Punch Bowl Hill is plainly visible, looming up in the sky beyond the capital, and the amazement that the place of my home, I, to see nothing of it, I, to see, almost took away his senses.

"Why, I'm farther from town after all these miles of travel than I was when those ruffians attacked me," he exclaimed, turning to the Nuuanu Valley. "I'm sure I'm at least a mile in the opposite direction! Well, I'm a fool, I suppose, but I can see Malia and other indications of the struggle.

He failed in this expectation, of course, but he did not relax his steady pace toward the town.

"They must have carried me inland a few miles to rob me at their leisure," he said, in a tone of the deepest gloom. "It may be they had a wagon in waiting.

As this theory made the whole situation plain to him, he dismissed the subject from his mind and began to look forward to what he should do upon his arrival at the capital.

"I'll first see the agent of the Nor'wester, who is also the agent of the Yokohama, and he will assist me in getting things to rights," was his reflection. "As to the question of money, that can be managed readily enough, even if I not recover my drafts and other papers.

He held to his course with such resolutions, but he made prompt entry into town, noticing there before the agent to whom he had made reference had left his office, although it was now late in the afternoon.

RECITALS OF CAMP AND BATTLE INCIDENTS.

Survivors of the Rebellion Relate Many Amusing and Startling Incidents of Weary Marches, Thrilling Battles, Foraging Experiences, and Humble Scenes.

Hoards.

The Moors hold by their hoards when they swear, in order to give weight to their oath, whichever this formality they rarely violate. The length of hoard seems to weigh with them more than the stock of brains.

Admiral Keppel was sent to Algiers to demand satisfaction for the injuries done to His Britannic Majesty's officers by their consuls; the dey, enraged at the boldness of the ambassador, exclaimed "that he wondered at the insolence of the English monarch in sending him a message by a foolish, beardless boy."

The admiral, somewhat nettled, replied that "if his master had supposed wisdom was to be measured by the length of the beard, he would doubtless have sent the dey a beguat."

This answer so enraged the dey that he ordered his suites to attend with the bow-strings, saying that the admiral should pay for his boldness with his life. Nothing daunted by this threat the ambassador took the dey to the house, and showing him the English fleet said, "If it was his pleasure to pay him to death, there were Englishmen enough in that fleet to make him a glorious funeral pile." The dey, who were a long beard, took the blue from the man who had done.

The Secret of Success.

Signor Scarem, the noted wild animal tamer, had put his trained thyes through their paces. He had driven these round and round their cage, and they had crouched in a corner at the word of command, though he had to use a weak lemon and they were mighty wild beasts, and would have torn his limb from limb had they realized their power.

He had no weapon in his hand, if we except a short whip which he occasionally cracked over the tigers' heads. His performance being ended, amid breathless silence on the part of the spectators, Signor Scarem stepped from the cage unharmed, and then the tumultuous applause broke forth.

People crowded about him to praise his courage, and one man said:

"Don't you regard that as very dangerous?"

"Not at all," replied the trainer. "Tigers are not dangerous as long as you keep on the right side of them."

"The outside," replied the trainer, as he strode away to the dressing-room.

Clergyman and Baker.

A clergyman in Scotland desired his hearers never to call one another "brother, but when anyone said the thing was not true they ought to whisper in their neighbor's ear instead. A sermon on the nitrate of the loaves and fishes, and, being at a loss how to explain it, he said miracles were not like those nowadays; they were as big as some of the hills in Scotland! He had scarcely pronounced the words when the beard a jolly old baker.

"Who is that," says he, "yah me a liar?"

"It is I, Willy Macbumald, the baker."

"Well, Willy, what objection have ye to this? I did tell it."

"None," said he; "only I want to know what sort o' ovens they had to bake those loaves o' bread in."—New York Ledger.

No Use for a Bed.

"I have never slept in a bed since the day I enlisted in the army of good cently. "The reason," he continued, "is because I am a cripple, simply am unable to go to sleep in a bed, and I also know of no good reason why during the war I was in service four years, I should lie down to sleep in a bed. I had no home and consequently had no furniture. The habit of rolling in a blanket and sleeping grew so fixed with me that when I got back from the war and settled down, a bed was a nuisance. I tried rolled and unrolled and tried hard to sleep right after night, but was not able to keep my eyes closed until I sought the floor. For ten years after I was married I tried to sleep in a bed, but it was no use. Finally I gave up the idea of having a home in Boston I sleep in a room in which there is no bed, and I roll up myself in a blanket or two, according to the temperature, and I sleep soundly. My health is good, and I am sure that I shall live just as long as if I slept on a down mattress."—Boston Times.

Life Compared to a Cyclone.

"Take it all and all, writes "Amber," life is something like a circus tent pitched on the shores of the big blue lake of eternity for a fleeting day. It is as vivid through the show, we persist in stirring up the ragged and aggravating the lions whelps we need not complain that to us there seems to be nothing but wild beasts and snarling dogs in the big exhibit. If we open our lines in the sawdust ring laughing the world's ho ho! If we find our fancy chiefly tickled by the sylphs who bound through their rings and cavorting like fine to the gleaming backs of galloping horses, our souls will take a different coloring altogether. But if we slip the lashes of the cracking whip, and cut the rim of loosened canvas we can see the tragedy of life in all its sad, pathetic aspects. The carried his master through the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge and a score of other engagements in the Tennessee campaign. He pranced around among the dead and wounded shouts at the battles of Opequin, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Trevillian Station, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Gordonsville, Appomattox and Deep Bottom, a score or more of other scenes. In fact, Winchester rode the gray in ninety engagements, and, with a single exception, never flinched from the tail to the canny. In the battle of Stone River a solid shot passed under him, grazing the skin of his belly. He became frantic and unmanageable, the general being obliged to dismount. No appearance of the animal in the field without a rider was the signal for a report that his master had been killed. The horse was wounded in the battle of Cedar Creek, and when Sheridan rode up to the place of his master's death, he was so overjoyed at the sight of his master, that he leaped over the fallen Sheridan and dashed off at the rebels. Two staff officers, Gens. Forsyth and O'Keefe, and the escort of twenty cavalrymen, rode with them, but the horse Winchester showed more spirit and "bottom" than any of the other animals. The general said that the actual distance the horse was sixteen miles, the great (Read) having used about four miles of "postal license."

The Railroad in War.

When Sherman was operating around Atlanta the Federals struck the Macon and Western road at Jonesboro, and, at one or five different places, worked such damage that on such time that the line was reported to be "completely demolished." Within thirty hours the Confederates had overtaken the rebels. On one occasion Kilpatrick destroyed four miles of the road, and, after the rebels had moved in the center and bent around, he could complete the work of destruction. Every rail was torn out, every rail filled up by placing down the ties and every tie burned up. Kilpatrick reported to Sherman that the break could not be repaired in a month, but the cars were running in less than two days. Was the thousand Federal cavalry worked for a month to disable the Macon road, and, when the Army of Sherman had to move his whole army to make his glorious "march to the sea," as soon as the Federals had cut and destroyed the road, the thousand of the Confederates set to work on the road and at a cost of a million dollars put it in order. Fresh lines were coil, rails were brought up from the rear and laid aside for such an emergency, and trains were soon running over the road over twice the usual distance apart, and not bedded, but as trains were coming and going, the cars rose down and crashed safely over.

Gen. Wilson, of Forrest and Wheeler were operating on Sherman's left, and the destruction of road was destroyed on one occasion, and this destroyed a short way which he occasionally cracked over the tigers' heads. His performance being ended, amid breathless silence on the part of the spectators, Signor Scarem stepped from the cage unharmed, and then the tumultuous applause broke forth.

People crowded about him to praise his courage, and one man said:

"Don't you regard that as very dangerous?"

"Not at all," replied the trainer. "Tigers are not dangerous as long as you keep on the right side of them."

"Which is the right side?" asked the questioner, quizzingly.

"The outside," replied the trainer, as he strode away to the dressing-room.

Clergyman and Baker.

A clergyman in Scotland desired his hearers never to call one another "brother, but when anyone said the thing was not true they ought to whisper in their neighbor's ear instead. A sermon on the nitrate of the loaves and fishes, and, being at a loss how to explain it, he said miracles were not like those nowadays; they were as big as some of the hills in Scotland! He had scarcely pronounced the words when the beard a jolly old baker.

"Who is that," says he, "yah me a liar?"

"It is I, Willy Macbumald, the baker."

"Well, Willy, what objection have ye to this? I did tell it."

"None," said he; "only I want to know what sort o' ovens they had to bake those loaves o' bread in."—New York Ledger.

No Use for a Bed.

"I have never slept in a bed since the day I enlisted in the army of good cently. "The reason," he continued, "is because I am a cripple, simply am unable to go to sleep in a bed, and I also know of no good reason why during the war I was in service four years, I should lie down to sleep in a bed. I had no home and consequently had no furniture. The habit of rolling in a blanket and sleeping grew so fixed with me that when I got back from the war and settled down, a bed was a nuisance. I tried rolled and unrolled and tried hard to sleep right after night, but was not able to keep my eyes closed until I sought the floor. For ten years after I was married I tried to sleep in a bed, but it was no use. Finally I gave up the idea of having a home in Boston I sleep in a room in which there is no bed, and I roll up myself in a blanket or two, according to the temperature, and I sleep soundly. My health is good, and I am sure that I shall live just as long as if I slept on a down mattress."—Boston Times.

A Famous Horse.

"Winchester," Gen. Sheridan's famous charger, which, as the poet has said, carried his master "twenty miles away" in one of the severest battles of the war, died in 1878, and his skin has been preserved by the taxidermist's art. Winchester was jet black in color, with a small white star almost in the center of his forehead, and was a fine horse. He stood sixteen and a half hands high, and was trim-built and active as the Arabian horse. When Sheridan took command of the Second Michigan Badge for Gallantry, Capt. Campbell presented him with the animal, which was then spoken of as a year-old colt. His owner dubbed him Winchester, and Sheridan kept the name. He carried his master through the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge and a score of other engagements in the Tennessee campaign. He pranced around among the dead and wounded shouts at the battles of Opequin, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Trevillian Station, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Gordonsville, Appomattox and Deep Bottom, a score or more of other scenes. In fact, Winchester rode the gray in ninety engagements, and, with a single exception, never flinched from the tail to the canny. In the battle of Stone River a solid shot passed under him, grazing the skin of his belly. He became frantic and unmanageable, the general being obliged to dismount. No appearance of the animal in the field without a rider was the signal for a report that his master had been killed. The horse was wounded in the battle of Cedar Creek, and when Sheridan rode up to the place of his master's death, he was so overjoyed at the sight of his master, that he leaped over the fallen Sheridan and dashed off at the rebels. Two staff officers, Gens. Forsyth and O'Keefe, and the escort of twenty cavalrymen, rode with them, but the horse Winchester showed more spirit and "bottom" than any of the other animals. The general said that the actual distance the horse was sixteen miles, the great (Read) having used about four miles of "postal license."

The Railroad in War.

When Sherman was operating around Atlanta the Federals struck the Macon and Western road at Jonesboro, and, at one or five different places, worked such damage that on such time that the line was reported to be "completely demolished." Within thirty hours the Confederates had overtaken the rebels. On one occasion Kilpatrick destroyed four miles of the road, and, after the rebels had moved in the center and bent around, he could complete the work of destruction. Every rail was torn out, every rail filled up by placing down the ties and every tie burned up. Kilpatrick reported to Sherman that the break could not be repaired in a month, but the cars were running in less than two days. Was the thousand Federal cavalry worked for a month to disable the Macon road, and, when the Army of Sherman had to move his whole army to make his glorious "march to the sea," as soon as the Federals had cut and destroyed the road, the thousand of the Confederates set to work on the road and at a cost of a million dollars put it in order. Fresh lines were coil, rails were brought up from the rear and laid aside for such an emergency, and trains were soon running over the road over twice the usual distance apart, and not bedded, but as trains were coming and going, the cars rose down and crashed safely over.

Gen. Wilson, of Forrest and Wheeler were operating on Sherman's left, and the destruction of road was destroyed on one occasion, and this destroyed a short way which he occasionally cracked over the tigers' heads. His performance being ended, amid breathless silence on the part of the spectators, Signor Scarem stepped from the cage unharmed, and then the tumultuous applause broke forth.

People crowded about him to praise his courage, and one man said:

"Don't you regard that as very dangerous?"

"Not at all," replied the trainer. "Tigers are not dangerous as long as you keep on the right side of them."

"Which is the right side?" asked the questioner, quizzingly.

"The outside," replied the trainer, as he strode away to the dressing-room.

RAIN ALONE CAN SAVE.

WISCONSIN FIRES SWEEP NORTHWARD WITH DIRE EFFECTS.

Ashland and the Surrounding Towns Now Besieged—Settlers Are Fleeing in Panic—Hundreds Are Thrown Out of Work—Thousands Are Left Homeless—Fire Fiends Are Still Busy—Wind Fan the Flames.

Now Danger Center.

Pray for rain is the hopeless cry throughout Northern Wisconsin, where forest flames continue to devour everything before them. Settlements continue to Ashland from all directions, running for their lives. At noon Sunday the people were called from their dinners by the fire bells, Sotterville and smoke became almost blinding all over the city. Over 1,000 children were called out to the fire department to fight the flames, which ruined in the village from the Odanah Indian Reservation. At 3 o'clock there was a report that the people among the people living near the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Railroad shops. The saterworks had given out and there was no water to fight the fire with. The flames were so rapidly approaching the shops that all the employes were ordered to give details of bodies and issues, and the men were ordered to leave the shops, and the men were ordered to leave the shops, and the men were ordered to leave the shops

VERIFYING A SUPERSTITION.

Unlucky Results of Getting Out of Bed on the Wrong Side.

"So you don't believe in the old superstition about getting up on the wrong side of the bed, eh?" said the down town business man the other day at luncheon.

"I do not," remarked his friend.

"Well, I do. I happed out of bed the other day. I hopped out of bed and tumbled into my things and off I went to work.

"I hadn't gone more than a block when a drunken man reeled into me and spoiled my new hat. The electric train was late. I could get no seat. At the office the fire had gone out and the boy who is supposed to attend to that part came in about noon saying that he was sick, spilled his ink over the books of the firm. Then half a dozen men I owed money came to see me; when the clerks came showed up the head of the firm scowled and remarked that it was about time I took a vacation.

"The luncheon I had that day gave me the indigestion. I hurried back to the office with a splitting headache, madness oozing out of every pore of my body.

"I began to see that I had been bloodless.

"In the office again I ran around my chair expecting to break the chairs, but I sat down in it as I sat an hour in cause a telegram saying that my mother-in-law had died in the West and that I should send money to have her body forwarded to New York. I rushed around to the bank to get the loan and the cashier gave me a wad of six long green that was 6 short. I fetched to court the cash at the desk, and took a big wart one when I tried to convince him of his error.

"I then went to the hungry office to send the money, but slipped on a banana peel at the very entrance, and sprained my ankle. That settled me for the day. I hired a cab to take me home, and coldly overcharged me three times.

"When I got home the worst stroke of all was to confront me.

"What was that?" put in his astonished friend.

"Why, my mother-in-law was there, bag and baggage, just arrived for a few months' stay.

"And the bed?"

"I confidently assert that all this happened because I got out on the wrong side of the bed. To guard against similar misfortune in the future I have placed the bed close to the wall, so that now it has only one side, and the result is grand—lock all day long.

PROFESSOR VIRCHOW.

Professor Rudolf Virchow, rector of the university of Berlin, is a highly interesting personality. He is a small man with dry, parchment-like skin, and wears very powerful spectacles, which gives his eyes a peculiar appearance as seen through them. The lost ensemble is very ordinary. Not only is he, however, in the first rank of scientists, but is, besides, a prominent politician, one of the most influential men among the advanced liberals and a member of the reichstag. He would long ago have been elected rector had it not been thought that his political views would be so obnoxious to the emperor as to cause him to decline to ratify Virchow's election, says Harper's Weekly.

Virchow and Von Helmholtz celebrated their 70th birthday within a short time of each other, and whereas the latter received a complimentary telegram and a decoration from the emperor, Virchow was the recipient of no such favor. In the telegram to Von Helmholtz his majesty expressed his approval that the scientist had devoted himself to science, which was his proper sphere, and had left politics alone. This was evidently a side-thrust at Virchow.

During the political troubles of 1842 Virchow was banished because of a speech in which he said that Prussia must have a constitution; that the king must grant one, or they must try to do without a king. For this he was prosecuted, but he partly regained favor by his work in connection with the Franco-German war. His organization of ambulance corps and his untiring efforts in the hospitals were highly appreciated.

He is much more liberal by foreign students than by Germans. To the latter he shows his rough side. He does not approve of their drinking habits. He says that Americans and English who do not soak so systematically have clearer heads and do much better work than Germans. Some of his countrymen have such a dislike of him that they prefer to take pathology elsewhere, although they have to study under inferior men. They dread his home truths and his notably smooth tongue. He is, they say, very rude to them in his lectures, as well as severe at the examinations. He was so dissatisfied with an answer given by one student that he replied: "Any one would know better than that. You know nothing whatever about it." To another who was turning over a specimen with an instrument so as to be better able to see it, he answered: "Oh, you, back it to grocer, and by the time you have 6 pounds with it nobody else will be able to see it."

A friend of mine was invited to his house to see some very rare fish which he had received a short time before. Virchow's daughter, who is not famous for beauty, was present. When the inspection of the fish was over Virchow said: "All those I'll gladly give you if you'll marry my daughter. I'm tired trying to marry her off these thirteen years, but without success."

The clothes that the learned professor wears are sometimes such as no old-clo' man would invest in. An especially favorite coat of his is an ancient one that has lost its color through age. On one occasion he began the examination of a student by abruptly asking: "What color is my coat?" The student passed for a moment, and then replied: "Apparently, Herr professor, it was originally black; now it seems to be of a brown tint," for which reply he was passed.

FEAT OF A BERLIN CHEF.

He Kills, Cleans and Cooks a Chicken Inside of Six Minutes.

Prince Bismarck's old chef, who is now head cook in a big Berlin restaurant, recently won a novel bet and gave a surprising exhibition of his mastery of the culinary art, says a writer in the Argonaut. He had wagered $50 that he could kill, clean, cook and serve a chicken, all in six minutes. The wager was decided at night in the cafe of the big hotel, the chef, with his assistants, working in the presence of a big crowd. The cook appeared at a block on an improvised platform, and exhibited a gas cooking stove. He held a live chicken limp over his head, and the fowl cackled loudly. One blow of the keen carver severed the head from the neck, and the cook began to pick the feathers with great swiftness. It took just one minute to get rid of every feather. In less than another minute the expert had opened and cleaned the fowl, and had placed it upon a boiler on the gas stove. The cook tossed himself at the boiler, seasoning the fowl as he cooked it. It lacked just a second of the sixth minute when he stepped from the platform and served the chicken to the nearest guest amid great applause.

The late Prince Rattibor was supposed to give the best dinners in Paris. His chefs were always most solemnly chosen after the greatest deliberation and cross-examination. On one occasion it was announced that he was in need of a cook, and two of the best chefs duly presented themselves for the coveted post. They were informed by the prince that each must serve a dinner of his own choice and cooking, consisting of four courses, to be served the same evening to a jury of the best gastronomes in Paris, who would eat of every different dish and pass judgment accordingly. This programme was carried out, and the prize awarded to a Frenchman who had been chef for many years to the Baron Haussmann. A trip to Madrid by the whole of the jury was the sound to this famous dinner of 16 courses.

DEATH OF THE DAUPHIN.

Beautiful Music That Was Heard Only by the Dying Boy.

Even on that last night his guardians were obliged to leave him alone. Next morning, the 8th of June, I came want up first to his room, for Gomin dressed to run him down. At eleven o'clock, when Pelletan arrived, the child was up; but the physician saw that the end was near and did not stay many minutes. Feeling heavy and weak, the prince asked to lie down as soon as the doctor was gone. He was to hear an opera when Dauvaglin came, and with Pelletan's consent an anklet was signed which announced the latest symptoms of the prince's illness. He had not apparently suffer, writes M. C. Hudson in the "Great Life of Marie Antoinette."

Seeing him quiet, Gomin said to him: "I hope you are not in pain just now." "Oh, yes, I still suffer, but much less; the music is so beautiful." "Do you mean to say that there was no music perceptible to other ears in the temple on that day? Where do you hear it?" asked Gomin. "Up there; listen, listen!" The child raised his hands, his eyes opened wide, he listened eagerly, and then in sudden joy he cried out: "Through all the voices I hear my mother's."

A second after, all the light died away in his face and his eyes wandered vacantly toward the window. Gomin asked him what he was looking at. But the dying boy seemed not to have heard, and took no notice of the guardian's questions. After a time Lasne came upstairs to replace Gomin. The prince looked at him long and dreamily, then, on some slight movement of his, Lasne asked him if he wanted anything. "Do you think my sister heard the music?" asked the child. "It would have done her good." Soon after he turned his eyes eagerly toward the window, a happy exclamation broke from his lips, then, looking at Lasne, he said: "I have a thing to tell you."

The gangrene took his hand, the prince's head sank on Lasne's breast, she listened in vain for the whispered words. The last struggle, but when the guardian felt the child's heart it had ceased to beat. It was 2:45 o'clock in the afternoon.

FLOWERS OF GUIANA.

In peddling up the smaller rivers of Guiana the traveler is struck with the beauty and variety of the orchids and other epiphytes perched on every limb and branch above his head, says Youngman's Magazine. Sailing from a temperate climate, where only mosses, lichens and perhaps a fern or two, can live under such circumstances, he sees great masses, with perhaps a dozen species of eight feet in diameter, crowded grows of bamboo-leaved Illinoiseas, mistletoe-like bunches of chipoalis, orchids, ferns and mosses, all struggling for places where they can find room to enjoy life and propagate their species.

In the dense gloom of the forest, where the branches intertwine with each other, they cannot secure enough light, but wherever the continuity is broken by river or swamp, the trees on the borders are thrown back a width of those intervening plants. From the river bank, looking into a long lane of foliage is visible, but by peddling through the outer screen which comes down into the water a new scene is revealed overhead. Although the direct rays of the sun are shut out, there is generally sufficient light for the epiphytes, and here they give quite a festive appearance to what would otherwise be a tangle of bare limbs and branches.

Down in the emptiness of the forest one is hushed, left spiritless, drooping or hanging plants, some appearing as if they were in agonies, others laughing in both foliage and flower, while others seem to hide and reform among the mosses are most pleasant and interesting. There are some areas where the river, or great lagoons, are surrounded by rocks, those are covered with epiphytes, the long, cool-like, aerial roots of some of which hang down to a height of forty feet, or more and branching out into dense, impenetrable masses of fibres as they touch the water.

Even the trunks have great clumps of orchids wherever there is a sufficiency of light, while here and there a plant has made itself at home in the crotch of a tangled mass of bush rope.

Can Plants Feel?

Darwin says: It has his opinion that some plants can see and an Indian botanist relates some curious incidents which he has seen. He says: I tied, of course, one morning that I would pluck a specimen of the vesuvia b but decidedly loosed over toward his leg as he lay in an attitude of repose, he tried a series of experiments with a long pole, placing it in such a position that the leaves would have to turn away from the light in order to reach it. In every case he found that the tendrils set themselves visibly toward the pole, and in a few hours had twined themselves closely around it.

Speaking Friendship.

Mrs. Nimble—And do you ever neighbor? Mrs. Brown—She's well enough, I suppose. I haven't seen her to speak to for six weeks. Mrs. Smith—Why, I thought you were on the most friendly terms. Mrs. Brown—Well, we were, but I may years to the Baron Haussmann. A trip to Madrid by the whole of the jury was the sound to this famous dinner of 16 courses.

Made an Impression.

City Girl—Lord, Nobleb must have made quite an impression in this section, didn't it? Country girl—Yes, indeed. I've took him to a picnic and he said, as a pic—New York Weekly.

RAMPANT RIO REBELS

BELIEF THAT PEIXOTO HAS BEEN OVERTHROWN.

Nine of a Mob of Lynchers Killed at Rosacolor, Virginia—Rear War in Alabama—Extensive Railroad Project—The Steamer Alva Safe.

—Dispatches from Buenos Ayres say that most is so scarce in Rio Janeiro that the Bourgeois have resorted to selling the live stock shipped from Buenos Ayres to Rio. After the bombardment Sunday three warships of the rebel squadron left Rio to bombard Santos. Mr. Lamoin is said to present a desolate appearance, many buildings and dwellings having been wrecked by the rebel shells. The rebel cause will, if information from Rio be accurate, be triumphant. Peixoto has ceased to send elaborate dispatches claiming that the rebellion is sure to be suppressed. It is believed there not little in the possession of the rebels and that the President will soon be overwhelmed.

—Wednesday morning at Roanoke, Va., a negro named Robert Smith succeeded in a forged order for grapes in enticing Mrs. Henry Hunter, a white lady, to a lonely, unfrequented part of the city, where he robbed her, beat her unconscious, and assaulted her. He left her for dead, but she recovered and gave the alarm. The news spread like wildfire, and it was only a short time until a desperate fight that Smith was safely lodged in prison. During the fight a large crowd gathered intent upon lynching and the Sheriff summoned the Jeff Davis Rifles of Salem to the jail. At 4 o'clock a mob of fifty men surrounded the jail, and stormed it. The Rifles by change matchlocked the lynchers as long as they could, when the military were ordered to the fray. In the first volley nine fell dead, many were wounded, and several officers were hurt by a return fire. But the mob retreated, and with rails and timber broke the barricade.

—Mr. Birmingham, A.w. David Jones, colored, suspected of robbery at Mobile, Ala., Sunday night, was caught by citizens of that place and strung up by a rope to a limb in order to extract a confession from him. He was cut down when he was dead, and was taken down, properly wrapped and released. The following day Jones, fearing for himself, confessed, stated the whole affair, the fight two negroes were killed and another white man fatally wounded, before trouble in apprehension.

—Atlanta, in consequence of the Choctaw, Sioux City and Shreveport Railroad Company were first advertised. It is in the office of the Secretary of state. It is proposed to construct a railroad from Chicago to Sioux City, Iowa; thence through Nebraska to the Blue Hassen Valley, to the city of Shreveport, N. R. The principal office is to be established in Chicago and the capital stock is $1,000,000. The incorporators are Edward Bogue, Jos. Jodd and Jos. Brown, of Wheaton, Ill.; R. H. Beattie, R. R. Jones, and Jos. Jodd, of Chicago.

—A message dated Mengzel, Oklahoma, has been received at New York from a popular resident of that place, to the effect that mining since the great storm last month. It is now reported that the number of passengers are safe.

—Dispatches again appeared at Sunbury. Twelve cases and five deaths have occurred since the 15th inst.

—For sixteen days Rosa Bonheur rested in the Laurel Reservation by its Commissioners. All sources of water supply have gone dry—wells are almost instantly killed by the explosion of a saw-mill letter near Williamsport, N. Y.

—Previous to the Cincinnati-Baltimore ball game Kosia Kosia and Louis Rudy were married on the field.

—A pale swept the Cherokee strip, before low sway of the united forces. Thousands of persons are now in the strip everywhere.

—Iowa began her celebration at the Middle Park at Greenwich Wednesday in a shower of rain, but the enthusiasm of Hawkeye State citizens could not be dampened by the elements. The day was a round of parades, drills, band concerts and a reception, ending at night with a magnificent display of fireworks. The State building was the Mecca for 10,000 odd residents of Iowa. It is a beautiful edifice, large, and great as the best was, it was but the advance guard of the coming throng Thursday.

—Attorney General Little of Kansas has decided that a charter may not be issued to the American Protective Association. The Secretary of State will act in accordance and will refuse the charter, and the only remedy of the applicants is an Attorney General mandamus, issued by mandamus proceedings in the Superior Court.

—At St. Louis a motor car of the Southern Electric Railway, while flying along at a high rate of speed in the suburban district, struck a farm wagon containing five persons, killing one and fatally injuring others.

—Another turn of the wheel has taken place in Hondurus. The insurgents have accepted President Leiva's resignation, and Gen. Vasquez has been elected President to succeed him.

—Secretary Carlisle has a number of life-saving medal to Ingar Olsson, of Milwaukee, for rescuing from drowning James Miller by what is known as the crib disaster in Lake Michigan on Jan. 13.

—Two train robbers attempted a novel plan to rob the passengers on a train from Denver to Leadville. As soon as the train started they went through each car and, at the point of a pistol, ordered the passengers to hand over their money and jewelry. The passengers were all robbed by about twenty men.

—Patrick Tinsley, Senator Irby made a speech of bitter invective against the Senate, in which he charged that the Senate was a body of millionaires, and that it was a disgrace to the country to have such a body in existence.

—Lone Sunbury, which was begotten by the Democratic general convention came in contradiction Professor H. P. Smith, of Lewis and Clark University, who delivered a lecture on Sunday, but four miles from Sunbury, and declared that the Sunbury scare proceeded not only to its repeal, but to the discovery of the lost gold and silver in money. The Democratic party of Ohio has reaffirmed the declaration and I give it my personal indorsement." Mr. Bryan's speech at the Jackson dinner was greatest few to the prosperity of the people in Michigan." He said: "So long as the Federal system of protective taxation is maintained we can have no general and enduring prosperity in this country. To repeal the McKinley law would apply the knife to the root of our evil with paramount and class, and forever." Of the McKinley act he said:

II. FROM WASHINGTON.

—The new White House Baby will be christened Ruth Cleveland. Miss Ruth Cleveland made her bow entered for the world by the Secretary of the Navy.

—Congressman Oates has introduced a bill in the house of representatives to make Alabama the 45th State of Nevada.

—With speeches and music, merriment and banqueting, and several other sorts of flying the anniversary of the birthday of the father of the country, the nation's capital at Washington was celebrated Monday. The orator of the hour was William Hurt, a relative of Martha and Henry who twitched the tail of Albion's lion in the Virginia House of Burgess, in an address to a large Episcopal church still standing and sanctified to an Episcopal church. Cleveland, Adlai Stevenson, and many of the Cabinet officers were present, and silently and altogether the event was a good occasion.

A NATION'S JUBILEE.

CELEBRATION OF THE CAPITOL'S CENTENNIAL.

Anniversary of the Laying of the Corner Stone at Washington a Memorable Event—Civic and Military Parade and Fashionable Speeches—Historical.

Observed with Pomp.

The centennial anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol was celebrated, solemnly and enthusiastically, on the brass plaza that stretches out from the west front of the Capitol. One hundred years ago, to the day, and hour, Washington, the first President of the republic, assisted by the Grand Master and Deputy Order of Masons, wearing an apron of rich white lambskin, laid the corner stone, laid the foundation stone of the great marble pile that it is now the Capitol.

The ceremonies were as simple as those of Sept. 18, 1793, and fully as impressive. Then Martha Dandridge Washington laid the corner stone with all the pomp and detail of the Masonic ritual. The services consisted of three principal features. First, a civic military and naval parade, followed by appropriate exercises in the open air, then, third, an evening entertainment in and about the Capitol. Long before the Pennsylvania avenue was crowded with people, the sidewalks were crowded with people, the sidewalks were crowded with people, the stands were crowded, the windows were crowded, the roofs were crowded, the trees were crowded, the Capitol was crowded, the Washington Monument was crowded, the Ellipse was crowded, the Potomac

CHARLEVOIX, SEPT. 27, 1893.

Hereafter, by a new ruling, the postmasters will be compelled to hold your letters for thirty days instead of ten unless you have the number of days you wish them held printed on your envelope. As soon as the contract for envelope printing runs out you can have them printed at your home office, as the government will stop printing addresses thereon, and this is the way it should be.

The Republicans are having lots of fun with the Democrats who appear before the ways and means committee asking for a protective tariff on local industries. Last Saturday Congressman Ikirt, of Ohio, a Democrat, appeared before the committee in behalf of the pottery industry and declared it among all others was the industry needing protection on account of "the great differences in wages of pottery-workers in Europe and America." Yet the Democrats claim a protective tariff does not benefit the workingman. If it is no benefit to labor, why does Congressman Ikirt want the tariff on pottery retained?

The textile workers of Philadelphia Pa., number about 50,000 able-bodied persons. They recently held a meeting and formulated a petition to congress, expressing the unanimous opinion that the stagnation in business was due to the threatening attack upon the tariff. One of the most significant and telling things in that meeting was this remark of one of the workers. Said he, "The simple fact is that our families are hungry and we want bread. We don't pretend to understand the fine theories of free trade, but we do know that we earned a good living under a protective tariff, and now many of us are earning nothing."

Northern Michigan News.

The organization of a company is about completed at Traverse City for the practical utilization of the great water power now running to waste in Boardman River.

A lot of ex-employes of the locks at the Soo have commenced proceedings to recover back pay amounting to $150,000, claiming for years that they worked twelve hours per day.

Traverse City business men again defeated the Manistee business men in the return game of base ball at Manistee last week, and a procession of five hundred men met the victorious ball players on their return home.

In the case of the people vs. Wm Badgley, the soldier who caused the suicide of a girl on Mackinac Island a few weeks since, the jury brought in a verdict of "assault with intent to commit rape," and the judge gave him a sentence of eight years in the penitentiary.

Again Northern Michigan comes to the front as the champion potato growing section of the State. Dealers say that the crop is unusually fine and large, and will bring good prices, while the demand will be great, owing to the terrible drouths in southern Michigan and neighboring states.

Traverse City has let the contract for an artesian well to be put down on their school grounds. The well is not to be more than 700 feet in depth. The contractors receive $2.25 per foot for 4 inch pipe, and in case they have to use 3 inch pipe, then the price is to be $1.75 per foot. They guarantee a constant flow of 200 barrels of water daily, with sufficient force or pressure to raise the water to the first story of their school building.

At Petoskey on Saturday, Abram Wilsey fired four shots at his wife, all taking effect, and then was himself instantly killed by Henry Sik, a boarder in the house. Mrs. Wilsey was thought to be fatally hurt, but is now improving and the husband will, no doubt, recover. A coroner's jury declared Sik killed Wilsey in self defense and he was then released. Public opinion supports the verdict. Wilsey was a laborer and had quarrelled with his wife ever since their marriage seven years ago. Three weeks ago they separated, she applying for a divorce. Saturday he went to the boarding house, and after vainly trying to induce his wife to live with him, drew a revolver, and as she fled he fired four shots, all taking effect. The young boarder, who was one of the three men whose from Wilsey had threatened rushed into the room and, dodging behind the door, fired four times, one ball going through Wilsey's body and the other striking him in the forehead. Sik is a Swede, 26 years of age, and was very unconcerned over the killing. He declared Wilsey was trying to kill him when he jumped behind the door and opened fire. The jury believed him. At first Mrs. Wilsey said her husband shot himself, and very likely believed it.

Ellsworth Echoes.

Ed. Clark's folks have got another baby.

Ed. Stafford has been over the past week setting furnaces for several parties here.

Peter Boyer is putting down a village well at the corner of Main and center streets. The other day while Peter was digging a well out at Wrisley's he struck hard ground and put in a dynamite cartridge, after lighting the fuse he gave the signal to hoist in a hurry. Ed. Clark's old horse was at the other end of the rope and after going up about 20 feet commenced backing down. Well, they said Peter's eyes were as large as saucers when they got him out of the well, the cartridge going off a few seconds later.

The Ellsworth Lumber Co., have purchased a large hardwood floor ing machine and are now putting up a building to be used as a factory.

Shingle men have been looking an over for some time past and have decided to locate here.

Mr. Marshall, the proprietor of the shingle mill has also bought the farm of Henry Howers (just across the lake) consideration 800 dollars.

Lots of room for more to locate.

A. J. Dale of Bellaire has been here for a few days with an Austin Steel Reversible Road Machine. Everyone seeing it work agrees that the town should buy one as it would be of great service in making roads.

A wood bee out at H. Gotham's last Friday and a dance in the evening.

Frank Pearl was arrested Saturday for violating the liquor law and was tried before Justice Sleeper same afternoon. The case was dismissed as everyone swore that they did not know what they had drank there, they called it "Molly Hop."

Fred LeDue had quickly got tired of hotel life and has returned to the farm. Fling Genett has moved in and will make a good land lord.

Everyone was pained to hear of the death of E. B. Marshall. The township has met with a great misfortune in his death.

Willard Spaulding was over from Norwood with a load of apple barrels Tuesday.

Chas. Gotham is getting along finely with the school building and school will commence Nov. 1, with Mrs. Vecleuberg teacher, who taught last year.

Local News.

—Beautiful autumn weather.

—S. M. See & Sons have received a new safe.

—W. H. Miller left for the World's Fair yesterday.

—Fred Mayne and wife went to The Fair yesterday.

—Dr. Lewis returned from Cincinnati this morning.

—The new well cost $1,500, but it is worth twice the money.

—Mrs. Robert Mullen, of Newaygo, is visiting her son, J. H. Mullen.

—Henry Barth and wife go to Chicago this week to spend the winter.

—G. W. Miller has a large supply of Staley's famous overshirts and underwear, which is going off at a rapid rate.

—Geo. W. Miller and wife took the steamer Lawrence Sunday for Chicago.

—The mother of Capt. T. D. Smith died at her home near Detroit lately aged 92 years.

—Mrs. Ida Emrey and Mrs. Capt. Finneran went to Chicago on the City of Charlevoix yesterday.

—L. W. Kirby, formerly of this place, but now of Crystal Falls, is here visiting relatives.

—Wm. Sargent on Friday received a telegram from Marshalltown, Iowa, announcing the death of a son.

—Richmond & Harris, of Detroit, are putting in a Howard Iron Works elevator at the Ferry seed warehouse.

—The Baptist ladies will serve supper in the church parlors Wednesday evening, October 11. Price 15 cents.

—Rev. Father Gallagher, of St. Louis, was a caller here yesterday, on his way to Chicago, by the City of Charlevoix.

—S. M. Moore will be up from Chicago to-morrow to stay some time and look after a drainage system for the Chicago resort grounds.

—Last Saturday was water rent day. Supt. Gount reports that rents must be paid at the water office at once, or water may be shut off.

—Ralph Washburn and Ben Gray left yesterday for the World's Fair. After doing the big exposition they will go to Florida on their bicycles.

—James Milton Green, of Lancaster, Pa., is here visiting his brother, Hon. E. H. Green. He is accompanied by Mr. John H. Mellgrass, of Lancaster.

—The steamer Puritan was in Saturday for the last time this season. She will run between Manistee and Chicago the balance of the season, carrying salt.

—There will be no services at the Congregational church Sunday morning or evening owing to the pastor going to East Jordan to preach the sermon at the Y. P. S. C. E. convention.

—Rev. J. W. Hallenbeck, D. D., the new M. E. pastor, has entered upon the work of the charge here. He is at home at the parsonage, although his family will not arrive for some time yet.

—Miss Peterson lately resigned her position as teacher in the grammar department of the Charlevoix schools, and the board have employed Miss Winifred Heaton, of East Jordan, to fill the vacancy.

—E. A. H. Cole and bride arrived from Fenton Friday and have settled down as permanent residents of Charlevoix. Saturday Mr. Cole purchased the Peasley place on the south terrace, but it is Mr. Cole's intention to purchase property on the north side and build.

—Col. Ludlow, who was here last week inspecting the harbor, says there is little use of rebuilding the revetment until Charlevoix makes a new bridge approach on the channel side of the river. There is quite a respectable business standing to the south of Charlevoix harbor and a big spring it is the intention of the Colonel to tear out the old shore end of the north pier and put in new work. A liberal appropriation will be asked for this winter. The depth of water is found to be quite satisfactory.

—J. S. Baker & Co., have a change of ad. this week.

—Mrs. O. A. Sears and Miss Sue left yesterday for Chicago.

—Mrs. Frank Sear left yesterday for Port Huron to visit her parents.

—Thos. Clark, an early settler of South Arm township but now a resident of Kansas, has been here the past few days.

—The new K. P. hall in Green's block has been decorated and fitted up in nice style, and the boys are proud of their new quarters.

—The school board has appointed the following committee on textile text and heating of the school building: H. M. Emon, W. A. Smith, Dr. Lamb, J. T. Kirkpatrick, W. H. Miller.

—Last week Wednesday near Bellaire, a freight train ran over a cow. The engine and one car went over heavy all right, but six cars were ditched, and their contents badly smashed. E. A. H. Cole's furniture was badly damaged, and the new engine for the Ferry seed warehouse was ruined.

—Mrs. Wm. Graham, of Marion township, died Saturday. The funeral was held from the family residence Monday at 10 a. m. and was largely attended. Mr. and Mrs. Graham were among the earliest settlers in Marion. Mrs. Graham was an estimable lady, respected by all who knew her.

—No advice, says an exchange, that a lawyer, a statesman, a friend of a newspaper writer can give in times like these, should be more patiently listened to by the laboring man who has employment than the motto to stick to the job he now has until he can get a better one." There is a whole sermon in these few words.

—Mr. Rust and his party have taken the well machinery to Harbor Springs, where they have contracted to drill a well for Mr. Shay. The Rust well Co. has done good work here. They have performed their contract to the satisfaction of everybody, and Charlevoix recommends them as reliable. They know their business.

—By the C. & W. M. excursion to Chicago yesterday: Geo. Cher and mother, Will Newman, Ethel Newman, Ward Ainslie, Harry Widdefield, Mrs. Bert Mason, H. W. Milliken, Frank Chalonska, Mrs. Chas. Gagnon, H. W. Elston and wife, A. E. Clayton and wife, W. B. Vosburg and wife, F. W. Mayne and wife, P. S. Brown.

—In a Chinese Sunday school in Oregon the contribution plate was passed to a young convert, who looked at the plate and inquired, "What for?" "For the Lord," said the teacher. On the following Sunday the plate again stopped in front of him. "What for?" he asked again and once more he was told that the money was for the Lord. Thereupon a look of perplexity came over his face, which found expression in the inquiry, "Lord all time broke."

—Some of those Chicago people, who make so much mischief this fall by starting the unfounded report that our city water was impure, could go upon the fountain of beautiful, clear water that is gushing up from a depth of 400 feet, they would feel like taking a drink; yet every drop of water that has gone into the mains for ordinary use was just as pure and they could have ascertained the fact had they taken the trouble to investigate. The Charlevoix water works have an abundance of water, and it is as clear and pure as any mountain stream.

—The recent sale of village lots belonging to the Fox estate is a long step in the direction of the development of the north side. The larger number of lots have been purchased by people who secured them for building purposes. The bringing in to market of this large territory, added to the certainty of improvement on Lindsay Park, means a large sized boom for the north side next season. Meantime, there is a healthy look in other parts of town and the signs of the times clearly indicate that Charlevoix is about to get a good sized "bump on herself."

—And Smith won't take the trouble to correct his name either." This is what the postmaster elect says of the SENTINEL regarding the Book pension time. It was common report on the street, just as we printed it, before the SENTINEL went to press, for which we have Mr. Book's own word. The SENTINEL does correct its "sins" in the Book matter. Mr. Book was cited to appear for examination on his application for an increase. But this we will say: Hoke Smith deserves the detestation of all patriotic citizens for what he has done in hundreds of cases and the administration under which Mr. Smith does business will read the handwriting on the wall in 1896.

Ellsworth Echoes.

The new hotel reports a fast increasing business.

R. W. Kane, of Charlevoix looked in over Wednesday.

Several of our citizens attended the fair at Bellaire last week.

Mrs. Adams and Mr. Cherrie went to Chicago last Tuesday.

Will Superaw expects to visit the Fair the latter part of this week.

The factory building of the Ellsworth lumber Co. is being put up this week.

Our citizens should have a bee and open the road to the new school house this fall.

G. T. Bentley and son returned from the fair Monday and says he saw and got it's wonderful.

The shingle mill is ours after all. It's located over in the water mill of Thorpes. Will soon be running.

Good road work has been done on Main street the past week. The balance should be done as soon as possible.

Wm. Henry already has eighty acres of timber put up for the Ellsworth Lumber Co. on their land north of Wrisley's.

Henry Superaw's family will remove from Norwood to this place in about a month and occupy a new house being erected by Falla Skow.

Wilsey, of Petoskey, who shot his wife was in Ellsworth a few days before the shooting and tried to buy a revolver at the store of the Ellsworth lumber Co.

The school house is completed and Chas. Gotham will have a masquerade dance there on Friday evening of this week. Bill 50c, which will go towards buying a bell.

E. R. Harris has purchased a half interest in the steamer City of Bellaire of Capt. F. W. Smith. She will be thoroughly overhauled and painted this fall and put in first class shape for resort business next season.

"OXBOW."

Common Council.

Sept 28, 1893.

Council met pursuant to adjournment with President Bates in the Chair. Trustees present, Hampton, Stevens, Baker and Washburn.

The minutes of the meeting of Sept 7 were read and approved.

The following bills of account were ordered paid:

H Prosser, pulling rubbish on village streets in fall	$ 1 00
H Prosser, board of prisoner	1 75
E W Nelson, assistant engineer on East Jordan	2 75
A Knight 3 days work on street	2 50
J Schrock, salary as assistant engineer	30 00
H Prosser, freight on wet pipe	1 05
Peter Boyer, drilling well at village	75 75
Worthington Pump Engine Co.	35

Trustee Hampton moved that the next hose contest occur next Tuesday evening at 5 o'clock and the officers that acted in the last contest act in this. Motion prevailed.

Vale Capt. Berdan.

Capt. Berdan's official head has so spoke, rolled into the saw dust.

W. E. Hampton was Thursday appointed postmaster at Charlevoix.

In view of Captain Berdan's recent heavy losses by bank failures and burglaries, there are many of our citizens, regardless of party, who hoped to see the old veteran retained, for a time, at least. But it was not to be.

—The Charlevoix Cycle Club advertise races on their new track in this village, for Oct. 12th. The races will consist of a ½ mile club novice; 1 mile ban; ½ mile "run and ride;" 1 mile handicap; ½ mile dash, and 1 mile handicap. This will be the last event of the season on the track.

NEARING THE END OF THE ONE PAID RATES TO CHICAGO.

The C. & W. M. railway will sell tickets to Chicago and return via St. Joe and steamer and via New Buffalo (all rail) at one fair for round trip, on October 9, 11, 13, 17, 19, 21, 23, 25 and 27. Tickets good ten days but not good in Wagner parlor or sleeping cars.
